The Printer to the Reader.

SUPPOSE it altogether needlesse (Christian Reader) by commending Mr. WILLIAM PERKINS, the Author of this Booke, to woorke your holy affection, which either himselſe in his life time by his Christian conuerſation hath woone in you, or ſubſeue his death, the neuer-dying memorie of his excellent knowledge, his great humilitie, his ſound religion, his ſeruent zeale, his painefull labours, in the Church of God, doe moſt iuſtly challenge at your hands. Onely in one word I dare be bold to ſay of him, as in times paſt Nazianzen ſpoke of Athanaſius. His life was a good definition of a true Miniſter and preacher of the Gospel. And needlesſe alſo is it (if not inuious) by praiſing of his learned and godly writings, to thinke to incline your better iudgement which in ſo holy a ſubiect (as is the body of Diuinitie, and principles of Religion) I dare not ſuſpect to be unſetled; and in ſo eaſie a methode and familiar a ſtyle, which he uſeth in them both, I am ſure can hardly miſcarrie. Such is his loue to all, that, as for the matter of his doctrine, he conſidereth and ſatiſfeth the moſt learned; ſo for the manner of his deliuering the ſame, he condeſcendeth to the capacity of the meaueſt of Gods children. I here once more preſent vnto you the worke of this worthy man. Reade them diligently, and iudge of them freely. I doubt not but in your exacteſt cenſure, you will conſpire with thoſe learned Men, who for the profitable inſtruction they come in, in all, or the moſt points of Chriſtianitie, for the more common good of the Church of God, haue deemed them worthy their godly labours; by tranſlating them into diuers languages, as into Latine, Dutch, Spaniſh, &c. A thing not ordinarily obſerued in other writings of theſe our times.

Concerning this new Edition, if you aſke, why I haue not added theſe other Treatiſes of his, which haue bene publiſhed ſince the former Impreſſion? I anſwer, it is not done without the aduice of grane and learned men in two reſpects: Firſt, to ſet a difference (as indeede there is great oddes) betwixt thoſe bookes which the Author himſelſe yet liuing by his owne care not onely in the penning, but likewiſe in the correcting of the ſame, diſſet forth: and thoſe other which are Poſthumi, that is, borne after his death, gathered and collected by others: Such as are theſe following:

1. Vpon three chapters of the Reuelation.
2. Sathans Sophiſtrie.
3. Vpon the Epiſtle of Saint Iude.
4. The dignitie of the Miniſterie.
5. Vpon the eleuenth chapter to the Hebrewes.
6. Vpon three chapters of Saint Matthewes Goſpel, &c.

Secondly, becauſe I haue remaining by me ſo many other Treatiſes in diuers prius and formes of the ſame Authors owne collection, which I purpoſe (by Gods permiſſion) to ſet forth, as will amount to a ſecond Volume equall to this, if not bigger.

In the meane time, what heretofore I haue wiſhed concerning ſuch as haue the intereſt in theſe Afterbirths, viz. that they would agree likewiſe, to draw them all into one Volume, that ſo they ſhould delight in Mr. Perkins his writings, might with leſſe labour of their owne, attaine to the complete body of his ſtudies: it being alſo more conuenient for their uſe, to haue them rather compaſſed in one Volume, then ſcattered into diuers parcels of diuers formes: I now vnderſtand, is effected, and nothing henceforth to be added. Thus with promiſe to make all poſſible expedition in ſetting forth the ſecond Volume of his worke: I commend this to your diligent reading, my endeavours to your charitable conſideration, and vs all to the bleſſing and holy protection of Almighty God. A GRAINE OF MYSTARD-SEED. THE CONTENTS.

I. Conclusion.		IV. Conclusion.
A man that doth but begin to be first converted, is euen at that instant the very child of God, though inwardly he be more carnall then spirituall. 637.1,2		To see and feele in our selues the want of any grace, per- taining to saluation, and to be grieved therefore, is the grace it selfe. 641.1,2
II. Conclusion.		V. Conclusion.
The first materiall beginnings of the conuersion of a sin- ner, or the smallest measure of renewing grace, haue the promises of this life, and the life to come. 638.1,2		Hee that hath begun to subiect himselfe to Christ and his word, though as yet he be ignorant in most points of religion: yet if he haue a care to increase in know- ledge, and to practise that which he knoweth, hee is accepted of God, as a true beleuer. 642.1,2
III. Conclusion.		VI. Conclusion.
A constant and earnest desire to be reconciled to God, to beleue and to repent, if it be in a touched heart, is in acceptance of God, as reconciliation, faith, re- pentance it selfe. 638.2,3		The foresaid beginnings of grace are counterfeit, vntill they increase. ibid.

PROFIT, AND TO RECEIVE THE LORDS

PSAL. 119. vers. 130.

The entrance into thy words sheweth light, and giueth vnderstanding to the simple.

LONDON, Printed by JOHN LEGATT,

TO ALL IGNORANT PEOPLE that desire to be instructed.

MORE people, your manner is to sooth up your selues, as though ye were in a most happie estate: but if the matter come to a iust trial, it will fall out farre otherwise. For you leade your liues in great ignorance, as may appeare by these your common opinions which follow;

- 1 That faith is a mans good meaning, and his good seruing of God.
- 2 That God is serued by the rehearthing of the ten commandments, the Lords Prayer, and the Creede.
- 3 That ye haue beleueed in Christ euer since you could remember.
- 4 That it is pitie that he should liue which doth any whit doubt of his saluation.
- 5 That none can tell whether he shall be saued or no certainly: but that all men must be of a good beliefe.
- 6 That howsoeuer a man liue, yet if he call vpon God on his death-bed, and say, Lord haue mercy vpon me, and so goe away like a lambe, he is certainly saued.
- 7 That if any be strangely visited, he is either taken with a planet, or bewitched.
- 8 That a man may lawfully sweare, when he speakes nothing but the truth, and sweares by nothing but that which is good, as by his faith, or troth.
- 9 That a preacher is a good man no longer then he is in the pulpit. They thinke all like themselves.
- 10 That a man may repent when he will, because the Scripture saith, At what time soeuer a sinner doth repent him of his finnes, &c.
- 11 That it is an easier thing to please God, then to please our neighbour.
- 12 That ye can keepe the commandments, as well as God will giue you leaue.
- 13 That it is the safest to doe in Religion as most doe.
- 14 That merry ballads and bookes, as Scoggin, Benis of Southhampton, &c. are good to drine away the time, and to remooue heart-qualmes.
- 15 That ye can serue God with all your hearts, and that ye would be sorrie else.
- 16 That a man neede not heare so many Sermons, except he could follow them better.
- 17 That a man which commeth at no Sermons, may as well beleuee, as hee which heares all the Sermons in the world.
- 18 That ye know all the Preacher can tell you. For hee can say nothing, but that euery man is a sinner, that we must loue our neighbours as our selues, that euery man must bee saued by Christ: and all this ye can tell as well as he.
- 19 That it was a good world, when the old Religion was, because all things were cheape.
- 20 That drinking and bezing in the ale-houfe or tauerne, is good fellowship, and shewes a good kinde nature, and maintaines neighbourhood.
- 21 That a man may sweare by the Masse, because it is nothing now, and byr Lady, because shee is gone out of the Country.
- 22 That euery man must be for himselfe, and God for vsall.
- 23 That a man may make of his owne whatsoeuer he can.
- 24 That if a man remember to say his prayers euery morning (though hee neuer vnderstand them) he hath blessed himselfe for all the day following.
- 25 That a man prayeth when he saith the ten commandments.
- 26 That a man eates his Maker in the Sacrament.
- 27 That if a man be no adulterer, no thiefe, no murtherer, and doe no man harme, hee is a right honest man.
- 28 That a man neede not haue any knowledge of religion, because he is not booke-learned.
- 29 That one may haue a good meaning, when he saith and doth that which is euill.
- 30 That a man may goe to wizzards, called wise men, for counsell: because God hath prouided a false for euery fore.
- 31 That ye are to be excused in all your doings, because the best men are sinners.
- 32 That ye haue so strong a faith in Christ, that no euill company can hurt you.

The Epistle.

Those and such like sayings, what argue they but your grosse ignorance? Now where ignorance reigneth, there reignes sinne: and where sinne reignes, there the death rule: and where the death rule, men are in a damnable case.

It will reply unto mee thus: that ye are not so bad as I would make you. If need be you may say the Creede, the Lords prayer, and the ten Commandments: and therefore ye will be of Gods reliefe, say all men what they will, and you desire the death from your hearts.

I answer againe that it is not sufficient to say all these without booke, unless ye can understand the meaning of the words, and be able to make a right use of the Commandments, of the Creede, of the Lords prayer, by applying them inwardly to your hearts and consciences, and outwardly to your lines and conversations. This is the very point in which ye faile.

And for an helpe in this your ignorance, to bring you to true knowledge, unfained faith, and sound repentance: here I have set downe the principall points of Christian religion in fixe plaine and easie rules: even such as the simplest may easily learne: and hereunto is adjoynd an exposition of them word by word. If ye doe want other good directions, then use this my labour for your instruction. In reading of it, first learne the fixe Principles: and when you have them without booke, and the meaning of them withall, then learne the exposition also: which being well conceived, and in some measure felt in the heart, ye shall be able to profit by Sermons, where as now ye cannot, and the ordinary parts of the Catechisme, namely, the ten Commandments, the Creede, the Lords prayer, and the institution of the two Sacraments, shall more easily be understood.

Thine in Christ Iesus,

WILLIAM PERKINS.

THE FOUNDATION OF CHRISTIAN Religion, gathered into fixe Principles.

The first Principle.

Question.

What doest thou beleene concerning God?

A. There is one God, Creator and Governour of all things, distinguished into the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost.

Prooves out of the word of God.

1. There is a God.

Rom. 1. 20. For the invisible things of him, that is, his eternal power & Godhead, are scene by the creation of the world, being considered in his works, so the intent, that they should be without excuse. Nethertheless, he left not himselfe without witness, in that he did good, and gave us raine from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food & gladness.

2. This God is one.

1 Cor. 8. 4. Concerning therefore meate sacrificed to Idols, we know that an Idol is nothing in the world: and that there is none other God but one.

3. He is Creator of all things.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.

Through faith we understand, that the world was ordained by the word of God, so that the things which we see, are not made of things which did appeare.

4. He is governour of all things.

The eyes of the Lord in every place behold the evil and the good.

Tea, all the haire of your heads are numbered.

5. Distinguished into the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost.

And Iesus when he was baptized came straight out of the water: and loe, the heavens were opened unto him, & Iohn saw the spirit of God descending like a Dove and lighting upon him.

And loe a voice came from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased.

For there are three which beare record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghost: and these three are one.

1. They are wholly corrupted.

Now the very God of peace sanctifie you through blood, & I pray God that your whole spirit, and soule,

A and body, may be kept blamelesse unto the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

This I say therefore and testifie in the Lord, that ye henceforth walke not as other Gentiles walke, in wantonnesse of their minde.

Having their cogitation darkened, & being strangers from the life of God, through ignorance that is in them, because of the hardness of their heart.

When the Lord saw that the wickednesse of man was great in the earth, and all the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart, were evil only continually.

3. Through Adams fall.

Wherefore, as by one man sinne entered into the world, and death by sinne, and so death went our all men, for so much as all men have sinned.

4. And so are become slaves of Satan.

Wherein in times past ye walked according to the course of the world, and after the Prince that ruleth in the ayre, even the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience.

For as much then, as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, hee also himselfe likewise took part with them, that hee might destroy through death, him that had the power of death; that is, the diuell.

In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds, that is, of Infidels, that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, which is the image of God, should not shine unto them.

5. And guiltie of eternall damnation.

For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every man that continueth not in all things, which are written in the booke of the law, to doe them.

Likewise then, as by the offence of one, the fault came on all men to condemnation: so by the justifying of one, the benefit aboundeth toward all men, to the justification of life.

The third Principle.

Q. What meanes is there for thee to escape this damnable estate?

A. Iesus Christ, the eternal Sonne of God, being made man, by his death vpon the Crosse, and by his righteousnesse, hath perfectly alone by himselfe accomplished all things that are needfull for the saluation of mankind.

1. Christ Iesus the eternal Sonne of God.

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw the glory thereof, as the glory of the only begotten (Sonne) of the Father, full of grace and truth.

2. Being made man.

For he in no sort took the Angels, but hee took the seede of Abraham.

3. By his death vpon the Crosse.

Elia. 57. 15. But he was wounded for our transgressions, hee was broken for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed.

4. And by his righteousness.

Rom. 5. 19. For as by one mans disobedience, many were made sinners: so by the obedience of one, shall many also be made righteous.

1. Cor. 5. 21. For he hath made him to be sinne for vs, which knew no sinne, that we should be made the righteousness of God in him.

5. Hath perfectly.

Heb. 7. 25. Wherefore he is able also perfectly to save them that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liueth to make intercession for them.

6. Alone by himselfe.

A& 4. 11. Neither is their saluation in any other: for among men there is giuen none other name vnder heauen, whereby we must be saved.

7. Accomplished all things needfull for the saluation of mankind.

1. Joh. 3. 2. And he is the reconciliation for our sins: and not for ours onely, but also for the sins of the whole world.

The fourth Principle.

Q. But how maist thou be made partaker of Christ and his benefits.

Ans. A man of a contrite and humble spirit, by faith alone apprehending and applying Christ with all his merits vnto himselfe, is iustified before God and sanctified.

1. A man of a contrite and humble spirit.

Elia. 57. 15. For thus saith hee that is high and excellent: Hee that inhabiteth the eternitie, whose name is the Holy one, I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit: to reuene the spirit of the humble, and to giue life to them that are of a contrite heart.

Psal. 51. 17. The sacrifices of God, are a contrite spirit, a contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

2. By faith alone.

Mark. 5. 36. As soone as Iesus heard that word spoken, hee said vnto the ruler of the Synagogue, Be not afraid, onely beleene.

Num. 21. 19. So Moses made a serpent of brass, and set it vp for a signe, and when a serpent had bitten a man, then hee looked to the Serpent of brass, and liued.

Ioh. 3. 14. And as Moses lift up the Serpent in the wilderness, so must the Sonne of man be lifted vp.

Verfe. 5. That whosoever beleueth in him, should not perishe, but haue eternall life.

3. Apprehending and applying Christ with all his merits vnto himselfe.

Ioh. 1. 12. But as many as receiued him, to them hee gaue power to be the sonnes of God, to them that beleue in his name.

A. And Iesus said vnto them; I am the bread of life, hee that cometh to mee, shall not hunger, and hee that beleueth in mee, shall neuer thirst.

4. Is iustified before God.

For what saith the Scripture; Abraham beleuen God, and was counted to him for righteousness.

Verfe. 6. Euen as Dauid declareth the blessednesse of the man, vnto whom God imputeth righteousness, without works: saying, Verfe. 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose finnes are covered.

5. And sanctified.

And hee put no difference betwene vs and them, after that by faith hee had purified their hearts.

But yee are of him in Christ Iesus, who of God is made vnto vs wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.

The fifth Principle.

Q. What are the ordinary or vsuall meanes for obtaining of faith?

A. Faith cometh onely by the preaching of the word, and increaseth daily by it: as also by the administration of the Sacraments and prayer.

1. Faith cometh onely by the preaching of the word, and increaseth daily by it.

But how shall they call on him, in whom they haue not beleuen: how shall they beleue in him, of whom they haue not heard? And how shall they heare without a Preacher? Where there is no vision, the people decay: but he that keepeth the law is blessed.

My people are destroyed for lacke of knowledge: because thou hast refused knowledge, I will also refuse thee, that thou shalt be no Priest to mee: and seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.

2. As also by the administration of the Sacraments.

After hee receiued the signe of circumcision, as the scale of the righteousness of faith, that hee had when hee was vncircumcised, that hee should be the father of all them that beleue, not being circumcised, that righteousness might be imputed to them also.

1. Cor. 10. 1. Moreover, brethren, I would not that yee should bee ignorant, that all our fathers were vnder the cloud, and all passed through the sea, &c.

3. And Prayer.

For whosoever shall call vpon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

A. All men shall rise againe with their owne bodies, to the last iudgement, which being ended, the godly shall possesse the kingdom of heauen: but vnbelleuers and reprobates shall bee in hell, tormented with the diuell and his angels for euer.

1. All men shall rise againe with their owne bodies.

Ioh. 5. 28. Maruell not at this, for the hoare shall come, in the which all that are in the graues shall heare his voice.

Verfe. 29. And they shall come forth that haue done good, vnto the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, vnto the resurrection of condemnation.

2. To the last iudgement.

Ecd. 12. 14. For God will bring euery worke vnto iudgement, with euery secret thing, whether it bee good or euill.

Mat. 12. 36. But I say vnto you, that of euery idle word that men shall speake, they shall giue an account thereof, at the day of iudgement.

3. Which being ended the godly.

2. Pet. 2. 7. And deliuered iust Lot, vexed with the vncleane conversation of the wicked.

Ezech. 9. 4. And the Lord said vnto him: see through the middle of the Citie, euen through to the midst of Ierusalem, & set a marke vpon her forehead of them that mourne, and cry for all the abominations that bee done in the midst thereof.

4. Shall possesse the kingdom of God.

Mat. 25. 34. Then shall the king say to them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherite the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world.

Verfe. 41. 5. But vnbelleuers and reprobates shall bee in hell, tormented with the diuell and his angels.

Then shall hee say vnto them on the left hand, Depart from mee ye cursed into euersing fire, which is prepared for the diuell & his angels.

The Scriptures for prooue were onely quoted by the Author, to moue thee to search them: the words themselves I haue expressed at the earnest request of many, that thou maist more easily learne them: if yet thou wilt bee ignorant, thy malice is euident; if thou gauest knowledge, giue God the glorie in doing of his will. Thus T.S.

THE EXPOSITION OF THE Principles.

The first Principle expounded.

Question.

What is God?

A. God is (a) a spirit, or a spirituall substance, most wise, most holy, eternal, infinite.

Q. How doe you perfwade your selfe that there is a God?

A. Beside the testimonie of the Scriptures, plaine reason will shew it.

Q. What is one reason?

A. When I consider (b) the wonderfull frame of the world, me thinks the filly creatures that bee in it could neuer make it: neither could it make it selfe, and therefore besides all these, the maker of it must needs be God. Euen as when a man comes into a strange country, & sees faire and sumptuous buildings, and yet findes no liuing creatures there, besides birds and beasts, he will not imagine, that either birds or beasts reared those buildings, but hee presently conceiues, that some men either were or haue beene there.

Q. What other reason haue you?

A. (c) A man that commits any sinne, as murder, fornication, adulterie, blasphemie, &c. albeit hee doth so conceale the matter, that no man liuing know of it, yet offendeth he hath a griping in his conscience, and feelles the very flashing of hell fire; which is a strong reason to shew, that there is a God, before whose iudgement seat hee must answer for his fact.

Q. How many Gods are there?

A. No (d) more but one.

Q. How doe you conceiue this one God in your minde?

A. (e) By framing an image of him in my mind (as ignorant folkes doe, that thinke him to be an old man sitting in heauen) but I conceiue him by his properties and workes.

Q. What bee his chiefe properties?

A. First, hee is (f) most wise, vnderstanding all things aright, and knowing the reason of them. Secondly, hee is (g) most holy, which appeareth, in that he is most iust and mercifull vnto his creatures. Thirdly, hee is (h) eternal, without either beginning, or end of daies. Lastly, hee is (i) infinite, both because hee is present in all places, and because hee is of power sufficient to doe whatsoever hee (k) will.

Q. What be the workes of God?

A. (l) The creation of the world, and eery thing therein, and the preseruation of them, being created by his speciall providence.

Q. How know you that God governeth euery particular thing in the world by his speciall providence?

A. To omit the (m) Scriptures, I see it by experience: (n) Meate, Drinke and Clothing being void of heat & life, could not preserve the life of man, vnlesse there were a speciall providence of God to giue verue vnto them.

Q. How is this one God distinguished?

A. (o) Into the Father, which begetteth the Sonne; into the Sonne, who is begotten of the Father; into the holy Ghost, (p) who proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne.

The second Principle expounded.

Q. Let vs now come to our selues, and first tel me what is the naturall estate of man?

A. Euery man is by nature (a) dead in sin as a loathsome carrio, or as a dead corpe lieth rotting and stinking in the graue, hauing in him the feed of all finnes.

Q. What is sinne?

A. Any (b) breach of the of law of God, which bee no more but the least want of that which the law requireth.

Q. How many sorts of sinne are there?

A. Sinne is either the (c) corruption of nature, or any euill actions that proceed of it, as fruits thereof.

Q. In whom is the corruption of nature?

A. In all men (d) none excepted.

Q. In what part of man is it?

A. In euery (e) part both of body and soule, like as a leprose that runneth from the crowne of the head to the soale of the foote.

Q. Shew me how euery part of man is corrupted with sinne?

A. Firſt, in the (f) minde there is nothing but ignorance and blindness concerning heauily matters. Secondly, (g) the conscience is defiled, being alwaies either benumbed with sinne, or else tormoyed with inward accusations and terrors. Thirdly, (h) the will of man onely willesh and lusteth after euill. Fourthly, the (i) affections of the heart, as loue, ioy, hope, desire, &c. are moued and stirred to that which is euill to embrace it, and they are neuer fluxed vnto that which is good, vnlesse it bee to elchew it. Lastly, the (k) members of the body are the instruments & tooles of the minde for the execution of sinne.

Q. What bee those euill actions that are the fruits of this corruption?

A. (l) Euill thoughts in the minde, which come either by a mans owne conceiuing, or by the suggestion of the diuell: (m) euill motions and lusts stirring in the heart, and from these arise euill words and deeds, when any occasion is giuen.

Q. How commeth it to passe that all men are thus defiled with sinne?

A. By (n) Adam infidelity and disobedience, in eating the forbidden fruit: euen as we see great personages by treason do not onely hurt themselves, but also staine their blood, and disgrace their posterity.

Q. What hurt comes to man by his sin?

A. (o) He is continually subiect to the curse of God in his life time, in the end of his life, and after this life.

Q. What is the curse of God in this life?

A. (p) In the bodie diseases, aches, paines in the soule, blindness, hardnes of heart, horror of conscience, in goods, hinderances, and losses: in name ignominie and reproch: lastly, in the whole man, bondage vnder Satan the prince of darknesse.

Q. What manner of bondage is this?

A. This bondage (q) is when a man is the slave of the diuell, and hath him to raigne in his heart as his God.

Q. How may a man know whether Satan bee his God or not?

A. Hee may know it by this, if hee giue obedience to him in his heart, and expresse it in his conseruation.

Q. And how shall a man perceine this obedience?

A. If he (r) take delight in the euill motions that Satan puts into his heart, and doe fulfill the lusts of the diuell.

Q. What is the curse due to man in the end of this life?

A. (s) Death, which is the separation of bodie and soule.

Q. What is the curse after this life?

A. (t) Eternall damnation in hell fire, whereof euery man is guilty, and is in as great danger of it, as the traytor apprehended is in danger of hanging, drawing and quartering.

The third principle expounded.

Q. If damnation bee the reward of sinne: then is a man of all creatures most miserable: a dogge or a toade when they die, althier miserie is ended; but when a man dyeth, there is the beginning of his woe.

A. It were so indeed, if there were no means of deliuerance, but G O D hath shewed his mercy in giuing a Sauour to mankind.

Q. How is this Saviour called?

A. (u) Iesus Christ.

Q. What is Iesus Christ?

A. (x) The eternall Sonne of God made man in all things, euen (y) in his infirmities like other men, save onely in sinne.

Q. How was he made man void of sinne?

A. He was (z) conceived in the wombe of a Virgin, and sanctified by the holy Ghost at his conception.

Q. Why must our Saviour bee both God and man?

A. He (a) must bee a man, because man had sinned, and therefore a man must die for sinne, to appease Gods wrath: he must bee God, to sustaine & uphold the manhood, to ouercome and vanquish death.

Q. What bee the offices of Christ to make him an al-sufficient Saviour?

A. (b) He is a Priest, a Prophet, a King.

Q. Why is he a Priest?

A. To work the meanes of saluation in the behalfe of mankind.

Q. How doth hee worke the meanes of saluation?

A. (c) Firſt, by making satisfaction to his Father for the sinne of man: secondly by making intercession.

Q. How doth he make satisfaction?

A. By two meanes: and the first is by offering a sacrifice.

Q. What is the sacrifice?

A. (d) Christ himselfe, as hee is a man consisting of body and soule.

Q. What is the (e) Altar.

A. Christ as hee is God, is the Altar on which he sacrificed himselfe.

Q. Who was the Priest?

A. None but (f) Christ, and that as he is both God and man.

Q. How

Q. How oft did he sacrifice himselfe?

A. Neuer but (p) once.

Q. What death did he suffer when he sacrificed himselfe?

A. A death vpon the crosse, peculiar to himselfe alone: for (q) besides the separation of bodie and soule, he felt also the pangs of hell, in that the whole wrath of God due to the sinne of man, was powred forth vpon him.

Q. What profite commeth by his Sacrifice?

A. (r) Gods wrath is appeased by it.

Q. Could the sufferings of Christ, which was but for a short time, counteruail euerlasting damnation, and so appeale Gods wrath?

A. Yea: for seeing Christ suffered, (s) God sufficed, though not in his Godhead: and that is more then if all men in the world had suffered for euer and euer.

Q. Now tell me the other meanes of satisfaction.

A. It is the perfect fulfilling of the law.

Q. How did he fulfill the law?

A. By (t) his perfect righteousnes: which consisteth of two parts: the first, the integritie and puresnes of his humane nature: the other, (d) his obedience in performing all that the law required.

Q. You have shewed how Christ doth make satisfaction, tell me likewise how he doth make intercession?

A. He alone doth continually (e) appeare before his father in heauen, making the faithful, and all their prayers acceptable vnto him, by applying of the merits of his owne perfect satisfaction to them.

Q. Why is Christ a Prophet?

A. To (f) reueale vnto his Church the way and meanes of saluation, and this he doth outwardly by the ministerie of his word, and inwardly by the teaching of his spirit.

Q. Why is he also a King?

A. That (g) he might bountifully bestow vp on vs, & conuey vnto vs all the afore said meanes of saluation.

Q. How doth he shew himselfe to be King?

A. In (h) that being dead and buried, hee rose from the graue, quickened his dead bodie, ascended into heauen, and now sitteth at the right hand of his Father, with full power and glorie in heauen.

Q. How else?

A. In (i) that hee doth continually inspire and direct his seruants, by the diuine power of his holy spirit, according to his holy word.

Q. But to whom will this blessed King communicate all the meanes of saluation?

A. He (k) offereth them to many, and they are sufficient to saue all mankind; but all shall not bee saved thereby, because faith they will not receiue them.

The fourth Principle expounded.

Q. What is faith?

A. Faith is a (l) wonderfull grace of God, by which a man doth apprehend and apply Christ, and all his benefites vnto himselfe.

Q. How doth a man apply Christ vnto himselfe, seeing wee are on earth, and Christ in heauen?

A. This (m) applying is done by assurance, when a man is verily perswaded by the holy spirit, of Gods fauour towards himselfe particularly, & of the forgiveness of his owne finnes.

Q. How doth God bring men truly to beleue in Christ?

A. Firſt, hee prepareth their hearts, that they might bee capable of faith: and then hee worketh faith in them.

Q. How doth God prepare mens hearts?

A. (n) By bruising them, as if one would breake an hard stone to powder: and this is done by humbling them.

Q. How doth God humble a man?

A. By working in him a sight of his sins, and a sorrow for them.

Q. How is this sight of sinne wrought?

A. By the (o) morall law: the summe whereof is the ten commandements.

Q. What finnes may I find in my selfe by them?

A. Tennes.

Q. What is the first?

A. (a) To make something thy God, which is not God, by fearing it, louing it, and so trusting in it more then in the true God.

Q. What is the second?

A. (b) To worship false gods, or the true God in a false manner.

Q. What is the third?

A. (c) To dishonour God in abusing his titles, words, and workes.

Q. What is the fourth?

A. To (d) breake the Sabbath, in doing the workes of their calling, & of the flesh; and in leauing vndone the workes of the spirit.

Q. What bee the fixe latter?

A. To doe any thing that may hinder thy neighbours (e) dignity, (f) life, (g) chastity, (h) wealth, (i) good name, (k) though it be but in the secret thoughts and motions of the heart vnto which thou giuest no liking nor consent.

Q. What is sorrow for sinne?

A. It is (l) when a mans conscience is touched with a lively feeling of Gods displeasure for any of these finnes: (m) in such wise, that hee utterly despaires of saluation, in regard of any thing in himselfe, acknowledging that he hath deserved shame and confusion eternally.

Q. How doth God worke this sorrow?

A. By the terrible curse of the law.

Q. What is that?

A. Hee (n) which breakes but one of the commandements of God, though it be but once in all his life time, and that onely in one thought, is subiect to, and in danger of eternall damnation thereby.

Q. When mens hearts are thus prepared, how doth God ingraft faith in them?

A. By working certaine inward motions

in the heart, which are the seedes of faith, out of which it breedeth.

Q. What is the first of them?

A. When a man humbled vnder the burden of his finnes, doth (o) acknowledge and feele that he stands in great neede of Christ.

Q. What is the second?

A. An (p) hungering desire & a longing to be made partaker of Christ & all his merites.

Q. What is the third?

A. A flying to the throne of grace, from the sentence of the law pricking the conscience.

Q. How is it done?

A. By (r) praying, with sending vp loud cries for Gods fauour in Christ, in the pardoning of finnes; and with feruent persequence herein, till the desire of the heart be granted.

Q. What followeth after this?

A. God then (s) according to his mercifull promise, lets the poore sinner feele the assurance of his loue wherewith he loueth him in Christ, which assurance is a liuely faith.

Q. Are there diuers degrees and measures of true faith?

A. (t) Yea.

Q. What is the least measure of true faith that any man can haue?

A. When a man of an humble spirit, by reason of the vltimities of his faith, doth not yet feele the assurance of the forgiveness of his finnes, and yet he is perswaded that they are pardonable; & therefore desireth that they should be pardoned, and with his heart praiereth to God to pardon them.

Q. How doe you know that such a man hath faith?

A. These desires and praieres are testimonies of the spirit, whose proprietie it is to stirre vp a longing and a lusting after heavenly things with sighes and groanes for Gods fauour and mercie in Christ. y Now where the Spirit of Christ is, there is Christ dwelling; and where Christ dwelleth, there is true faith, how weak soeuer it be.

Q. What is the greatest measure of faith?

A. When a man daily increasing in faith comes to be (a) fully perswaded of Gods loue in Christ towards himselfe particularly, and of the forgiveness of his owne finnes.

Q. When shall a Christian heart come to this full assurance?

A. Not (b) at the first, but in some continuance of time, when he hath bene well practised inrepentance, and hath had diuers experiences of Gods loue vnto him in Christ: then after them will appeare in his heart the fullnes of perswasion: which is the ripenesse and strength of faith.

Q. What benefits doth a man receiue by faith in Christ?

A. Herely a hee is iustificed before God, and sanctified.

Q. What is this, to be iustificed before God?

A. It comprehendeth two things: the first,

A. to be cleared from the guiltinesse and punishment of sinne; the second, to be accepted as perfectly righteous before God.

Q. How is a man cleared from the guiltinesse and punishment of his finnes?

A. By Christs (f) sufferings and death vpon the crosse.

Q. How is he accepted for righteous before God?

A. By the righteousness of Christ imputed to him.

Q. What profit comes by being thus iustificed?

A. Herely by and by no other means in the world, the beleuer shall be accepted before Gods iudgement seate, as worthy of eternal life by the merits of the same righteousnesse of Christ.

Q. Doe not good workes then make vs worthy of eternall life?

A. No: For God, who is perfect righteousnesse it selfe, will finde in the best workes we doe, more matter of damnation then of saluation: and therefore (s) we must rather condemn our selues for our good workes, then looke to be iustificed before God thereby.

Q. How may a man know that he is iustificed before God?

A. Hee need not ascend into heauen to search the secret councell of God: (k) but rather descend into his owne heart to search whether he be sanctified or not.

Q. What is it to be sanctified?

A. It comprehendeth two things: the first, to be purged from the corruption of his owne nature, the second, to be indued with inward righteousnesse.

Q. How is the corruption of sinne purged?

A. By the (l) merits and power of Christs death, which being by faith applied is as a rasur to abate, consume, and weaken the power of all sinne.

Q. How is a man indued with inherent righteousnesse?

A. Through the (m) vertue of Christs resurrection: which being applied by faith, is as a restorative to reuiue a man that is dead in sinne, to newnesse of life.

Q. In what part of man is sanctification wrought?

A. In (n) euery part of body and soule.

Q. In what time is it wrought?

A. It is (o) begun in this life, in which the faithfull receiue onely the first fruits of the spirit, and it is not finished before the end of this life.

Q. What graces of the Spirit doe vually shew themselves in the heart of a man sanctified?

A. The hatred (p) of sinne, and the loue of righteousnesse.

Q. What proceeds of them?

A. Repentance, which is (q) a settled purpose in the heart, with a careful endeavour to leave all his finnes, and to liue a Christian life, according to all Gods commandments.

Q. What

Q. What goeth with repentance?

A. A continual fighting and struggling against the assaults of a mans owne flesh, against the motions of the diuell, and the incitements of the world.

Q. What followeth after a man hath gotten the victory in any temptation or affliction?

A. Experience of Gods loue in Christ, and so increase of peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost.

Q. What followeth if in any temptation he be overcome and through infirmity fall?

A. After a while there will arise a godly sorrow, which is, when a man is grieved for no other cause in the world, but for this onely, that by his sin he hath displeased God, who hath bene vnto him a most mercifull and louing Father.

Q. What signe is there of this sorrow?

A. The true signe of it is this, when a man can bee grieved for the very disobedience of God in his euill word or deede, though he should neuer be punished, and though there were neither heauen nor hell.

Q. What followeth after this sorrow?

A. Repentance, renewed affections.

Q. By what signes will this repentance appeare?

A. By seuen. 1. A care to leaue the sinne into which hee is fallen. 2. An vtter condemning of himselfe for it, with a craving of pardon. 3. A great anger against himselfe for his carelesnesse. 4. A feare lest he should fall into the same sinne againe. 5. A desire euery after to please God. 6. A zeale of the same. 7. Renegence vpon himselfe for his former offence.

The fifth Principle expounded.

Q. What outward means must wee vse to obtaine faith, and all the blessings of God which come by faith?

A. The preaching of Gods word, and the administration of the Sacraments, and prayer.

Q. Where is the word of God to be found?

A. The whole word of God, needfull to saluation, is set down in the holy Scriptures.

Q. How know you that the Scriptures are the word of God, and not mens policies?

A. I am assured of it: first because the holy Ghost perswadeth my conscience that it is so. Secondly, I see it by experience: for the preaching of the (c) Scriptures haue the power of God in them to humble a man, when they are preached, and to call him downe to hell, and afterward to restore and raise him vp againe.

Q. What is the vse of the word of God preached?

A. First, it (d) breedeth, and then it increaseth faith in them which are chosen to saluation: but vnto them that perish, it is by reason of their corruption, an occasion of their further damnation.

Q. How must we heare Gods word, that it may be effectuall to our saluation?

A. We (e) must come vnto it with hunger-bitten hearts, hauing an appetite to the word; we must marke it with attention, receiue it by faith, submit our selues vnto it with feare and trembling, euen then when our faults are reprooued: Lastly, we must hide it in the corners of our hearts, that we may frame our liues and conuersations by it.

Q. What is a Sacrament?

A. A (f) signe to represent, a scale to confirme, an instrument to conuey Christ and all his benefits to them that do beleue in him.

Q. Why must a Sacrament represent the mercies of God before our eyes?

A. Because we are dull to conceiue and to remember them.

Q. Why do the Sacraments scale vnto vs the mercies of God?

A. Because we are full of vnbeleefe, and doubt, of them.

Q. Why is the Sacrament the instrument of the spirit to conuey the mercies of God into our hearts?

A. Because wee are like Thomas, wee will not beleue till we feele them in some measure in our hearts.

Q. How many Sacraments are there?

A. Two (g) and no more: Baptisme, by which wee haue our admission into the true Church of God, and the Lords Supper, by which we are nourished and preserved in the true Church after our admission.

Q. What is done in Baptisme?

A. (h) In the assembly of the Church the covenant of grace betwene God and the party baptized, is solemnly confirmed and sealed.

Q. In this covenant, what doth God promise to the party baptized?

A. (i) Christ, with all blessings that come by him.

Q. To what condition is the party baptized bound?

A. To (k) receiue Christ, & to repent his sinning in water?

Q. What meaneth the sprinkling or dipping in water?

A. It scales vnto vs remission of sins, and sanctification by the obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Christ.

Q. How cometh it to passe, that many after their baptisme for a long time feele not the effect and fruite of it, and some neuer?

A. The fault is not in God, who keeps his covenants, but the fault is in themselves, in that they doe not keepe the condition of the covenant, to receiue Christ by faith, and to repent of all their finnes.

Q. When shall a man then see the effect of his baptisme?

A. At what time soeuer hee doth receiue Christ by faith, though it bee many yeares after, he shall then feele the power of God to regenerate him, and to worke all things in him, which he offered in baptisme.

Q. How

To the Christian Reader.

CHRISTIAN Reader, there are at this day foure severall opinions of the order of Gods Predestination. The first is, of the olde and new Pelagians; who place the cause of Gods Predestination in man; in that they holde, that God did ordaine men either to life or death, according as hee did fore-see, that they would by their naturall Free-will, eyther reiect or receive grace offered. The second of them, who (of some) are tearmed Lutherans; which teach, that God fore-seeing, how all mankinde being shut vp vnder belise, would therefore reiect grace offered, did hereupon purpose to choose some to saluation of his meere mercie, without any respect of their faith or good workes, and the rest to reiect, being mooued to doe this, because hee did eternally fore-see that they would reiect his grace offered them in the Gospell. The third Semi-Pelagian Papists, which ascribe Gods predestination, partly to mercy, and partly to mens fore-seene preparations and meritorious workes. The fourth, of such as teach, that the cause of the execution of Gods predestination, is his mercy in Christ, in them which are saued; and in them which perish, the fall and corruption of man: yet so, as that the decree and eternall countell of God, concerning them both, hath not any cause besides his will and pleasure. Of these foure opinions, the three former I labour to oppugne, as erroneous and to maintaine the last, as being truth, which will beare weight in the ballance of the Sanctuary.

A further discourse whereof, here I make bold to offer to thy godly consideration: in reading whereof, regard not so much the thing it self penned very slenderly, as mine intent and affection: who desire among the rest, to cast my mite into the treasure of the Church of England, and, for want of gold, pearle, and pretious stone, to bring a Rammes skinne or twaine, and a little Goates haire, to the building of the Lords tabernacle, Exod. 35. 23.

The Father of our Lord Iesus Christ grant, that according to the riches of his glory, thou maist be strengthened by his spirit in the inner man, that Christ may dwell in thy heart by faith: so the end that thou being rooted and grounded in loue, maist be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and height thereof; and to know the loue of Christ which passeth knowledge, that thou maist be filled with all fulnesse of God. *Amen. CHAP. I.

Of the body of Scripture, and Theology.

THE Bodie of Scripture is a doctrine sufficient to live well.

It comprehendeth many holy sciences, whereof one is principal, others are hand-maids or retainers.

The principall science is Theologie. Theologie, is the science of living blessedly for ever. Blessed life ariseth from the knowledge of God, Ioh. 1. 7. 3. This is life eternal, that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Christ Iesus. Ila. 53. 11. By his knowledge shal my righteous servants (viz. Christ) iustifie many. And therefore it ariseth likewise from the knowledge of our selues, because we know God by looking into our selues.

Theologie hath two parts: the first of God, the second of his workes.

CHAP. II.

Of God, and the nature of God.

THAT there is a God, it is evident, 1. by the course of nature: 2. by the nature of the soule of man: 3. by the distinction of things honest and dishonest: 4. by the terror of conscience: 5. by the regiment of ciuill societies: 6. the order of all causes hauing euer recourse to some former beginning: 7. the determination of all things to their severall ends: 8. the consent of all men well in their wits.

God is Iehouah Elohim, Exod. 6. 3. 3. And Elohim spake vnto Moses, and said vnto him, I am Iehouah: and I appeared vnto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Iacob by the name of God Almighty, but by my name Iehouah, was I not knowne vnto them. Exod. 3. 13. If they say vnto me, What is his name? What shall I say vnto them? And God answered Moses, I am that I am: Also he said, thou shalt thou say vnto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me vnto you. And God spake further to Moses, Thou shalt thou say vnto the children of Israel, Iehouah Elohim, &c. hath sent me vnto you. In these words, the first title of God, declareth his Nature, the second his Persons.

The nature of God, is his most lively and most perfect essence.

The perfection of the nature of God, is the absolute constitution thereof, whereby it is wholly complete within it selfe, Exod. 3. 13. I am that I am, A.C. 17. 24. God that made the world, and all things that are therein, seeing that he is the Lord of heauen and earth, dwelleth not in

A temples made with hands, neither is worshipped with mens hands, as though hee needed any thing: seeing he giueth to all life and breath, and all things.

The perfection of his Nature, is either Simpleness, or the Infiniteness thereof.

The Simpleness of his nature, is that by which hee is void of all Logically relation in arguments. He hath not in him subiect or adiunct. Ioh. 5. 26. As the Father hath life in himselfe, so hath hee given to the Sonne to haue life in himselfe: conferred with Ioh. 14. 6. I am the way, see true li, and the life. 1. Ioh. 1. 7. But if we walke in the light, as he is light: conferred with v. 5. God is light, and in him is no darkness. Hence it is manifest that to haue Life, and to be Life:

B to be in Light, and to be Light, in God are all one. Neither is God subiect to generality, or specialty: whole, or parts: matter: or that which is made of matter: for so there should bee in God diuers things, and one more perfect then another. Therefore, whatsoever is in God, is his essence, and all that he is, he is by essence. The saying of Augustine in his 6. book and 4. chap. of the Trinity, is fit to proue this; In God (saith he) to be, and to be iust or mightie, are all one: but in the mind of man, it is not all one to be, and to be mightie, or iust: for the mind may be destitute of these vertues, and yet a minde.

Hence it is manifest that the nature of God is immutable and spiritual.

C Gods immutability of nature, is that by which he is void of all composition, diuision, and change, Iam. 1. 17. With God there is no variableness nor shadow of changing. Mal. 3. 6. I am the Lord, and am not changed. Where it is said that God repenteth, &c. Gen. 6. 6. the meaning is, that God changeth the action, as men doe that repent: therefore repentance signifieth not any mutation in God, but in his actions, and such things as are made and changed by him.

Gods nature is spiritual, in that it is incorporeal, and therefore insensible, Ioh. 4. 24. God is a Spirit, 2. Cor. 3. 17. The Lord is the spirit. 1. Tim. 1. 17. To the King eternal, immortal, invisible only wise God, be glory & honor for euer & euer. Col. 1. 15. who is the image of the invisible God

D The infiniteness of God is two-fold: his Eternitie, and exceeding greatnesse.

Gods eternitie, is that by which he is without beginning and ending. Plal. 90. 2. Before the mountains were made, and before thou hadst formed the earth and the round world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art our God. Reu. 1. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, that is, the beginning and ending, saith the Lord: Which is, Which was, and Which is to come,

Gods exceeding greatnes, is that by which his incomprehensible nature is euery where present, both within & without the world. PC. 145. 3. Great is the Lord & worthy to be praised and his greatnesse is incomprehensible. 1. King. 8. 27. Is it true indeede that God will dwell on the earth? Behold the heauens, and the heauens of heauens are not able to containe thee: how much lesse is this house that I haue built? Ier. 23. 24. Doe not I fill the heauen and earth, saith the Lord? Hence it is plaine.

First, that he is onely one, and that indiuisible, not many. Eph. 4. 5. One Lord, one faith, one baptisme, one God and Father of all, Deut. 4. 35. Vnto thee it was shewed, that thou mightest know that the Lord be God, and that there is none but he alone. 1. Cor. 8. 4. We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one: and there can be but one thing infinite in nature.

Secondly, that God is the knower of the heart. For nothing is hidden from that nature, which is within all things, and without all things, which is included in nothing, nor excluded from any thing. Because. 1. King. 8. 39. The Lord searcheth all hearts, and vnderstandeth euery worke of the minde. Psal. 139. 12. Thou knowest my sitting downe, and my rising up, thou vnderstandest my cogitation as I am off.

CHAP. III. Of the life of God.

Hitherto we haue spoken of the perfection of Gods nature: Now followeth the life of GOD, by which the Diuine Nature is in perpetual action, liuing, and moouing in it selfe. Psal. 42. 2. My soule thirsteth for God, euen for the liuing God, when shall I come and appeare before the presence of God? Heb. 3. 12. See there be not as any time in any of you an euill heart to depart from the liuing God.

The diuine Nature, is especially in perpetual operation by three attributes, the which doe manifest the operation of God towards his creatures. These are his Willdome, Will, and Omnipotencie.

The wisdom or knowledge of God, is that by the which God doth, not by certaine notions abstracted from the things themselves, but by his owne essence: nor successively and by discourse of reason, but by one eternall and immutable act of vnderstanding, distinctly and perfectly know himselfe, and all other things, though infinite, whether they haue bin or not. Math. 11. 27. No man knoweth the Sonne but the Father, nor the Father but the Sonne, and he to whom the Sonne will reueale him. Heb. 4. 13. There is nothing created, which is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and open to his eyes, with whom we haue to doe, Psal. 147. 5. His wisdom is infinite.

The foreknowledge of God, is that by which he most assuredly foreseeeth all things that are to come. Act. 2. 23. Him haue ye taken by the hands of the wicked, being deliuered by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God, and haue crucified and slaine, Rom. 8. 29. Those which be known before, he also predestinated to be made like to the image of his Sonne. This is not properly spoken of God, but by reason of

A men to whom things are past or to come. The counsell of God, is that by the which he doth most rightly perceiue the best reason of all things that are done. Prou. 8. 14. I haue counsell and wisdom, I am vnderstanding, and I haue strenght.

The will of God, is that by the which he both most freely, and iustly with one act willet all things. Rom. 9. 18. He hath mercie on whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. Eph. 1. 5. Who hath predestinated vs to be adopted through Iesu Christ vnto himselfe, according to the good pleasure of his will. Iam. 4. 1. For what which you should say, If the Lord will, and we will we will doe this or that.

B God willet that which is good, by approving that which is euill, in as much as it is euill, by disallowing and forsaking it. And yet he voluntarily doth permit euill, because it is good that there should be euill. Act. 14. 16. Who in time past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their owne ways. Psal. 81. 12. So I gaue them up to the hardness of their heart, and they haue walked in their owne counsells.

The will of God, by reason of diuers objects, hath diuers Names, and is either called Loue and Harred, or Grace and Iustice.

The Loue of God is that by the which God approoueth first himselfe, and then all his creatures as they are good, without their desert, and in them doth take delight. 1. Ioh. 4. 16. God is loue, and who so remaineth in loue, remaineth in God, and God in him. Ioh. 3. 16. So God loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten Sonne, &c. Rom. 5. 8. God setteth out his loue towards vs, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs.

The Hatred of God, is that by the which he disliketh and detesteth his creature offending by his fault. 1. Cor. 10. 5. But many of the Lord misliked, for they perished in the wilderness. Pl. 5. 7. Thou hatest all the workers of iniquity. Pl. 4. 5. 7. Thou hast loved iustice & hated iniquity.

The Grace of God, is that by which he freely declareth his fauour to his creatures. Rom. 11. 6. If it be of grace, it is no more of worke: a therswise grace is no grace: but if it be of worke it is no more grace. Tit. 2. 11. The saving grace of God shined to all men, teaching vs to deny impietie, &c.

D The Grace of God, is either his goodnesse, or his mercie.

The goodnesse of God, is that by which he being in himselfe absolutely good, doth freely exercise his liberalitie vpon his creatures. Math. 19. 17. Why callest thou mee good? there is none good but one, euen God. Math. 5. 45. He maketh Sonne to shine vpon the good and bad, and be raiyneth vpon the iust and vnjust.

Gods mercie, is that by which he freely assisteth all his creatures in their miseries. Esa. 30. 18. Ter Will the Lord waite, that he may haue mercie vpon you. Iam. 3. 22. It is the Lords mercy that we are not consumed, because his compassions faile not. Exod. 33. 19. I take pittie on whom I take pittie, and am mercifull to whom I am mercifull.

Gods iustice, is that by which he in all things willet that which is iust. Psal. 11. 7. The iust Lord loneth iustice. Psal. 5. 4. For thou art not a God that lovest wickednesse.

Gods iustice is in word or deede.

Iustice in word, is that truth by which he constantly, and indeede willet that which he hath said. Rom. 3. 4. Let God be true, and euery man a liar. Math. 24. 35. Heauen and earth shall passe away, but my word shall not passe away. Hence it is, that there is a certaine iustice of God in keeping his promise. 1. Ioh. 1. 9. If we confesse our sinnes, God is faithfull and iust to forgive our sinnes. 2. Tim. 4. 8. Henceforth is laid up for mee the crowne of righteoussnesse, which the Lord the righteous iudge shall giue me at that day.

Iustice in deede, is that by which he either disposeth or rewardeth.

Gods disposing Iustice, is that by which he, as a most free Lord, ordereth rightly all things in his actions. Psal. 145. 17. The Lord is righteous in all his waies.

Gods rewarding Iustice, is that by which he rendereth to his creature according to his worke. 2. Thess. 1. 6. It is iustice with God, so render affliction to such as afflict you, but to you which are afflicted, releasing with vs. 1. Pet. 2. 17. Therefore if you call him Father, which without respect of person iudgeth according to euery mans worke, passe the time of your dwelling here in iustice. Ierem. 51. 56. The Lord that recompenseth, shall surely recompence.

The Iustice of God, is either his Gentlenes or Anger.

Gods Gentlenesse, is that by which he freely rewardeth the righteousnesse of his creature. 2. Thess. 1. 5. Which is a token of the righteous iudgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy the kingdom of God, for the which ye also suffer. Mat. 10. 41. 42. He that receiveth a Prophet, in the name of a Prophet: shall haue a Prophets reward: and he that receiveth a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man, shall haue the reward of a righteous man. And whosoener shall giue vnto one of these little ones to drink a cup of cold water onely in the name of a Disciple, verily I say vnto you, he shall not lose his reward.

Gods Anger is that by which he willet the punishment of the creature offending. Rom. 1. 18. For the wrath of God is reuealed from heauen against all vngodlinesse, and vnrightheousnesse of men, which withhold the truth in vnrightheousnesse. Ioh. 3. 36. He that obeyeth not the Sonne, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him.

Thus much concerning the will of GOD; Now followeth his Omnipotencie.

Gods Omnipotencie, is that by which hee is most able to performe euery worke. Math. 19. 26. With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible.

Some things notwithstanding are heere to be excepted. First, those things whose action

A argueth an impotencie, as to lie, to denie his word. Tit. 1. 2. Which God, shee cannot lie, hath promised. 2. Tim. 2. 13. He cannot denie himselfe. Secondly, such things as are contrary to the nature of God, as to destroy himselfe, and not to beget his Sonne from eternitie. Thirdly, such things as imply contradiction. For God cannot make a truth false; or that which is when it is not, to be.

Gods power may be distinguished into an absolute and actuall power.

Gods absolute power, is that by which he can doe more, then he either doth or will doe. Math. 3. 9. I say vnto you, God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham. Phil. 3. 21. According to the working, whereby he is able to subdue euen all things to himselfe.

B Gods actuall power, is that by which hee causeth all things to be, which he freely willet. Psal. 135. 6. All things which God willet, shall be doth in heauen, and in earth, and in all depths.

CHAP. IV.

Of Gods glorie, and blessednesse.

Out of the former attributes, by which the true Iehouah is distinguished from a fained God, and from Idols, arise the glorie of God, and his blessednesse.

C Gods glorie or maiestie, is the infinite excellencie of his most simple and most holy diuine Nature. Heb. 1. 3. Who being the brightness of his glorie, and the inglorious forme of his person, &c. Nchem. 9. 5. Let them praise thy glorious name, O God, which excelleth above all thanksgiving and praise.

By this wee see, that God onely can know himselfe perfectly. Ioh. 6. 46. Not that any man hath seene the Father, save he which is of God, he hath seene the Father. 1. Tim. 6. 16. Who only hath immortalitie, and dwelleth in the light that none can see. Exod. 33. 20. Thou canst not see my face.

Notwithstanding there is a certaine manifestation of Gods glory: partly more obscure, partly more apparent.

D The more obscure manifestation, is the vision of Gods maiestie in this life, by the eyes of the minde through the helpe of things perceived by outward senses. Ila. 6. 1. I saw the Lord sitting vpon an high throne, and lifted up, and the lower parts thereof filled the Temple. Exod. 33. 22. And while my glory passed by, I will put thee in a cleft of the Rocke, and will cover thee with my hand while I passe by: after I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my backe parts: but my face shall not be seene. 1. Cor. 13. 12. Now wee see as through a glasse darkly.

The more apparent manifestation of God, is the contemplation of him in heauen face to face. 1. Cor. 13. 12. But then shall wee see face to face. Dan. 7. 9, 10. I beheld till the thrones were set up, and the ancient of daies did sit, whose garment was white as snow, &c.

Gods blessednesse, is that by which God is in himselfe, and of himselfe all sufficient. Gen.

17.1. I am God all-sufficient, walke before me, and be thou bright. Col. 2.9. For in him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. 1. Tim. 6. 15. Which in due time he shall shew, that is blessed and Prince only.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the persons of the Godhead.

The persons are they, which subsisting in one Godhead, are distinguished by incommunicable properties. 1. Ioh. 5. 7. There are three that beare record in heauen, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghost, and these three are one. Gen. 1.9-24. Then Iehouah rained upon Sodom, and vpon Gomorah, brimstone, & fire from Iehouah in heauen. Ioh. 1.1. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and that Word was God.

They therefore are coequal, and are distinguished not by degree, but by order.

The Constitution of a person is, when as a personal property, or the proper manner of subsisting is adjoined to the Deity, or the one diuine nature.

Distinction of persons, is that, by which albeiteuery person is one and the same perfect God, yet the Father is not the Sonne or the holy Ghost, but the Father alone; and the Sonne is not the Father or the holy Ghost, but the Sonne alone; and the H. Ghost is not the Father or the Sonne, but the holy Ghost alone; neither can they be diuided, by reason of the infinite greatnesse of that most simple essence, which one and the same, is wholly in the Father, wholly in the Sonne, and wholly in the holy Ghost: so that in these there is diuersitie of persons, but vnitie in essence.

The communion of the persons, or rather vnion, is that by which each one is in the rest, and with the rest, by reason of the vnitie of the Godhead; and therefore euery each one doth possesse, loue, and glorifie another, and worke the same thing. Ioh. 14. 10. Belieuest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father is in me? the word that I speake vnto you I speake not of my selfe, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the workes, Prou. 8. 22. The Lord hath possessed me in the beginning of his way: I was before the workes of old. And v. 30. Then was I with him as a nourisher, and I was daily his delight, reioycing alway before him. Ioh. 1. 1. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and that Word was God, and cap. 5. 19. The Sonne can doe nothing of himselfe, since that he seeth the Father doe: for whatsoeuer things he doth, the same doth the Sonne also.

There be three persons: the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. Matth. 3. 16, 17. And Iesua when he was baptized, came straight out of the water, and loe, the heauens were opened vnto him, and Iohn saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting vpon him: and loe a voice came from heauen, saying, This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased.

A The Father, is a person without beginning, from all eternitie begetting the Sonne, Heb. 1. 3. Who being the brightnesse of the glory, and the ingenerate forme of his person. Psal. 2. 7. Thou art my Sonne, this day haue I begotten thee.

In the generation of the Sonne, these properties must be noted: I. He that begetteth, and he that is begotten are together, and not one before another in time. II. He that begetteth, doth communicate with him that is begotten, not some one part, but his whole essence. III. The Father begot the Sonne, not out of himselfe, but within himselfe.

The incommunicable property of the Father, is to be vngotten, to be a Father, and to beget. He is the beginning of actions, because he beginneth euery action of himselfe, effecting it by the Sonne and the holy Ghost. 1. Cor. 8. 6. Tet vnto vs, there is but one God, Which is the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, & one Lord Iesua Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Rom. 11. 36. For of him, and through him, and for him, are all things.

The other two persons haue the Godhead, or the whole diuine essence, of the Father by communication, namely, the Sonne and the holy Ghost.

The Sonne is the second person, begotten of the Father from all eternitie. Heb. 1. 5. For vnto Which of the Angels said hee at any time, Thou art my Sonne, this day begate I thee? Col. 1. 15. Who is the image of the invisible God, the first borne of euery creature. Ioh. 1. 14. And we saw the glory thereof, as the glory of the only begotten Sonne of the Father. Rom. 8. 32. He who spared not his owne Sonne.

Although the Sonne be begotten of his Father, yet neuertheless he is of and by himselfe very God: for he must be considered either according to his essence, or according to his filiation or Sonship. In regard of his essence, hee is (αὐτῷ) that is, of and by himselfe very God: for the Deitie which is common to all the three persons, is not begotten. But as he is a person, and the Sonne of the Father, hee is not of himselfe, but from another: for he is the eternall Sonne of his Father. And thus hee is truly said to be very God of very God.

For this cause hee is said to be sent from the Father, Ioh. 8. 42. I proceeded forth, and came from God, neither came I of myselfe, but he sent me. This sending taketh not away the equality of essence, and power, but declareth the order of the persons, Ioh. 5. 18. Therefore the Iewes sought the more to kill him, not only because he had broken the Sabbath: but said also that God was his Father, and made himselfe equal with God. Phil. 2. 6. Who being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God.

For this cause also hee is the WORD of the Father, not a vanishing, but essentiall word, because as a word is, as it were, begotten of the mind, so is the Sonne begotten of the Father: & also, because he bringeth glad tidings from the bolome of his Father. Nazian. in his

Oratorion of the Sonne. B. affill in his preface before Iohn: Gospell.

The property of the Sonne, is to bee begotten.

His proper manner of working, is to execute actions from the Father, by the holy Ghost. 1. Cor. 8. 6. Our Lord Iesua Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Ioh. 5. 19. Whatsoeuer things he doth, the same doth the Sonne also.

The holy Ghost, is the third person, proceeding from the Father and the Sonne. Ioh. 15. 26. But when the Comforter shall come, whom I will send vnto you from the Father, even the spirit of truth, which proceedeth of the Father, hee shall testifie of me. Rom. 8. 9. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, seeing the spirit of God dwelleth in you. But if there be any that haue not the spirit of Christ hee is not his. Ioh. 16. 13, 14. But when the Spirit of truth shall come: hee shall conduct you into all truth: for he shall not speake of himselfe, but whatsoeuer he heareth, hee shall speake, and shall declare vnto you such things as are to come. He shall glorifie me, for he shall receive of mine, and shew it vnto you.

And albeit the Father, and the Sonne are two distinct persons, yet are they both but one beginning of the holy Ghost.

What may be the essentiall difference betwixt proceeding, and begetting, neither the Scriptures determine, nor the Church knoweth.

The incommunicable property of the holy Ghost, is to proceede.

His proper manner of working is, to finish an action, effecting it, as from the Father and the Sonne.

CHAP. VI.

Of Gods workes, and his decree.

Thus far concerning the first part of Theologie: the second followeth, of the workes of God.

The workes of God, are all those, which he doth out of himselfe, that is, out of his diuine essence.

These are common to the Trinitie, the peculiar manner of working alwaies referred to euery person.

The end of all these, is the manifestation of the glory of God. Rom. 11. 36. For him are all things, to him be glory for euer.

The worke, or action of God, is either his decree, or the execution of his decree.

The decree of God, is that by which God in himselfe, hath necessarily, and yet freely, from all eternitie determined all things. Eph. 1. 11. In whom also we are chosen, when we were predestinate, according to the purpose of him, which worketh all things after the counsell of his owne will, and v. 4. As he hath chosen vs in him before the foundation of the world. Math. 10. 29. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and not one of them falleth on the ground without your Father? Ron. 9. 11. Hath not the power power on the clay to make of it what he will, one vessel to dishonour, and another to honour.

Therefore the Lord, according to his good pleasure, hath most certainly decreed euery thing and action, whether past, present, or to come, together with their circumstances of place, time, meanes, and end.

Yea, he hath most iustly decreed the wicked workes of the wicked. For if he had nill'd the, they should neuer haue been at all, And albeit they of their owne nature, are and remaine wicked: yet in respect of Gods decree, they are some waies good: for there is not any thing absolutely euill. 1. Pet. 3. 17. For it is better (if the will of God be so) that ye suffer for well doing, then for euill doing.

The thing which in it owne nature is euill, in Gods eternall counsell is respectiue good, in that it is some occasion & way to manifest the glory of God in his iustice, and his mercy:

Gods foreknowledge, is conioyned with his decree, and indeed is in nature before it: yet not in regard of God, but vs: because knowledge goeth before the will and the effecting of a work. For we do nothing, but those things that hee haue before willed, neither doe we do any thing which we know not before.

Gods foreknowledge in it selfe, is not a cause why things are, but as it is conioyned with his decree. For things do not therefore come to passe, because that God did foreknow them: but because hee decreed, and willed them, therefore they come to passe.

The execution of Gods decree is that, by which all things in their time are accomplished which were foreknown or decreed, and that euen as they were foreknown & decreed.

The same decree of GOD, is the first and principall working cause of all things, which also is in order, and time before all other causes. For with Gods decree is alwaies his will annexed, by the which he can will that which he hath decreed. And it were a signe of impotency to decree any thing which he could not will. And with Gods will is conioyned an effectuall power, by which the Lord can bring to passe, whatsoeuer he hath freely decreed.

The first and principall cause, howbeit in it selfe it be necessary, yet it doth not take away freedom of wil in election: for the nature and property of second causes; but onely brings them into a certain order: that is, it directeth them to the determinate end, whereupon the effects and euents of things are contingent or necessary, as the nature of the second cause is. So Christ according to his Fathers decree died necessarily. Act. 1. 7. 2. but yet willingly. Job. 10. 18. Mat. 26. 53. And if we respect & the temperature of Christs body, he might haue prolonged his life; and therefore in this respect may be said to haue died contingently.

Gods operation, is his effectuall producing of all good things, which either haue being or mouing, or which are done.

Gods operative permission, is that by which he onely permitteth one and the same worke to be done of others, as it is euill; but as it is good, he effectually worketh the same. Gen. 50.20. You indeed had purposed will against me, but God decreed that for good, that he might, as he hath done this day, preferre his people aline. And, Gen. 45. 7. God hath sent me before you to preferre your posterity in this land. Ela. 10. 5, 6, 7. Woe vnto Ashur, the rod of my wrath, and the staffe in their hands in mine indignation, I will giue him a charge against the people of my wrath to take the spoile, and to take the prey, and to tread them under fete like the myre in the streete. But he thinketh not so, neither doth his heart esteeme it so: but he imagineth to destroy, and to cut off not a few natione.

God permitteth euill, by a certaine voluntary permission, in that he forsaketh the second cause in working euill. And he forsaketh his creature, either by detracting the grace it hid, or not bellowing that which it wanteth. Rom. 1. 26. For this cause God gaut them up vnto vile afflictions. 2. Tim. 2. 25, 26. Instructing them with meeknesse, that are contrary minded, prouoking if God at anytime will giue repentance, that they may know the truth; and that they may come to amendment out of the snare of the diuells, which are taken of him at his will.

Neither mult we thinke God herein vnjust, who is indebted to none. Rom. 9. 15. I will haue mercy on him to whom I will shew mercy. Yea it is in Gods pleasure to bellow how much grace, and vpon whom he will. Matth. 20. 15. Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne?

That which is euill, hath some respect of goodnesse with GOD: First, in that it is the punishment of sinne: and punishment is accounted a morall good, in that it is the part of a iust iudge to punish sinne. Secondly, as it is a meere actio or act. Thirdly, as it is a chastisement, a trial of ones faith, martyrdome, propitiation for sin, as the death and passion of Christ. Act. 2. 23, and 4. 24. And if we obserue these causes, God is not onely a bare permissive agent in an euill worke, but a powerfull effe. Four of the same; yet so, as he neither in-filleth an aberration in the action, nor yet supporteth, or intendeth the same, but that he most freely suffreth euill, and best disposeth of it to his owne glory. The like we may see in this similitude: Let a man spur forward a lame horse; in that he moueth forward, the rider is the cause; but that he haltezeth, he himselfe is the cause. And againe, we see the sunne beames shining through a glasse; where the light is from the Sunne, the colour not from the Sunne but from the glasse.

CHAP. VII.

Of Predestination and Creation.

Gods decree, in as much as it concerneth man, is called Predestination: which is the decree of God, by the which he hath ordained all men to a certaine and euertlasting estate: that is, either to saluation or condemnation: for his owne glory. 1. Thess. 5. 9. For God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but to obtaine saluation by the means of our Lord Iesus Christ. Rom. 9. 13. As it is written, I haue loued Iacob, and hated Esau: and ver. 22. What and if God would, to shew his wrath, and to make his power knowne, suffer with long patience the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction: and that he might declare the riches of his glory vpon the vessels of mercy, which hee hath prepared vnto glorie?

The means of accomplishing Gods Predestination are two fold.

The creation and the fall.

The creation, is that by which GOD made all things very good, of nothing; that is, of no matter which was before the creation. Gen. 1. 1. In the beginning God created the heauen, &c. to the end of the chapter.

Gods manner of creating, as also of gouerning, is such, as that by his word alone, hee without any instruments, means, assistance, or motion, produced all sorts of things: For to will any thing with God, is both to be able and to performe it. Heb. 1. 3. By faith we vnderstand, that the world was ordained by the word of God, so that the things which we see, are not made of things which did appeare. Plal. 148. 5. Let them praise the name of the Lord, for he commanded, and they were created.

The goodnesse of the creature, is a kinde of excellencie, by which it was void of all defect, whether punishment or fault.

The creation, is of the world, or inhabitants in the world.

The world, is a most beautifull pallace, framed out of a deformed substance, and fit to be inhabited.

The parts of the world, are the heauens and earth.

The heauens are three fold: the first is the ayre, the second the skie, the third an inuisible and incorpall effence, created to be the seat of all the blessed, both men, and angels. This third heauen is called Parádise. 2. Cor. 12. 4.

The inhabitants of the world, are reasonable creatures, made according to Gods owne Image: they are either angels or men. Gen. 1. 16. Furthermore, God said, Let vs make man in our owne image, according to our likeness. Job 1. 6. Who are the children of God came and stood before the Lord, Satan came also among them.

The Image of God, is the goodnesse of the reasonable creature, resembling God in holiness. Eph. 4. 24. And put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Angels.

The Angels each of them being created in the beginning, were settled in an vperight estate. In whose these things are to be noted:

CHAP. IX.

Of man, and the estate of Innocencie.

MAn, after he was created of God, was set in an excellent estate of innocencie. In this estate, man things are chiefly to be regarded.

I. The place. The garden of Eden, that most pleasant garden. Gen. 2. 15. Then the Lord took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden.

II. The integrity of mans nature. Which was, Eph. 4. 24. created in righteousness and true holiness. This integrity hath two parts.

The first is wisdom, which is a true and perfect knowledge of God, and of his will, in as much as it is to be performed of man; yea, and of the counsell of God in all his creatures. Col. 3. 10. And haue put on to the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him. Gen. 2. 19. When the Lord God had formed on the earth every beast of the field, and every fowle of the heauen, he brought them vnto the man, to see how he would call them: for howsoever the man called the living creature, so was the name thereof.

The second is iustice, which is a conformity of the will, affections, and powers of the body to doe the will of God.

III. Mans dignitie, consisting of foure parts. First, his communion with God. By which, as God reioyced in his owne image, so likewise man did feruently loue God: this is apparent by Gods familiar conference with Adam. Gen. 1. 29. And God said, Behold, I haue giuen vnto you every herb bearing seede, &c. that shall be to you for meat. Secondly, his dominion ouer all the creatures of the earth, Gen. 2. 19. Pl. 8. 6. Then hath made him Lord ouer the works of thine hands, & putt al things vnder his feet, &c. Thirdly, the decency, and dignitie of the body, in which, though naked, as nothing was vnseemly, so was there in it imprinted a princely maiesty. Plal. 8. Thou hast made him little lower then God, and crowned him with glory and worship. Gen. 2. 25. They were both naked, &c. neither ashamed. 1. Cor. 12. 23. I put those members of the body, which we thinke most vnseemly, put we more honestly on: and our vncomely parts haue more comelines on. Fourthly, labour of the body without paine or griefe. Gen. 3. 17. 19. Because thou hast obeyed the voice of thy wife, &c. cursed is the earth for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eate of it all the days of thy life, &c.

IV. Subiection to God, whereby man was bound to performe obedience to the commandment of God: which are two. The one was concerning the two trees: the other the obseruation of the Sabbath.

Gods commandment concerning the trees, was ordained to be a prooffe and tryall of mans obedience. It consisteth of 2. parts: the first is the giuing of the tree of life, that as noted; First, their nature. Angels are spirituall and incorpall effences. Heb. 2. 16. For he in no sort tooke the Angels, but he tooke the seede of Abraham. Heb. 1. 7. And of the Angels, he saith, He maketh the spirits his messengers, and his Ministers a flame of fire.

Secondly, their qualities. First, they are wise, 2. Sam. 14. 17. My Lord, he king is euen as an Angel of God in hearing good and bad. 2. They are of great might. 2. Thess. 1. 7. When the Lord Iesus shall shew himselfe from heauen with his mighty Angels. 2. Sam. 24. 17. Dauid saw the Angel that smote the people. 2. King. 19. 35. The same night the Angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the campe of Ashur, an hundred, fourscore, and five thousand. 3. They are swift and of great agilitie, Esa. 6. 6. Then flew one of the Seraphims vnto mee with an hot cole in his hand. Dan. 9. 21. The man Gabriel whom I had seene before in a vision, came flying and touched mee. This is the reason why the Cherubims in the Tabernacle were painted with wings.

Thirdly, they are innumerable. Gen. 32. 1. Now Jacob went forth on his journey; and the Angels of God met him. Dan. 7. 10. Thousand thousands ministered vnto him, and tenne thousand thousands stood before him. Matth. 26. 53. T hinkst thou I cannot pray to my Father, and he will giue me more then twelue legions of angels? Heb. 12. 22. To be companie of innumerable angels.

Fourthly, they are in the highest heauen, where they euer attend vpon God, and haue societie with him. Math. 18. 10. In heauen their Angels alwayes behold the face of my Father which is in heauen. Plal. 68. 17. The chariots of God are twentie thousand thousand Angels, and the Lord is among them. Mark. 12. 25. But are as Angels in heauen.

Fifthly, their degree. That there are degrees of Angels, it is most plaine. Col. 1. 16. By him were all things created, which are in heauen, and in earth, things visible and inuisible: whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalties, or powers. Rom. 8. 38. Neither angels, nor principalties, nor powers, &c. 1. Thess. 4. 16. The Lord shall descend with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpet of God. But it is not for vs to search who, or how many be of each order; neither ought we curiously to inquire how they are distinguished, whether in effence, gifts, or offices. Col. 2. 18. Let no man at his pleasure beare rule over you by humbleness of minde, and worshipping of Angels, aduancing himselfe in those things which hee neuer saw.

Sixtly, their office. Their office is partly to magnifie God, & partly to performe his commandments. Plal. 103. 20, 21. Praise the Lord, ye his Angels, that excell in strength, that doe his commandment in obeying the voice of his word. Psalme the Lord, alke his hostes, ye his seruants that doe his pleasure.

Seauently: The establishing of some Angels in that integrity, in which they were created.

a signe, it might confirme to man his perpetuall abode in the garden of Eden, if still he perfilled in his obedience. Reuel. 2. 7. To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God. Pro. 3. 18. She is a tree of life to them which lay hold on her: and blessed is he that retaineth her.

The second, is the prohibition to eate of the tree of the knowledge of good and euill, together with a commination of temporal and eternal death, if he transgressed this commandement. Gen. 2. 17. Of the tree of the knowledge of good and euill, thou shalt not eate of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt dye the death. This was a signe of death, and had his name of the euent, because the obsecration thereof would haue brought perpetuall hap-pines, as the violation gaue experience of euill, that is, of all miserie, namely of punishment, and of guiltinesse of sinne.

Gods commandement concerning the obseruation of the Sabbath, is that, by which God ordained the sanctification of the Sabbath. Gen. 2. 3. God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it.

V. His calling, which is the seruice of God, in the obseruation of his commandements, and the dressing of the garden of Eden. Prou. 16. 4. God made all things for himselfe. Gen. 2. 15. He placed him in the garden of Eden to dress and keepe it.

V I. His diet was the hearbs of the earth, and fruit of euery tree, except the tree of the knowledge of good and euill. Gen. 1. 29. And God said, behold, I haue given vnto you euery herbe bearing seede, which is vpon all the earth, and euery tree, wherein is the fruit of a tree bearing seed, that shall be to you for meat. And chap. 2. 17. But of the tree of knowledge of good and euill, thou shalt not eate.

V II. His free choice, both to will and performe the commandement concerning the two trees, and also to neglect and violate the same. Whereby wee see that our first parents were indeed created perfect, but mutable: for so it pleased God to prepare a way to the execution of his decree.

CHAP. X.

Of Sinne, and the fall of Angels.

THe fall is a reuolting of the reasonable creature from obedience to sinne.

Sinne, is the corruption, or rather deprivation of the first integritie. More plainly, it is a falling or turning from God, binding the offender by the course of Gods iustice, to vndergoe the punishment.

Heere a doubt may bee moued, whether sinne be a thing existing or not. The answer is this: Of things which are, some are positive, other priuative. Things positive, are all substances, together with those their properties, powers, inclinations & affections, which the Lord hath created and imprinted in their natures. The thing is called priuative, which granteth or presupposeth the absence of some such thing, as ought to be in a thing. Such a thing is sinne, which properly, and of it selfe is not any thing created, and existing; but rather the absence of that good which ought to be in the creature; and though it be inherent in things positive as a priuation, yet it is alwaies to be distinguished from them.

Sinne hath two parts: A defect, or impotencie; and disorder.

Impotencie is nothing else, but the very want or losse of that good, which God hath ingrafted in the nature of his creature.

Disorder, is the confusion or disturbance of all the powers and actions of the creature.

The fall was effected on this manner. First, God created his reasonable creatures good indeed, but withall changeable, as we haue shewed before. For to be vnchangeably good, is proper to God alone. Secondly, God tryed their obedience in those things about which they were conuersant. Deut. 13. 3. Thou shalt not hearken to the words of that Prophet, or vnto that dreamer of dreames: for the Lord your God proceeth you so know whether you loue the Lord your God, With all your heart, and With all your soule. Thirdly in this triall God doth not asist them with new grace to stand, but for iust causes forsaketh them. Lastly, after God hath forsaken them, and left them to themselves, they fall quite from God: no otherwise, then when a man staying vpon a stiffe on the ground, if standeth vpright; but if hee neuer so little withdraw his hand, it falleth of it selfe.

The fall, is of men, and Angels.

The fall of Angels, is that by which the vnderstanding, pointing out a more excellent estate, and of it owne accord approuing thereof, and the will choosing the same as pleasing vnto it (their nature in the meane while remaining fit to make choice either of the contrary, or of a diuers obiect) they are the sole authors of their fall from God. 2. Pet. 2. 4. If God spared not the Angels which sinned, but cast them downe into hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to bee kept vnto damnation, &c. Iud. 6. The Angels which kept not their first estate, but left their owne habitation, he hath reuered in euerlasting chains, &c. Ioh. 8. 44. He was a murderer from the beginning, and continued not in the truth: for there is no truth in him.

In the fall of Angels, consider: First their corruption, arising from the fall; which is the deprivation of their nature, and is either that fearful malice and hatred, by which they set themselves against God, or their insatiable desire to destroy mankind; to the effecting whereof, they neglect neither force nor fraud. 1. Ioh. 3. 8. He that committeth sinne is of the diuell, because the diuell sinned from the beginning. For this cause was the Sonne of God reuelated, to dissolve the workes of the diuell. 1. Pet. 5. 8. Ten aduersary the diuell goeth about like a roaring lyon, seeking whom he may deuoure. Eph. 6. 11. You strive not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, and worldly governors: the princes of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickednesses, which are in supercelestial things.

II. Their degree, and diuersitie: for of these Angels, one is chiefe, and the rest attendants. The chiefe is Beelzebub, prince of the rest of the diuels, and the world, farre above them all in malice. Mat. 23. 41. Away from me ye cursed into euerlasting fire, prepared for the diuell and his Angels. 2. Cor. 4. 4. Whose minds the god of this world hath blinded. Reuel. 12. 7. And there was war in heauen, Michael, and his Angels fought with the dragon, and the dragon and his Angels fought.

Ministring Angels, are such as waite vpon the diuell, in accomplishing his wickednesse.

III. Their punishment. God, after their fall, gaue them ouer to perpetuall torments, without any hope of pardon. Iude, verse 6. 2. Pet. 2. 4. God spared not the Angels that had sinned, but cast them downe into hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to bee kept vnto damnation. This he did: First, to admonish men, what great punishment they deserved. Secondly, to shew that grievous sins must more grievously be punished.

The fall of Angels was the more grievous, because both their nature was more able to resist, & the diuel was the first founder of sinne. Their punishment is easier, or more grieuous.

Their easier punishment is double. The first, is their deiection from heauen. 2. Pet. 2. 4. God cast the Angels that sinned into hell. The second, is the abridging and limitation of their power. Iob 1. 12. The Lord said vnto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thine hand, onely vpon him lay not thine hand.

The more grievous paine, is that torment in the deepe, which is endless and infinite, in time and measure. Luke 8. 31. And they besought him, that he would not command them to goe downe into the deepe.

thus doubting, are moued to behold the forbidden fruite. Fifty, they no sooner see the beauty thereof, but they desire it. Sixty, that they may satisfie their desire, they eate of the fruite, which by the hands of the woman, was taken from the tree: by which act they become vterly dilloyall to God. Gen. 3. 1. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

Thus without constraint, they willingly fall from their integrity; God vpon iust causes leauing them to themselves, and freely suffering them to fall. For we must not think, that mans fall was either by chance, or God not knowing of it; or barely winking at it, or by his bare permission, or against his will: but rather miraculously, not without the will of God, and yet without all approbation of it.

II. The greatest of this transgression must be esteemed, not by the external obiect, or the bafeness of an apple, but by the offence contained against Gods maiesty. This offence appeareth by many trespasses committed in that action. The 1. is doubting of Gods word: 2. want of faith; for they beleue not Gods threatening. (In that day ye eat thereof, you shall die the death.) But being bewitched with the diuels promise, (ye shall be like Gods) they cease to feare Gods punishment, and are inflamed with a desire of greater dignity. 3. Their curiositie, in forsaking Gods word, and seeking other wisdom. 4. Their pride, in seeking to magnifie themselves; and to become like God. 5. Contempt of God, in transgressing his commandements against their owne conscience. 6. In that they preferre the diuell before God. 7. Ingratitude, that in as much as in them lyeth, they expell Gods spiritt dwelling in them, and despise that euerlasting blessed vnion. 8. They murder both themselves and their progenie.

III. The fruite or effect. Out of this corrupt estate of our first parents, arose the estate of infidelity or vbelief, whereby God hath included all men vnder sinne, that here might manifest his mercy in the saluation of some, and his iustice in the condemnation of others. Rom. 11. 32. God hath shut vp all men in vbelief, that he might haue mercy on all. Gal. 3. 22. The Scripture hath concluded all vnder sin, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should bee given to them that beleue.

In this estate, we must consider sinne, and the punishment of sinne. Sinne is three-fold. The first, is the participation of Adams both transgression and guiltinesse, whereby in his sinne, all his posterity sinned. Rom. 5. 12. As by one mans sin entered into the world, & by sin death: so death entered vpon all men, in that all men have sinned. The reason of this is ready. Adam was not then a priuate man, but represented all mankind, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to others with him. 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all men dye, so in Christ all men rise againe.

The second, is the participation of Adams sinne, whereby in his sinne, all his posterity sinned. Rom. 5. 12. As by one mans sin entered into the world, & by sin death: so death entered vpon all men, in that all men have sinned. The reason of this is ready. Adam was not then a priuate man, but represented all mankind, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to others with him. 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all men dye, so in Christ all men rise againe.

The third, is the participation of Adams sinne, whereby in his sinne, all his posterity sinned. Rom. 5. 12. As by one mans sin entered into the world, & by sin death: so death entered vpon all men, in that all men have sinned. The reason of this is ready. Adam was not then a priuate man, but represented all mankind, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to others with him. 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all men dye, so in Christ all men rise againe.

CHAP. XI.

Of mans fall and disobedience.

Adams fall, was his willing reuolting to disobedience by eating the forbidden fruite. In Adams fall, wee may note the manner, greatness, and fruite of it.

I. The manner of Adams fall, was on this sort: First, the diuell, hauing immediately before fallen himselfe, infinately vnto our first parents, that both the punishment for eating the forbidden fruit was vncertaine, and that God was not true in his word vnto them. Secondly, by this legerdemaine, hee blinded the eyes of their vnderstanding. Thirdly, being thus blinded, they beginne to distrust GOD, and to doubt of Gods fauour. Fourthly, they

Thus without constraint, they willingly fall from their integrity; God vpon iust causes leauing them to themselves, and freely suffering them to fall. For we must not think, that mans fall was either by chance, or God not knowing of it; or barely winking at it, or by his bare permission, or against his will: but rather miraculously, not without the will of God, and yet without all approbation of it.

II. The greatest of this transgression must be esteemed, not by the external obiect, or the bafeness of an apple, but by the offence contained against Gods maiesty. This offence appeareth by many trespasses committed in that action. The 1. is doubting of Gods word: 2. want of faith; for they beleue not Gods threatening. (In that day ye eat thereof, you shall die the death.) But being bewitched with the diuels promise, (ye shall be like Gods) they cease to feare Gods punishment, and are inflamed with a desire of greater dignity. 3. Their curiositie, in forsaking Gods word, and seeking other wisdom. 4. Their pride, in seeking to magnifie themselves; and to become like God. 5. Contempt of God, in transgressing his commandements against their owne conscience. 6. In that they preferre the diuell before God. 7. Ingratitude, that in as much as in them lyeth, they expell Gods spiritt dwelling in them, and despise that euerlasting blessed vnion. 8. They murder both themselves and their progenie.

III. The fruite or effect. Out of this corrupt estate of our first parents, arose the estate of infidelity or vbelief, whereby God hath included all men vnder sinne, that here might manifest his mercy in the saluation of some, and his iustice in the condemnation of others. Rom. 11. 32. God hath shut vp all men in vbelief, that he might haue mercy on all. Gal. 3. 22. The Scripture hath concluded all vnder sin, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should bee given to them that beleue.

In this estate, we must consider sinne, and the punishment of sinne. Sinne is three-fold. The first, is the participation of Adams both transgression and guiltinesse, whereby in his sinne, all his posterity sinned. Rom. 5. 12. As by one mans sin entered into the world, & by sin death: so death entered vpon all men, in that all men have sinned. The reason of this is ready. Adam was not then a priuate man, but represented all mankind, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to others with him. 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all men dye, so in Christ all men rise againe.

The second, is the participation of Adams sinne, whereby in his sinne, all his posterity sinned. Rom. 5. 12. As by one mans sin entered into the world, & by sin death: so death entered vpon all men, in that all men have sinned. The reason of this is ready. Adam was not then a priuate man, but represented all mankind, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to others with him. 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all men dye, so in Christ all men rise againe.

The third, is the participation of Adams sinne, whereby in his sinne, all his posterity sinned. Rom. 5. 12. As by one mans sin entered into the world, & by sin death: so death entered vpon all men, in that all men have sinned. The reason of this is ready. Adam was not then a priuate man, but represented all mankind, and therefore looke what good he receiued from God, or euill elsewhere, both were common to others with him. 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all men dye, so in Christ all men rise againe.

CHAP. XII.

Again, when Adam offended, his posterity in his loynes, from whom they should by the course of nature issue: & therefore take part of the guiltiness with him. Heb. 7.9. 10. And to say as the thing is, Levi, &c. payed tithes to Melchisedec: for he was yet in the loynes of his father Abraham, when Melchisedec met him.

CHAP. XII.

Of Original sinne.

Out of the former transgression ariseth another, namely Original sinne, which is corruption ingendred in our first conception, whereby every facultie of soule and body is prone and disposed to euill. Psa. 51.5. I was borne in iniquity, and in sin hath my mother conceived me. Gen. 6.5. Tit. 2.3. We our selves were in times past without discipline, deceived, serving the lusts and diverse pleasures, living in malitiousness and enuy, hateful, and hating one another. Heb. 12.1. Let vs cast away every thing that presseth down, and the sin that hangeth so fast on. By this wee see, that sin is not a corruption of mans substance, but only of faculties: otherwise neither could mens soules be immortal, nor Christ take vpon him mans nature.

All Adam's posterity is equally partaker of this corruption: the reason why it sheweth not it selfe equally in all, is because some haue the spirit of sanctification, some the spirit, only to burtle corruption, some neither.

The propagation of sinne, from the parents to the children, is eyther because the soule is infected by the contagion of the body, as a good ornament by a fustile vessel; or because God, in the very moment of creation and infusion of soules into infants, doth vtterly forsake them. For as Adam received the image of God, both for himselfe and others: so did he lose it for himselfe and others.

But whereas the propagation of sinne is as a common fire in a towne, men are not so much to search how it came, as to be careful how to extinguish it.

That wee may the better know Original sinne in the severall faculties of mans nature, three circumstances must be considered.

1. How much of Gods image wee yet retain. 2. How much sinne man received from Adam. 3. The increase thereof afterward.

1. In the minde. The remnant of Gods image, is certaine notions concerning good & euill: as that there is a God, and that the same God punisheth transgressions: that there is an euertlasting life: that wee must reuerence our superiours, and not harme our neighbours. But even these notions, they are both general and corrupt, and haue none other use, but to beaue man of all excuse before Gods iudgement seat. Rom. 1.19.20. That which may be knowne concerning God, is manifest in them: for God hath shewed it vnto them. For the invisible things of him, that is, his eternall power and Godhead, are seene by the creation of the world, being considered in his workes, to the intent they should be without excuse.

Mens mindes received from Adam: 1. Ignorance, namely a want, or rather a deprivation of knowledge in the things of God, whether they concerne his strict worship, or eternall happinesse. 1. Cor. 2.14. The naturall man perceiuech not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishnesse vnto him, neither can hee knowe them because they are spiritually discerned. Rom. 8.7. The wisdomes of the flesh is enmity to God, for it is not subiect to the law of God, neither indeede can be.

2. Impotency, whereby the minde of it selfe is vnable to understand spiritual things, though they be taught. Luk. 24.45. Then opened he their understanding, that they might vnderstand the Scriptures. 2. Cor. 3.5. Not that we are sufficient of our selves, to thinke anything as of our felicity: but our sufficiency is of God.

3. Vanity, in that the minde thinketh fallshood truth, and truth fallshood. Ephes. 4.17. Walke no more as other Gentiles, in the vanity of your vnderstanding. 1. Cor. 1.21. It pleased God by the foolishnesse of preaching, to save those which beleue. 23. We preach Christ crucified, to the Iewes a stumbling block, but to the Grecians foolishnesse. Prou. 14.12. There is a way which seemeth good in the eyes of men, but the end thereof is death.

4. A naturall inclination only to conceiue and desire the thing which is euill. Gen. 6.5. The Lord saw that the wickednes of man was great vpon earth, and all the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart were only euill continually. Ierem. 4.22. They are wise to doe euill, but in doe well they haue no knowledge.

Hence it is apparent, that the original, and as I may say, the matter of all heresies, is naturally ingrafted in mans nature. This is worthy the obseruation of students in diuinity.

The increase of sinne in the vnderstanding, is a reprobate sense, when GOD withdraweth the light of nature. Iohn 12.40. Hee hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts, lest they should see with their eyes, and vnderstand with their hearts, and I should heale them, and they be converted. Rom. 1.28. As they regarded not to know God, so God deliuered them vp vnto a reprobate minde, to doe those things which are not convenient. 2. The spirit of slumber. Rom. 11.8. God hath giuen them the spirit of slumber, &c. 3. A spiritual drunkennesse. Eia. 29.9. They are drunken, but not with wine, they stagger, but not with strong drinke. 4. Strong illusions. 2. Thes. 2.11. God shall send them strong illusions, and they shall beleue lies.

The remnant of Gods image in the conscience, is an obseruing and watchfull power, like the eye of a keeper, referred in man partly to reprooue, partly to repress the vnderleied course of his affections. Roman. 2.15. Which shew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts accusing one another, or excusing.

That which the conscience hath received of Adam is the impurities thereof. Tit. 1.5. To them that are defiled and vnderleied nothing is pure, but euen their mindes and consciences are defiled. This impurity hath three effects: the first is, as if a manserue God outwardly, hee will excuse and cloake his inward impiety. Mark. 10.19.20. Thou knowest the commandements, Thou shalt not, &c. Then he answered, and said, After all these things haue I deserued from my youth. Again, it excuseth intents not warranted in Gods word. 1. Chr. 13.9. When they came to the threshing floor of Chidon, &c. hee put forth his hand to hold the Age, for the oxen did shake it.

The second, is to accuse and terrifie for doing good. This wee may see in superstitious idolaters, who are grieved when they omit to performe counterfeite and idolatrous worship to their gods. Coloss. 2.21.22. Touch not, taste not, handle not, which all perish with vsing, and are after the commandements and doctrines of men. Eia. 29.13. And their feare toward mee was taught them by the precepts of men.

The third, is to accuse and terrifie for sinne. Gen. 50.15. When Iosephs brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, It may be that Ioseph will hate vs, & will pay vs againe all the euill which we did vnto him. Iohn 8.9. And when they heard it, being accused by their own consciences, they went out one by one. 1. Iohn. 3.20. If our heart condemne vs, God is greater then our heart. Though the conscience shall accuse a man truly, yet that will not argue any holinesse in it: which appeareth, in that Adam in his innocency had a good, yet no accusing conscience.

Impurenesse increased in the conscience, is first such a senseles nummes, as that it can hardly accuse man of sinne. Eph. 4.19. Who being past feeling haue giuen themselves to wantonnesse, to worke all uncleannesse, euen with greedinesse. 1. Tim. 4.2. Having their consciences burned with an hot yron. This senselesnesse springeth from a cuttome in sinning. 1. Sam. 25.37. Then in the morning when the wine was gone out of Nabal, his wife told him those words, and his heart died within him, and he was like a stone.

2. Some grievous horror, and terror of the conscience. Gen. 4.14. Behold thou hast cast me this day from the earth, & from thy face shall I be hid: and yet. 12. My punishment is greater then I can beare. The Symptoms of this disease, are blasphemies, trembling of body, fearefull dreames. Act. 24.26. And as he disputed of righteousness, and temperance, and the iudgement to come, Felix trembled, &c. Dan. 5.6. Then the Kings countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the signets of his loynes were loosed, and his knees smote one against the other.

In the will, the remnant of Gods image, is a free choice. First, in euery natural action, belonging to each liuing creature, as to nourish to engender, to moue, to perceiue. Secondly, in euery humane actiō, that is, such as belong to all men; and therefore man hath free-will in outward actions, whether they concerne manners, a family, or the common-wealth, albeit, both in the choice and refusal of them, it be very weak. Rom. 2.14. The Gentiles which haue not the law, by nature do those things which are of the law.

The will receiued. 1. An impotencie, whereby it cannot will, or so much as lust after that, which is indeede good; that is, which may please, and be acceptable to God. 1. Cor. 2.14. The naturall man perceiuech not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishnesse vnto him: neither can hee knowe them, because they are spiritually discerned. Rom. 5.6. Christ, when we were yet of no strength, as his time did for the ungodly. 2. Tim. 2.26. Phil. 2.13. It is God which worketh in you both the will and the deede, euen of his good pleasure.

2. An inward rebellion, whereby it vtterly abhorreth that which is good, desiring and willing that alone which is euill.

By this it appeareth, that the will is no agent, but a meere patient in the first acte of conserution to God; and that by it selfe it can neither beginne that conserution, or any other inward and found obedience due to Gods law.

That which the affections receiue, is a disorder, by which they therefore are not well affected, because they eiesch that which is good, add pursue that which is euill. Galat. 5.24. They that are Christ, haue crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts: thereof. Rom. 1.26. Therefore God gaue them ouer to filthy lust. 1. Kin. 22.28. The king of Israel said vnto Iehoshaphat, Tel is there one of whom thou maist take counsell, but him I hate, &c. and 21.4. Therefore Achab came home to his house discontented and angry for the word which Nabal spake vnto him, and he laid himselfe on his bed, turning away his face lest he should see his mate.

That which the body hath receiued, is 1. stiffness to beginne sinne. This doth the body in transporting all obiects and occasions of sinne to the soule. Gen. 3.6. The woman seeing that the tree was good for meat, and pleasant to the eyes, &c. took of the fruit thereof, and did eat. 2. A stiffness to execute sinne, so loone as the heart hath begunne it. Rom. 6.12. Neither giue your members as weapons of iniquity to sinne, and yei. 19. As ye haue giuen your members as seruants to uncleannesse and iniquity, so commit iniquity, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

Of all sinne.

After Original sinne in Adams posterity, an actual transgression taketh place. It is either inward or outward: Inward, is the minde, will, and affections.

The actual sinne of the minde is the euill thought or intent thereof, contrary to Gods law. Examples of euill thoughts, God (the only knower of the heart) hath in diuers places set downe in his word. I. That there is no God. Psal. 10. 4. The wicked is so proud, that he seeketh not for God, he thinketh alwaies there is no God. Psal. 14. 1. The fool saith in his heart, there is no God. II. That there is neither prouidence nor presence of God in this world. Psal. 10. 11. He saith in his heart, God hath forgotten: hee hideth away his face and will neuer see, verſe 13. Wherefore doth the wicked contemne God? he saith in his heart, thou wilt not regard. III. It imagineth safeagard to it selfe from all perils. Psal. 10. 6. He saith in his heart, I shall neuer be moued nor be in danger. Reu. 18. 7. She saith in her heart, I fit being a Queene, and am no widow, and shall see no mourning. IV. It esteemeth it selfe more excellent then other. Apoc. 18. 7. I fit as a Queene. Luk. 18. 11. The Pharisee standing thus prayed to himselfe, I thank thee, O God, that I am not as other men, extortioners, vnjust, adulterers, nor yet as this Publican. V. I. I fast twice in the weeke, and give tyth of all my possessions. V. That the Gospell of Gods kingdome is meere foolishnes. 1. Cor. 2. 14. The natural man perceiue not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishnes vnto him. VI. To thinke vncharitably and maliciously of such as serue God sincerely. Mat. 12. 24. When the Pharisees heard that they said, he casteth not out devils, but by the prince of devils. Pt. 7. 48. They said in their hearts, Let vs destroy them altogether. VII. To thinke the day of death farre off. Esa. 28. 15. Ye haue said, we haue made a covenant with death, and with hell wee are at agreement, though a scourge run ouer vs, and passe through, it shall not come at vs. VIII. That the paines of hell may be elchewed: in the place before mentioned, they say, With hell haue we made agreement. IX. That God will deferre his both particular and last generall comming to iudgement. Luk. 12. 19. I will say vnto my soule, Soule thou hast much goods laid vp for many yeares. and v. 45. If that seruant say in his heart, My master will deferre his comming, &c.

Many carnall men pretend their good meaning: but when God openeth their eyes, they shall see these rebellious thoughts rising in their mindes, as sparkles out of a chimney:

The actual sinne of both will and affection, is euery wicked motion, inclination, and desire. Galat. 5. 17. The flesh lusteth against the spirit.

An actual outward sin, is that, to the committing whereof, the members of the body, doe, together with the faculties of the soule, concurre. Such sins as these are infinite. Psal. 40. 12. Innumerable troubles haue compassed me, my sinnes haue taken such hold on me, that I am not able to looke vp: yea, they are more in number then the haire of my head.

Actual sinne, is of omission or commission.

Again, both these are in words or deedes. In the sinne of commission, obserue these two points: the degrees in committing a sin, and the difference of sinnes committed.

The degrees, are in number foure. Iam. 1. 14. 15. Every man is tempted, when he is drawne away by his own concupiscence, & is enticed: then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sinne, and sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

The first degree, is temptation, whereby man is allured to sinne. This doth Satan by offering to the mind that which is euill. Iob. 13. 2. The diuell had now put into the heart of Iudas Iſcariot, Simons son to betray him. A. A. 5. 3. Peter said to Ananias, Why hath Satan filled thine heart that thou shouldst lye, &c. 1. Chro. 21. 1. And Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel. This is also effected vpon occasion of some externall obiect, which the senses perceiue. Iob 31. 1. I haue made a covenant with mine eyes, why then should I looke vpon a maid?

Tentation hath two parts: abstraction, and inelation.

Abstraction, is the first cogitation of committing sin, whereby the mind is withdrawn from Gods seruice, to the which it should be alwaies ready prest. Luk. 10. 27. Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and all thy soule, with all thy thought.

Inelation, is that whereby an euill thought conceived, and for a time retained in the mind by delighting the will and affections, doth as it were, lay a baite for them to draw them to consent.

The second degree, is conception, which is nothing els but a consent and resolution to commit sinne. Psal. 7. 14. He shall transgress with wickednesse, he hath conceived mischief, but hee shall bring forth a lye.

The third degree, is the birth of sinne, namely, the committing of sinne, by the assistance both of the faculties of the soule, and the powers of the body.

The fourth degree, is perfection, when sin being by custome perfect, and as it were ripe, the sinner reapeth death, that is, damnation.

This appeareth in the example of Pharaoh: wherefore custome in any sinne is fearful.

Sinne actually committed, hath five differences. Firſt, to consent with an offendour, and not actually to commit sinne. Eph. 5. 11. Haue no fellowship with the vnfruitfull works of darkness, but reprove them rather. This is done three manner of waies.

I. When a man in iudgement somethat alloweth the sinne of another. Numb. 20. 10. Moses & Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and Moses said vnto them, Heare now ye rebels: shall we bring you water out of the rock? verſe 12. The Lord spake to Moses & Aaron, because ye beleued me not, so I sanctified me in the presence of the chiding of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring the congregation into the land which I haue giuen them.

II. When the heart approoeth in affection and consent. Hither may we referre both the Ministers and the Magistrates concealing and winking at offences. 1. Sam. 2. 23. Eli said, Why doe ye such things? for all this people I beare euill of you. Doe no more my son, &c. Now that Elies will agree with his sonnes sinnes, it is manifest, ver. 29. Thou honourst thy children above me.

III. In deede by counsell, preference, inticement. Rom. 1. 31. They do not only doe the same, but also saueur them that doe them. Mar. 6. 25. 26. Shee said vnto her mother, What shall I ake? and she said, Iohn Baptists head, &c. Act. 22. 20. When the blood of thy Martyr Stephen was shed, I also stood by, and consented vnto his death, and kept the clothes of them that slue him.

The second difference, is to sinne ignorantly, as when a man doth not expressly and distinctly know whether that which hee doth, be a sinne or not, or if he know it, doe not acknowledge and mark it. 1. Tim. 1. 13. I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and an oppressor: but I was receiued to mercy, for I did it ignorantly through vnbeliefe. Numb. 35. 22, 23, 24. If he punished him vnadvisedly, & not of hatred, or cast vpon him any thing without laying of wait, or any stone, whereby he might be slaine, and saw him not, or caned it to fall vpon him, and be dye, and was not his enemy, neither sought him any harme: then the congregation shall iudge betweene the slayer, and the auenger of blood, according to these lawes. 1. Cor. 4. 4. I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustificd. Psal. 19. 13. Cleanse me from my secret sinnes.

The third difference is to sinne vpon knowledge, but yet of infirmity, as when a man fearing some imminent danger, or amazed at the horrour of death, doth against his knowledge deny that truth, which otherwise hee would acknowledge and embrace. Such was Peters fall, arising from the ouer-much rashnesse of the minde, mingled with some feare.

Thus men offend, when the flesh, and inordinate desires fo ouer-rule the will and euery good endeaour, that they prouoke man to that, which he from his heart detesteth. Rom. 7. 19. I doe not the good thing which I would, but the euill which I would not, that doe I.

The fourth difference, is presumptuous finning vpon knowledge. Psal. 19. 13. Keepe thy seruants from presumptuous sinnes: let them not raigne ouer mee. Hitherto belongeth, I euery sinne committed with an high hand, that is, in some contempt of God. Numb. 15. 30. The persons that doth presumptuously, &c. shall bee cut off from amongst his people: because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandement. II. Presumption of Gods mercy in doing euill. Eccle. 8. 11. Because sentence against an euill worke is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is fully set in them to doe euill. Rom. 2. 4. Despist thou the riches of his bonnificalnesse, &c. not

A knowing that the bonnificalnes of God leadeb thee to repentance.

The fifth difference, is to sinne vpon knowledge and yet malice against God, and to this is the sinne against the holy Ghost referred.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the common punishment of sinne.

Hitherto wee haue intreated of sinne, where with all mankind is infected: in the next place succedeth the punishment of sinne, which is threefold. The first is in this life, and that diuers waies. The first in concerneth the bodie, eyther in the prouision with trouble for the things of this life, Gen. 3. 17. or a proneness to diseases, Math. 9. 2. Sonne, be of good comfort, thy sinnes be forgiven thee. Iob. 5. 14. Behold, thou art made whole, sin no more, lest a worse thing fall vpon thee. Deut. 28. 21, 22. The Lord shall make the pestilence cleaue vnto thee, until hee hath consumed thee from the land, &c. Or shame of nakednes. Gen. 3. 7. Or in womens paines in child-birth, Gen. 3. 16. Vnto the woman he said, I will greatly increase thy sorrowes, and conceptions: in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children.

II. The soule is punished with trembling of conscience, care, trouble, hardnes of heart, and madnes. Deut. 28. 28. The Lord shall smite thee with madnesse, and with blindness, and with astonying of heart.

III. The whole man is punished. 1. With fearefull subiection to the regiment of Satan. Colos. 1. 13. Which freed vs from the power of darkness, and translated vs into the kingdom of his beloued Sonne, Hebrewes 2. 14. Hee also himselfe took part with them, that he might destroy through death, him that had power of death, that is the diuell. 2. A separation from the fellowship of God, and trembling at his presence. Eph. 4. 18. Flowing their cogitations on darkness, and being strangers from the life of God. Gen. 3. 10. I heard thy voice in the garden, and was afraid, because I was naked, therefore I hid my selfe.

IV. Vpon a mans goods, diuers calamities and dammages. Deut. 28. 29. Thou shalt euer be oppressed with wrong, & be pined, and no man shall succour thee, &c. to the end of the chapter. To this place may be referred distinction of Lordships: and of this commeth a care to enlarge them, and bargaining with all manner of ciuill feruitudes.

V. The ioull of that Lordly authority, which man had ouer all creatures; also their vanity, which is not only a weakening but also a corrupting of that excellency of the vertues and powers which God at the first put into them. Rom. 8. 20, 21. The creature is subiect to vanity, not of its owne will, but by reason of him, which hath subdud it vnder hope, &c.

V.I. In a mans name, infamie and ignominie sometimes after his death. Jer. 24.6.

The second, is at the last gaspe, namely, death, or a change like vnto death. Rom. 6. 23. The wages of sinne is death.

The third is, after this life, euen eternal destruction from Gods preface, and his exceeding glory. 2. Thess. 1. 9. Who shall bee punished with euilllasting perdition from the presence of God, and the glory of his power.

CHAP. XV.

Of Election, and of Iesus Christ the foundation thereof.

PRedeification hath two parts: Election and Reprobation. 1. Thess. 5. 9. God hath not appointed vs to wrath, but to obtaine saluation by the means of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Election, is Gods decree, whereby on his owne free-will, he hath ordained certain men to saluation, to the praise of the glorie of his grace. Eph. 1. 4, 5, 6. He hath chosen vs in him, before the foundation of the world, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace.

This decree is that booke of life, wherein are written the names of the Elect. Reu. 10. 12. Another booke was opened, which is the booke of life, and the dead were iudged of those things, that were written in the bookes according to their works. 2. Tim. 2. 10. The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this scale, the Lord knoweth who are his.

The execution of this decree, is an action, by which God, euen as hee purposed with himselfe, worketh all those things effectually, which hee decreed for the saluation of the Elect. For they whom God elected to this end, that they should inherit eternall life, were also elected to those subordinate means, whereby, as by steps, they might attain this end: and without which, it was impossible to obtaine it. Rom. 8. 29, 30. Those which hee knew before, he also predestinate to be made like to the image of his Sonne, that hee might be the first borne amongst many brethren: Moreover, whom he predestinate, them he called, whom he called, them he iustificed, and whom he iustificed, them also he glorified.

There appertaine three things to the execution of this decree. First, the foundation. Secondly, the means. Thirdly, the degrees.

The foundation is Christ Iesus, called of his Father from all eternitie, to performe the office of the Mediatour, that in him all those which should bee saved, might bee chosen. Heb. 5. 5. Christ took me to himselfe this honor, to be made the high Priest, but he that said vnto him, Thou art my Sonne, this day began I thee, and I have put my spirit vpon him, he shall bring forth

A iudgement to the Gentiles. Eph. 1. 4. He hath chosen vs in him, meaning Christ.

Questiō. How can Christ bee subordinate vnto Gods election, seeing hee together with the Father decreed all things?

A. Christ as he is a Mediatour, is not subordinate to the very decree it selfe of election but to the execution thereof only. 1. Pet. 1. 20. Christ was ordained before the foundation of the world. Augustine in his booke of the Predestination of the Saints, cha. 15. Christ was predestinate that he might be our head.

In Christ, wee must especially obserue two things, his Incarnation, and his Office.

To the working of his Incarnation, concur three things: first, both his Natures: secondly, their Vnion: thirdly, their distinction.

Christs first Nature, is the Godhead, in as much as it belongeth to the Sonne, whereby hee is God. Philippians 2. 6. Who being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God. Ioh. 1. 1. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and that Word was God.

It was requisite for the Mediatour to be God; 1. That he might the better sustaine that great misery, wherewith mankind was ouerwhelmed: the greatest wherof, these four things declare. I. The grieuousnesse of sinne, wherewith Gods Majesty was infinitely offended.

C II. Gods infinite anger against this sin. III. The fearful power of death. IV. The euill tyranny, who is prince of this world. 2. That hee might make his humane nature both of plentiful merit, and also of sufficient efficacy, for the work of mans redemption: 3. That he might infill into all the elect eternall life, and holinesse. Eia. 43. 12. I am the Lord and there is none besides me a Saviour, I haue declared, and I haue saved, and I haue shewed, when there was no strange god among you; therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God.

D I say, the Godhead, as it is the Godhead of the Sonne, is Christs diuine Nature: not as it is the Godhead of the Father, or of the holy Ghost; for it is the office of the Son, to haue the administration of every outward action of the Trinity, from the Father, by the holy Ghost. 1. Cor. 8. 6. And hee being by nature the Sonne of the Father, bestoweth this privilege on those that beleeue, that they are the sonnes of God by adoption. Ioh. 1. 12. As many as receiued him, to them hee gave power to bee the sonnes of God.

Either the Father, or the H. Ghost should haue bin incarnate, the title of Sonne should haue bin giuen to one of them, who was not the Sonne by eternal generation: and so there should be more fountes then one.

Christs other nature, is his humanity, whereby hee, the Mediatour is very man. 1. Tim. 2. 5. One God, and one Mediatour betweene God and man, the man Christ Iesus.

It was necessary that Christ should bee

man. First, that God might be pacified in that nature, whereby he was offended. Secondly, that he might vndergoe punishment due to sin, the which the Godhead could not, being void and free from all passion.

Furthermore, Christ, as he is man, is like vnto vs in all things, sinne onely excepted. Heb. 2. 17. In all things it became him to bee made like vnto his brethren. 2. Cor. 13. 4.

Christ therefore is a perfect man, consisting of an essentiall and true soule and body, wherunto are ioyned such faculties and properties, as are essentiall vnto both. In his soule, is vnderstanding, memorie, will, and such like: in his bodie, length, breadth, and thickenesse: yea, it is comprehended in one onely place, visible, subiect to feeling, neither is there any thing wanting in him which may either adorne or make for the beeing of mans nature.

Againe, Christ in his humanity, was subiect to the infirmities of mans nature, which are these: I. To be tempted, Matth. 4. 1. Iesus was carried by the spirit into the desert, to be tempted of the diuell. II. To feare. Heb. 5. 7. Who in the daies of his flesh, did offer up prayers and supplications with strong crying and teares, vnto him that was able to save him from death, and was also heard in that which hee feared. III. To bee angrie. Marke 3. 5. Then hee looked round about on them angrily, mourning also for the hardness of their hearts, and said vnto the men, Stretch forth thine hand. IV. Forgetfulness of his office imposed vpon him, by reason of the agonie astonishing his senses. Matth. 26. 39. He went a little further, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O Father, if it be possible, let this cuppe passe from mee: neuertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

Wee must hold these things concerning Christs infirmities: I. They were such qualities, as did onely affect his humane nature, and not at all constitute the same: and therefore might be left of Christ. II. They were such as were common to all men: as to thirst, to be wearied, and subiect to die: and not personall, as are Agues, Consumptions, the Leprosie, Blindnesse, &c. III. He was subiect to these infirmities, not by necessity of his humane nature, but by his free-will and pleasure, pitying mankind. Therefore in him such infirmities were not the punishment of his owne sinne, as they are in vs; but rather part of that his humiliation which he did willingly vndergoe for our sakes.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Vnion of the two natures in Christ.

NOW followeth the Vnion of the two natures in Christ, which especially concerneth his Mediation, for by this vnion it com-

A meth to passe, that his humanity did suffer death vpon the crosse in such sort, as he could neither be overcome, nor perpetually overwhelmed by it. Three things belong to this vnting of Natures.

I. Conception, by which his humane nature was by the wonderful power and operation of God, both immediately, that is, without mans helpe, and miraculously framed of the substance of the Virgin Mary. Luk. 1. 35. The holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, and the power of the most high shall overshadow thee.

The holy Ghost cannot be said to be the Father of Christ, because he did minister no matter to the making of the humanitie, but did onely fashion and frame it of the substance of the Virgin Mary.

B II. Sanctification, whereby the same humane nature was purified, that is, altogether seuered by the power of the holy Ghost, from the least staine of sinne, to the end that it might be holy, and be made fit to die for others. Luk. 1. 35. That holy thing which shall be borne of thee shall be called the Sonne of God. 1. Pet. 3. 18. Christ hath once suffered for sinnes, the iust for the vniust. 1. Pet. 2. 22. Who did not sinne, neither was there guile found in his mouth.

C III. Assumption, whereby the Word, that is, the second person in Trinitie, tooke vpon him flesh, and the seede of Abraham, namely, that his humane Nature: to the end, that it being destitute of a proper and personall subsistence, might in the person of the Word obtaine it; subsisting, and as it were, being supported of the word for euer. Ioh. 1. 14. That Word was made flesh. Heb. 2. 16. He tooke not vpon him the nature of Angels, but the seede of Abraham.

In the assumption, we haue three things to consider: I. The difference of the two natures in Christ. For the diuine nature, as it is limited to the person of the Sonne, is perfect and actually subsisting in it selfe: the humane nature, which consisteth in whole of bodie and soule, doth neither subsist in it selfe, nor by it selfe. II. The manner of Vnion. The person of the Sonne did by assuming the humane nature, create it, and by creating, assume it, communicating his subsistence vnto it: the like example of vnion is no where to be found. III. The product of the Vnion. Whole Christ, God and man, was not made a new person of the two natures, as of parts compounding a new thing, but remained still the same person. Now whereas the ancient Fathers termed Christ a compound person, wee must vnderstand them not properly, but by proportion. For as the parts are united in the whole, so these two natures doe concur together in one person, which is the Sonne of God.

By this we may see that Christ is one onely Sonne of God, not two: yet in two respects hee is the Sonne of God. As he is the eternall

Word,

Word, he is by nature the Sonne of the Father: As he is man, the same sonne also, yet not by nature, or by adoption, but onely by personal union, Luk. 1.35. Math. 3.17. This is my beloved Sonne, &c.

The phrase in Scripture agreeing to this Vnion, is the communion of properties, which is a true and reall predication: euen as it ariseth of the true and reall vnion of natures; concerning which, obserue two rules.

I. Of those things, which are spoken or attributed to Christ, some are onely vnderstood of his diuine nature. As that, Ioh. 8.58. Before Abraham was, I am. And that, Coloss. 1.15. Who is the image of the invisible God, the first borne of euery creature. Some againe agree onely to his humanitie, as borne, suffered, dead, buried, &c. Luk. 2.52. And Iesus increased in wisdom, and stature, and in fauour with God and man. Lastly, other things are vnderstood, onely of both natures vnited together. As Marth. 17.5. This is my beloved Sonne, in whom only I am well pleased, heare him. Eph. 1.22. He hath made submit all things vnder his feet, and hath appointed him ouer all things to be the head to the Church.

II. Some things are spoken of Christ, as he is God, which must be interpreted according to his humane nature. Act. 20.28. To feede the Church of God, that is, Christ, which he (according to his manhood) hath purchased with his owne blood. 1. Cor. 2.8. If they had knowen this, they would neuer haue crucified the Lord of glorie. Contrarily, some things are mentioned of Christ, as he is man, which onely are vnderstood of his diuine nature. Ioh. 3.13. No man ascended vp to heauen, but he that hath descended from heauen, the Sonne of man which is in heauen. This is spoken of his manhood, where, as we mult vnderstand, that onely his Deitie came downe from heauen. Ioh. 6.62. What if ye should see the Sonne of man, (viz. Christs humane nature) ascend vp, where he (viz. his Deitie) was before.

Lastly, by reason of this Vnion, Christ, as he is man, is exalted aboue euery name: yea, he is adored, and hath such a great (though not infinite) measure of gifts, as farre surpasses the gifts of all Saints and Angels. Eph. 1.22. And set him at his right hand in heauenly places, farre aboue all principallitie, and power, and might, and domination, and euery name that is named, not in this world onely, but in that also that is to come. Heb. 1.9. When he bringeth his first begotten Sonne into the world, he saith, And let all the Angels of God worship him. Col. 2.3. In whom all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hid. Phil. 2.9,10. Therefore God exalted him on high, and gave him a name aboue all names, that at the name of Iesus euery knee should bowe (namely, worship, and be subiect to him) both of things in heauen, and things in earth, and things vnder the earth.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the distinction of both Natures.

THe distinction of both natures, is that, whereby they, with their properties and operations, remaine distinct without composition, mingling, or conuersion. Ioh. 10.17,18. Therefore doth my Father loue me, because I lay downe my life, that I may take it againe. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it downe of my selfe, I haue power to lay it downe, and haue power to take it againe. Ioh. 13.31,32. Now is the Sonne of man glorified, and God is glorified in him. If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorifie him in himselfe. Here we may obserue, that there is one will in Christ as God; another, as man. Math. 26.39. Not as I will, but as thou wilt. This also approoueth the sentence of the Chalcedon Creede. We confesse, that one and the same Christ Iesus, both Sonne, Lord, only begotten, is knowen and preached to bee in two natures without confusion, mutation, distinction, or separation.

Lastly, hereby it is manifest, that Christ, when hee became that which hee was not (namely man), continued still that which hee was (very God.)

CHAP. XVIII.

Of Christs Natiuitie and Office.

THus much concerning Christs incarnation, the cleere declaration there was by his natiuitie.

The natiuitie of Christ, is that whereby Mary a Virgin, did after the course of nature, and the custome of woman, bring from Christ the Word of the Father, and the Sonne of Dauid: so that those are much deceived, which are of opinion that Christ, after a miraculous manner, came into the world, the wombe of the Virgin being shut, Luk. 2.23. Euery man-child which first openeth the wombe shall be called holy to the Lord. The which place of Scripture is applied to Mary and our Saviour Christ. Hence is it, that the Virgin Mary is said (Remer) to bring forth God, albeit he is not any way mother of the God-head. For Christ as he is God, is without mother, and as man, without Father.

It is conuenient to be thought, that Mary continued a virgin vntill her dying day, albeit we make not this opinion any article of our belief. I. Christ being now to depart the world, committed his mother to the tuition and custodie of his Disciple Iohn, which it is like hee would not haue done, if there had any children, by whom as custome was, see might haue bene prouided for. Iohn 19.26. I. I. It is likely that thee who was with child by the holy Ghost, would not after know any man. 111. It is agreed of by the Church in all ages.

Church

Christ being now borne, was circumcised the eight day, that he might fulfill all the righteousness of the law: and being thirtie yeares of age, he was baptized, that he being publicly and solemnly inuited into the office of his Mediatorship, might take vpon him the guilt of our finnes. He was both circumcised and baptized, that we might learne: I. That the whole efficacye of the Sacraments, depend alone and wholly vpon him. 11. That he was Mediatour of mankind, both before and vnder the law, as also vnder grace. 111. That he is the knot and bond of both covenants.

His office followeth, to the perfect accomplishing whereof, he was annointed of his Father, that is, he was sufficiently furnished with both gifts and authoritie. Heb. 1.9. Therefore God, when thy God hath annointed thee with the oyle of gladnesse aboue thy fellower. Esay 61.1. The spirit of the Lord was vpon me, therefore be annointed mee. Ioh. 3.34. God giueth him not the spirit of measure.

If any man inforce this as a reason, that Christ could not performe the office of a Mediatour, being not the meane or middle betwixt God and man, but the partie offended, and so one of the extremes; we must know that Christ is two waies said to be the middle or meane. I. Betwixt God and all men: for being both God and man, he doth participate with both extremes. II. Betwixt God and the faithfull onely: First, according to his humanitie, whereby he received the spirit without measure. Secondly, according to his diuine nature, namely, as hee is the Word. Now the Word is middle, betwixt the Father, and the faithfull: In regard of order, because the Word was begotten of the Father, and by it we haue access vnto the Father. This subordination, which is of the Son to the Father, is not in the diuine essence, generally and distinctly considered, but in the relation or manner of hauing the essence. And those things which are subordinate after this manner, cannot be vaequall, if they haue one and the same singular essence. 11. In regard of his office, the which being imposed on him, by his Father, he did willingly vndergoe, and of his owne accord.

Christ doth exercise this office according to both natures vnited in one person, and according to each nature distinct one from the other. For in reconciling God and man together, the flesh personeth some things distinctly, & the Word other things distinctly: Again, some other things are done not by the Word or flesh alone, but by both together.

This office is so appropriate to Christ, that neither in whole or in part, can it be translated to any other. Heb. 7.24. This man because he endureth for ever, hath an euerylasting Priesthood, or a Priest-hood that cannot passe from one man to another.

Therefore Christ, as he is God, hath vnder him Emperours, Kings, Princes, to bee his Vicegerents; who therefore are called Gods. Psal. 82.1. But as he is Mediatour, that is, a Priest, a Prophet, and King of the Church of God, he hath no Vicegerent, Vicar, or Lieutenant, who in his Kingly, Priestly or Propheticall office, in two of these, or in one, can be in his stead.

Christs office is threefold, Priestly, Propheticall, Regall, Psal. 110.1,2,3,4. Esay 42.1.

Christs Priesthood, is an office of his, wherein he performed all those things to God, whereby is obtained eternall life. Heb. 5.9,10. And being consecrate, was made the author of eternall salvation, vnto all them that obey him: and is called of God an high Priest for after the order of Azielahide. Chap. 7.24,25. This man because he endureth for ever, hath an euerylasting Priesthood; wherefore he is able alway perfectly to saue all them that come vnto God by him.

His Priest-hood consisteth of two parts, Satisfaction; and Intercession.

Satisfaction is that, whereby Christ is a full propitiation to his Father for the Elec. Iob 33.23. If there be a messenger with him, or an interpreter, one of a thousand, to declare vnto man his righteousness, then will he haue mercie vpon him, and will say, Deliver him that he goe not downe into the pit, for I haue found a reconciliation. Rom. 3.24. And are iustificed freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus. vers. 25. Whom God hath set forth to bee a reconciliation through faith in his blood. 1. Ioh. 2.2. He is a propitiation for our finnes.

Christs satisfied Gods anger for mans offence; according to his humanity, by performing perfect obedience to the will of God; according to his Deitie, by ministering to the same perfect obedience, especiall dignity, to wit, merit before God, & efficacy. Ioh. 17.19. For their sakes sanctifie I am selfe, that they also may be sanctified through the truth. Act. 20.28. To feede the flocke of God, which hee hath purchased with his owne blood. 2. Cor. 5.19. God was in Christ, and reconciled the world to himselfe, not imputing their finnes vnto them.

Satisfaction comprehendeth his passion, and fulfilling the Law.

His passion, is the first part of Satisfaction, by which; he hauing vndergone the punishment of sinne, satisfied Gods iustice, and appeased his anger for the finnes of the faithfull. His passion was in this manner.

(a) Somewhat before his death, partly feare arising from the sense of Gods wrath imminent vpon him, partly griefe possiding, as it were, each part of him, so disturbed his sacred minde, (b) that inwardly for a while it strooke into him a strange kinde of astonishment, or rather obliuion of his duty imposed vpon him; & outwardly (c) made him pray vnto his Father (if he would) to remouee that cup from him, the which he did expresse with no small cry, many teares, & a bloody sweat, (d) trick-

ling from his bodie vnto the ground. But when he came againe vnto himselfe, (e) hee freely yielded himselfe vnto his Father to satisfie vpon the crosse for the transgression of man. After this agonie was ouerpassed, (f) by Iudas his treachery Christ is apprehended, and (g) first he is brought to Annas, after to Caiaphas, where Peter denieth him: (h) from Caiaphas hee is lead bound to Pilate, (i) Pilate posseth him ouer to Herod, (k) hee transportheth him backe againe to Pilate, (l) who acknowledgeth his innocencie, and yet condemneth him as an offender. This innocent thus condemned, is (m) pitifully scourged, crowned with thornes, scoffed, spitte at, spitefully adiudged to the death of the crosse, (n) on which his hands and feet are fastened with nailes. Here staied not his paffions, but after all these (o) he became as accused to God the Father, that is, God poured vpon him, being thus innocent, such a sea of his wrath, as was equiualent to the finnes of the whole world. He now being vnder this curse, through the sense and feeling of this strange error, (p) complaineth to his Father that he is forsaken: who notwithstanding, encountering then with Satan and his angels, did vterly vanquish (q) and ouercome them. When this was ended, his heart (r) was pierced with a spear, till the blood gushed out from his sides, and hee gaue vp (s) the ghost: and (t) commended his spirit to his Fathers protection, the which immediatly went into Paradise. His body, (u) whereof not one bone was broken, was buried, and three daies was (x) ignominiously captiuated of death. (y) Mark. 4. 32. Math. 26. 38. (z) Ioh. 12. 27. Mark. 14. 35. (e) Math. 26. 37. 42. Ioh. 12. 29. Heb. 5. 7. (d) Luk. 22. 44. (e) Heb. 9. 5. 1. Cor. 5. 7. Eia. 53. 10. 11. (f) Math. 26. 47. (g) Ioh. 18. 13. 14. (h) Ioh. 18. 29. (i) Luk. 23. 7. 8. (k) Luk. 23. 15. (l) Math. 27. 24. 16. (m) the same place. (n) Ioh. 19. 18. (o) Gal. 3. 13. (p) Math. 27. 35. 46. (q) Col. 1. 14. 15. (r) Ioh. 19. 34. (s) Heb. 9. 15. 16. (t) Luk. 23. 43. 46. (u) Ioh. 19. 33. 42. (x) Act. 1. 13.

In this description of Christs paffion, we may note five circumstances especially.

I. His Agony, namely, a vehement anguish, arising vpon the conflict of two contrary desires in him: The first, was to be obedient to his Father. The second, to auoid the horror of death. Luk. 22. 44. Being in an agonie, he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was like drops of blood, trickling downe to the ground. Heb. 5. 7. In the daies of his flesh did offer up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and teares vnto him, that was able to saue him from death, and was alwaies heard in that which he feared.

II. His Sacrifice, which is an action of Christs offering himselfe to God the Father, as a ranfome for the finnes of the elect. Heb. 9. 26. Now in the end of the world hath he appeared once to put away sinne, by the sacrifice of himselfe.

A In this sacrifice the oblation was Christ, as he was man. Heb. 10. 10. By the which will we are sanctified, namely by the offering of Iesus Christ once made.

The Altar also was Christ, as he was God. Heb. 13. 10. We haue an Altar, whereof they haue no authoritie to eate which serue in the Tabernacle. Heb. 9. 14. How much more shall the blood of Christ, which through the eternall spirit offered himselfe without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead workes to serue the living God? Hence it is, that Christ is said to sanctifie himselfe, as he is man, Ioh. 17. 19. For their sakes, sanctifie I my selfe. As the Altar, the gift; and the temple, the gold, Matth. 23. 17. 19.

B Christ is the Priest, as he is God and man. Heb. 5. 6. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. 1. Tim. 2. 5. 6. One Mediatour betwene God and man, the man Christ Iesus, who gaue himselfe a ranfome for all men, to be a testimony in due time.

III. God the fathers acceptance of that his sacrifice, in which he was well pleased. For, had it bene that God had not allowed of it, Christs suffering had bene in vaine, Math. 3. 17. This is my beloued Sonne, in whom I am well pleased. Eph. 5. 2. Even as Christ loved vs, and gaue himselfe for vs, to be an offering and a sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauour to God.

C IV. Imputation of mans sinne to Christ, whereby his Father accounted him as a transgressor, hauing translated the burde of mans finnes to his shoulders. Eia. 53. 4. He hath borne our infirmities, & carried our sorrowes: yet we did not iudge him as plagued and smitten of God, and humbled: but he was wounded for our transgressions, he was broken for our iniquities, &c. and ver. 12. He was counted with the transgressours, and he bare the finnes of many. 2. Cor. 5. 21. He hath made him to be sinne for vs, which knew no sinne, that we should be made the righteousnesse of God in him.

V. His wonderfull humiliation consisting of two parts. I. In that he made himselfe of small or no repute in respect of his Deity, Phil. 2. 7. 8. He made himselfe of no reputation, &c. hee humbled himselfe, and became obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the crosse.

We may not thinke, that this debasing of Christ came, because his diuine nature was either waited or weakened, but because his Deitie did, as it were, lay aside, and conceale his power and maiestie for a season. And as Irenaeus saith, The Word rested, that the humane nature might be crucified and dead.

II. In that he became execrable, which is, by the Law accused for vs. Gal. 3. 10. Cursed is every one that remaineth not in all things written in the booke of the Law to doe them.

This accusation, is either inward or outward.

Inward, is the sense of Gods fearefull anger vpon the crosse. Reul. 19. 15. Hee it is that treadeth the winepress of the fiercenes & wrath of Almighty God. Eia. 53. 5. He is grieved for our transgressions, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we were healed. This appeared by those drops of blood, which issued from him, by his cryings to his Father vpon the crosse, and by sending of an Angel to comfort him. Hence was it, that he so much feared death, which many Martyrs entertained most willingly.

His outward accursednes, standeth in three degrees. I. Death vpon the crosse, which was not imaginary, but true, because blood and water issued from his heart. For seeing that water and blood gushed forth together, it is very like, the casker, or coat which iuaneltheth the heart called Pericardion, was pierced. As Columbum obserueth in his Anatomy, 7. booke. Ioh. 19. 34.

His death was necessary, that hee might confirme to vs the Testament, or Couenant of grace promised for our sakes, Heb. 9. 15. 16. For this cause he is the Mediatour of the new Testament, that through death, &c. they which were called, might receive the promise of eternal inheritance: for where a Testament is, there must be the death of him that made the Testament, &c. ver. 17.

II. Buriall, to ratifie the certentie of his death.

III. Descending into hell, which we must not vnderstand, that he went locally into the place of the damned, but that for the time of his abode in the graue, he was vnder the ignominious dammed of death. Act. 2. 24. Whom God hath raised up, and loosed the sorrowes of death because it was impossible, that he should be holden of it. Eph. 4. 9. In that he ascended, what was it but that he also descended first into the lowest part of the earth?

It was necessarie that Christ should bee captiuated of death, that he might abolish the sting, that is the power thereof. 1. Cor. 15. 55. O death where is thy sting! O hell where is thy victorie!

Thus we haue heard of Christs marueilous paffion, whereby he hath abolished both the first and second death, due vnto vs for our finnes: the which (as we may further obserue) is a perfect ranfome for the finnes of all and every one of the elect. 1. Tim. 2. 6. Who gaue himselfe a ranfome for all men. For it was more, that Christ the only begotten Sonne of God, yea, God himselfe, for a small while should beare the curse of the law, then if the whole world should haue suffered eternall punishment.

This also is worthy our Meditation, that then a man is well grounded in the doctrine of Christs paffion, when his heart casteth to sinne, and is pricked with the griefe of those finnes, whereby, as with speares hee pierced the side of the immaculate lambe of God, 1. Ioh. 3. 6. Who so sineth, neither hath seen him, nor known him. Zach. 12. 10. And they shall looke vpon him, whom they haue pierced, and they shall lament for him, as one lamenteth for his onely sonne, and be sorrie for him, as one is sorrie for his first borne.

After Christs paffion, followeth the fulfilling of the Law, by which he satisfied Gods iustice in fulfilling the whole Law, Rom. 8. 3. 4. God sent his owne Sonne, that the righteousnesse of the Law might be fulfilled by vs.

He fulfilled the Law, partly by the holines of his humane nature, and partly by obedience in the workes of the Law. Rom. 8. 2. The Law of the spirit of life, which is in Christ Iesus hath freed me from the Law of sinne, and of death. Math. 3. 15. It becommeth vs to fulfill all righteousnesse. 6. Ioh. 17. 19.

B Now succedeeth the second part of Christs Priesthood, namely, intercession, whereby Christ is an Aduocate and intreater of God the Father for the faithfull. Rom. 8. 34. Christ is at the right hand of God, and maketh request for vs. Christs intercession, is directed immediately to God the Father. 1. Ioh. 2. 1. If any man sin, we haue an Aduocate with the Father, euen Iesus Christ the iust. Now as the Father is one of the Trinitie in order, so if he be appealed the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are appealed also. For there is one and the same agreement & will of all the persons of the Trinitie.

Christ maketh intercession according to both natures. First, according to his humanitie, partly by appearing before his Father in heauen, partly by desiring the salvation of the Elect. Heb. 9. 24. Christ is entered into very heauen to appeare now in the sight of God for vs. And chap. 7. 25. He is able perfectly to saue them that come to God by him, seeing hee ever liueth to make intercession for them. Secondly, according to his Deitie, partly by applying the merit of his death; partly by making request by his holy Spirit, in the hearts of the Elect, with sighes vspeakable, 1. Pet. 1. 3. Elect according to the foreknowledge of the Father to the sanctification of the spirit. Rom. 8. 26. The spirit helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray as we ought, but the spirit is selfe maketh request for vs with sighes which cannot be expressed.

We are not therefore to imagine or surmise that Christ prolateth himselfe vpon his knees before his Fathers throne for vs; neither is it necessary, seeing his very presence before his Father, hath in it the force of an humble petition.

The end of Christs intercession is, that such as are iustified by his merits, should by this meanes continue in the state of grace. Now Christs intercession preferreth the elect in couering their continual slips, infirmities, and imperfect actions, by an especiall and continual application of his merits; that by this meanes mans person may remaine iust, & mans workes acceptable to God. 1. Ioh. 2. 2. He is a reconciliation for our sins, & not for ours only, but for the finnes of the whole world. 1. Pet. 2. 5. Ten as lively stones, hee made a spiritual house & holy priest-hood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Iesus Christ. Ren. 8. 3. 4. And another Angell came and stood before the Altar, having a golden censer, and much odours was given unto him, that he should offer with the prayers of all Saints upon the golden altar, which is before the throne, and the smoke of the odours with the prayers of the Saints, went up before God out of the Angels hand.

Thus farre concerning Christs Priesthood; now follow his Prophetical, and Regall offices.

His Prophetical office, is that, whereby he immediately from his Father, revealeth his word and all the meanes of saluation comprised in the same. Ioh. 1. 18. The Sonne, which is in the bosome of his Father, he hath declared unto you. Ioh. 8. 26. Those things which I heare of my Father, I speake to the world. Deut. 18. 18. I will raise you up a Prophet, &c.

The word was first revealed, partly by visions, by dreames, by speech; partly by the instant motion of the holy Ghost. Heb. 1. 1. At sundry times, and in divers maners, God spake in old time to our fathers the Prophets: in these last times he hath spoken to us by his Son.

2. Pet. 1. 21. Prophecies came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of GOD spake as they were moved by the holy Ghost.

The like is done ordinarily onely by the preaching of the word, where the holy Ghost doth inwardly illuminate the understanding. Luk. 24. 45. Then opened he their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures. & 21. 15. I will give you a mouth and wisdom, where against all your adversaries shall not be able to speake, nor resist. Act. 16. 14. Whose heart the Lord opened, that shee attended unto the things that Paul spake. For this cause, Christ is called the Doctor, Lawgiuer, and Counsellour of his Church. Matth. 23. 10. Be not called Doctors, for one is your Doctor, Iesus Christ. Iam. 4. 12. There is one Lawgiuer which is able to save and to destroy. Ela. 9. 6. He shall call his name Counsellour. &c. Yea, he is the Apostle of our profession. Heb. 3. 1. The Angell of the covenant. Mal. 3. 1. And the Mediatour of the new covenant. Heb. 9. 15. Therefore the Soueraigne authoritie of expounding the Scripture, onely belongs to Christ; and the Church hath onely the ministry of iudgement and interpretation committed unto her.

Christs Regall office, is that; whereby he distributeth his gifts, and disposeth all things for the benefit of the elect. Pla. 2. & 110. 1. 2. The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand: till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

The execution of Christs Regall office, comprehendeth his exaltation.

Christs exaltation is that, by which he, after his lowest humiliation; was by little and little exalted to glory; and that in sundry respects, according to both his natures.

The exaltation of his diuine nature, is an apparent declaration of his diuine properties in his humane nature, without the least alteration thereof. Rom. 1. 4. Declared mighty to be the same of God, touching the spirit of sanctification by the resurrection from the dead. A. 2. 36. God hath made him both Lord and Christ, whom ye haue crucified.

The exaltation of his humanity, is the putting off from him his feeble condition and all infirmities, and the putting on of such habitual gifts; which, albeit they are created and finite, yet they haue so great and so marvellous perfection, as possibly can befall any creature. The gifts of his minde, are wisdom, knowledge, joy, and other vnspokeable vertues: of his body, immortality, strength, agilitie, brightnesse. Phil. 3. 21. Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Math. 17. 2. He was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the Sun, and his clothes were as white as the light. Heb. 1. 9. God when thy God hath anointed thee with the oyle of gladnesse about thy fellows. Eph. 1. 20. 22.

Christs body, although, it be thus glorified, yet is it still of a solide substance, compassed about, visible, palpable, and shall perpetually remaine in some certaine place. Luk. 24. 39. Behold my hands, and my feete, is it euen I touch me, and see: a spirit hath no flesh, and bones, as ye see me haue.

There be three degrees of Christs exaltation.

I. His resurrection, wherein by his diuine power he subdued death; and raised up himselfe to eternall life. 3. Cor. 13. 4. Though he was crucified concerning his infirmity, yet liueth he through the power of God. Math. 28. 6. He is not here, for he is risen, as he said: Come, see the place where the Lord was laid.

The end of Christs resurrection, was to shew that his sanctification, by his passion and death, was fully absolute. For onely sinne would haue detained the Mediatour, vnder the dominion of death, though he had fully satisfied for all the rest. 1. Cor. 15. 17. If Christ be not raised, your faith is in vaine: ye are yet in your finnes. Rom. 4. 25. Who was delivered to death for our finnes, and is risen againe for our iustification.

II. His ascension into heauen, which is a true, locall, and visible translation of Christs humane nature from earth into the highest heauen of the blessed, by the vertue & power of his Deity. A. 1. 9. When he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up: for a cloud took him out of their sight: and while they looked stedfastly towards heauen, as he went, he hold two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing into heauen? This Iesus which is taken up from you into heauen, shall come as ye haue seene him goe into heauen. Eph. 4. 10. He ascended farre above all the heauen.

The end of Christs ascension was, that he might prepare a place for the faithful, giue them the holy Ghost, and there enjoy eternall glory. Ioh. 14. 2. In my fathers house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would haue said you: I goe to prepare a place for you. c. 16. 7. If I goe not away, the Comforter will not come vnto you: but if I depart, I will send him vnto you.

III. His sitting at the right hand of God the Father, which metaphorically signifieth, that Christ hath in the highest heauens actually all glory, power, and dominion. Heb. 1. 3. By himselfe he hath purged our finnes, and sitteth at the right hand of the Majesty in the highest places. Pla. 110. 1. The Lord said to my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool. 1. Cor. 15. 25. Hee must reigne till hee hath put all his enemies vnder his feet. Act. 7. 55. He being full of the holy Ghost, looked stedfastly into heauen, and saw the glory of God, and Iesus standing at the right hand of God. Mat. 20. 21.

His regall office hath two parts: The first is; his regiment of the kingdome of heauen, part whereof is in heauen, part vpon earth, namely, the congregation of the faithful.

In the government of his Church, hee exerciseth two prerogatiues royall. The first, is, to make lawes. Iam. 4. 12. There is one Lawgiuer which is able to save and to destroy. The second, is to ordaine his ministers. Eph. 4. 11. He gaue some to be Apostles, others Prophets, others Euangelists, some Pastours and Teachers, &c. 1. Cor. 12. 28. God hath ordained some in the Church as first, Apostles, secondly, Prophets, thirdly, Teachers; then them that doe miracles, after that the gifts of healing, helpers, gouernours, dispensers of tongues.

Christs government of the Church, is eyther by collection of it out of the world, or conseruation being collected. Eph. 4. 10. Pla. 110.

The second part of this Regall office, is the destruction of the kingdome of darkness. Col. 1. 13. Who hath delivered us from the kingdome of darkness. Pla. 2. 9. Thou shalt crush them with a scepter of iron, and breake them in pieces like a potter: vessel. Luk. 19. 27. Those mine enemies, that would not that I should reigne over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

The kingdome of darkenesse, is the whole company of Christs enemies.

The prince of this kingdome, and of all the members thereof, is the diuell. Eph. 2. 2. He walked once according to the course of the world, and after the prince that ruleth in the aire, even the prince that now worketh in the children of disobedience. 2. Cor. 4. 4. The God of this world hath blinded the eyes of the infidels. 2. Corinth. 6. 15. What concord hath Christ with Belial, or what part hath the beleuer with the infidel?

The members of this kingdome, and subiects to Satan, are his angels and vnbeleuers; among whom, the principall members are Antichrists, who say in their heart, there is no God. Psalms 14. 1. And Magicians, who bargain with the diuell, to accomplish their desires. 1. Samuel, 28. 7. Psalm 58. 5. Idolaters, who either adore false gods, or the true God in an idol. 1. Cor. 10. 7. 20. Turke and Jewes are of this bunch; so are Hereticks, who are such as erre with pertinacy in the foundation of religion. 2. Tim. 2. 18. Apostates, or renoulers from faith in Christ Iesus. Hebr. 6. 6. False Christs, who beare men in hand, they are true Christs. Math. 24. 26. There were many such about the time of our Sauour Christ his first coming, as Iosephus writeth, booke 20. of Iewish antiquities, the 11, 12, and 14. chapters. Lastly, that Antichrist, who as it is now apparent, can be none other but the Pope of Rome. 2. Thef. 2. 3. Let no man deceiue you by any meanes, for that day shall not come, except there come a departing first, and that man of sinne be disclosed, even the son of perdition, which is an aduersary, and exalteth himselfe against all that is called God, or that is worshipped; for that he doth sit as God in the temple of God, shewing himselfe, that he is God. Ren. 13. 11, 12. And I beheld another beast coming out of the earth, which had two horns like the Lamb, but he spake like the dragon: and he did all that the first beast could do before him, and he caused the earth and them that dwell therein, to worship the beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

There were then, first, Antichrists at Rome, when the Bishops thereof would be entituled vniuersall, or Bishops ouer the whole Church through the world: but when they were complete, when they together with Ecclesiastical censures, yurped ciuill authority.

After that Christ hath subdued all his enemies, these two things shall ensue: I. The surrendering out of his kingdome to God the Father, as concerning the manner of regiment and spirituall policy, consisting in word and spirit together. II. The subiection of Christ, onely in regard of his humanity; the which then is, when the Sonne of God shall most fully manifest his maiesty, which before was obscured by the flesh as a vail, so that the same flesh remaining both glorious, and vnto the Sonne of God, may by infinite degrees appeare inferior.

We may not therefore imagine, that the subiection of Christ, consisteth in diminishing the glory of the humanity, but in manifesting most fully the maiesty of the Word.

CHAP. XIX.

CONCERNING THE OUTWARD MEANES OF EXERCISING THE DECREE OF ELECTION, AND OF THE DECEALOE.

After the Foundation of Election, which hath hitherto bene delivered, it followeth, that we should increase of the outward meanes of the same.

The meanes are Gods covenant, and the scale thereof.

Gods covenant, is his contract with man, concerning the obtaining of life eternall, vpon a certaine condition.

This covenant consists of two parts: Gods promise to man, Mans promise to God.

Gods promise to man, is that, whereby he bindeth himselfe to man to be his God, if he performe the condition.

Mans promise to God, is that, whereby he voweth his allegiance vnto his Lord, and to performe the condition betwene them.

Again, there are two kinds of this covenant. The covenant of workes, and the covenant of grace. Jeremie 31.31,32,33. Beholde the dayes come,saith the Lord,that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Iudah,not according to the covenant, I made with their fathers, when I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt: the which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband to them,saith the Lord. But this shall be the covenant, that I will make with the house of Israel: after those daies,saith the Lord,I will puruey law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

The covenant of workes, is Gods covenant, made with condition of perfect obedience, and is expressed in the morall law.

The Morall law, is that part of Gods word which commandeth perfect obedience vnto man, as well in his nature, as in his actions, and forbiddeth the contrarie. Romanes 10. 5. Moses thus describeth the righteousness which is of the law,that the man,which doth these things, shall live thereby. 1.Timothie 1. 5. The end of the commandement, is love out of a pure heart, & of a good conscience, and faith unfeined. Luk. 16.17. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thine heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy strength. Rom. 7. 14. We know that the law is spirituall.

The Law hath two parts. The Edific. commanding obedience, and the condition binding to obedience. The condition is eternall life to such as fulfill the law, but to transgressors, euertall death.

The Decalogue, or ten commandments, is an abridgement of the whole law, and the covenant of workes. Exod. 34. 27. And the Lord said vnto Moses, Write thou these words, for after the tenour of these words, I haue made a covenant with thee, and with Israel. And he was there with the Lord fourty daies, and fourty nights, and did neither eat bread, nor drinke water, and he wrote in the tables the words of the covenant, euen the ten commandments. 1. Kin. 8. 9. Nothing was in the Arke, save the two tables of stone, which Moses had put there at Horeb, where the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt. Mat. 23. 40. On these two commandments hangeth the whole law and the prophets.

The true interpretation of the Decalogue, must be according to these rules.

I. In the negative, the affirmative must be understood: and in the affirmative, the negative.

II. The negative bindeth at all times, and to all times: and the affirmative, bindeth at all times, but not to all times: and therefore negatives are of more force.

III. Vnder one vice expressly forbidden, are comprehended all of that kinde; yea the least cause, occasion, or enticement thereto, is forbidden as 1. Ioh. 3. 15. Whosoever hateth his brother, is a man-slayer. Math. 5. 21. to the end. Euill thoughts are condemned, as well as euill actions.

IV. The smallest finnes are entituled with the same names, that that sinne is, which is expressly forbidden in that commandment, to which they appertaine. As in the former places, hatred is named murder, and to looke after a woman with a lusting eye, is adultery.

V. Wee must vnderstand euery commandement of the law so, as that wee annex this condition: unless God command the contrary. For God being an absolute Lord, and so above the law, may command that which his law forbiddeth: so he commanded Isaac to be offered, the Egyptians to be spoiled, the brazen Serpent to be erected, which was a figure of Christ, &c.

The Decalogue, is described in two tables.

The summe of the first table is, that we loue God with our minde, memory, affections, and all our strength. Math. 22. 37. This is the first, (to wit, in nature and order) and great commandement (namely, in excellency, and dignity.)

CHAP. XX.

Of the first commandment.

THE first table hath foure commandements.

The first teacheth vs to haue and choose the true God for our God. The words are these.

I am Iehouah thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, & out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt haue none other gods before my face.

The Resolution.

I am. If any man rather iudge, that these words are a preface to all the commandments, then a part of the first, I hinder him not: neuertheless, it is like, that they are a perswasion to the keeping of the first commandment: and that they are, set before it, to make way vnto it; as being more hard to be receiued, then the rest. And this may appeare, in that the three commandments next following, which are lesse then this, haue their severall reasons.

Iehouah. This word significeth three things. I. Him who of himselfe, and in himselfe, was from all eternitie. Reu. 1. 8. Who is, who was, & who is to come. II. Him which giueth being to all things, when they were not, partly by creating, partly by preserving them. III. Him which mightily causeth, that those things which hee hath promised, should both be made, and continued. Exodus 6. 1. Romanes 4. 17.

Here beginneth the first reason of the first commandment, taken from the name of God: it is thus framed:

He that is Iehouah, must alone be thy God.

But I am Iehouah:

Therefore I alone must be thy God.

This proposition is wanting: the assumption is in these words (I am Iehouah) the conclusion is the commandment.

Thy God. These are the words of the commandment of grace. 1er. 31. 33. wherein the Lord covenanteth with his people concerning remission of finnes, and eternall life. Yea these words are as a second reason of the commandments, drawne from the equality of that relation, which is betwene God and his people.

If I be thy God, thou againe must be my people, and take me alone for thy God.

But I am thy God:

Therefore thou must be my people, and take me alone for thy God.

Which brought. The assumption or second part of this reason, is confirmed by an argument taken from Gods effects, when hee deliuered his people out of Egypt, as it were, from the seruitude of a most tyrannous master. This deliuey was not appropriate onely to the Israelites, but in some sort belongs to the Church of God in all ages: in that it was a type of a most surpassing deliuey, from the fearful kingdome of darknesse. 1. Cor. 10. 1. 2. I would not haue you ignorant, brethren, that all our fathers were vnder the cloud, & all passed through the redds sea, and were all baptized vnto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea. Coloss. 1. 13. Who hath deliuered vs from the power of darknesse, and translated vs into the kingdome of his deere Sonne.

Other gods, or strange gods. They are so called, not that they by nature are such, or can bee; but because the corrupt, and more then diuillish heart of carnall man, esteemeth so of them. Philip. 3. 19. Whose god is their belly. 1. Corin. 4. 4. Whose minds the god of this world hath bewitched.

Before my face. That is, (figuratiuely) in my sight or presence, to whom the secret imaginations of the heart are knowne: and this is the third reason of the first commandment, as if he should say: If thou in my presence reject me, it is an heinous offence: see therefore thou doe it not. After the same manner reasoneth the Lord. Gen. 17. 1. I am God almighty, therefore walke before me, and be thou upright.

The affirmative part.

Make choice of Iehouah to be thy God.

The duties here commanded, are these:

I. To acknowledge God, that is, to know and confesse him to be such a God, as hee hath revealed himselfe to bee in his word and creatures. Coloss. 1. 10. Increasing in the knowledge of God. Ierem. 24. 7. And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the Lord, and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall reurne vnto me with their whole heart. In this knowledge of God must wee glory. 1er. 9. 24. Let him that glorieth, glory in this, that hee vnderstandeth and knoweth mee: for I am the Lord which sheweth mercy, iudgement, and righteousness in the earth.

II. An vnion with God, whereby man is knit in heart with God. Iosh. 23. 8. Stricke fast vnto the Lord your God, as ye haue done vnto this day. As. 11. 23. Hee exhorteth all, that with purpose of heart, they would cleaue to the Lord. Man cleaue vnto God three manner of waies: in affiance, in loue, and feare of God.

Affiance, is that whereby a man acknowledging the power and mercy of God, doth distrust himselfe in him, against all assaults whatsoever. 2. Chr. 20. 20 Put your trust in the Lord your God, and ye shall be assured, beleeue his Promises, and ye shall prosper. Psal. 27. 1. God is my light, and my saluation, whom shall I feare? God is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? v. 3. Though mine enemies be pitched against me, mine heart shall not be afraid: though war be raised against me, I will be secure.

Hence ariseth patience, and slauery in present perils. Psal. 39. 9. I should haue bin dumbe, and not opened my mouth, because thou didst it. 2. Sam. 16. 10. The king said, What haue I to doe with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? if hee cursed, because the Lord said, Curse David, what is he that dare say, why dost thou? Gen. 45. 5. Be not sad, neither grieved with your sinnes, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you for your preservation. v. 8. Now then, ye see me not, but God himselfe. 2. King. 6. 16. Feare not, for they that be with vs, are more, then they that be with them.

This affiance engendeth hope, which is a patient expectation of Gods preference & assistance in all things that are to come. Pet. 37. 5. Commit thy way vnto the Lord, & trust in him, & hee shall bring it to passe. v. 7. Wait patiently vnto the Lord, & hope in him. Pro. 16. 3. Commit thy work vnto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be directed.

The loue of God, is that, whereby man acknowledging Gods goodness and fauour towards him, doth agree to be him as hee all things. Deut. 6. 5. I thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy strength.

The markes of the true loue of God are these: I. To heare willingly his word. II. To speake often of him. III. To thinke often of him. IV. To doe his will without irkennes. V. To giue body, and all for his cause. VI. To desire his presence aboute all, and to beuaile his absence. VII. To embrace all such things as appertaine to him. VIII. To loue and hate that which hee loueth and hateeth. IX. In all things to seeke to please him. X. To draw others vnto the loue of him. X I. To esteeme highly of such gifts and graces, as he bestoweth. X I I. To stay our felues vpon his counsels reuealed in his word. Lastly, to call vpon his name with affiance.

The feare of God, is that whereby man acknowledging both Gods mercy and iustice, doth, as the greatest euill, feare to displeace God. Plal. 130.4. With thee is mercy, that thou maist be feared. Habak. 3.16. When I heard it, my belly trembled, my lips shooke at the voice: rattles creaked into my bones, and I trembled in my selfe, that I might rest in the day of trouble, when he commeth vp against the people to destroy them. Plal. 4.4. Tremble, and sinne not.

Hence ariseth the godly mans desire, to approue himselfe in all things to his God. Gen. 5.22. And Henoch walked with God, after that, &c. Gen. 17.1. God said to him, I am al-fuffici-ent, walk before me, and be thou perfect.

Out of these three former vertues proceedeth humility, whereby a man acknowledging Gods free bounty, and prostrating himselfe before hi n, doth ascribe vnto him all prayse & glory. 1. Cor. 1.31. Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord. 1. Pet. 5.5. Dicke you felus in-wardly with lowliness of mind for God resisteth the proud, and giueth grace to the humble. ver. 6. Humble you felus therefore vnder the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. 1. Chr. 29.10.11. And David said, Blessed be thou O Lord God of Israel our father for ever, and shine, O Lord, in greatness and power, and glory, and victory, and praise: for all that is in heaven, and in earth is thine, &c. &c. v. 14. But who am I, and what is my people, that wee should be able to offer willingly on this sort: for all things come of thee, & of thine own hand we haue giue thee, &c.

The negative part.

Account not that as God, which is by nature no God.

In this place are these sinnes forbidden: I. Ignorance of the true God and his will, which is not only not to know, but also to doubt of such things, as God hath reuealed in his word. 1. Jer. 4.22. My people is foolish, they haue not know me: they are foolish children, and haue not vnderstanding: they are wise to do euill, but to doe well they haue no knowledge. 1. Jer. 9.3. They proceeded from euill to worse, and haue not know me, saith the Lord.

II. Atheisme, when the heart denieth eyther God, or his attributes: as, his Iustice, Wisdome, Providence, Prefence, Plal. 14.1. The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God. Ephel. 2.12. There had no hope, and were without God in the world. Mal. 1.2. *I haue you, saith the Lord, yet ye say, wherein haue we spoken against thee? and cha. 3.14. *Ye haue said, it is in vaine to serue God: and what profit is it that we haue kept his commandments, and that we walked humbly before the Lord of hosts?

III. Errors concerning God, the persons of the Deity, or the attributes. Here is to be reprooued Hellenisme, which is the acknowledge and adoring of a multiplicitie of Gods. August. in his 6. booke of the City of God. chap. 7.

Againe, Iudaisme is here condemned, which worshippeth one GOD without Christ.

The like may be said of the heresies of the Manichees, and Marcian, who denied God to be the creatour of the world: of Sabellius denying the distinction of three persons: and Arrius, who saith, that Christ the Sonne of God, is not very God.

IV. To withdraw, and remooue the affections of the heart from the Lord, & fer them vpon other things. Eia. 29.13. The Lord said, this people draweth nere me with their mouth, & honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is farre from me. 1. Jer. 12.2. Thou art nere in their mouth, and farre from their reines. The heart is many waies withdrawne from God.

I. By distrust in God. Heb. 10.38. The iust shall liue by faith, but if any withdraw himselfe, my soule shall haue no pleasure in him. From this diffidence arise I. Impatience in suffering afflictions. 1. Jer. 20.14. Cursed be the day wherein I was borne, and let not the day wherein my mother bare me, be blessed. v. 13. Cursed be the man that shewed my father saying, a man-child is borne vnto thee and comforted him. v. 18. How is it that I came forth of the wombe to see labour and sorrow, that my dayes should bee consumed with shame? II. Tempting of God, when such as distrust, or rather contemne him, seeke experiment of Gods truth and power. Math. 4.7. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. 1. Cor. 10.9. Neither let vs tempt God, as they tempted him, and were destroyed by serpents. v. 10. Neither murmur ye, as some of them murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. I I I. Desperation. Gen. 4.13. Adine iniquity is greater then can be pardoned. 1. Theff. 4.13. Sorrow ye not, as they which haue no hope. I V. Doubtfulness, concerning the truth of God, or of his benefits present, or to come. Plalme 116.21. I said in my haste, all men are liars.

II. Confidence in creatures, whether it be in their strength, as 1. Jer. 17.5. Cursed is the man that hath his confidence in man, and maketh flesh his arme, but his heart shalldist from the Lord. Or riches. Math. 6.24. Ye cannot serue God and riches. Eph. 5.5. No creature is perfect, which is an idolater, hath inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Or defended places. 1. Jer. 49.16. Trey feare, & the pride of thine heart hath deceiued thee, that thou dwellest in the clefts of the Rocks, and keepest the height of the hill: though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee downe from thence, saith the Lord. Or pleasure and dainties: so such their belly is their God. Phil. 3.19. Or in Physitions. 2. Chr. 16.12. And Asa in the nine & thirtieth yeare of his reigne, was diseased in his feet, and his disease was extreme, yet he sought not the Lord in his disease, but to Physicians. Eufelyo this place, principally may be adioyned that diuine confidence which Magicians and all such as take aduise at them, doe put in the diuelli and his workes. Leuit. 20.6. If any turne after such as worke with spirits, and after sooth-sayers, to goe a whoring after them, then will I set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people.

III. The loue of the creature, about the loue of God. Math. 10.37. He that loueth father or mother more then me, is not worthy of me, and he that loueth some or daughter more then me, is not worthy of me. 1. Ioh. 12.43. They loued the praise of man, more then the praise of God. To this belongeth self-loue, 2. Tim. 3.2.

IV. Hatred and contempt of God, when man, by reason of his declining nature from God, doth flye from him, and is angry towards God when he punisheth sinne. Rom. 8.7. The wisdom of the flesh is enmity with God, Rom. 1.30. Haters of GOD, doers of wrong.

V. Want of the feare of God. Plalm. 36.1. Wickedness saith to the wicked man, euen in mine eyes, that there is no feare of God before their eyes.

VI. Feare of the creature, more then the Creator. Reu. 21.8. The fearefull and vnbelieuing shall haue their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone. Mat. 10.28. Feare not them which kill the body, but feare him that can cast both body and soule into hell fire. 1. Ierem. 10.2. Be not afraid of the signes of heauen, though the heauen be afraid of such.

VII. Hardnes of heart, or carnall security, when a man, neither acknowledging Gods iudgements, nor his owne finnes, dreameth he is safe from Gods vengeance, and such perils, as arise from sinne. Rom. 2.5. Thou after thine hardness, and heart that can not repent, beapest to thy selfe wrath against the day of wrath. Luk. 21.34. Take heed to your felus, lest at any time your hearts be oppressed with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and lest that they come on you as vnawares.

VIII. These all doe ioyntly ingender pride, whereby man ascribeth all he hath that is good, not to God, but to his own merit, and industry, referring and disposing them wholly vnto his owne proper credit. 1. Corin. 4.6. That ye might learne by vs, that no man presume about that which is written, that one swell not against another, for any mans cause. v. 7. For who separateth thee? or what hast thou, that thou hast not receiued? if thou hast receiued it, why reioycest thou, as though thou hadst not receiued it? Gen. 3.5. God doth know, that when ye shall eate thereof, your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as Gods, knowing good and euill. The highest staye of prides ladder, is that fearful presumption, by which many cline rashly into Gods feate of maiesty, as if they were gods. Acl. 12.22. 23. The people gaue a shout, saying, The voice of God, and not of man: but immediately the Angell of the Lord smote him, because he gaue not glory vnto God, so that he was eaten vp of worms, and gaue up the ghost. 2. Theff. 2.4. Which is an aduersary, and exalteth himselfe against all that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he darth sit as God in the temple of God, shewing himselfe that he is God.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the second Commandement.

Hertho haue we entreated of the first commandement, teaching vs to entertaine in our hearts, and to make choice of one onely God. The other three of the first table, concerne that holy profession, which we must make towards the same God. For first, it is necessary to make choice of the true God. Secondly, to make profession of the same God.

In the profession of God, we are to consider the parts thereof, and the time appointed for this profession.

The parts are two: The soleinne worship of God, and the glorifying of him.

The second commandement then concerneth the manner of performing holy and soleinne worship vnto God. The words of the commandement are these:

Thou shalt make thee no graven image, neither any similitude of things which are in heauen above, neither that are in the earth beneath, nor that are in the waters vnder the earth: thou shalt not bowe downe to them, neither serue them, for I am the Lord thy God, a zealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers, vpon the children, vpon the third generation, and vpon the fourth of them that hate me, & shew mercy vnto thousands vpon them that loue me, and keep my commandments.

The Reclusion.

Thou shalt not make.] This is the first part of the commandement, forbidding to make an idol: Now an idol is not onely a certaine representation, and image of some fained god, but also of the true Iehouah. The which may be proued against the Papists by these arguments. The first is, Deuteronom. 4.15. 16. Take therefore good heed vnto your felus: for ye saw no image in the day that the Lord shoke vnto you in Horeb, out of the midst of the fire, that ye corrupt not your felus, and make you a graven image, or representation of any figure: whether it be the likeness of male or female. Out of the words vttered by Moses, as reason may be framed thus:

If ye saw no image (namely of God,) ye shall make none.

But ye saw no image, onely heard a voice.

Therefore ye shall make no image of God.

The second reason: That idolatry which the Israelites committed, the very same is prohibited in this commandement.

But the Israelites idolatry, was the worship of God in an image. Hof. 2.16. At that day, saith the Lord, thou shalt call me no more Baalim, but shalt call me Ephraim.

The golden calfe was an image of God: for when it was finished, Aaron proclaimed that so morrow should be a feast to Iehouah. Exodus, 32.5. And the same calf is reamed an idol,

A 1. 7. 41.
Therefore the worshipping of God in an image is here prohibited.

Any graven image] Here the more speciall is put for the more generall, namely, a graven image, for all counterfeite meane of Gods worship.

The first part of the commandement is here illustrated by a double distribution. The first is drawne from the causes. Thou shalt not make thee an idol, whether it be engraven in wood or stone: or whether it be painted in a table. The second is taken from the place. Thou shalt not make thee an idol of things in heaven, as starres, and birds: or in the earth, as of man, woman, beast: or under the earth, as fishes.

This place is to expounded by Moses, Deut.
4. 14. to the 20. verse.

Thou shalt not bow downe to them] This is the second part of the commandement, forbidding all men to fall downe before an idol. I
This word bow downe, is againe the speciall put for the generall: for in it is inhibited all fained worship of God.

For [] These words are a confirmation of this commandement, perswading to obedience by foure reasons.

The Lord [] (which is strong) The first reason, God is strong, and so able to reuenge idolatry, Heb. 10. 31.

A iudais Idol] This speech is taken from the estate of wedlocke: for God is called the husband of his Church. Esa. 5. 4. 5. Ephes.
5. 26. 27. And our spirituall worship, is as it were, a certaine marriage of our soules, consecrated unto the Lord. Ierem. 2. 2. I remember thee with the kindness of thy youth, and the love of the marriage, when thou wentest after me in the wildernes, in a land that was not sowne. Whence also Idols are rightly called Gods cortivals.
Here is another argument drawne from a comparison of things that be like. Gods people must alone worship him, because they are linked to him, as a wife to her husband, vnto whom alone she is bound: Therefore if his people forsake him, and betroth themselves vnto idols, hee will undoubtedly giue them a bill of divorcement, and they shall be no more espoused vnto him.

Visiting] To visit, is not onely to punish the children for the fathers offences, but to take notice, and apprehend him in the same faults, by reason they are giuen over to commit their fathers transgressions, that for them they may be punished. And this is the third reason drawne from the effects of Gods anger.

Hate me] It may be, this is a secret answer, the objection whereof is not here in expresse words set downe, but may bee thus framed:
What if we use idols to inflame and excite vs to a love and remembrance of thee? The answer is thus by the contrary: Thou mayst thinke that your use of idols kindleth in you a love of me, but it is farre from that, that all such vs use them cannot choose but hate me.

A Shew mercy] The fourth reason deriued from the effects of Gods mercy to such as obserue this commandement. Here may wee first obserue, that God is more ready to shew mercy then to punish. *Psal. 103. 8. The Lord is full of compassion and mercy: slow to anger, and of great kindness, ver. 17. The Lord is long kindnes, and mercie: ver. 9. He will not always chide, neither keepe his anger for euer. Secondly, wee may not surmise, that this excellent promise is made to euery one particularly, who is borne of faithfull parents. For godly Isaac, had godlike *Esa*u to his Sonne; and godlike Saul, had godly Jonathan.*

The negative part.
B Thou shalt neither worship false gods, nor the true God with false worship.

Many things are here forbidden.

1. The representation of God, by an image.
For it is a lie. *Habak. 2. 18. What profitteth the image? for the maker thereof hath made it an image, and a teacher of lies. Zach. 10. 2. The idols have spoken vanity. Ier. 10. 8. The stocks are a delusion of vanity. The Elib. Council in the 39.
canon hath this edict. We thought it not meete to haue images in Churches, lest that which is worshipped and adored, should be painted upon wall. Clem. booke 5. and Jacob. Dom. That serpents by others is wont to speake these words:
We in honour of the invisible God, are accustomed to adore visible images, the which are of all con-trouersie is very false. Augurine in his treatise vpon the 112. Psalme.*

The images also of the crosse, and of Christ crucified, and of the Saints ought to be abolished out of Churches, as the brazen serpent was. 2. King. 18. 4. Hexekiah is commended for breaking in pieces the brazen serpent to which the children of Israel did then burne incense. This did Hexekiah, albeit at the first this serpent was made by the Lords appointment. Numb. 21. 8. and was a type of Christs passion. Iohn 3. 14. Origen in his 7. booke against Celsus. We permit not any to adore Iesus vpon the altars in images, or vpon Church-walls:
because it is written, Thou shalt haue none other gods but me.

Epiphanius, in that epistle which hee wrote to Iohn Bishop of Ierusalem, saith, It is against the custome of the Church, to see any image hanging in the Church, whether it be of Christ, or a my other Saint, and therefore euen with his owne hands rent hee asunder the walls, where in such an image was painted.

Some object the figure or signe, which appeared to Constantine, wherein hee should oucome: but it was not the signe of the crosse (as the Papists doo triflingly imagine) but of Christs name: for the thing was made of these two Greeke letters XP conioyned together. Euseb. in the life of Constant. booke
1. chap. 22. 25.

Neither serue the Cherubims, which Salomon placed in the temple, for the defence of images: for they were onely in the holy of holiest, where the people could not see them.

And they were types of the glory of the Messiah, unto whom the very angels were subiect:
the which we haue now verified in Christ.

If any man reply, that they worship not the image, but God in the image: let him know, that the creature cannot comprehend the Image of the Creator, and if it could, yet God would not be worshipped in it, because it is a dead thing: yea, the worke of mans hands, not of God: and therefore is more base then the smallest liuing creature, of the which we may lawfully say, it is the worke of God. This cun-ceith, that no kinde of diuine worship belongeth to an image, either simply or by relation, whatsoever the sophisticall Schoolemen iangle to the contrary.

If any man be yet desirous of images, hee may haue at hand the preaching of the Gos-pell, a liuely image of Christ crucified. Gal. 3. 1.
O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, to whom Iesus Christ before was described in your sight, and among you crucified? The like may be said of the two Sacraments. And that saying of Clement is true, in his fifth booke of Recognit. If you will truly adore the image of God, doe good vnto man, and yete shall worship his true image: for man is the image of God.

II. The least approbation of idolatry, Hos.
12. 2. They say one to another whilst they sacrific a man, let them kisse the calves. Now a kisse, is an externall signe of some allowance of a thing. Gen. 48. 10.

Therefore it is vnlawfull to be present at Masse, or any idolatrous seruice, though our minde be absent. 1. Cor. 6. 20. We are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your body, and in your spirit, which are Gods. Rom. 11. 4.
What saith the Scripture? I haue refused vnto my selfe seuen thousand men, which haue not bowed their knee to Baal. Euseb. 8. booke c. 3.
The Martyrs, when they were baled vnto the temple of idols, cryed out, and with a loud voice in the midst of their tortures testified, that they were not idolatrous sacrificers, but professed and constant Christians, reioycing greatly that they might make such a confession.

That which may be objected of Naaman
the Syrian, who worshipped in the temple of Rimmon, is thus answered; that he did it not with purpose to commit idolatry, but to per-forme that ciuill obedience which he was wont to exhibit to the Kings Maistie. 2. King. 5.
17. 18.

And for this cause, are vtterly forbidden all such dauncing professions, plays, and such feasts, as are consecrated to the memoriall, and honour of idols. Exod. 32. 6. They rose vp the next day in the morning, and offered burnt offerings, and brought peace offerings: all the people sate them downe to eate and drinke, and rose up to play. 1. Cor. 10. 7. Neither be ye idolaters as some of them were, as it is written, &c. And Paul

(1. Cor. 8. 4. to the end) earnestly dehortheth the Corinthians from sitting at table in the idol temples: albeit they knew that an idol is nothing in the world. Tripartite historie, booke
6. chap. 30. Certaine souldiers of Iulian refused to adore, as the custome was, the Emperours banner, in which were painted the images of Iupiter, Mercury, and Mars: others bring against the rewards, which they, after they had burned incense on an altar in the Emperours presence, had receiued: crying, that they were Christians, and would line and die in that profession: and as for their former fault it was of ignorance: yea, though they had polluted hands with idolatry of the Pagans, yet they yet kept their conscience cleane.

III. All reliques and monuments of idolatry: for these, after the idols themselves are once abolished, must be rased out of all memory.
Exod. 23. 13. The Lord shall make no mention of the name of other Gods, neither shall it be heard out of thy mouth. Elay 30. 12. And ye shall pollute the covering of the image of silver, and the rich ornament of the images of gold, and cast them away as a menstruous cloth, and thou shalt say vnto it, Get thee hence.

IV. Society with infidels, is here vnlawfull which serueth not onely to maintain concord, but also to ioyne men in brotherly loue. Of this society there are many branches.

The first, is marriage with infidels. Gen. 6. 2.
The former of God saw the daughters of men that they were faire, and they took them wives of all that they liked. Mal. 2. 11. Iudab hath transgressed, and an abomination is committed to Israel, and in Ierusalem: for Iudab hath defiled the holiness of the Lord, which hee loved, & hath married the daughters of a strange God. Ezra 9. 14. Should we returne to breake thy commandments, and ioyne in affinity with the people of which abomination? 2. King. 8. 18. He walked in the waies of the Kings of Israel, as did the house of Ahab: for the daughter of Ahab was his wife: and hee did euill in the sight of the Lord.

The second, is the league in war: namely, a mutual confederacie to assist one another in the same warre, and to haue one and the same enemies. This isundry waies impious: 1. If it be vnlawfull to craue assistance of Gods enemies, it is likewise vnlawfull to indent with them, that we will assist them. II. It offendeth Gods glory, as though he himselfe, either would not, or could not aide his Church. III.
It is a thousand to one least we be infected with their idolatry, and other impieties. IV.
It endangereth vs to be made partakers of their punishments. 2. Chron. 19. 2. *And Iehu the sonne of Hanani the Ser, went out to meete him, and said to king Iehosaphat, wouldst thou helpe the wicked, and loue them that hate thee the Lord? therefore for this thing is the wrath of the

The third, is traffique: as when a man wittingly and willingly, doth, in hope to enrich himselfe, make sale of such things as he knoweth must serue to an idolatrous vse. This knowdemneth all those marchants, which transport wares to idolaters, and sell them frankincense, waxe cloath, or other such things as helpe them in the service of their idols.

The fourth, is triall or suits in law before Judges which are infidels, when Christian courts may be frequented; but if they cannot, and we haue to deale with infidels, we may appeale to infidels. 1. Cor. 6.6. Brother goeth to law with brother, and that vnder infidels. A.C. 25.11. Paul appealeth to Cesar.

The fifth, is the worshipping of the beaſt, and receiuing his marke. Reu. 14. 9. If any man worship the beaſt, and his image, and receiue the marke on his forehead or in his hand, verſ. 10. The ſame ſhall drinke of the wine of the wrath of God. This beaſt is the Church of Rome, I meane not that old, but this new Rome, now no better then an hereticall and apoſtaticall Synagogue.

V I. Will-worship, when God is worshipped with a naked and bare good intention, not warranted by the word of God. Coloff. 2.23. Which things indeede haue a ſhew of wiſdom in voluntarie religion, and humbleneſſe of minde, and in not ſparing the bodie: neither haue they it in eſtimation to ſatisfie the fleſh. 1. Sam. 13. 9, 10. And Saul ſaid, Bring a burnt offering to me, and peace offerings: and he offered a burnt offering. And as ſoone as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, behold, Samuel came, and verſ. 13. ſaid to Saul, Thou haſt done fooliſhly, thou haſt not kept the commandement of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee. Hitherto may we adde Popiſh ſuperſtitious in facrifices, meates, holidays, apparell, temporarie and bead-ridden prayers, indulgences, auſteritie, whipping, ceremonies, geſtures, gate, conuerſation, pilgrimage, building of altars, pictures, Churches, and all other of that rabble.

To theſe may be added comfort in muſicke in diuine ſervice, feeding the eares, not edifying the minde. 1. Cor. 14. 15. What is it then? I will pray with the ſpirit, but I will pray with the vnderſtanding alſo, I will ſing with the ſpirit, but I will ſing with the vnderſtanding alſo. Iuſtinius Martyr in his booke of Chriſtian queſtions and Anſ. 107. It is not the cuſtome of the Churches, to ſing their meeters with any ſuch kinde of inſtruments, &c. but their manner is only to ſing plain ſong.

Laſtly, monaſticall vowes, which I repute the law of God: as that vnchaſt vow of ſingle life, and proud promiſe of pouertie doe plainly euince: for be that laboureth not, muſt not eate. 2. Theſſ. 3. 10. And it is better to marry, than to burne in luſt. 1. Cor. 7.9. II. They are greater mens nature can performe as in a ſingle life to liue perpetually chaſt. III. They diſanull Chriſtia liberty, & make ſuch things neceſſary, as are indifferent. IV. They reneue Iudaisme. V. They are Idolatrous, becauſe they make them parts of Gods worſhip, & eſteeme them as meritorious. VI. Hypocriſie, which giueth to God painted worſhip, that is, if you regard outward behauiour, great ſincerity: at the inward and hearty affections, none at all. Mat. 15. 7. Hypocrites, well haſt Eſaias prophesied of you, ſaying, This people cometh nether me with their mouth, & honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is farre from me. Plal. 10. 4. The wicked man is ſo proud, that he ſeeketh not for God.

The effects of hypocriſie are theſe: 1. To ſeek the pompe and glory of the world, and by all meanes to enrich it ſelfe, notwithstanding it make a glorious ſhew of the ſervice of God. 2. It is ſharpe ſighted, and hath Eagles eyes to obſcure other mens behauiour, when in the regarding its owne, it is as blind as a beetle. 3. To be more curious in the obſeruation of ancient traditions, then the ſtatutes and commandments of almighty God. 4. To ſtumble at a ſtraw, and skip ouer a block, that is, to omit ſerious affaires, and hunt after trifles. Math. 23. 4, 5. To doe all things that they may be ſeene of men, Math. 6. 5.

Popiſh faſting, is meer hypocriſie: becauſe it ſtandeth in the diſtinction of meates, and it is vſed with an opinion of merit.

Externall abſtinenſe from meates, without internall and ſpiritual faſting from ſinne, and vnlawfull deſires. Eſa. 58. 5, 6. Is this ſuch a faſt as I haue choſen, that a man ſhould afflicke his ſoule for a day, and bow downe his head as a bul ruſh, and lie downe in ſackcloth and aſhes? will thou call this a faſting, or an acceptable day vnto the Lord? It is not thus that ſaying that I haue choſen, to loſe the bands of wickedneſſe, to take off the heavy burdenes, and to let the oppreſſed goe free, and that ye breake every yoke?

V II. Contempt, neglect, and intermiſſion of Gods ſervice. Reu. 3. 15, 16. I know thy workes, that thou art neither cold, nor hot, I would thou wereſt cold or hot. Therefore becauſe thou art like warme, and neither cold nor hot, it will come to paſſe, that I ſhal ſpew thee out of my mouth.

V III. Corrupting of Gods worſhip, and that order of gouernment, which he hath ordained for his Church: the which is done where any thing is added, detracted, or any way, againſt his preſcript, mangled. Deut. 12. 32. Every thing which I command you, ſhat do neither add to it, nor detract from it. This condemneth that Popiſh eleuation of bread in the Lords Supper, and the adminiſtration of it alone to the people without wine, together with that fearful abomination of the Maſſe.

By this we may learne to rectifie all Popiſh traditions. Mat. 15. 9. In vaine doe they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines, mens precepts. Now it is maniſteſt, that all popiſh traditions, they either on their owne nature, or others abuſing of them, ſerue as well to ſuperſtition and falſe worſhip, as to enrich that couetous and proud Hierarchie: whereas the Scriptures contained in the old and New Teſtament, are all ſufficient, not only to confirme doctrines, but ſufficient to reforme manners. 1. Tim. 3. 16. The whole Scripture is giuen by inſpiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to improve, and to correct, and to inſtruit in righteouſneſſe: that the man of God may be abſolute, being made perfect vnto all good workes.

The Romiſh Hierarchie is here alſo condemned, from the paratour to the Pope: the gouernment whereof is an expreſſe image of the old Romane Empire, whether we conſider the regiment it ſelfe, or the place of the Empire, or the large circuit of that gouernment. Reu. 13. 15. And it was permitted to him, to giue a ſpirit to the image of the beaſt, ſo that the image of the beaſt ſhould ſpeake, and ſhould cauſe, that as many as would not worſhip the image of the beaſt, ſhould be killed.

I X. A religious reuerence of the creature, when wee attribute more vnto it then wee ought. Reuel. 22. 8. When I had heard and ſene, I fell downe to worſhip before the feet of the Angell, which ſhewed me theſe things: but hee ſaid vnto me, See thou doe it not, for I am thy fellow ſeruant. A.C. 10. 25. As Peter came in, Cornelius met him, and fell downe at his feet, and worſhipped him: but Peter tooke him vp, ſaying, Stand vp for euery I myſelfe am a man.

If then it bee ſo haſtious a thing to reuerence the creature; much more, to pray vnto it, whether it be Saint or Angell. Rom. 10. 14. How ſhall they call vpon him in whom they haue not beneſited. Math. 4. 10. Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerue.

Neither might we pray vnto Chriſt, vnto as he is man, ſo he were alſo God: for we direct not our worſhip vnto the humanitie conſidered by it ſelfe, but to the Deitie, to which the humanitie is knit by an hypotacti- cal vniion.

This teacheth vs plainly, that inuocation of any creature is vnlawfull: for we muſt pray to them, that are able to know the ſecrets of the heart, and diſcerne the wiſdome of the ſpirit: now none is able to doe that, but ſuch a nature as is omnipotent. Rom. 8. 27. He that ſearcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the meaning of the ſpirit: for he maketh requeſt for the Saints according to the will of God.

Neuertheleſſe, ſuch as are Saints indeede are to be honoured by an approbation of Gods giſts in them, and by an honourable mention of them, and alſo by imitation of their manners and liues, being as patternes for vs to walke after.

X. Worſhip of diuels: I. Magique, which is a miſchieuous Art, Accompliſhing wonders by Satans aſſiſtance. For it is appropriate to God to doe miracles; for he alone, both beyond, and againſt the courſe of nature, doth wonderfull things. Now the inſtruments which God vſeth in producing miracles, are onely they, who doe in the true Church of God, make profeſſion of the faith. Mark. 16. 17. Theſe ſignes ſhall follow them that beleue.

Albeit the diuels cannot worke miracles, yet may they effect naturalls or wonders, & that, not by making a new thing, which before was not at all: but rather by mouing, tranſporting, and applying naturall things diuerſly, by cauſing a thinne body (as the ayre) to be thicke and foggie, and alſo by bewitching the ſences of men.

The foundation of Magique is a couenant with Satan.

A couenant with Satan is ſuch a contract, by which Magicians haue mutually to doe with the diuell. In this obſcure:

The original of this mutuall contract: I. Satan maketh choiſe of ſuch men to be his ſeruants as are by nature either notorious bad perſons or very filly ſoules. II. He offereth vnto them diuers meanes, either by other Magicians, or by ſome bookes written by ſuch: Satanical meanes I call thoſe, which are vſed in the producing of ſuch an effect, to the which they neither by any expreſſe rule out of Gods word, nor of their owne nature, were cuer ordained. Such are obſcure words, words of the Scripture wreſted, & abuſed, to the great contumely and diſgrace of the Lord God; holy, or rather wholly water, ſeines, ſcales, glaſſes, images, bowings of the knee, and ſuch like diuers geſtures. III. When the wicked ſee theſe meanes offered vnto them, they preſently are not a little glad, and aſſuredly beleue, that in thoſe things there is vertue to worke wonders by. IV. They declare this their Satanical confidence, by their earneſt endeavour, praſſing, and abuſing the meanes. Then the diuell is at their elbowes, being thus affected, that he may both aſſiſt them, and thew them diuers trickes of his legerdemaine, becauſe he alone doth by meanes, voide of all ſuch vertue, effect: that which his wicked inſtrument intended.

Againe, obſerue Satans counterfeiting of God. Hee is Gods Ape, and taketh vpon him as though hee were God. I. As God hath his Word, his Sacraments, and Faith due vnto him, ſo the diuell hath certaine words of his owne, and to ſeale them vnto the wicked, he annexeth certaine ſignes, namely, characters, geſtures, ſacrifices, &c. as it were Sacraments, that both he may ſignifie his diuiliſh pleaſure to his Magicians, & they againe teſtifie their Satanical both obedience and confidence to him. II. As God heareth ſuch as call vpon, truſt in, and obey him; ſo the diuell is greatly delighted with magicall ceremonies and inuocations, becauſe by them God is diſhonoured, and he magnified: therefore, if God cut him not ſhort, hee is ready preſt to aſſiſt ſuch, as ſhall vſe ſuch ceremonies or inuocations.

The couenant is either Secret, or Exprefſe. Secret, or implicate, when one doth not expreſſely compact with Satan, yet in his heart alloweth of his meanes; aſſuredly and vpon knowledge beleueing, that if ſuch meanes were vſed, there might indeede that great wonder be wrought which he desired.

Express, when one doth not onely put his confidence in Satan, but couenanted with him vpon this condition, that he giuing himself wholly ouer to the duell, may againe, by obseruing certaine ceremonies, accomplish his desire.

Magique, is either diuining, or working.

Diuining, whereby things to come are foretold by the helpe of the diuell. Now of Predictions, some are done with meanes; others without.

Predictions done with meanes, are these:
I. Soothsaying, which is diuination by the flying of birds. Deut. 8. 10.

II. The kind of diuination, which is, by looking into beastes entrails. Eze. 21. 21. The king of Babel, &c. consulted with idols, and looked into the liuer.

III. Necromancie, or coniuering: by which the diuell, in the forme of some dead man, is sought vnto for counsell. 1 Sam. 28. 11. Then said the woman, Whom wilt thou I call vnto thee? And he said, Call vp Samuel vnto me. ver. 15. Then said he vnto her, Feare not, but what saiest thou? And the woman said vnto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth. ver. 14. Thou said he vnto her, What fashion is he of? and shee answered, An old man cometh vp lapped in a mantle. And Saul knew that it was Samuel, and hee enclined his face to the ground, and bowed himselfe. And Samuel said to Saul, Why hast thou disguised me, to bring me vp? Then Saul answered, I am in great distress: for the Philistines make warre against me, &c. This Samuel, was not that true Prophet of God, who appointed Saul king ouer Israel for 1. the foules of the Saints departed, are far from the diuels claws and dominion. 2. That good Samuel, if it had bin he indeede, would neuer haue permitted Saul to worship him. 3. He saith to wicked Saul, to morrow shalt thou be with me. v. 14. Neither could this be a bare illuso, and as I may say, legerdemaine of the Witch, for he plainly foretold Sauls destructio, which an ignorant woman could not know, much lesse durst these constantly anouch any such matter to the king: it remaineth then, that this Samuel, was a mere illusion of Satan.

Diuining without meanes, is called Pythonisme, when such as are possessed with an vnclane spirit, vnto immediately the helpe of the same spirit, to reueale secrets. Ag. 16. 16. A certaine maid hauing a spirit of diuination, met vs, which gate her much vantage with diuining. Eia. 29. 4. Thy voice shall be out of the ground, like him that hath a spirit of diuination, and thy talking shall whisper out of the dust.

Magique operative or working, hath two parts: Iugling, and Inchantments.
Iugling, whereby, through the diuels conuenance, many great and very hard matters, are in these effected. Exod. 7. 10, 11, 12. Aaron cast forth his rod before Pharaoh, and before his seruants, and it was turned into a serpent: then

Pharaoh called also for the wise men, and Sorcerers, and those charmers also of Egypt did so like manner with their enchantment: for they cast downe every mans rod, and they were turned into serpents: but Aarons rod deuoured their rods.

Enchantment or charming, is that, whereby beastes, but especially young children, and men of riper yeares, are by Gods permission infected, poysoned, hurt, bounden, killed, and otherwise molested; or contrarily, sometimes cured of Satan, by mumbling vp some few words, making certaine characters & figures, framing circles, hanging amulets about the necke, or other parts, by hearbes, medicines, and such like trumperie, that thereby the punishment of the faithlesse may be augmented, in reposing their strength vpon such rotten flauies, and the faithfull may be tried, whether they will commit the like abomination. Psal. 58. 4. Their poison is euen like the poison of a serpent: like the deafe adder that stoppeth his eares, which heareth not the voyce of the preacher, though he be most expert in charming. Eccl. 10. 11. If the serpent bite when he is charmed, &c.

Thus haue we heard Magique described out of Gods word; the which how common it is as yet, in those especially which are without God in the world, and whom Satan by all meanes strongly deludeth, the lamentable experience which many men, and most places haue thereof, can sufficiently proue vnto vs. And surely, if a man will but take a view of all poperie, he shall easily see, that a great part of it is mere Magique.

They which spread abroad by their writing or otherwise, that Witches are nothing else, but melancholicke doting women, who through the diuels delusion, suppose that they themselves doe that, which indeede the diuell doth alone: albeit they endeavour cunningly to cloake this sinne, yet by the same meanes they may defend murder, adultery, and what other sinne soeuer.

II. Those which doe consult with Magicians, doe also worship the diuell: for they reuolt from God to the diuell, howsoeuer they plaister vp their impietie with vntempered mortar, that they seeke Gods helpe, though by the meanes of Magicians. 1 Sam. 28. 13. The woman said to Saul, I saw Gods ascending from the earth. Leuit. 20. 6. If any turns after such as worke with spirits, and after Sooth-sayers, to goe, a whooring after them, then will I set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people. Eia. 8. 19, 20. When they shall say to you, Enquire at them which haue a spirit of diuination, and at the Soothsayers, which whisper and murmure. Should not a people enquire at their God? from the liuing to the dead? to the Law, and to the testimonie?

The affirmative part.

Thou shalt worship God in spirit & truth Ioh. 4. 24. God is a spirit, & they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and truth. For so soone as any man beginneth to worship God after an ouerthwart

ouerthwart and vnlawfull manner, he then adoreth an idoll, howsoeuer hee seemeth to colour his impietie. Paul therefore, Rom. 1. 23. saieth, that such as worshipped the creature, turned the glory of the incorruptible God, to the similitude of a corruptible man, did forsake the Creator. ver. 23. and 1 Cor. 10. 20. These things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to diuels, and not vnto God.

To this part therefore appertaine such things, as respect the holy and solemne seruice of God.

I. The true and ordinary meanes of Gods worship: as calling vpon the name of the Lord by humble supplication, and heartie thankgiuing; and the ministry of the Word and Sacraments. Ag. 2. 41, 42. They that gladly receiued his word, were baptized: and the same day there were added to the Church about three thousand soules. And they continued in the Apostles doctrine, & fellowship, & breaking of bread, and of prayers. 1 Tim. 2. 1. I exhort you especially that prayers and supplications be made for all men for Kings, and all in authority. Ag. 10. 7. The first day of the weeke, the Disciples being come together to breake bread, Paul preached vnto them ready to depart on the morrow, and continued the preaching vnto midnight. Tertul. Apolog. chap. 39. We come into the assembly and congregation, that with our prayers, as with an arme, we might compass God. This kinde of violence offered to God, is acceptable to him. If any man so offend, that he must be supradrawn from the publicke place of prayer, and holy meeting, all approved elders sit in iudgement, being aduanced to this bencher, and not by bribes, but by their good report, &c. read the rest. The like hath Iust. Martyr in his oration to the Emperour Anton. Pius.

II. An holy vse of the meanes. First, in the ministers, who ought to administer all things belonging to Gods worshipp, according to his word. Math. 28. 20. Teaching them to obserue all things, which I haue commanded. 1 Cor. 11. 23. I haue receiued of the Lord that, which also I haue deliuered. Secondly, in the rest of the assembly: whose duty is in praying vnto God, in hearing the word preached and read, and in receiuing the Sacraments, to be haue themselves outwardly; in modestie, and without offence. 1 Cor. 14. 40. Let all things be done honestly, and by order; inwardly; they must take heede, that their hearts be well prepared to sence God. Eccles. 4. 17. Take heede to both thy feet, when thou enrest into the house of God, &c. and chap. 5. 1. Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thine heart be hasty to utter a thing before God. Mauning confidence of his mercy, together with a contrite and repentant heart for all their sinnes. Heb. 4. 2. The word that they heard professed not, because it was not mixed with faith in those that heard it. Psal. 26. 6. I will wash mine hands in innocencie, O Lord, and so compasseth this altar.

III. The helps and furtherances of the true worship, are two; Vowes, and Fasting: and they are not to be taken, as the worship of God it selfe. For we may not obtrude any thing to God, as good seruice, and as though it did bind the conscience, except he haue ordained it for that end and purpose.

A vow in the New Testament, is a promise to God, with a full intent to obserue some corporall and externall duties, which a Christian hath on his owne accord, without iniunction, imposed vpon himselfe, that he may thereby the better be excited vnto repentance, meditation, sobrietic, abstinence, patience, and thankfulness towards God. Gen. 28. 20. Then Iacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keepe me in this journey, which I go, and will giue me bread to eat, and clothes to put on, so that I come againe to my fathers house in safety: then shall the Lord be my God, and this stone which I haue set up as a pillar, shall be Gods house, and of all that thou shalt giue me, I will giue the tenth to thee.

In vowing, we haue these things to obserue: 1. We must not vow that which is vnlawfull. 2. We ought not to vow the performance of that, which is contrary to our vocation. 3. Vowes must be of that which we can doe. 4. They must be farre from so much as a conceit of merit, or worship of God. 5. We must so performe our vowes, as that they encroch not vpon the libertie of conscience which Christ hath giuen vs: and therefore looke how the probable causes thereof doe remaine, or are taken away, so accordingly stands our libertie in keeping a vow. Deut. 23. 18. Thou shalt neither bring the hire of a whoore, nor the price of a dogge, into the house of the Lord thy God, for any vow. ver. 21. When thou shalt vow a vow vnto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not be slacke to pay it: for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee: but when thou shalt abstaine from vowing, it shall be no sinne vnto thee, &c. ver. 23. Psal. 66. 14. I will pay my vowes which my lips haue promised.

Fasting, is when a man perceiving the want of some blessing, or suspecting and feeling some imminent calamity vpon himselfe, or other, abstaineth not onely from flesh for a season, but also from all delights and sustenance, that hee thereby may make a more diligent search in his owne finnes, and offer most humble prayers vnto God, that hee would withhold that, which his anger threatened: or bestow vpon vs some such good thing as we want. Math. 9. 15. Can the children of the marriage chamber moune, so long as the bridegroome is with them? 1 Cor. 7. 5. Defraud not one another, except for a time, that ye may the better fast and pray. Ioh. 1. 12. Wherefore euen now, faith the Lord, be ye turned vnto me, withall your heart, with fasting and prayer. ver. 13. Rent your beards, and not your garments, and tume vnto the Lord your God: for he is gracious & mercifull, long suffering, & of great kindness: that he might repect him of this euil. v. 15.

Blow

Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctifie a fast, call a faste assembly. v. 16. Gather the people, sanctifie the congregation, gather the Elders, asseemble the children, and those that sucke the breasts. Let the bridegrome go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her bride chamber, v. 17. Let the Priests the ministers of the Lord weepe betweene the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people O God, &c.

A fast is sometime priuate, sometimes publique. 2. Chron. 20. 3. Iehosaphat feared, and set himselfe to secke the Lord, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Iudah. Holt. 4. 16. Fast ye for me, and neither eate nor drinke for the space of three daies and nights, I also and my maides will fast.

A fast, is either for one day alone, or for many daies together. Each of them, is as occasion serueth, an abstinence from meat at dinner alone, or supper alone, or both dinner and supper. Iud. 20. 23. The children of Israel had gone up and wept before the Lord onto the evening, &c. Dan. 10. 3. I Daniel was in heauensse for three weekes of daies, I eate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, &c.

IV. Leagues of amity among such as truly feare God according to his word, are lawful: as contracts in matrimony, league in war, especially if the warre be lawful, and without confidence in the power of man. 1. Chr. 19. 21. Mat. 2. 11.

To these may be added, that covenante which the magistrat & people make among themselves, and with God; for the preferuacion of Christian religion. 2. Chr. 15. 12. And they made a covenant to secke the Lord God of their fathers with all their heart, & with all their soule, &c. v. 14. And they sweare onto the Lord with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the third Commandement.

THE third commandement concerneth the glorifying of GOD in the affairs of our life, out of the solemne seruice of God.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine: for the Lord will not hold him guiltlesse that taketh his name in vaine.

The Resolution.

Name [This word properly signifieth Gods title, where figuratiuely it is vsed for any thing, whereby God may be knowne, as men are by their names: so it is vsed for his word, workes, iudgements. Act. 9. 15. He is an elect vessel, to convey my name among the Gentiles. Pal. 8. 1. O Lord our GOD, how great is thy name through all the world! which setteth thy glory above the heauens.

Take [This is, vnrper: this word is translated from precious things, which may not be touched without licencie. And in truth, men, which are no better then wormes creeping on the earth, are vtterly vnworthy to take, or as I may say, touch the sacred name of God with minde, or mouth: neuertheless God of his infinite kindnesse permitteth vs so to doe.

In vaine [Namely, for no cause, no matter, and vpon each light and fond occasion.

For [The reason of this commandement is taken from the penaltie annexed. He that a-buseth Gods name, is guilty of sinne before Gods iudgement seate: and therefore is most miserable. Pal. 32. 1. 2. Blessed is the man whose iniquitie is forgiven, and whose sinne is covered: blessed is the man to whom God imputeth not sinne.

Guiltlesse [That is, he shall not be vnpunished.

The negative part.

Thou shalt not because God of that honour that is due vnto him.

Here is included each seuerall abuse of any thing, that is vsed in the course of our liues, out of the solemne seruice of God.

I. Periury, when a man performeth not that, which as he meant in his heart, he sweare to doe. Math. 5. 33. Thou shalt not say I sweare thy selfe, but performe thine oath to the Lord.

Periury containeth in it foure capitall sins, 1. Lying. 2. False imucation on Gods name, because a falsweareer calleth on God to confirme a lie. 3. Contempt of Gods threatnings, that he will most grievously punish periury. 4. A lie in his covenant with God: for the falsweareer bindeth himselfe to God, and lyeth vnto God.

II. To sweare that which is false. This is to make God like to the diuell. Ioh. 8. 44. Ye are of your fathers the diuell, & when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of himselfe, because he is a liar, & the father of lies. Zach. 5. 4. It shall enter into the house of him, that sweareth falsely by my name.

III. To sweare in common talke. Math. 5. 37. Let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay: for whatsoever is more then these, cometh of euill.

IV. To sweare by that which is no God. Mat. 5. 34. 35. But I say vnto you, sweare not at all, neither by heauen, for it is Gods throne: neither by the earth, for it is his footstool, neither by Hierusalem, for it is the citie of the great king. 1. King. 19. 2. Ishakel sent a messenger to Eliah, saying, Thus doe the Gods, and so let them deale with me, if I by to morrow this time, make not thy life, as is the life of every one of them. Ier. 12. 16. They taught my people to sweare by Baal. Ier. 5. 7. Thy sennes for sake me, and sweare by them which are no Gods.

This place condemneth that vsuall swearing by the masse, faith, and such like. Matb. 23. 22. He that sweareth by heauen, sweareth by Gods throne, and him that sitteth thereon.

But for a man to sweare by Christs death, wounds, blood, and other parts of his, is most horrible: and is as much, as to crucifie Christ againe with the Iewes, or account Christs members, as God himselfe.

V. Blasphemie, which is a reproch against

God;

God; and the least speech that fauoureth of contempt to his maiesty. Leu. 24. 15, 16. Who soeuer curseth his God, shall beare his sinnes. And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death. 2. King. 19. 10. So shall ye say to the king of Iudah: let not thy God deceiue thee, in whom thou trustest, saying, Ierusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assur. Alas in the Tragedy, hath this blasphemous speech, that euery coward may ouercome, if he haue God on his side: as for him, he can get the victory without Gods assistance. That slye taunt of the Pope is likewise blasphemous, wherein he calleth himselfe the seruant of Gods seruants: when as in truth, he maketh himselfe Lord of Lords, and God subiect to his vaine fantasie.

VI. Cursing our enemies: as, goe with a vengeance: or, the diuell goe with thee. Or, our selues; as, I would I might neuer siter: or, as God shall iudge my soule, &c. To this place we may referre the execrations of Iob 3. Ier. 15.

VII. To vse the name of God carelesly in our common talke: as, when wee say, good God how slow art thou! good Lord where hast thou bin! O Iesus! or Iesus God! &c. Phil. 2. 10. At the name of Iesus, shall euery knee bow of things in heauen things in earth, and things vnder the earth. Eccl. 45. 23. Every knee shall bow vnto mee, and euery tongue shall sweare by me.

VIII. Abusing Gods creatures: as, when we either deride the workmanship of God, or the manner of working: againe, when we debate the excellency of the worke, obscure Gods good gifts in our brother, or discommen such meates as God hath sent vs to eate: finally, when as we in the vse and contemplation of any of Gods creatures, giue not him the due praise and glory. 1. Cor. 10. 31. Whether ye eate or drinke, or whatsoever ye doe els, see that ye doe all to the glory of God. Psalm. 119. 1. The heauens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy worke.

IX. Lots, as when we search what must be (as they say) our fortune by dice, bones, books, or such like. For we are not to vse lots, but with great reuerence: in that the disposition of them immediately cometh from the Lord, and their proper vse is to decide great controuersies. Prou. 16. 33. The lot is cast into the lappe, but the whole disposition thereof is in the Lord. Pro. 18. 18. The Lot causeth contentions to cease, and maketh a partition among the mighty. For this cause the land of Canaan was diuided by lots. Iosh. 14. & 15. chapters. By which also both the high Priests, and the Kings were elected: as Saul, 1. Sam. 10. and Matthias into the place of Iudas Iscariot. Act. 1. 26.

X. Superstition, which is an opinion conceived of the works of Gods providence: the reason whereof, can neither be drawne out of the word of God, nor the whole course of nature. As for example: that it is unlucky for one in the morning to put on his shooe awry, or to put the left shooe on the right foote: to sleeze in drawing on his shooes; to haue salt fall toward him; to haue an hate croffe him; to bleede from few drops of blood; to burne on the right eare. Again, that it is contrarily good lucke, to finde olde iron; to haue drinke spilt on him, for the left eare to burne; to dreame of some certaine things. The like superstition, is to furnishe that beafts may be tamed by verses, prayers, or the like; That the repetition of the Creede, or the Lords prayer, can insule into heards a faculty of healing diseases. Dent. 18. 11. Here also is Palmeftry condemned, when by the inspection of the hand, our fortune is fore-told.

These and such like, albeit they haue true euents, yet are we not to giue credence vnto them: for God permitteth them to haue such successe, that they which see and heare such things, may be tried, and it may appeare what confidence they haue in God. Dent. 18. 13.

XI. Astrologie, whether it be in casting of nativities, or making Prognostications. This counterfeit arte is nothing els, but a meere abuse of the heauens, and of the stars. 1. The twelue houses, which are the ground of all figures, are made of the fained signes of a supposed Zodiacke, in the highest sphere commonly called the first Mooneable: and therefore to these houses a man cannot truly ascribe any influence or vertue. 2. This arte ariseth not from experience; because the same position of all starrs neuer happeneth twice: and if it did, yet could there not be any obseruation made from thence, because the efficacy and influences of the starrs is confusely mixed both in the ayre and in the earth, as if all heards were mingled together in one vessel. 3. This arte withdraweth mens mindes from the contemplation of Gods providence, when as they heare, that all things fall out by the motion, and position of the starrs. 4. Starrs were not ordained to fore-tell things to come, but to distinguish dayes, moneths, and yeres. Gen. 1. 14. Let their be lightes in the firmament of the heauen, to separate the day from the night: and let them be for signes, and for seasons, and for daies, and for yeres. 5. Eli. 4. 7. 11. Now are weered in the multitude of thy counsels: let now the Astrologers, see star-gazers, & Prognosticators: stand up, & see these things, that shall come vpon thee. verfe 14. Behold they shall be as stubble: the fire shall burne them. Eccl. Dan. 2. The King commanded to call the Astrologers, Sorcerers, and Chaldeans, to shew the King his dreame. Act. 19. c. Many of them which used curious arts, brought their bookes, and burned them before all men. 6. Astrological predictions are conuenient about such things, which either simply depend on the meere will and dispensation of God, and not on the heauens: or els such, as depending vpon mans free-will, are altogether contingent:

and therefore can neither be fore-seene, nor fore-told. 7. It is impossible by the bare knowledge of such a cause, as is both common to many, and far distant from such things as it worketh in, precisely to set downe particular effects: but the stars are common causes of those which are done vpon earth, and also farre remote: and therefore a man can no more surely foretell what shall ensue by the contemplation of the starres, then hee which seeth an hen sitting, can tell what kinde of chicken shall be in euery egge.

Quest. Hauet then the starres no force in inferior things?

Answer. Yes vndoubtedly, the starres haue a very great force, yet such as manifesteth it selfe only in that operation which it hath in the foure principal qualities of natural things namely, in heate, colde, moysture, and drinnesse; and therefore in altering the state, and disposition of the ayre, and in diuersly affecting compound bodies, the starres haue no small effect. But they are so farre from enforcing the will to doe any thing, that they cannot so much as giue vnto it the least inclination. Now to define how great force the stars haue, it is beyond any mans reach. For albeit, the effects of the Sunne, in the constitution of the foure parts of the yeare, are apparent to all, & the operation of the Moone not very obscure yet the force and nature both of planets and fixed starres, which are to vs innumerable, are not so manifest. Therefore seeing man knoweth onely some starres, and their only operation, and not all with their forces, it cannot be, that he should certainly fore-tell future things, although they did depend on the starres. For what if the position of such and such certaine stars, doe demonstrate such an effect to ensue? may not the aspects of such as thou yet knowest not, hinder that, and produce the contrary?

Question. Is then the vse of Astrologie vnto-terly impious?

Answer. That part of Astrology, which concerneth the alteration of the ayre, is almost all both false and frivolous; and therefore in a manner all predictions grounded vpon that doctrine are mere toys, by which the silly and ignorant people are notably deluded. As for that other part of Astrologie, concerning Natiuities, reuolutions, progressions, and directions of Natiuities, as also that which concerneth election of times, and the finding againe of things lost, it is very wicked; and it is probable, that it is of the same brood with impudic and close Magique. My reasones are these: I. The word of God reckoning Astrologers amongst Magicians, andudgeth them both to one and the same punishment. II. But the Astrologer faith, hee fore-telleth many things, which, as he said, come to passe: be it so, but how? I demand? and by what meanes? He faith by Art: but that I deny. For the precepts of his Art will appeare to such as read

A them not with a preiudicate affection, very ridiculous. Whence then, I pray you, doth this curious diuiner fore-tell the truth, but by an inward and secret instinct from the diuelli? This is Augustin opinion, in his 5. booke, and 7. chap. of the City of God ff we weigh all those things, faith he, we will not without cause beleue, that Astrologers, when they do wonderfully declare many truths, worke by some secret instinct of euill spirits, which desire to fill mens brains with erroneous and dangerous opinions of harrie destinies, and not by any Art, deriued from the inspection and consideration of the Heavens, which indeed is none.

XII. Popish consecration of water and fait, to restore the minde vnto health, and to chafe away diuels. The reformed Misall, pag 96.

XIII. To make iests of the Scripture phrase. Esa. 66.2. I will looke euen to him that is poore, and of a contrite spirit, & which trembleth at my words. We haue an example of such scoffing in the Tripart. hist. chapter 29. booke 6. The heathen did grievously oppresse the Christians: and inflicted sometimes vpon their bodies corporall punishments. The which when the Christians signified vnto the Emperour, hee disdaigned to assist them, and sent them away with this scoffe: You are to suffer iniuries patiently, for so ye are commanded of your God.

XIV. Lightly to passe over Gods iudgements, which are seene in the world. Mat. 26. 34. Verily, verily, I say vnto thee, this night before the cocke crow, thou shalt deny me thrice, v. 35 Peter said vnto him, I though I should dye with thee, I will not deny thee. Luk. 1. 3. 1. 3. There was a certaine man present at the same season, that Iesus answered, and said vnto them: Suppose ye that these Galileans were greater sinners, then all the other Galileans, because they haue suffered such things? I tell you nay: but except ye amend your liues, ye shall likewise perish.

XV. A dissolute conuersation. Mat. 5. 16. Let your light so shine before men, that they seeing your good works, may glorifie your Father which is in heauen. 2. Sam. 12. 14. Because that by this deede, thou hast made the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, the child that is borne vnto thee, shall surely dye.

The affirmative part.

In all things give God his due glory 1. Cor. 10. 31. To this appertaine:

I. Zeale of Gods glory about all things in the world besides. Numb. 25. 8. When Phineas the sonne of Eleazar saw it, he followed the man of Israel into his tent: and thrust them both through the wit, both the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. Plal. 69. 9. The zeale of thine house hath eaten me up, and the reproaches of the corners full haue fallen vpon me.

II. To vse Gods titles only in serious affairs, and that with all reuerence. Deut. 10. 38. If thou wilt not keep and do all the words of this law (that are written in this booke) and fear

this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD. Romanes 9. 5. Of whom are the fathers, and of whom, concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is God over all, blessed for ever, Amen.

III. An holy commemoration of the creature, whereby wee, in the contemplation and admiration of the dignity and excellency thereof, yeeld an approbation when wee name it, & celebrate the praise of God, brightly shining in the same. Plal. 64. 9. 10. And all men shall see it, and declare the works of God, and they shall vnderstand what he hath wrought: but the righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and trust in him: and all that are upright of heart, shall reioyce. Luk. 2. 18. 19. And all they that heard it, wondered at the things that were told them of the shepherds: but Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. Ier. 5. 22. Feare ye not me, faith the Lord? or will ye not be afraid of my presence, which haue placed the seeds for the bounds of the sea, by the perpetual decree, that it cannot passe it? and though the waves thereof rage, yet cannot they not preuaile, though they roare, yet cannot they not passe ouer it.

IV. An oath, in which we must regard: 1. How an oath is to be taken. 2. How it is to be performed. In taking an oath, foure circumstances must be obserued.

I. The matter or parts of an oath: the parts are in number foure. 1. Confirmation of a truth. 2. Inuocation of God alone as a witness of the truth, and a reuenger of a lye. 3. Confession, that God is a reuenger of perjury when he is brought in as a false witness. 4. A binding ouer vnto punishment if wee vse deceit.

II. The forme. We must sweare. 1. truly, lest we forswear. 2. Iustly, lest we sweare to that which is wicked. 3. In iudgement, lest we sweare rashly, or for a trifle. Ier. 4. 2. Thou shalt sweare vnto the Lord truth, in truth, in iudgement, and in righteousness. Eia. 48. 1. Which sweare by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth nor in righteousness, &c. Therefore the oath of drunken, furious, and franticke men, also oaths of children, they doe not impose an obligation of them, but by law are no oaths.

III. The end, namely, to confirme some necessary truth in question. Heb. 6. 16. Men sweare by him that is greater then themselves: & an oath for confirmation, is among them end of all strife. I call that a necessary truth, when some doubt, which must necessarily be decided, can none other way be determind, then by an oath: as when Gods glory, our neighbours faith and credit; a mans own necessity and faithfulness is in question. Rom. 1. 9. God is my witness (whom I serue in my spirit in the Gospel of his Son) that without ceasing I make mention of you. 2. Cor. 2. 23. I call God for a record vnto my soule, that I spare you, I came not as yet vnto Corinth. I V. The diuers kinds or sorts of oaths. An oath is publike or priuate.

A Publike, when the Magistrate, without any perill to him that sweareth, doth vpon iust cause exact a testimony vnder the reuerence of an oath.

A priuate oath is, which two or more take priuately, This, so that it be sparingly and warily vfed, is lawfull. For in serious affairs, and matter of great importance, it is lawfull in priuate to admit God as a Iudge, why should he not as well be called to witnesse? Again, the examples of holy men shew the practise of priuate oaths, as not vnlawfull. Iacob and Laban confirmed their covenant one with another by oath: the like did Boaz in his contract with Ruth.

B To this place may be added an asseueration, the which albeit it be like an oath, yet indeed is none, and it is nothing els but an earnest asseueration of our meaning, the name of a creature being sometime vfed. Such was Christs asseueration, Verily, verily, I say vnto you. And Pauls, I call God to record in my spirit. Where is both an oath and asseueration. 1. Cor. 15. 21. By our reioicing which I haue in Iesu Christ, I die daily. 1. Sam. 20. 3. Indeed, as the Lord liue, & as thy soule liue, there is but a step betweene me and death. And surely, in such a kinde of asseueration there is great equity: for albeit it be vnlawfull to sweare by creatures, lest Gods honour and power should be attributed vnto them: yet thus farre may we vse them in an oath, as to make them pledges, and as it were cognizances of Gods glory.

C The performance of an oath, is on this manner: 1. If the oath made, be of a lawfull thing, it must be performed, bee it of much difficultie, great damage, or extorted by force of him that made it. Plal. 15. 4. He that sweareth to his hinderance, and changeth not, he shall dwell in Gods tabernacle. Yet may the Magistrate, as it shall seeme right and convenient, either annihilate or moderate such oaths.

Contrarily, if a man sweare to performe things vnlawfull, & that by ignorance, error, or infirmity, or any other way, his oath is to be recalled. For we may not adde sinne vnto sinne. 1. Sam. 25. 21. *And David said, Indeed I haue kept al in vaine, that this fellow had in the wilderness, &c. verie 22. So and more also doe God vnto the enemies of David: for surely I will not leave off all that he hath, by the dawning of the day, any that pisseth against the wall. v. 23. David said, Blessed be thy owne I, & blessed be thou, which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and that mine hand hath not sinned me. 2. Sam. 19. 23. David promisseth that Shimei should not die: but 1. Kin. 28. 9. *David faith to Salomon, Though I sweare so, yet thou shalt not come him innocent, but cause his head to be cut downe to the grave with blood.

V. Sanctification of Gods creatures and ordinances, the which is a separation of them to an holy vse. Thus ought we to sanctifie our meates and drinks, the works of our calling, and marriage bed.

The means of this sanctification are two: Gods word and prayer. 1. Tim. 4. 4. All which God hath created is good, and nothing must be rejected, if it be received with thanksgiving for it is sanctified by the word and prayer.

By the word we are instructed; first, whether God alloweth the vfe of such things, or not: secondly, we learne after what holy manner, in what place, at what time, with what affection, and to what end we must vfe them, Heb. 11. 6. Without faith it is impossible to please God. Psalme 116. 24. Thy testimonies are my delight, they are my counsellors. Ioh. 22. 19, 20. 1. Sam. 15. 23.

Prayer, which sanctifieth, is petition and thanksgiving.

By petition, we obtaine of Gods maiesty, assistance by his grace, to make an holy vfe of his creatures, and ordinances. Coloss. 3. 17. Whatsoever ye shall doe in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Iesus, giving thanks to God even the Father by him. 1. Samuel 17. 45. Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of the Hosts of Israel, whom thou hast vailed upon. Mich. 4. 5. We must walk in the name of the Lord our God, for ever and ever. Here may we observe prayer made vpon particular occasion. 1. For a prosperous journey. Act. 21. 5. When the dayes were ended, we departed, and went our way, and they all accompanied vs with their wives and children, even out of the city: and we kneeling downe on the shore, prayed. 2. For a blessing vpon meats at the table. Ioh. 6. 11. Then Iesus took the bread, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to his Disciples, & his Disciples to them that were set downe: and likewise of the fishes as much as they would. Act. 27. 35. He took bread and gave thanks to God in presence of them all, and brake it, and began to eat. 3. For issue in childre birth. This said Anna. 1. Sam. 1. 12. And Zachary, Luk. 1. 13. 4. For good successe in busines, Gen. 24. 12. Abrahams servant prayed.

Thanksgiving is the magnifying of Gods name, even the Father through Christ, for his grace, aide, and blessing in the lawfull vfe of the creatures. Phil. 4. 6. In all things let your requests be shewed vnto God in prayer and supplication, and giving of thanks. 1. Thess. 5. 18. In all things give thanks for this is the will of God, in Christ toward you. This we may receive viced. 1. after meate, Deut. 8. 10. When thou hast eaten and filled thy selfe, then shalt blesse the Lord thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee. 2. After the losse of outward wealth. Job 1. 21. And Iob said, Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I returne againe: the Lord hath given, & the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord for evermore. 3. For deliverance out of servitude. Exod. 18. 10. Ietro said, Blessed be the Lord, who hath delivered you out of the hands of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh, who also hath delivered the

A people from under the hand of the Egyptians. 4. For children. Gen. 29. 35. She conceived again, and bare a son, saying, now I will praise the Lord, therefore she called his name Judah. 5. For victory. 2. Sam. 22. 1. And David spake the words of this song vnto the Lord, What time the Lord had delivered him out of the hands of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul, and said, T he Lord is my rock, and my fortress, &c. 6. For good successe in domesticall affaires, Abrahams servant. Gen. 24. 48. blessed the Lord of his master Abraham.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of the fourth Commandment.

The fourth Commandment concerneth the Sabbath, namely, that holy time consecrated to the worship and glorifying of God. The words are these: Remember the Sabbath day to keepe it holy: sixe daies shall thou labour, and doe all thy workes: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt doe no manner of worke: thou, nor thy sonne, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid, nor thy beast, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates. For in sixe daies the Lord made the heaven and the earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: therefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it.

The Resolution. Remember] This clause doth insinuate, that in times past there was great neglect in the obseruation of the Sabbath: and would that all degrees and conditions of men should prepare themselves to sanctifie the same: especially those that be gouernours of families, in corporations and cities, to whom this commandment is directed.

To keepe it holy, or, so (sanctifie it) To sanctifie, is to seuer a thing from common vfe, and to consecrate the same to the seruice of God. Here are described the two parts of this commandment: the first whereof, is rest from labour: the second, sanctification of that rest.

Sixe daies.] These words containe a close answer to this objection. It is much to cease from our callings one whole day. The answer (together with a first reason) to enforce the sanctification of the Sabbath] is in these words, which is taken from the greater to the lesse: If I permit thee to follow thy calling, sixe whole daies, thou maiest well, and must leane one onely to serue me. But the first is true. Therefore the second.

The first proposition is wanting: the second, or assumption of these words; Sixe daies, &c. The conclusion is the commandment itselfe.

Here may we see, that God hath giuen vs free liberty to worke all the sixe dayes. The which freedom no man can annihilate. Nevertheless, vpon extraordinary occasions, the Church of God is permitted to separate one day or more of the sixe, as neede is, either to fasting, or for a solemne day of reioicing for some benefit received, Joel 2. 15.

The seventh day.] The second reason of this commandment is taken from the end thereof.

If the Sabbath were consecrated to God and his seruices, we must that day abstaine from our labours.

But it was consecrated to God and his seruices: The assumption is in these words, (the seventh day &c.) where we must note, that God alone hath this priuiledge, to haue a Sabbath consecrated vnto him: and therefore all holy daies dedicated to whatsoever either Angell or Saint, are vnlawfull: howeouer the Church of Rome haue imposed the obseruation of them vpon many people.

In it thou shalt doe.] This is the conclusion of the second reason, illustrated by a distribution from the causes. Thou, thy son, thy daughter, thy servant, thy catt, thy stranger, shall cease that day from thy labour.

Any worke.] That is, any ordinary worke of your callings, and such as may be done the day before, or left well vndone till the day after. Yet for all this, we are not forbidden to performe such works euen on this day, as are both holy, and of present necessity.

Such are those workes, which doe vpon that day preferre and maintaine the seruice and glory of God, as I. A Sabbath dayes journey. Actes 1. 12. Which is nere to Hierusalem, containing a Sabbath dayes journey. II. The killing and dressing of sacrificed beasts in the time of the Law. Math. 12. 5. Haue ye not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath daies the Priests in the Temple breake the Sabbath, and are blameless? I I I. Iourneyes vnto the Prophets, & places appointed vnto the worship of God. 2. Kin. 4. 23. He said, why wilt thou go vnto him this day? it is neither new Moone nor Sabbath day. Psal. 84. 7. They get from strength, to strength, till every one appeare before God in Zion.

Such also are the workes of mercy, whereby the safety of life or goods is procured: as that which Paul did. Act. 20. 9. As Paul was long preaching, Eutychus came one with sleepe fell downe from the third floor, & was taken vnder dead: But Paul went down and laid himselfe vpon him, & embraced him, saying, Trouble not your selves: for his life is in him. v. 12. And they brought the boy aliue, and they were not a little comforted. I I. To help a beaust out of a pit. Luk. 14. 5. Which of you shall haue an oxe, or an asse fallen into a pit, & will not straightway pull him out of the Sabbath day? I I I. Prouision of meate and drinke. Math. 12. 1. Iesus went through the corne on the Sabbath day, and his Disciples were an hungred, and began to plucke the eares of corne, and to eat. In prouision we must take heede that our cookes, and household seruants breake not the Sabbath. The reason of this is framed from the lesse to the greater, out of that place. 2.

A Sam. 23. 15. David longed, and said, Oh that I might giue me to drinke of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate. verfe 16. Then the three mighty men brake into the host of the Philistines, & drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem that was by the gate, and tooke and brought it to David, who would not drinke thereof, but poured it for an offering vnto the Lord. verfe 17. And said, O Lord, be it far from me that I should doe this: is it not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their liues? therefore would I not drinke. The reason standeth thus, If David would nor haue his seruants adventure their corporall liues for his prouision, nor drinke the water when they had provided it, much lesse ought we for our meates to adventure the soules of our seruants. IV. Watering of cattel. Luk. 13. 15. *The Lord answered and said, thou Hypocrite, wilt not any of you on the Sabbath daies loose his oxe or asse out of the stable, and bring him to the water? Vpon the like present and holy necessity, Physicians, vpon the Sabbath day, may take a journey to visit the diseased. Mariners their voyage, Shepherds may tend their flocke, and Midwives may helpe women with child. Mark. 2. 27. *The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

Within thy gate.] This word gate, signifieth by a figure iurisdiction and authority. Math. 16. 18. The gates of hell shall not overcome it. Let this be a looking glasse, wherein all inholders, and entertainers of strangers may looke into themselves, and behold what is their duty.

For in sixe daies.] The third reason of this commandment from the like example.

That which I did, thou also must doe. But I rested the seventh day, and hallowed it. Therefore thou must doe the like.

God sanctified the Sabbath, when hee did consecrate it to his seruice; men sanctifie it, when they do worship God in it. In this place wee are to consider the Sabbath, how farre forth it is ceremoniall, and how farre forth Morall.

The Sabbath is ceremoniall, in respect of the strict obseruation thereof, which was a type of the internal sanctification of the people of God, and that is, as it were, a continuall resting from the worke of sinne. Exod. 31. 13. Speake thou also vnto the children of Israel, and say, Notwithstanding keepe ye my Sabbath: for it is a signe betweene me and you in your generations, that ye may knowe that I the Lord do sanctifie you. The same is recorded. Ezech. 20. 12.

It signified also that blessed rest of the faithfull, in the kingdom of heauen. Elay 66. 23. From month to month, and from Sabbath to Sabbath, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. Heb. 4. 8, 9, 10. If Iesus had giuen them a rest, &c.

The Sabbath is likewise ceremoniall, in that it was obserued the seventh day after the creation of the world, & was then solemnized with such ceremonies. Num. 28. 9. But on the Sabbath day ye shall offer two lambs of a yeare old,

Without spot, and two tenth deales of fine flour for a meate offering, mingled with oyle, and the drink offering thereof, v. 10. This is the burnt offering of every Sabbath, beside the continual burnt offering and drinke offering thereof.

But now in the light of the Gospell, and the Churches professing the same, the ceremony of the Sabbath is ceased. Col. 2. 16. Let no man condemne you in meate and drinke, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new Moon, or of the Sabbath, v. 17. Which are but shadowes of things to come, but the body is Christ. The oblation of the Sabbath was translated by the Apostles from the seventh day, to the day following. Act. 20. 7. The first day of the week, the Disciples being come together to break bread, Paul preached to them, 1. Cor. 16. 1, 2. Concerning the gathering for the Saints, as I have ordained in the Churches of Galatia, so doe ye also; every first day of the week, let every one of you put aside by himselfe, and lay up as God hath prospered him, that when there be gatherings, when I come. This day, by reason that our Sauour did vpon it rise againe, is called the Lords day. Rev. 1. 10. It was raised in the spirit on the Lords day.

The oblation of the Sabbath thus constituted by the Apostles, was neuertheless neglected of those Churches, which succeeded them, but after was reuiued & established by Christian Emperours, as a day most apt to celebrate the memory of the creation, of the world, and to the serious meditation of the redemption of mankind, Leo and Anton, Edict. of Holy daies.

The oblation of the Sabbath, is morall, in as much as it is a certain seventh day, which preferueth and conserueth the ministry of the word, & the solemn worship of God, especially in the assemblies of the Church. And in this respect we are vpon this day, as well enioyned a rest from our vocations, as the Iews were. Esa. 58. 13. If thou turne away thy foot from the Sabbath from doing thy will on mine holy day, and call my Sabbath a delight, to consecrate it, as glorious to the Lord, and shalt honour him, not doing thine owne waies, &c.

Finally, it is morall, in that it freeth seruants and cattell from their labours, which on other daies doe seruice to their owners.

The affirmatiue part.

Keep holy the Sabbath day. This we doe, if we cease from the workes of sinne, and of our ordinary calling; performing those spiritual workes which wee are commanded in the second and third commandements.

I. To arise early in the morning, that so we may prepare our selues to the better sanctifying of the Sabbath ensuing. This preparation consisteth in private prayers, and taking account of our seuerall finnes. Mar. 1. 35. In the morning very early before day, Iesus arose and went into a solitary place, and there prayed. The day following was the Sabbath, when he preached in thy Synagogues. 39. Exod. 32. 5, 6. Aaron proclaimed, saying, To morrow shall be the holy day of the Lord: so they rose up the next day early in the morning. Ecclesiastes 4. ver. last. They heeded to thy feet when thou entrest into the house of God.

II. To be present at publike assemblies, at ordinary houres, there to heare recurrently and attentively the word preached and read, to receive the Sacraments, and publicly with the congregation, call vpon and celebrate the name of the Lord. 1. Tim. 2. 1, 2, 3. Act. 20. 7. 2. King. 4. 22, 23. Act. 13. 14, 15. When they departed from Perga, they came to Antiochia, a city of Pisidia, and went into the Synagogue in the Sabbath day, and sat downe. And after the lecture of the law and Prophets, the Rulers of the Synagogue sent vnto them, saying, Te men and brethren, if ye haue any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

III. When publike meetings are dissolved, to spend the rest of the Sabbath in the meditation of Gods word, and his creatures, Psalm. 94. from the beginning to the ending. Act. 17. 11. These were also more able men then they which were at Thessalonica, which received the word with all readinesse, & searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so. We must also exercise then the workes of charity, as to visite the sick, giue almes to the needy, admonish such as fall, reconcile such as are at iarre & discord among themselves, &c. Nehe. 8. 11. Then all the people went to eat & to drinke, and to send away part, and to make great ioy.

The negatiue part.

Pollute not the Sabbath of the Lord.

This is a grievous sinne. Math. 24. 20. Pray that your flight be not in winter, nor on the Sabbath day. Lam. 1. 7. The aduersaries saw her, and did mocke at her Sabbaths. Leuit. 19. 30. Ye shall keepe my Sabbaths, and reuerence my sanctuary, I am the Lord. In this part are these things forbidden.

I. The workes of our calling, wherein if we doe ought, it must be altogether in regard of charity, and not in regard of our owne private commoditie.

II. Vnnecessary journeyes. Exod. 16. 29. Tarry every man in his place, let no man go out of his place the seventh day. By this reason, the matter of the family must that day remaine at home, to sanctifie the Sabbath with his household.

III. Fautes vpon the Sabbath day. Nehem. 13. 19. When the gates of Ierusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded to shut the gates, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath, and some of my seruants I set at the gates, that there should no burthen be brought in on the Sabbath day: reade ver. 15, 16, 17, 18.

IV. All kinde of husbandry, as plowing, sowing, reaping, mowing, bringing home

haruest, and other the like. Exod. 34. 21. In the seventh day thou shalt rest, both in earing time, and in haruest thou shalt rest.

V. To vice iells, sports, banquetting, or any other thing whatsoever, which is a means to hinder or withdraw the mind from that serious attention, which ought to be in Gods seruice: for if the workes of our calling must not be exercised, much lesse these, whereby the minde is as well distracted from Gods seruice, as by the greatest labour.

VI. An external oblation of the Sabbath, without the inward power of godlinesse. Eia. 1. 14, 15. My soule hateth your new Moones, and your appointed feasts; they are a burthen vnto me, I am weary to beare them: and when you shall stretch forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you, and though you make many prayers, I will not heare: for your hands are full of blood. 2. Tim. 3. 5. Which haue a shew of godlinesse, but deny the force thereof: such therefore avoid.

VII. The manifest prophanation of the Sabbath, in pampering the belly, surfeiting, adultery, and other like prophanities; which is nothing else, but to celebrate a Sabbath to the diuill, and not to God.

CHAP. XXIV.

Of the fifth Commandement.

Hitherto wee haue spoken of the Commandements of the first Table; now followeth the 2. Table, which concerneth the loue of our neighbour. Rom. 13. 9. Thou shalt not commit adulterie, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not beare false witness, thou shalt not coue: and if there be any other Commandement, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe.

Our neighbour is every one, which is of our owne flesh. Esa. 58. 7. When thou seest the naked, couer him, and hide not thy selfe from thine owne flesh.

The manner of louing, is so to loue our neighbour as our selues, to wit, truly and sincerely; when as contrarily, the true manner of louing God, is to loue God without measure.

The second Table containeth fixe commandements: whereof the first, and in the order of the ten Commandements, the fift, concerneth the preferuation of the dignitie and excellencie of our neighbour.

The words are these: Honour thy father and thy mother, that they may prolong thy daies in the Land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

The Resolution.

Honour This Word, by a figure, signifieth all that duty, whereby our neighbours dignitie is preferred, but especially our Superiours. This dignitie proceedeth of this, that every man beareth in him some part of the image of God, if we respect the outward order and decency, which is obserued in the Church and common-wealth. In the Magistrate there is a certain image of the power and glory of God. Dan. 2. 37. O King, thou art a King of kings: for the God of heauen hath giuen thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glorie. Hence it is, that Magistrates are called Gods. Psal. 82. 1. In an old man is the similitude of the eternitie of God: in a father, the likenesse of his fatherhood. Math. 23. 9. And call no man your Father upon the earth: for there is but one, your Father which is in heauen. In the man is the image of Gods providence and authority. 1. Cor. 11. 7. For a man ought not to couer his head, because he is the image of the glory of God: but the woman is the glory of her husband. Finally, in a learned man, is the likenesse of the knowledge and wisdom of God. Now therefore that person, in whom enen the least title of the image of God appeareth, is to be honoured and reuerenced.

Thy father By a figure, we must here vnderstand all those that are our superiours, as Parents, and such like of our kindred or alliance, which are to vs in stead of parents: Magistrates, Ministers, our Elders, and those that doe excell vs in any gifts whatsoever. The kings of Gerar were called Abimelech, his father the king. Gen. 20. 2. Gen. 45. 8. God hath made me a father vnto Pharaoh, and Lord over all his house. 1. Cor. 4. 15. For though ye haue ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet haue ye no many Fathers: for in Christ Iesus I haue begotten you. 2. King. 5. 13. But his seruants came, and shoke vnto him, and said, Father, if the Prophet had commanded thee a greater thing, wouldest thou not haue done it? 2. King. 2. 12. And Elisah saw it, and he cryed, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof.

And thy mother This is added, lest we should despise our mothers, because of their infirmities; Psal. 23. 22. Obey thy father which hath begotten thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old.

Here we are put in minde to performe due honour to our stepmothers, & fathers in law, as if they were our proper and naturall parents, Ruth 3. 1. and 5. Afterward Naomi her mother in law said vnto her, My daughter, shall not I seeke rest for thee, that thou maist prosper? And she answered her, All that thou biddest me, I will doe. Exod. 18. 18. But Moses father in law said vnto him, The thing which thou doest is not well. ver. 17. Heare now my voyce, I will giue thee counsell, and God shall be with thee. ver. 24. So Moses obeyed the voice of his father in law, and did all that he had said. Mich. 7. 6. For the sonne reuileth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter in law, against her mother in law.

That they may prolong Parents are said to prolong the liues of their children, because they are Gods instruments, whereby their childrens liues are prolonged: for oftentimes the name of the action is attributed to the instrument, wherewith the action is wrought, Luk. 16.9. Make you friends with the riches of iniquitie, that when ye shall want, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. 1. Tim. 4. 16. For in doing so, thou shalt both save thyself and them that heare thee.

But parents doe prolong the lives of their children in commanding them to walke in the waies of the Lord, by exercising iustice and iudgement. Gen. 18. 19. For being become godly, they have the promise both of this life, and the life to come. 1. Tim. 4. 8.

Further, they effect the same thing by their prayers made in the behalfe of their children. Hereby it plainly appeareth, that the usuall custome of children saluting their parents, to aske them their blessings, is no light or vaine thing.

Moreover, in these words, the reason to moue vs to the obedience of this commandment, is drawne from the end, which reason is also a promise, yet a special promise, Eph. 6. 2. Honour thy father and thy mother, which is the first commandment with promise. I say, specially because the promise of the second commandment in general, and belongeth to all the rest of the commandments.

And God promitteth long life not absolutely, but so farre as it is a blessing. Eph. 6. 3. That it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on earth. For wee mult thinke that long life is not alway a blessing, but that sometime it is better to die then to liue. Eia. 57. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man considereth it in heart: and mercifull men are taken away, and no man understandeth that the righteous is taken away from the euill to come.

But if at any time the Lord giueth a short life to obedient children, he rewardeth them againe with eternall life in heaven, and so the promise faileth not, but changeth for the better.

The affirmatiue part.

Preserue the dignitie of thy neighbour.

Vnder this part is commanded:

First, reuerence towards all our superiours: the actions wherof are Recerently to rise vp before them when they passe by vs. Leuit. 19. 32. Rise vp before the boarehead, and honour the person of the old man, and dread thy God: I am the Lord. To meete them when they come towards vs. Gen. 18. 2. And he lifted up his eyes, and looked: and loe, three men stood by him, and when he saw them, he ran to meete them from the tent doore. 1. King. 19. 19. When Elisha was come to speake to king Salomon, the king rose to meete him, and bowed himselfe vnto him. To bow the knee. Mark. 10. 17. And when he was gone out of the way, there came one running and kneeled to him. Gen. 18. 2. He came to meete them, and bowed himselfe to the ground. To stand by them when they sit downe. Gen. 18. 18. And he tooke butter and milke, and the calfe that he had prepared, and set before them, and stood himselfe by them vnder the tree, and they did eate. Exod.

18. 13. Now on the morrow, when Moses saie to iudge the people, the people stood about Moses from morning vnto euen. To giue them the chiefe seate. 1. King. 2. 19. And he sat downe on his throne, and he caused a seat to be set for the Kings mother, and shee sat downe at his right hand. Luk. 14. 7. 8. 9. He spake also a parable vnto the guests, when hee marked how they choose vnto the chiefe roomes, & said vnto them, When thou shalt be bidden of any man to a wedding set not thy selfe downe in the chiefe place, lest a more honorable man then thou be bidden of him, and hee bid thee both him and thee, come and say to thee, Give this man room, and thou then beginne with shame to take the lowest room. Gen. 43. 33. So they sat before him, the eldest according to his age, and the youngest according to his youth, and the men remained among themselves. To let our superiours speake before vs, Iob 32. 6. 7. 17. To keepe silence in courts and iudgement places, vntill we be bidden to speake, Act. 24. 10. Then Paul after that the Governour had beckoned vnto him that he should speake, answered. To giue them such their right and iust titles, as declare our reuerence when we speake vnto them, 1. Pet. 3. 6. As Sarah obeyed Abraham, and called him Lord: whose daughter ye are, while ye doe well. Mark. 10. 67. Good master, what shall I doe that I may possesse eternall life? 20. Then he answered, and said vnto him, Master, all these things haue I observed from my youth. 1. Sam. 1. 1. 4. 15. And Elia said vnto her, How long wilt thou be drunke? Put away thy drunkennesse from me: then Hannah answered and said, Nay my Lord, but I am a woman troubled in spirit: I haue drunke neither wine nor strong drinke.

Secondly, towards those that be our superiours in authoritie: and first, obedience to their commandments. Rom. 13. 1. Let every soule be subiect to the higher powers.

We are to be admonished to obedience: because every higher power is the ordinance of God, and the obedience which wee performe thereto, God accepteth it as though it were done to himselfe & to Christ.

Rom. 13. 2. Who soeuer therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist, shall receive to themselves iudgement. Col. 3. 23. And whatsoever ye doe, doe it heartily, as vnto the Lord, and not vnto men. 24. Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serue the Lord Christ. Obedience is to be performed to our superiours with diligence and faithfulness. Gen. 24. 2. Abraham said vnto his eldest seruant of his house, which had the rule ouer all that he had: Put now thy hand vnder my thigh, and I will make thee sweare by the Lord God of heauen, and God of the earth, that thou shalt not take a wife vnto my sonne of the daughters of the Canaanites, amongst whom I dwell. 10. So the seruant tooke tenne Camels of his masters, and departed. 12. And he said, O Lord God of my master Abraham, I beseech thee send mee good speede this day, and show mercy vnto my master Abraham. 33. Afterward the meate was set before him, but hee said, I will not eate, vntill I haue said my message: And Laban said, Speake on, 56. But hee said, I finde me not seeing the Lord hath prospered my journey: send me away that I may go to my master. Gen. 31. 48. This twentieth yeares haue I bene with thee, thine eyes and thy goates haue not cast their young, and the rames of thy flocke haue I not eaten. 39. Whatsoever was torne of beasts, I brought it not vnto thee, but made it good myselfe: of mine hand didst thou require it, were it stolen by day, or stolen by night. 40. Was in the day consumed with beate, and with frost in the night, and my sleepe departed from mine eyes.

Furthermore, we must yeeld obedience to our superiours: yea, although they be cruell and wicked, but not in wickednesse. 1. Pet. 2. 18. Servants be subiect to your masters with all feare, not onely to the good and courteous, but also to the forward. Act. 4. 19. Whether it be right in the sight of God, to obey you rather then God, iudge ye.

Subiection in suffering the punishments inflicted by our Superiours, Gen. 16. 6. Then Abraham said to Sarai, Behold thy maide is in thine hand, doe with her as pleaseth thee: then Sarai dealt roughly with her: wherefore shee fled from her. 9. Then the Angell of the Lord said vnto her, Returne vnto thy dame, and humble thy selfe vnder her hand.

And although the punishment should bee vniust, yet must we suffer it, vntill we can get some lawfull remedy for the same. 1. Pet. 2. 19. For it is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure griefe, suffering wrongfully. 20. For what praise is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye take it patiently? but and if when ye doe well ye suffer wrong, and take it patiently, this is acceptable to God.

III. Thankfulness: I. in our prayers. 1. Timothy 2. 1. 3. I exhort you therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giuing of thanks be made for all men, for Kings, and for all that bee in authoritie, that wee may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlines and honesty. I. In outward maintenance. 1. Tim. 5. 17. Elders that rule well, are worthy of double honour. Gen. 45. 9. Haft thou and goe to my Father, and tell him, Thus saith thy sonne Joseph, God hath made mee Lord ouer all Egypt, come downe to mee, carrie me. 10. And thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen. 11. Also I will nourish thee there, for yet remaine five yeares of famine, lest thou perish through pauerie, then thou shalt bow downe, and all that thou hast.

Thirdly, towards those that excell vs in gifts: our dutie is to acknowledge the same gifts, and speake of them to their praise. 2. Cor. 8. 22. 23.

Fourthly, toward all our equals: to thinke reuerently of them. Phil. 2. 3. Let nothing be done through contention or vaine-glory, but in meeknesse of minde, let every man esteemeth other

A better then himselfe.

In giuing honour, to goe one before another, and not in receiving it. Rom. 12. 10. Submit your selues one to another in the feare of God. To salute one another with holy signes, whereby may appeare the loue which we haue one to another in Christ. 1. Pet. 5. 14. Greete one another with the kisse of loue. Rom. 12. 16. Salute one another with an holy kisse. Exod. 18. 7. And Moses went out to meete his father in law, and did obeysance, and kissed him. Ruth 2. 4. And behold, Boaz, came from Bethlehem, and said vnto the Reapers, the Lord be with you. And they answered, the Lord bless thee.

Fifthly, the duties of all Superiours towards their inferiours: I. Saving their place and dignitie, to carrie themselves as brethren. Deut. 17. 20. Thas his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and he turne not from the commandment, to the right hand or to the left. Iob 31. 13. If I did contemne the iudgement of my seruant, and of my maide. 2. King. 5. 13. And his servants came and spake vnto him, and said, 14. Then he went downe, and washed himselfe seven times in Iordan, &c. II. To shine before their inferiours by an example of a blamelesse life. Titus 2. 2. Thas the elder men be sober, honest, discrete: found in faith, in loue, and in patience. 3. The elder women likewise, that they be in such behaviour as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, but teachers of honest things. 1. Pet. 5. 3. Not as though ye were Lords, ouer Gods heritage, but that ye may be examples to the flocke. Phil. 4. 9. III. To thei forth grauity ioyed with dignitie, by their countenance, gesture, deedes and words for hereby they must grace the image of God which they beare before their inferiours. Tit. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. Iob 29. 8. The young men saw mee, and hidde themselves, the aged arose and stood up.

Sixtly, towards inferiours in obedience, that is, towards their subiects. 1. To rule them in the Lord, that they doe not offend. 1. Pet. 2. 13. Submit your selues vnto all manner ordinance of man for the Lords sake, whether it be vnto Kings, or vnto superiours, 14. or vnto gouernours, as vnto them that are sent of the King, for the punishment of euill doers, and for the praise of them that doe well. Deut. 17. 19. And it shall be with him, namely the booke of the Law, and he shall reade therein all the daies of his life, that he may learne to feare the Lord his God, and to keepe all the words of this law, and those ordinances: to doe them. Col. 4. 1. The masters doe vnto your seruants that which is iust and equall: knowing that ye also haue a master in heauen. 2. To prouide such things as shal be to the good of their subiects, whether they belong to the bodie or to the soule. Rom. 13. 4. For he is the minister of God for thy weale. Eia. 49. 23. And Kings shall be thy nursing Fathers, and Queenes shall be thy nurses. Psal. 123. 1. Lord remember Dauid with all his troubles. 2. Who sweare vnto the Lord, and vowed vnto the mightie God of Iacob, saying, 3. I will not enter into the Tabernacle of mine house, nor come upon my pallet or bedde, 4. nor suffer mine eyes to sleepe, nor mine eye-lids to slumber, 5. untill I finde out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. 3. To punish their faults, the lighter by rebuking, the greater by correction, that is, by inflicting reall or bodily punishment.

There is an holy manner of punishing the guilty, whereunto is required: I. After diligent & wise examination is had, to be assured of the crime committed. II. To shew forth of Gods word, the offence of the sinner: that the confidence of the offender may be touched. III. It is convenient to deferre or omit the punishment, if thereby any hope of amendment may appear. Eccles. 7.23. Give not thy heart aile to all the words that men speak, lest thou dost heare thy servant cursing thee, 24. For oftentimes also thine heart knoweth, that thou likewise hast cursed others. 1. Sam. 10.27. But the wicked men said, How shall he save us? so they despised him, and brought him no presents; but he held his tongue. IV. To inflict deserved punishment, not in his owne name, but in Gods name, adding the same holily and reverently. Iosh. 7.19. Then Ioshua said unto Acham, My sonne, I beseech thee, give glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto him, and shew me now what thou hast done, hide it not from me. And Acham answered unto Ioshua, and said, Indeed I have sinned against the Lord God of Israel, and thus have I done. 25. And Ioshua said, In as much as thou hast troubled us, the Lord shall trouble thee this day: and all Israel threw stones at him, & burned them with fire, and stoned them with stones. V. and lastly, When thou punishest, aime at this one onely thing, that the euill may be purged and amended, & that the offender by sorrowing for his sinne, may vnfeignedly repent for the same. Prou. 20.30. The blowes of the wounder struch to purge euill, and the stripes within the bowels of the belly.

Seauenthly and lastly, there is a certaine duty of a man to be performed toward himself, which is, that a man should preferre & maintaine with modesty, the dignity, and worthinesse, which is inherent in his owne person, Phil. 4.8. Furthermore, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are iust, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things pertaine to loue, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any vertue, or if there be any praise, thinke on these things.

The negative part.

Diminish not the excellency, or dignitie which is in the person of thy neighbour.

Hither are referred these finnes:

First, against our Superiours: I. Vnreuerent behaviour, and contempt of them. The finnes hereof, are; deriding our superiours. Gen. 9.21. And when Ham the father of Canaan saw the nakednesse of his father, he told his two brethren without. Prou. 30.17. The eye that mocketh his father, and despiseth the instruction of his mother, let the ravens of the valley picke it out, & the young Eagles eat it. To speake euill of, or reuile our superiours. Exod. 11.17. And he that curseth his father or his mother, shall die the death.

II. Disobedience, whereby we contemne their iust commandements, Rom. 1.30. Disobedience to Parents. 2. Tim. 3.2. The finnes hereof, are; To make contracts of marriage, without the counsell and content of the parents. Gen. 6.2. Then the sonnes of God, saw the daughters of men that they were faire, and they took them wives of all that they liked. Gen. 28.8.9. And Esau seeing that the daughters of Canaan displeased Isaac his father, then went Esau to Ishmael, and tooke unto the wives which he had, Mahalah the daughter of Ishmael, Abrahams sonne, the sister of Nabaiak, to be his wife. The eye seruice offerants. Col. 3.2. Seruants be obedient to them that are your masters according to the Lord, in all things, not with eye seruice as men please, but in singleness of heart, fearing God. Eph. 6.6. Not with seruice to the eye, as men please. Answering againe, when they are reprehended. Tit. 2.6. Let seruants be subiect to their masters; and please them in all things, not answering againe. Deceitfulness and waiking their Masters goods. Tit. 2.10. Neither pickers, but that they shew all good faithfulness. To be fild the power of their superiours. Gen. 16.6. Then Sarai dealt roughly with her, wherefore she fled from her. To resist the lawful authority of their superiours. 1. Pet. 2.20. To obey them in things vnlawfull. 1. Cor. 7.19. To extoll themselves above their betters: this is the sinne of Antichrist. 2. Thess. 2.3.4. Which (man of sin) exalteth himselfe against all that is called God. Lastly, the freedom of the Papists whereby they free children from the government of their parents: and subiects from the authority of their princes: so as they make it lawfull for them to plotte and procure their death. 1. Sam. 26.8.9. Then said Abisai to David, God hath closed thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore I pray thee, let me smite him once with a spear to the earth, and I will not smite him againe: and David said to Abisai, Destroy him not: for who can lay his hand on the Lordes anointed, and be guiltlesse?

III. Ingratitude, and want of a louing affection towards parents, Math. 15.5.6. But ye say, whoseuer shall say to father or mother, By this gift that is offered by me, thou must haue profit, though he honour not his father or mother, shall be free. 1. Tim. 5.4.

Secondly, we offend against our equals in preferring our selues before them, in talking or in sitting downe, Math. 20.20. Then came vnto him the mother of Zebedeus children, with her sonnes, worshipping him, and desiring a certaine thing of him. 21. And he said, What wouldest thou? And she said to him, Grant that these my two sonnes may sit, the one at the right hand, and the other at the left hand, in thy kingdom. 24. and when the other ten heard this, they disdained at the two brethren.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, toward our inferiours. I. Through negligence in governing them, & providing for their good estate. Hag. 1.4. Is it time for your selues to dwell in your field houses, and this house to lie waste? Dan. 3.28. This condemneth those mothers, which put forth their children to be nurfed, hauing both sufficient strength, and store of milke themselves to nurse them. 1. Tim. 5.10. If she haue nourished her children.

II. By too much gentlenesse and lenitie in correcting them. 1. King. 1.5. Then Adoniah the sonne of Haggith exalted himselfe, saying, I will be King. 6. And his father would not displease him from his childhood, so say, why hast thou done so? 1. Sam. 2.22. So Eli was very old, and heard all that his sonnes did vnto all Israel, and how they lay with the women that assembled at the doore of the tabernacle of the congregation. 25. And he said vnto them, Why doe ye such things? for of all this people I heare euill reports of you. 24. Do no more, my sonnes, for it is no good report that I heare, namely, that ye make the Lords people to trespass. 25. Notwithstanding they obeyed not the voice of their father, because the Lord would slay them. III. By ouermuch crueltie and threatnings. Eph. 6.4. And ye fathers prouoke not your children to wrath. 9. And ye masters doe the same things vnto them, putting away threatnings.

Fourthly and lastly, a man offendeth against himselfe, when through his nauigant behaviour, hee doth obscure and almost extinguish those gifts which God hath giuen him. Math. 25.26. Or contrarily, when he is proud and too wise in his owne conceit, Rom. 12.3. For I say, through the grace that is giuen vnto mee, to euery one that is among you, that no man presume to understand, above that which is meete to understand.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning the sixth Commandement.

THE sixth Commandement concerneth the preseruation of our neighbours life. The words are these:

Thou shalt not kill.

The Resolution.

Kill] The part is here set for the whole, by a Synecdoche: for killing signifieth any kinde of enuicelomage the person of our neighbour.

The equitie of this Commandement appeareth by this, that man is created after the likenesse of God, Gen. 9.6. He that sheddeth mans blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God hath he made man. Again, all men are the same flesh. Eia. 58.7. When thou seest the naked cover him, and hide not thy face from thine owne flesh.

Neither ought we to be ignorant of this also, that it is vnlawfull for any priuate person, not called to that duty, to kill another: in but a publicke Officer may, that is, if he be warranted by a calling; so did Moses. Exod. 2.12. And he looked round about, and when he saw no man, he slue the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand. 1. Cor. 7.25. For he supposed his brethren would haue understood, that God by his hand should giue them deliuerance. And Phinehas, Numb. 25.8. And he followed the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust them both through (so with the man of Israel & the woman) through her belly: so that the plague ceased from the children of Israel. 11. Phinehas at the summe of Eleazar, hath turned mine anger away from the children of Israel, while he was zealous for my sake among them: therefore I haue not consumed the children of Israel in my iudgement. And Elijah. 1. King. 18.40. And Elijah said vnto them, take the Prophets of Baal, let not a man of the escape: and they took them, and Elijah brought them to the brooke Kishon, and slue them there. And soldiers in battels waded vpon iust causes, 2. Chro. 20.15. Feare ye not, neither be afraid of this great multitude: for the battell is not yours, but Gods.

The negative part.

Thou shalt neither hurt, nor hinder, either thine owne, or thy neighbours life.

The finnes then that are referred to this part are such, as are committed against our neighbour, or our selues.

Against our neighbour, are these following: I. In heart, as. 1. Hatred against him, 1. Ioh. 3.15. Who so hateth his brother, is a manslayer. 2. Vnquiet anger. M. 5.22. I say vnto you, whoeuer is angry with his brother vnadvisedly, is in danger of iudgement. 3. Enuie, Rom. 1.29. Full of enuie, murder, contention. 4. Grudges, Iam. 3.14. If ye haue bitter enuie and strife in your hearts, reioyce not. 5. Want of compassion and sorrow at our neighbours calamities. Amos 6.5.6. They sing to the sound of the viol, &c. but no man is sorry for the affliction of Ioseph. 6. Frowardnesse, when we will not be reconciled to our neighbour. Rom. 1.30. Such as can neuer bee appeased, vnmercifully. 7. Desire of reuenge, Psa. 5.6. The Lord will abhorre the bloodie men and deuiscill.

II. In words: 1. Bitternesse in speaking, Prou. 12.18. There is that speaketh words, like the pricking of a sword: but the tongue of wise men is health. 2. Reproche, & rayning, which is a casting of a mans finnes in his teeth which he hath committed, or an obiection vnto him some inherent infirmities. Math. 5.22. Whoeuer faith vnto his brother, Raca shall be worthy to be punished by the Councell. And whoeuer shall say, Euele, shall be worthy to be punished with hell fire. 2. Sam. 6.16. As the Arke of the Lord came into the citie of David, Achis Sauls daughter looked through a window, and saw King David leape and dance before the Lord, and she despised him in her heart. 20. And Michol the daughter of Saul came out to meete David, and said, O how glorious was the king of Israel this day, which was vnconcealed day in the eyes of the maidens of his seruants as a fool: con-

counteth himselfe. 3. Contentions, when two or more strive in speech one with another, for any kinde of Superiority. 4. Brawlings in any conference. 5. Crying, which is any unbecomely elevation of the voice against ones aduersarie. Gal. 5. 19. The worker of the flesh are manifest, which are, 20. emulations, contentions, seditions. Eph. 4. 31. Let all bitterness, and anger, and wrath, crying and euill speaking be put away from you, with all malitiousness. 32. Be courteous one to another. Gen. 16. 12. He (viz. Ismael) shall be a wilde man, his hand shall be against every man, and every mans hand against him. 6. Complaints to every one of such as offer vs injuries. Iam. 5. 9. Grudge not against one another, brethren, lest ye be condemned.

III. In countenance and gesture, all such signes as evidently decipher the malicious affections lurking in the heart. Gen. 4. 5, 6. His countenance fell downe: and the Lord said vnto Cain, why art thou so wreth? Math. 27. 39. They that passed by railed on him, mocking their heads.

Hence is it, that derision is tearmed perfection. Gen. 21. 9. Sarah saw the (one of) Hagar the Egyptian mocking, &c. Gal. 4. 29. Hec that was borne after the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the spirit.

IV. In deedes: 1. To fight with, or to beat our neighbour, and to maim his body. Leuit. 24. 19, 20. If any man cause any himselfe in his neighbour: as he hath done, so shall it be done to him: breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth. 2. To procure any way the death of our neighbor, whether it be by the sword, famine, or poison. Gen. 4. 8. Cain rose up against his brother, and slew him. 3. To exercise tyrannous cruelty in afflicting punishments. Deut. 25. 3. Forty stripes shall be cause him to haue, and not pass, lest if he should exceede, and beate him aboute that with many stripes his brother should appeare despised in thy sight. 2. Cor. 11. 24. Of the Iewes I received fustings fortie stripes (see one). 4. To vse any of Gods creatures hardly. Pro. 12. 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast, but the mercies of the wicked are cruel. Deut. 22. 6. If thou finde a birds nest in the way, in any tree, or on the ground, whether they be yong, or egges, and the damme sitting vpon the yong, or vpon the egges, thou shalt not take the damme with the yong, but shalt in any wise let the damme goe, and take the yong to thee, that thou shalt prosper and prolong thy daies. 5. To take occasion by our neighbours infirmities, to vse him discourteously, and to make him our laughing stocke, or taunting recreation. Leuit. 19. 14. Thou shalt not curse the deafe, nor put a stumbling blocke before the blind. 2. King. 2. 23. Little children came out of the Citie, and mocked him, and said vnto him. Come up thou baldhead, come up thou baldhead. 6. To inuile the impotent, feeble, poore, strangers, fatherlesse, or widowes. Exod. 22. 21, 22. Thou shalt not doe iniurie to a stranger, neither oppresse him: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. Ye shall not trouble any widow, or fatherlesse child. 25. Thou shalt not be an vsurer vnto the poore. Wee then inuile these: 1. If we pay not the labourer his hire. Deut. 24. 14. Thou shalt not oppresse an hired seruant that is needie and poore, neither of thy brethren, nor of the stranger that is with thy gates. 15. Thou shalt giue him his hire for his day: neither shalt the Sunne goe downe vpon it: for he is poore, and there with sustineth his life: lest he cry against thee to the Lord, and it be found vnto thee. 2. If thou restore not the pledge of the poore. Exod. 22. 26, 27. If thou take thy neighbours raiment to pledge, thou shalt restore it vnto him before the Sunne goe downe: for that is his garment only, and his covering for his skin. 3. If we withdraw corne from the poore. Pro. 11. 26. He that withholdeth the corne, the people will curse him: but blessing shall be vpon the head of him that selleth corne.

Again, this law is as well transgressed by not killing, when the law chargeth to kill, and by pardoning the punishment due vnto murder, as by killing when we should not. Numb. 35. 16. If one smite another with an instrument of yron, that he die, he is a murderer, and the murderer shall die the death. 33. The land cannot be cleinsed of the blood that is shedde therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.

By this place also are conbates of two men hand to hand, for deciding of controversies, vtterly vnlawfull. 1. because they are not equall meanes ordained of God to determine controversies. 2. In that it falleth out in such combats that he is conqueror before man, who indeede is guiltie before God.

This also condemneth Popish Sanctuaries, and places of priuiledge: as Churches, and the like, wherein murderers shelter and shroud themselves from the danger of the law. For God expressly commandeth, Exod. 21. 14. That such an one shall be taken from his altar, that he may die. And Ioh. 8. 1. King. 2. 34. touching the hornes of the altar, was slaine in the temple.

Hitherto in like sort belong such things as concerne the foule of our neighbour. 1. To be a scandal or offence to the foule of our neighbour, either in life or doctrine. Mat. 18. 7. We be to the world because of offence: it is necessary that offences should come: but wee be to them by whom they doe come.

2. To minister occasions of strife and discord: The which we then do. 1. When we cannot bee brought to remitte some what of our owne right. 2. When we retume inaspish and crooked answers. 3. When we interpret euery thing amisse, and take them in the worst part. 1. Sam. 25. 25. Nabal is his name, & folliis with him. 2. Sam. 10. 3. And the Princes of the children of Ammon said to Hannan their Lord: Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father that he hath sent comforters to thee? hath not David rather sent his seruants vnto thee, to search the city, to stie it out, and to ouerthrow it? wherefore Hannan tooke Davids seruants and sla-ued of the halfe of their beards, & cut off their garments in the middle, euen to their buttocks, & sent them away.

3. The ministers sin against their neighbors in this, not to preach the word of God to their charge, that they thereby might be instructed in the waies of life. Pro. 29. 18. Where there is no vision the people decay: but he that keeps the law is blessed. Efa. 56. 10. Their watchmen are all blinde, they haue no knowledge, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot barked: they lie & sleep, & delight in sleeping. 11. And these greedy dogs can neuer haue enough, & these slepeheards they cannot understand: for they al looke to their owne way, euerie one for his advantage, & for his owne purpose. Ez. 3. 18. Wilt I say to the wicked, Thou shalt surely die, and thou givest him not warning, the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thy hands.

And not only not to preach at all, but to preach negligently, is vtterly condemned. Ier. 48. 10. Cursed be he that doth the work of the Lord negligently. Reu. 3. 16. Because thou art like warme, and neither hot nor colde, it will come to passe, that I flue thee out of my mouth. This reprooueth non-residence of ministers, which is an ordinare absence of the minister from his charge: namely, from that particular cōgregation committed vnto him. Efa. 62. 6. I haue set watchmen vpon my wal, O Ierusalem, which all the day & all the night continually shall not cease: ye that are minifull of the Lord keep not silence, & giue him no rest, till he repaire, and till he be set up Ierusalem the praise of the world. Act. 20. 28 &c. Take heed therefore vnto your selves, & to all the flock whereof the holy Ghost hath made you ouersheers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. For I know this, that after my departing, shall grievous woundes enter in among you, not sparing the flocke. Moreover, of your selues shall miserie arise, speaking peruerse things: to draw disciples after them. Therefore watch and remember that by the space of 3. yeares, I ceased not to warne euery one night and day with teares. 1. Pet. 5. 2. Feed the flocke of God, which depends vpon you, caring for it, not by constraint, but willingly: not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, not as though ye were Lords ouer Gods heritage, but that ye may be examples to the flock. Ezek. 34. 4. &c. 33. The counsell of Antioch. the 17. Can. If any Bishop by imposition of hands induiteth into a charge, & appointed to gouerne a people, doe negligēt to take vpon him that office, & delateth to go to the congregation, allotted vnto him: such a one shall be prohibited from the Lords table, till he be enforced to attend vpon that charge, or at the least some what be determined by a coplete assembly of the Ministers of that province. The counsellor Sardice, the 14. Can. We remember that our brethren in a former assembly decreed, that if any lay-mā remaining 3. Sabbathes or Lords daies, that is, 3. weekes in a ciue, did not in the same ciue frequent the Church assemblies, he should be excommunicated: If then such things are not allowable in lay-men, much lesse in ministers, for whom it is neither lawfull, nor convenient, without urgent necessity, to be absent from his parish Church longer then thers: about mentioned. To this decree

A there was not one non-placer, but euery one said, It lieth vs well. The 8. Cōcil held at Cōstantin, in the 24. Can. deduced that miniftrough not to haue their substitutes, or vicars, but in their owne persons, with feare & chearefulness performe all such duties, as are required of them in the seruice of God. The Cano law doth conclude the same things, Can. Si quis vult. Distinct. 36. De bent indifferenter, &c. The Bishop (saith the Canon) ought to be continually resident in Gods Tabernacle, that they may learne somewhat of God, and the people of them, whilst they read often, & meditate vpon Gods word. Again, in the Canons intitled, Pontifices, & Si quis in clero. Episcopus, qui dominici gregis supiciunt curam, &c. The Bishops which take vpon them to feede Gods flock, ought not to depaure from their duty, lest they lose that excellent talent which God hath bestowed vpon them, but rather strive with that one talent to get 3. more talents. And in the 80. Can. of those which are termed the Canons of the Apostles, there is expresse mandate, that such, whether Bishop or senior, who attendeth not vpon their office in the Church, shall forthwith be removed from that place. The Chalcedon Councell, Can. 10. Let no man be ordained miniftr of two churches, in two seuerall cities, but let him remaine in that vnto which he was first called. And if for some glory he shall afterward goe to a greater congregation, let him immediately be recalled to his first charge, and in that only exercise his miniftry. But if one bee called to another charge, let him simply giue over the former, and haue no interest in the same. (* &c.)

C There are notwithstanding the former testimonies, some cases, wherein it is permitted to the Minister, that he may be absent: if by his absence the congregation bee not endangered. I. Sicknes: is the Councell of Mentz. 25. Can. If a Bishop be not at home, or be sick, or vpon some exigent cannot be present at his parish, let him procure one who vpon Sabbathes and festiual daies, will preach vnto his charge. And Aug. testifies capit. 138. that he was absent on the like occasion. 11. Allowance of the Church, to be absent for a time vpon some necessary and publike commodity for the fame. Col. 1. 9. Epaphras is their miniftr, but cap. 4. 12. he being absent faulteth them. And Ambrose though he were Bishop of Milan, yet went he twice Ambassador into France to make agreement betwix Maximus and Valentinian. (*)

D III. If by reason of persecution he be enforced to flie, & see no hope to procure the safety of his people. This made Cyprian to be absent from Carthage, as he testifieth in his Epistles. Thus much concerning his against our neighbour. Now follow such finnes as a man committeth against his owne person, as when a man doth hurt, kill, & endanger himselfe. Mat. 16. 24. If any man wil follow me, let him denie himselfe, take up his Crosse, and follow me. Matth. 4. 6. He said vnto him, If thou be the Some of God, call thy selfe downe headlong: for it is written, Hee shall giue his Angels charge over thee, and with their hands they shall lift thee up, lest at, &c. 7. Iesus said unto him: It is written again, Thou shalt not tip the Lord thy God. Therefore for a man to bee his owne executioner, thought to escape a most shameful euill, is wretchedly vnlawful & vngodly.

* For this thing looke the decrees of Damatus, & the Cōcil of Trent. fcd. 9. Can. 8.

* Amb. 5. & 17. Epist. 10. Valentinian the Emperor.

The affirmative part.

Thou shalt preferre the life of thy neighbour. Hitherto in y we referte these duties.

I. Such as appertaine to the person of our neighbour, & concerne, first his wel-fare both of body & mind; as to reioyce with them that reioice. Rom. 12.15. Mat. 10.21. Then be answered & said unto him, all the things I haue observed from my youtie. And Iesus beheld him & loued him. II. His miseries, to bee grieved with him for the. Ro. 12.15. Mourn with those that mourn. Eia. 24.16. And I said, My leauellie my leauellie, woe is me, the transgressors haue offended, & the transgressors haue grievously offended. Ps. 119.136. Mine eyes gush out with water, because men obferue not thy law. Again, we must help him as much as in vs lyeth. Tob 29.15. I was an eye to the blind, and a foote to the lame. 2. Cor. 8.3. To their power, yea, beyond their power, they were willing. And that we do, we must do speedily. Pro. 3.28. Say not to thy neighbor, go & come again to morrow, & I will giue thee, if thou now haue it. Leu. 19.17. Thou shalt plainly rebuke thy neighbor. &c. III. Concerning such iniuries, as he offereth vnto thee: I. Thou shalt not be angry against him, ypon a final occasion. Num. 12.3. Moses was a meek man in all that hee did vnto the earth. Pro. 19.11. The discretion of a man defers his anger, and his glory is to passe by an offence. 2. Thou must be slow to wrath, & neuer be angry, but for a most iust cause. Mar. 3.5. Then hee lookt vnto them angrily, mourning also for the hardness of their hearts. Pro. 14.29. Hee that is slow to wrath, is of great wisdom: but he that is of an hasty mind, exalteth folly. 3. Thine anger must be but for a while. Eph. 4.26. Be angry and sin not, let not the Sun go down vpon thy wrath. 4. Forgiue freely an injury, & reuenge it not. Eph. 4.32. Be ye courteous one to another, & tender hearted, forgiving one another, euen as God for Christes sake forgaueth you.

IV. His wants & infirmities: 1. Auid occasions whereby they may be stirred and laid open. Gen. 3.8. Then said Abraham to Lot, Let there be no strife I pray thee betweene thee and me, neither betweene thy heard men and mine: for we are brethren. 2. Is not the whole land before thee? depart, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, I will take the right: or if thou go to the right hand, I will take the left. Gen. 27.46. And hee was with him a while, until thy brothers fierceness be asswaged. 45. And till thy brothers wrath be away from thee, and be forgot the things which thou hast done to him. 2. Depart sometimes from thine own right. Math. 17.25.26. What thinkest thou Simon? of whom do the Kings of the earth take tribute, or poll money? of their children, or of strangers? Peter said vnto him, Of strangers. Then said Iesus vnto him, Thou art the children free. 27. Neuertheless, lest we should offend them go to the sea, and cast in an angle, & take the first fish that comes vp, and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of 20. pence: that take & giue it vnto them for me & thee. 3. To appease anger kindled: which is done, I. By ouercomming euill with goodnes. Rom. 12.21. Be not overcome of euill, but overcome euill with goodnes. II. By following after peace. 1. Pet. 3.11. Decline from euill, & do good, seeke peace, and follow after it. III. By courteous answers. Pro. 15.1. A soft answer putteth away wrath: but grievous words stirre up anger. 1. Sam. 1.14. Eli said vnto her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy drunkenness from thee. 35. Then Hanneh answered, & said, Nay my Lord, but I am a woman troubled in spirit: I haue drunke neither wine nor strong drink, but haue poured out my soule before the Lord. Phil. v. 15. It may be that thee therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever. IV. By ouerspasing some wants & infirmities in mens words & deedes. Pro. 19.11. It is a mans honour to passe by infirmities. V. By couering them with silence. 2. Pet. 4.8. About all things haue fewell low amongst you, for low couereth a multitude of sins. Pro. 17.9. He that couereth his transgression seeketh loue: but he that repeates a matter, separates the prince. VI. By taking euery thing (if it be possible) in the best part. 1. Cor. 13.5. Loue thinketh none euill.

This sheweth the lawfulness of truces, covenants, & other agreements concerning peace, being made to auoid injuries, to maintaine ancient bounds, procure security in traffick, possessions, & iourneys, set pensions, commons for cattel, liberties of hunting, fishing, or fooling, & getting fewell, or other necessities for publicke comodities, if there be no vnlawfull conditions annexed vnto the same. And we may make this covenant not only with Christians, but for the maintenance of peace, with infidels also. For that which is godly to be performed, is no lesse godly to be promised. But it is a note of true godlines, to be as much as may be, at peace with all men: Therefore to promise peace by couenants is very godly. We may see the experience of this in the liues of holy men. Gen. 21.22. At that same time Abimelech and Pichol his chiefe captaine, spake vnto Abraham, saying, God is with thee in all that thou doest. 23. Now therefore sweare vnto me hereby God, that thou wilt not hurt me nor my children, nor my childrens children, &c. 24. Then Abraham said, I will sweare. 27. Then Abraham took sleep & dreamed, and gaue them vnto Abimelech: & they two made a covenant. Gen. 31.44. Now therefore come and let vs make a covenant, I and thou, which may be a witness betweene me and thee. 45. Then Laban said to Jacob, Behold this heape, and behold the pillar, which I haue set up betweene me and thee. 53. The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, and the God of their father be iudge between vs. But Jacob swaich by the feare of his father Israhel.

I. J. Concerning his body, we are to regard it as dead, being aliue, we ought if neede be: 1. To minister vnto it food and rayment. Mat. 25.41.42. Depart from me ye curst into euernlasting fire, which is prepared for the diue & his angels. For I was an hungred, and ye gaue mee no meat, I thirsted, and ye gaue me no drinke, &c. 45. In at much ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. II. To lend our helping hand, when our neighbours body is in any danger. 1. Ioh. 3.16. Hereby we perceiued love, that hee layd downe his life for vs, therefore also ought we to lay downe our liues for the brethren.

When a man is dead, wee ought to commit the dead corps to the graue, as may appeare by these arguments. I. The infinit of Nature it selfe. II. The examples of the Patriarkes, and other holy personages. Abraham buried Sarah, Gen. 23.19. Israhel is buried by his sonnes, Gen. 50.12. Stouen by religious and devout men, Acts 8.2. III. The Lords owne approbation of buriall, in that he numbred it amongst his benefices. For the want thereof is a curse, Ierem. 22.19. He (viz. Ichoiakim) shall be buried as an Asse is buried, euen drawne and cast forth without the gates of Ierusalem. Therefore rather then Moses should be vburied, The Lord himselfe did burie him, Deut. 34.5.6. Moses the seruant of the Lord did in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. And hee buried him in a valley, in the land of Moab pur against Beth-peor, but no man knoweth of his Sepulchre vnto this day. IV. There is no dead carcase so loathsome as mans, the which both argueth the necessity of buriall, and how vgly we are in the sight of God, by reason of sinne. V. The body must rise againe out of the earth, that it may be made a perpetuall mansion-house for the soule to dwell in. VI. The bodies of the faithfull are the temples of the holy Ghost, & therefore must rise againe to glory. VII. Buriall is a testimony of the loue and reuerence we beare to the deceased.

A funerall ought to be solemnized after an honest and ciuill manner: namely, agreeable to the nature and credit as well of those which remaine aliue, as them which are dead. Concerning the thing, they must see that 1. their mourning be moderate, and such, as may well expresse their affection and loue to the partie departed. Ioh. 11.34. He said, where haue you layd him? they answered, Lord come and see. 35. Then Iesus wept. And (vers. 36.) the Iewes said, B:hold how hee loued him. II. They must auoid superstition, and not surmise that funerall Ceremonies are auailable to the dead. Such are the rites of the Church of Rome; as to be buried in a Church, especially vnder the Altar, and in a Fryers coule. III. They ought to take heede of superfluous pompe and solemnities. For of all ostentations of pride, that is most foolish, to be boasting of a loathsome and deformed corpse. Eia. 22.1.5.16. Thus saith the Lord God of Israhel, Goe get thee to that treasurer, to Shebna the Steward of the house, and say, What hast thou to doe here? and whom best thou here? that thou shouldest here heere thee out a Sepulchre, as hee that beareth out his Sepulchre in a high place, or that graue an habitation for himselfe in a rocke.

To this commandment belongeth these duties: 1. Before the vintage or harvest, we ought to permit any man, for the reprieving of hunger to gather grapes, or plucke off the eares of corne. Deut. 23.24.25. When thou comest into thy neighbours vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes at thy pleasure, as much as thou wilt: but thou shalt put none into thy vessell. When thou comest into thy neighbours corne, thou mayest plucke the eares with thine hand, but thou shalt not moue a sickle to thy neighbours corne. Math. 12.1. Iesus went on the Sabbath day through the corne, and his Disciples were an hungred, and began to plucke the eares of the corne, and to eat, &c. II. In the vintage, and time of harvest, wee ought neither to leaue the trees naked of grapes, nor rake vp after the reaping, eares of corne: but to leaue the after-gatherings for the poore. Leuit. 23.22. When you reape the harvest of your land, thou shalt not rid clean the corners of thy field when thou reapest: neither shalt thou make after-gatherings of thy harvest: but shalt leaue them vnto the poore, and to the stranger: I am the Lord your God. Ruth. 4.8. Goe to none other field to gather, neither goe from hence, but abide here by my maidens. So shalt thou glean in the field with mine euening.

III. Concerning the soule of our neighbour: 1. We must seeke all means to win him to the profession of Christian Religion. 1. Cor. 10.33. I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many that they might be saved. Heb. 10.24. Les vs consider one another, to prouoke vs to loue, & to good workes. II. We must liue amongst them without offence. 1. Cor. 10.32. Giue no offence, neither to the Iewes, nor to the Grecians, nor to the Church of God. 1. Cor. 8.13. If meat offend my brother, I will not eat flesh while the world standeth, that I may not offend my brother. III. The light of our good liue, must be as a lantern to direct the waies of our neighbors. Acts 24.14. This I confesse vnto thee, that after the way (which they call heresie) so worship I the God of my Fathers, beleauing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets. 15. And haue hope towards God, that the resurrection of the dead, which they themselves looke for also, shall bee both of iust and vniust. 16. And herein I shall euince myselfe to haue alwaies a cleare conscience towards God, and towards men. 17. If our neighbor offend, we are to admonish him. 1. Thess. 5.14. We desire you brethren, admonish them that are vniust: comfort the feeble minded: beare with the weak, be patient towards all men. 18. If our neighbor run the waies of Gods commandment (as David) (peake)th we ought to encourage him in the same.

IV. We may referte such things vnto this commandment, as appertaine to the peculiar preferment of euery full mans life. 1. Recreation, which is an exercise ioyned with the feare of God, constant in things indifferent, for the preferment of bodily strength, & confirmation of the minde in holinesse. Eccle. 2.2. I said of laughter, thou art madde; and of ioy, what is this that thou doest? Eia. 5.12. The harpe, violl, timbrell, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts, but they regard not the worke of the Lord, neither consider the workes of his hands. 1. Corinth. 10.9.

Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them, as it is written: The people face down to one and drink, and rise up to play. Luk. 6. 25. Woe be to you that laugh: for ye shall weep and weep. Deuter. 12. 7. There ye shall ease before the Lord your God, and ye shall rejoice in all that you put your hands unto, both ye and your households, because the Lord thy God hath blessed thee. To this end hath the word of God permitted shooting. 2. Sam. 1. 18. Hee had them teach the children of Judah to shoot, as it is written in the booke of Ishaiah. And musickall comfort. Nehem. 7. 67. Besides their servants and maidens which were seven thousand, three hundred, and five and forty singing men, and singing women. And putting forth riddles. Iud. 14. 12. Sampson said unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you, & if you can declare it me within seven daies of the feast, and find it out, I will give you thirrie sheeters, and thirrie change of garments. 13. And they answered him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may heare it. 14. And he said unto them, Out of the eater came meate, and out of the strong came sweetness: and they could not in three daies expound the riddle. And hunting of wilde beastes. Cant. 2. 15. Take vs the foxes, the little foxes which destroy the vines: for our vines have small grapes. Lastly, the fearching out, or the contemplation of the workes of God. 1. King. 4. 33. And he spake of trees from the Cedar tree that is in Libanon, even unto the hyssope that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowles, and of creeping things, and of fishes. 2. Physicke, the vfe whereof is holy, if before the receipt of it, a man craue remission of his finnes, and repose his confidence onely vpon God, not vpon the meanes. Matthew 9. 2. And he, they brought vnto him a man sicke of the palsey, lying on a bedde. And Iesus seeing their faith, said vnto the sicke of the palsey. Sonne, be of good comfort, thy finnes are forgiven thee. 6. Then he said to the sicke of the palsey. Arise, take vp thy bed, and walke to thine house. Ioh. 5. 5. A certaine man was there which had bene diseased eight and thirrie yeeres. 8. Iesus saide vnto him, Take vp thy bed and walke. 14. After that Iesus found him in the Temple, and said vnto him, Beholde, thou art made whole: sinne no more, lest a worse thing come vnto thee. 2. Chron. 16. 12. And Asa in the nine and thirrie yeare of his reigne, was diseased in his feete, and his disease was extreme: yet he sought not to the Lord in his disease, but to the Physicians. 3. A voiding of an iniurie, offered by some private person: this, if it be against an vnuly and vnlayed adultery, and the defence be faultlesse, is very lawfull, and is so farre from priuate reuenge, that it is to be accounted a iust defence. The defence is then faultlesse, when a man doth so assault his adversary, as that he neither purposeth his owne reuenge, or his enemies hurt, but onely his alone safetie from that imminent danger.

A doubt. Whether may a man file in the plague time? Ans. Such as bee hindered by their calling may not; as Magistrates, and Pastors, hauing charge of soules: yet free men, not bound by calling, may. Reason. I. A man may prouide for his owne safetie, if he be not to the hinderance of another. II. A man may file warres, famine, floods, fire, and other such dangers: therefore the plague. III. There is lesse danger of sicknesse, the more the multitude of people is diminished. Obiect. I. To file, is a token of distrust. Ans. This diffidence is no fault of the fact, but of the person. II. It is offensive. Ans. The offence is taken, not giuen. III. To file, is to forsake our neighbour against the rule of charitie. Ans. It is not, if kinsfolke and Magistrates bee present. I V. Men are to visit the sicke by Gods appointment. Ans. Lepers were excepted among the Iewes: and so likewise they in these daies which are infected with a disease, answerable to the leprosie, namely, if it bee dangerously contagious.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of the seventh Commandement.

THE seventh Commandement sheweth how that we should preclude the chasticke of our selues, and of our neighbour.

The words are these:

Thou shalt not commit adultery.

The Resolution.

[Adultery] To commit adultery, signifieth as much, as to doe any thing, what way soeuer, whereby the chasticke of our selues, or our neighbours may be stained. Math. 5. 28.

The negative part.

Thou shalt no way either hurt, or hinder thy neighbours chasticke.

In this place are prohibited:

I. The lust of the heart, or the enill concupiscence of the flesh. Math. 5. 28. If say vnto you, whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hee hath already committed adultery with her in his heart. Coloss. 3. 5. Mortifie your members which are on earth: fornication, vnclennesse, the inordinate affection, euill concupiscence.

II. Burning in the flesh, which is an inward feruencie of lust, whereby the godly motions of the heart are hindered, ouerwhelmed, and, as it were, with contrarie fire, burnt vp. 1. Cor. 7. 9. If they cannot abstaine, let them marrie, for it is better to marrie than to burne.

III. Strange pleasures about generation, prohibited in the word of God: the which are many.

I. With beasts. Leuit. 18. 23. Thou shalt not lie with any beast to be defiled therewith; neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie downe thereto: for it is an abomination.

II. With the diuell, as witches doe by their owne confession. For why should not a spirit as well haue societie with a witch, as to eate meate?

III. With one of the same sexe. Leuit. 18. 22. Thou shalt not lie with the male, as one lieth with

with a woman: for it is abomination. This is a sin which they commit, whom God hath giuen ouer into a reprobate sense. Rom. 1. 26. For this cause God gave them up to vile affliction: for even their women did change their naturall vse into that which is against nature. 27. And the men left the naturall vse of the woman, and burned in their lusts one toward another, & man with man wrought filthiness. It was the sinne of Sodome, Gen. 19. where it was so common, that to this day it is termed Sodomie.

IV. With such as bee within the degrees of consanguinity, or affinity, prohibited in the word of God. Leuit. 18. 6. None shall come neere to any of the kindred of his flesh, to uncover her shame, I am the Lord.

V. With vnmarried persons. This sinne is termed fornication. Deuter. 28. 28. If any man find a maid that is not betrothed, and take her and lie with her, and they be found, 29. Then the man that lay with her, shall giue vnto the maid father his hire shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife, because he hath humbled her: he cannot put her away all his life. 1. Cor. 10. 8. Neither let vs commit fornication, as some of them committed fornication, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

VI. With those, whereof one is married, or at the least betrothed. This sin is called adultery: and God hath inflicted by his word the same punishment vpon them, which commit this sinne, after they be betrothed, as hee doth vpon such as are already married. *Deut. 21. 22. If a man be found lying with a woman married to a man, then shall they die even both: to wit the man that lay with the wife, and the wife: so shall thou put away euill from Israel. 23. If a maid be betrothed to a husband, and a man finde her in the towne and lie with her. 24. Then shall ye bring them both out vnto the gates of the same citie, and shall stone them to death with stones. This is a marvellous great sinne, as may appeare in that it is the punishment of Idolatry. *Rom. 1. 23. They turned the glorie of the vncorruptible God, to the similitude of the image of a corruptible man, &c. verse 24. Wherefore God gave them up vnto their heauie lusts, vnto vnclennesse. Yeathis sinne is more heinous then theft. *Prou. 6. 30. A dead doe not despise a thief, when hee stealth to sacrifice his soule, when hee is hungry. 32. But hee that committeth adultery with a woman, is destitute of understanding, hee that doth it, destroyeth his owne soule. Again, the adulterer breaketh the covenant of marriage, which is Gods covenant. Prou. 2. 17. Which seeketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God. Adulterers dishonest their owne bodies. 1. Corinthians 6. 18. Flee fornication, every one that a man doth without the body: but hee that committeth fornication, sineth against his owne body. And because their neighbours of a great and vncouerable benefit: namely of chasticke. As for the children which are begotten in this sort, they are shut out from that preeminence, which they otherwise might obtaine in the congregation.

*Deuteronom. 23. 2. A bastard shall not enter into the Congregation of the Lord: even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the Congregation of the Lord. He maketh his familie a stewes, as appeareth in David, whose adultery was punished by Absolons lying with his fathers concubines. 2. Samuel 16. 21. Absolom said to Absolom, Go to thy fathers concubines, which he hath left to keepe the house. Iob 31. 9. If mine heart haue bene deceived by a woman, or if I haue laid waite at the doore of my neighbour: let my wife grinde vnto another man: and let other men bowe downe vpon her. Mans posterity feedeth the smart of this sinne. Iob 31. 12. This (adultery) is a fire that shall deuoure to destruction, and which shall route out all mine increase. To conclude, though this sinne bee committed neuer so closely, yet God will reueale it. Num. 5. from the 1. verse to the 33. And it vually hath one of these two, as companions, namely, euill conscience; or a marvellous horror of conscience. *Hof. 4. 11. Where wine, and vine, take away their heart.

As for the Patriarks Polygamie, or marrying of many wives, albeit it cannot be defended, yet it may be excused: either because it serued to the enlarging of the number of mankind, when there were but few, or at the least, to the propagation of the Church of God.

VII. With man and wife. They abuse their liberty; if they know each other so long as the woman is in her flowers. Ezechiel 23. 10. In these haue they discovered their fathers shame: in these haue they vexed her that was polluted in her flowers. Leuiticus 18. 10. Thou shalt not goe vnto a woman to vncouer her shame, as long as shee is put apart for her defile. Ezechiel 18. 6. If a man hath not lien with a menstruous woman. Or vying marriage-bed intemperately. Ambros. lib. de Philo. which Augustine citing, lib. 2. contra Iulian. saith, That he committeth adultery with his wife, who in the vse of wedlock hath neither regard offemeliness nor honestie. Hierome in his first booke, against Iouinian saith: A wife man ought to loue his wife in iudgement, not in affection. Hee will not giue the bride vnto head-strong pleasure, nor headily companie with his wife. Nothing (saith hee) is more shamelesse, then to loue a wife as though these were a trumpet.

VIII. Nocturnal pollutions, which vife of immoderate diet, or vnchast cogitations, going before in the day. Deut. 23. 10. Vnto sinne (Gen. 38. 8.) was not much vnto these.

IX. Effeminate wantonnesse, whereby occasions are sought to stir vp lust. Gal. 5. 19. The workes of the flesh are manifest, which are adultery, fornication, vnclennesse, &c. Occasions of lust are, 1. cies full of adultery. 2. Pet. 2. 14. Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease to sinne. 2. Idlenessse. 2. Sam. 11. 2. When it was evening tide, David arose out of his bed, and walked vpon the rooffe of the Kings Pallace: and from the rooffe hee saw a woman washing her selfe:

and the woman was very becomfull to looke upon. 3. And David sent & inquired what woman it was? and one said, It is not this Bathsheba the daughter of Eliab, wife to Fria, the Hittite? The David sent messengers, and took her away: and she came unto him, and he lay with her. 3. Riotous and lascivious attire. 1. Tim. 2.9. The woman shall array themselves in costly apparell, with shamefastness and modestie, not with brodered haire, or gold, or pearls, or costly apparell, but as becommeth women that profess the feare of God with good works. Efs. 3.16. Because the daughters of Zion are bawtie, and walke with stretched out neckes, and with wandering eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a snicking with their feet. 17. Therefore shall the Lord make the heads of the daughters of Zion bald, and the Lord shall discover their secret parts. 18. In that day shall the Lord take away the ornament of the shippers, & the caules, & the round tiers. 19. The sweet bals, and the bracelets, and the bonnets. 20. The tyers of the head, and the stoppers, and head-bandes, and the tabletes, and the earrings. 21. The rings, and the mufflers. 22. The costly apparell and the vnaies and the wimples, and the crisping pinnes. 23. And the glaffes, and the fine linnen, and the heades and the lawnes. And no maruaile if the Prophet bee so sharpe against exccesse and wanton apparell: for this is, I, a lawfull and prodigal waisting of the benefites of God, which might well be employed vpon better vses. 11. It is a testimonie, and as it were the cognizance or ensigne of pride, whereby a man would haue himselfe in greater reputation than another. 111. It is a note of great idleness and slothfulness. For commonly such as bestow much time in tricking & trimming themselves vp: doe quite neglect other busineses, & of all things cannot away with paine. I V. It argueth leuitie, in deuising every day some new fashion, or irritating that which others deuse. V. It maketh a confusion of such degrees and callings as God hath ordaind, when as men of interiour degree and calling, cannot be by their attire, discerned from men of higher estate. 4. Fulnesse of bread and meate, which prouoke lust. Ezech. 16.49. This was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulnesse of bread, and idleness was in her, and in her daughters. Luk. 16.19. There was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linnen, & fared well, and delicately euery day. Rom. 13. 13. Walke honestly, as in the day time, not in gluttony & drunkenness, neither in chambering and wantonnes. 5. Corrupt, dishonest, and vnseemly talke. 1. Cor. 5. 33. Erre not, will talke corrupteth good manners. Such are reuaine loue-songs, ballads, interludes, and amorous bookes. This is the thing we are carefully to shun in the reading of Poets, yet so as mariners do in navigation, who forsake not the sea, but decline and flee from the rocks. 6. Lascivious representations of loue matters, in Playes and Comedies. Eph. 5.3.4. Fornication and all vncleannes, let it not once be named among ym, as it becometh Saints, neither filkinnes, nor foolish talking, neither leisling, which are shings not comely. 7. Vndeccent and vnseemly pictures. 1. Thesi. 5.22. Abstaine from all appearance of euill. 8. Lascivious dancing of man and woman together. Mark. 6. 22. The daughter of the same Herodias came in and danced, and pleased Herod, &c. 9. Company with effeminate persons. Prou. 7. 25. Let not thine heart decline to her waies: for she is a wanderer thou not in her paths.

V. To appoint some light or sheete-punishment for adulterie, such as that Romish Synagogue doth. For it is nothing else, but to open a gappe for other lewd persons to runne headlong into the like impietie.

The affirmatiue part.

Thou shalt preserve the chastitie of thy neighbor.

Chastitie is the purity of soule and bodie, as much as belongeth to generation. The minde is chaste, when it is free, or at the least, freed from fleshly concupiscence. The body is chaste, when it putteth not in execution the concupiscences of the flesh. 1. Thesi. 4.3. This is the will of God, euen your sanctification, and that ye should abstaine from fornication. 4. That every one of you should know how to possesse his vessel in holines and honour. 5. And not in the lust of concupiscence, euen as the Gentiles, which know not God. 1. Cor. 7.34. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit.

There are two speciall vertues which preserve Chastitie, Modesty, and Sobriety. Modesty is a vertue, which keepeth in each work an holy decorum, or comelines: and it is seene, 1. in the countenance and eyes, namely, when they neither expresse, nor excite the concupiscence of the heart. Iob 31. 1. I made a concubine with mine eye, why then should I binke on a maid? Gen. 24. 64. Rebekah lift up her eyes and when she saw Izhak, shee lighted downe from the camell. 65. So sheeooke a veile, and covered her face. Prou. 7. 13. She caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said vnto him, &c. 11. In words. When a mans talke is decent, in speaking of such things, as by reason of their nature are become shamefull. Gen. 4. 1. Then Adam knew Hualah his wife: who, &c. Psalm. 51. 1. A Psalm of David, when the Prophet Nathan came vnto him after he had gone in to Bathsheba. Efa. 7. 20. In that day shall the Lord haue with a razer that is hired, euen by them beyond the riuer, by the King of Assur the head, and the haire of the feet, and it shall consume the beard. Iudg. 3. 24. When he was gone out, his seruants came: who seeing that the doores of the parter were shut, they said, Surely he conuerts his feste, that is, he doth his caement in his summer-chamber. Again, a mans talke must be little and submisie. Mat. 12. 19. Behold my seruant whom I haue chosen, he shall not strive, nor crie, neither shall any man beare his name in the street. Prou. 10. 19. In many words there cannot want iniquitie: but hee that refraineth his lips, is wise. And it is a note of a strumpet to bee a giglot, and loud tongued, Prou. 7. 11. She is babbling and loud, 111. In apparell, were multo obferue an holy comelineffe. Tit. 2.3. The elder women must be of such behaviour, as becometh holinesse. Holy comelineffe, is that which expresseth to the eie the sincerity, that is, the godlinesse, temperance, and grauitie either of man or woman. This decencie will more plainly appeare, if we consider the ends of apparell, which are in number five. 1. Necessitie, to the end that our bodies may be defended against the extremitie of parching heate, & pinching cold. 2. Honesty, that that deformitie of our naked bodies might be coeured, which immediatly followed the transgression of our parents. 3. Commodity, whereby men, as their calling, worke, and trade of life is different, so doe they apparell themselves: and hence it is, that some apparell is more decent for certaine estates of men, then other. 4. Frugality, when a mans attire is proportionable to his abilitie and calling. 5. Distinction of persons, as of sexe, ages, offices, time and actions. For a man hath his set attire, a woman hers, a young man is apparellled on this fashion, an old man on that. And therefore it is vnseemly for a man to put on a womans apparell, or a woman the mans. Deut. 22.5. If he woman shall not weare that which pertaith to the man, neither shall a man put on the womans rayment: for all that do so, are an abomination to the Lord thy God.

To fet downe precisely out of Gods word, what apparell is decent, is very hard: wherefore in this cause, the iudgement & practise of modest, graue, and sincere men, in euery particular estate, is most to be followed, and men must rather keepe too much within the bounds of measure, then to steppe one foote without the precincts. IV. In purging the exccrements of nature, care must be had, that they must be cast forth into some separate & close place, & there also coeured. Deu. 23. 12. Thou shalt haue a place without the host, whither thou shalt reioy, 13. And thou shalt haue a paddie among thy weapons, and when thou wouldest sit downe without, thou shalt digge therewith, and returning, thou shalt couer thine exccrements. 14. For the Lord thy God walketh in the midst of the campe to deliuer thee: therefore thine host shall be holy, that hee see no filthy thing in thee, and turne away from thee. 1. Sam. 24. 4. And he came to the sleepe-coats by the way, where there was a cave, and Saul went in to couer his feet.

Sobriety is a vertue which concerneth the vseage of our diet in holinesse. For the better obseruation thereof, these rules may serue: I. The chieftest at the banquet, let him consecrate the meates to God, by saying grace. 1. Sam. 9. 13. The people will not eat, till he (that is, Samuel) come because he will blese the sacrifice. 2. And then eate they that be bidden to the feast. Mark. 6. 39: Ecce commanded them to make them all sit downe by companies upon the grasse, &c. 41. And heeooke the five lawnes and two fishes, and looked up to heauen, and gaue thanks. Act. 27. 35. When he had thus said, hee (that is Paul) gaue thanks in the presence of them all, and when hee had broken bread, hee began to eate. 11. It is lawful to furnish a table with store of dillies, not onely for necessity, but also for the good entertainment of a friend, and for delight. Luk. 5. 29. Leui made him (that is, Iesus) a great feast in his owne house, where there was a great company of publicans, and of others that sat at table with him. Psal. 104. 15. Hee giveth wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oyle to make the face shine, and bread that strenghteneth mans heart. Ioh. 12. 2. There they made him a supper, and Martha serued, but Lazarus was one of them that sat at table with him. 3. Thenooke Marie a pound of oymment of Spikenard very costly, and anointed Iesus feet. 111. Choose the lower room at a banquet, and rather then bee troublesome, fit as the master of the feast assigneth thee. Luk. 14. 7. Hee saie a parable to the guests, when he marked how they chose out the chiefe rooms, and said, 8. When thou shalt be bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not thy selfe down in the chieft place, lest a more honourable man then thou bee bidden of him, 9. And hee that hadde both him and thee, come and say, Give this man room. 10. But goe and sit downe in the lowest room, when hee that hadde thee, cometh, hee may say vnto thee, Friend, sit vp higher. Prou. 25. 6. Stand not in the place of great men, &c. IV. Man must eate at due times, not at vnseasonable houres. Eccles. 10. 16. Was bee thy times, O land, when thy princes eate in the morning. 17. Blessed are thou, O land when thy Princes eate in time. V. Man must eate and drinke moderately, so that the body may receiue strength thereby, and the soule bee more fresh & lively, to performe the actions of Godlinesse. Luk. 21. 34. Take heede to your selues, least at any time your hearts bee oppressed with surfeiting and drunkenness. Prou. 23. 29. To whom is wee? &c. Euen to them that tarrie long at wine, to them that goe and seeke mist wine. 30. Look not thou vpon the wine when it is redde, and when it sheweth his colour in the cuppe, and goeth downe pleasantly, &c. Prou. 25. 16. If thou hast found home, eate that is sufficient for thee, lest thou bee over-full and vomit. Prou. 31. 4. It is not for Kings to drink wine, nor for Princes strong drinke. 5. Lest hee drinke and forget the decree, and change the iudgement of all the children of affliction. VI. We must then especially regard these things, when we eate at great mens tables. Prou. 23. 1. When thou sittest to eate with a ruler, consider diligently what is before thee. 2. Put the knife to thy throat, if thou be a man giuen to thy appetite. 3. Benet desirous of his deuitie meates: for it is a delectable meate. VII. Godly mirth at meate is tolerable. Act. 2. 46. They did eate their meat together with gladnesse & singlenesse of heart. VIII. Table talke (according as occasion of talke is offered) must be such as may edifie. Such was Christs talke at the Pharisees table, Luke 14 from the 1. verse, to the 16. verse. IX. See that after the banquet ended, the broken meate be not lost, but referred. Ioh. 6. 12. When they were satisfied, he said unto his Disciples, Gather up the broken meate in which remaineth, that nothing be lost. X. At a feast leave somewhat. Ruth. 2. 14. She did eate and was justified, and left thereof.

Chastitie is double: one of single life, another in wedlocke. They that are single, must, I. with great care keepe their affections & bodies in holinesse. Psal. 119. 9. How shall a young man purge his waies? by directing the same after thy word. I. Ioh. 2. 13. I write unto you fathers, because yee haue knowne him that is from the beginning. I write unto you young men, because yee haue overcome that wicked one. 14. I write unto you babes, because ye haue knowne the father. Eccles. 12. 1. Remember thy creature in the daies of thy youth, while the evil daies come not, nor the years approach, wherein thou shalt say, I haue no pleasure in them. II. They must falk often. 1. Cor. 9. 27. I beate downe my body, and bring it unto subjection, least by any means, after I haue preached to others, I my selfe should be reproved. III. They must take heed they burne not in lust: for 1. Cor. 7. 9. It is better to marry, then to burne.

Chastitie in wedlocke, is when the holy & pure life of wedlocke is observed. Heb. 12. 4. Marriage is honourable among all, and the bedde undefiled, but whoremongers and adulterers God will iudge. To preferre purity in wedlocke, these cautions are profitable: I. contracts must be in the Lord, and with the faithfull onely. Malach. 2. 11. Judah hath transgressed, and an abomination is committed in Israel, and in Hierusalem: for Judah hath defiled the holmes of the Lord which he loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god. 1. Cor. 7. 39. If her husband be dead, shee is at libertie to marrie with whom shee will, onely in the Lord. II. Both parties must separate themselves in the time of a womans discase, and at appointed faits. Ezech. 18. 6. 1. Cor. 7. 5. Defraund not one another, except ye bee with consent for a time, that ye may give your selues to fasting and prayer, and againe come together, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinencie. III. Wedlocke must be vied rather to suppreffe, then to satisfie that corrupt concupiscence of the flesh, and especially to enlarge the Church of God, which is done by an holy feede: Rom. 13. 14. Put on the Lord Iesus Christ, and take not care of the flesh, to satisfie the lusts thereof. I. V. It must be vied with prayer and thanksgiving. 1 Tim. 4. 3. 4.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of the eighth Commandment.

THIS commandment concerneth the preferment of our neighbours goods. The words are these:

Thou shalt not steale.

The Resolution.

Steale To steale, is properly to conuey any thing closely from another. Gen. 31. 20. Take

A steale away the heart of Laban the Aramite. In this place it signifies generally, to with that which is another mans, to get it by fraud, and any way to impair his wealth.

The negative part.

Thou shalt neither be wanting to preferre, nor a meane to hinder or hurt thy neighbours goods.

In this place these finnes are forbidden: I. Inordinate liuing, whether it be in no set calling, or idly, wherein by neglecting their duties, such persons mispend their time, goods, and renewes. 2. Theff. 3. 11. Wee heare that there are some among you which walke inordinately, and worke not at all, but are busie bodies. Gen. 3. 19. In the sweat of thy browes shalt thou eate thy bread, till thou returne to the earth. 1 Tim. 5. 8. If there be any that provide not for his owne, especially for them of his household, he denieth the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

II. Vniust dealing, which is either in heart, or deede. Vniust dealing in heart, is named couetousnesse. Math. 13. 19. One of the beames come euill thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, &c. Couetousnesse is idolatry. Eph. 5. 5. Wee know that no couetous person, which is an idolater, shall enter into the kingdome of Christ and of God. Yea, it is the very roote of all euill, not begetting, but nourishing all kind of sin. 1 Tim. 6. 10. The loue of money is the roote of all euill, which while some listeth after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrowes.

Vniust dealing in deede, is in bargaining, or out of bargaining. Vniust dealing in bargaining, hath many branches, Theff. 4. 6. Let no man oppresse, or deceiue his neighbour in a bargain: for God is the auenger of such things.

I. To sell, or bargain for that which is not faleable. Of this kind, I. is the gift of the holy Ghost, which cannot be bought with money. Act. 8. 18. When Simon saw, that through laying on of the Apostles hands, the holy Ghost was giuen, he offered them money, 16. Saying, giue mee also this power, that on whomsoever I lay the hands, hee may receiue the holy Ghost. 20. Then Peter said vnto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou thinkest that the gift of God may be obtained with money. II. Church-goods are not faleable.

Therefore it is not to be allowed, for men to sell or alienate them from the Church. Prou. 20. 25. It is destruction for a man to denounce that which is sanctified, and after the vow to enquire. Mal. 3. 8. Church-goods are the possession of the Lord. III. Whatsoeuer is vprofitable either to the Church or Common-weale, must not be sold.

II. All coloured forgery and deceit in bargaining, as, I. vsing forged caualition: Luke 19. 8. Zaccheus stood forth, & said vnto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the halfe of my goods I giue to the poore: and if I haue taken ought from any man by forged caualition, I restore it foure-fold. II. When men sell that, which is counterfeit, for good: as copper for gold, and mingle any waies bad with good, making shew onely of the good.

Amos

Amos 8. 4, 5, 6. Heare this ye that swallow vp the poore, saying, When will the new moon be gone, &c. that we may sell the refuse of the wheat. 1. 11. When men falsifie their measures and weights. Deut. 25. 13. Thou shalt not haue iusty bagges two manner of weights, a great and a small. 14. But thou shalt haue a right and a iust weight: a perfect and a iust measure shalt thou haue. Leuit. 19. 35 Ye shall not doe vniustly in iudgement, in line, in weight, or in measure. 36. Ye shall haue iust balances, true weights, a true Ephah, and a true Hin. Amos 8. 4. Heare this, ye that say, When will the Sabbath bee gone, that we may sell corne, and make the Ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifie the weights by deceit?

III. When the buyer concealeth the goodnesse of the thing, or the seller the faults of it, and blind-foldeth the truth with counterfeit speeches. Math. 7. 12. Whatsoeuer ye would that men should doe vnto you, even so doe to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets. Prou. 20. 14. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer, but when he is gone apart, he befooth.

IV. When in buying and selling the people are oppressed. And this is done, 1. when the iust price of things is raised. For in bargaining, it is not lawfull to purlie one penny, without the giuing of a penny worth. 2. Sale vpon a set day, which is, when day is giuen, that the price may be inhauced. For what is this, I pray you, but to sell time, and to take more of our neighbour, then right? 3. To ingrosse, which is to buy vp all of one commoditie into thine owne hands, that when no other hath any of the same, thou maist sell it at thine owne price. 4. To become bankrupt, that thou maist be enriched by the damages, and goods of other vnder. 5. Not to restore that, which was leant to one, pledged to one, or found by him. Ezech. 18. 7. Neither hath oppressed any, but hath restored the pledge to his debtor: hee that hath spoiled none by violence, &c. 6. To delay any kinde of restitution from one day to another. Prou. 3. 28. Say not to thy neighbour, Depart, and come againe, to morrow I will pay you, when thou maist doe it then. Plal. 37. 21. The wicked man borroweth, and payeth not againe, but the righteous is mercifull and lendeth. 7. To practise vsurie. Plal. 15. 5. Which hath not put his money to vsurie. Exod. 22. 25. If thou lentest money to my people, to the poore man which dwelleth with thee, be not to him as an usurer, lay not vsurie vpon him.

Vsurie is againe exacted by couenant, about the principall onely in lieu, and recompence of the lending of it. Vsurie being considered as it is thus defcribed, is quite contrarie to Gods word, and may very fitly be termed byting lucre. Exod. 22. 14. If any man hath borrowed any thing of another, whatsoeuer is hurt or dyeth, if the owner of the thing be not present, let him bee recompensed. 15. If he bee present, recompence him not: if he bee buried for a price, it is sold for the same price. Ezech. 18. 8. He hath not giuen to vsurie, neither hath taken increase. 2. Cor. 8. 13. Neither is it that other men should bee eased, and you grieved. 14. But vpon like condition at this time, your abundance supplieth their lacke, that also their abundance may be for your lacke: that there may be equalitie.

And this vsurie, positive lawes doe not only retrain, but not allow.

Quest. Is it not lawfull to take at sometime about the principall?

Ans. Y. surely, with these conditions: I. If a man take heed that hee exact nothing, but that which his debtor can get by good and lawfull means. II. Hee may not take more then the gaine, may not all the gaine, nor that part of the gaine which drinkes vp the liuing of him that vield the money. III. Hee must sometimes bee so farre from taking gaine, that hee must not require the principall, if his debtor be by inevitable and iust casualties brought behind, and it bee all p-ntine that hee could not make, no not by great diligence, any commoditie of the money borrowed.

The reasons why a man may take sometimes about the principall, are, 1. That which the debtor may giue, hauing himselfe an honest gaine besides, and no man any waies endamaged, that the creditor may safely receive.

2. It is conuenient, that he which hath money lent him, and gaineth by it, should shew all possible gratitude to him, by whose goods hee is enriched.

3. It is often for the benefit of the creditor, to haue the goods in his owne hands which hee lent.

Obiect. Money is not fruitfull, therefore it is vnlawfull to receive more then we lent out.

Ans. Albeit money in it selfe be not fruitfull, yet it is made very fruitfull by the borrowers good vse, as ground which is not fruitfull except it be tilled.

Last of all, when a man detaineth the labourers wages, Iam. 5. 4. Behold, the hire of the labourers (which haue reaped your fields, which is of you kept backe by fraud) cryeth, and the cries of them which haue reaped, are eured into the eares of the Lord of hosts.

Vniust dealing out of bargaining, is likewise manifold: I. To pronounce false sentence or iudgement for a reward, either preferred, or promised. Esa. 1. 23. The Princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loueth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they iudge not the fatherlesse, neither doth the widows cause come before them. This is the Lawyers and Iudges sinne. II. To feede, or clothe stont and lusty rogues or beggers. 2. Theff. 3. 10. When we were with you, we enioyned you this, that if any would not labour, the same should not eate. What then thinke you, must those licenced rogues and beggers by authority, I meane, all idle Monks and Abby-lubbers haue? Soe are in the Tripartite history, faith plainely, that that Monk which laboureth not with his hands, is no better than a theefe. III. Gaining for money and gaine. For thou maist not enrich thy selfe by impoverishing thy brother. This gaming is worse

farre then vsury, and in a short while will more enrich a man. IV. To get money by vnlawfull Artes: such are Magique, Iudiciall Astrologie, Stage-plays, and such like. Eph. 4.28. Let him that hath stolen, steale no more, but rather let him labour, working with his owne hands the thing that is good, that he may giue vnto him that hath neede. Deut. 18.11. Eph. 5.3. 1. Thess. 5.22. Abstaine from all appearance of euill. V. To fish or pilfer the least pinne or point from another, though it were for the greatest good. Mark. 10. 19. Thou shalt not steale, thou shalt not hurt any man. Rom. 3.8. And (as we are blamed, and as some affirme that we say) Why doe we not euill, that good may come thereof? whose denoniation is iust. VI. To remouee ancient bounds. Prou. 22. 28. Thou shalt not remouee the ancient bounds which thy Fathers haue made. Hof. 5.10. The Princes of Iudah are like them which remouee the bounds. VII. To sleue other mens seruants, or children, to commit sacrilege, or robbery. 1. Tim. 1.10. To Whore-mongers, Buggers, and Men-stealers. Ioh. 7.19. Achan steale. 1. Cor. 6.10. Neither Thieves, nor couetous persons, nor Robbers, &c. shall inherit the Kingdoms of God. For Robberies, these sorts of men especially are famous: Theemes by the high wayes, Pyrates vpon the Seas, Souldiers not content with their pay, and whoeuer they bee, that by maine force take that which is none of their owne. Luk. 3.14. The Souldiers asked him, saying, What shall we doe? he said, Doe violence to no man, neither accuse any man falsely, and be content with your Wages. VIII. To conspire with a Thiefe, whether by giuing aduice how he may compass his enterprise, or by concealing his fact, that hee bee not punished. Prou. 29.24. He that is partaker with a Thiefe, hateth himselfe, and hee that beareth curfing, and discouereth it, is not.

The punishment of theft may at the discretion of the Iudge be sometimes aggravated, as hee seeth the quality of the offence to be. Therefore theuues sometimes are punished with death. Now if any man obiect, that the Iudiciall law of God, doth onely require the restitution thereof fourefold for such an offence: I answer, that the ciuill Magistrate, when hee seeth some one, or many offences to increase, he may by his authoritie encrease the ciuill punishment due to that sinne. Now it is manifest, that the sinne of theft is farre more grievous in our Common-weale, then it was among the Iewes. For first, the inhabitants of this Common-weale are generally by many degrees, poorer then the Iewes were: therefore to steale a thing, but of some small value, from one in this Countrey, doth more endamage him, then a thing of great value would haue done the Iewes. Again, the people of this Countrey are of a more stirring, and fierce disposition; the which maketh Theuues to bee more outrageous, with their Robberies ioyning Violence, and the disturbance of the publicke tranquillitie of the Countrey: whereof more

A regard ought to bee had, then of one private mans life.

The affirmative part.

Thou shalt preferre and increase thy neighbours goods.

To this are required these that follow:

I. A certaine Calling: wherein cury man, according to that gift which God hath giuen him, must bestow himselfe honestly, to his owne and neighbours good. 1. Cor. 7.24. Let every man wherein he was called, therein abide with God. Eph. 4.28. 1. Pet. 4.10. According as every man hath receiued a gift, so let him administer to another, that yee may bee good dispensers of the manifold graces of God. Gal. 5.13. In leue serue one another.

II. The true vse of Riches, and all the goods a man hath: to which belong two Vertues, Contentation, and Thriftinesse.

Contentation is a Vertue, whereby a man is well pleased with that estate, wherein he is placed. 1. Tim. 6.6. Godlinesse is great gaine, with a contented minde. 7. For wee brought nothing into the world, neither shall we carry any thing out of the world: But, hauing goodes and rayement, let vs be content. Phil. 4.11. I haue learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. 12. I can be abased, and I can abound; euery where in all things I am instructed, both to be full, and to be hungry; and to abound, and to lacke want. Matth. 6.11. Give vs this day our daily bread. Heb. 13.5. Let your conversation be without couetousnesse, and be content with the things which you haue: for he saith, I will not forsake thee, nor leave thee.

Thriftinesse, or frugalitie, is a Vertue, whereby a man carefully keepeth his goods which hee hath gotten, and employeth them to such vies, as are both necessarie and profitable. Prou. 5.15. Drinke the water of thy Cistern, and of the Riuer, out of the middes of thine owne Well. 16. Let thy Fountains flow forth, and the Riuer of Waters in the streets. 17. Let them be thine owne yea, thine only, and not the strangers with thee. Pro. 21.5. The thoughts of the diligent doe surely bring abundance. 17. Flee that loneth pastime, shall be a poore man, and hee that loneth wine and oyle shall not bee rich. Prou. 12.27. The deceitfull man resteth not: that which he hath taken is burning: but the riches of the diligent are precious. Ioh. 6.12.

III. To speake the truth from the heart, and to vse an harmelesse simplicitie in all affaires. Psal. 15.2. He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousnesse, he that speaketh the truth in his heart. Gen. 23.15. Ephron said to Abraham, The land is worth foure hundred shekels of silver, what is that betwene mee and thee? bury therefore thy dead. 18. So Abraham bargained to Ephron, and Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver, which hee had named in the audience of the Hittites, euen foure hundred shekels of current Money among Merchants, &c.

IV. Iust dealing. 1. Thess. 4.6. Of this there are many kindes.

I. In buying and selling, in letting and hiring of Farmes, Tenements, Lands: in Marchan-

dize, & all maner of commodities, men must racke nothing, but keepe a iust price. A iust price is then obserued, when as the things prized, and the price giuen for them, are made equally, as neere as may be. For the obseruation of this equallitie, these foure rules are to be considered: for by them all bargaines must be ordered.

1. There must be a proportion and equality in all contracts: the which will then be, when as the seller doth not value the thing, onely according to his owne paines, and coit bestowed vpon it: but also seeth what profit it may bee to the buyer, and in what neede hee standeth of it. Leuit. 25.14. When thou sellest ought to thy neighbour, or buyest ought at his hand, ye shall not oppresse one another. 15. But according to the number of the yeeres after the Iubile, thou shalt buy of thy neighbour. Also according to the number of yeeres of thy remembrance, he shall sell vnto thee. 16. According to the number of yeeres thou shalt increase the price thereof: and according to the fewnesse of yeeres thou shalt abate the price of it, for the number of frutes he doth sell vnto thee. II. They must be squared according to the law of nature, the sum whereof Christ propoundeth in these words. Mat. 7.12. Whatsoever ye would that men should doe to you, doe the same vnto them. III. The bond of nature must bee kept, which bindeth him that receiuet a benefit, & maketh a lawfull gaine of another mans goods, that he being once enriched, shall make proportionable and naturall recompence, euen about the principall. IV. Men must communicate and make vse of their goods, with that caute which Paul giueth. 2. Cor. 8.13. not so to bestow them, as that others may be eased, and they grieved: or contrariwise.

II. Men must make sale of such things, as are in their kinde substantiall, and fit for vse.

III. They must vse iust waights and measures. Deut. 25.13. Thou shalt not haue in thy bagge twomaner of waight, a great and a small: but thou shalt haue aright & iust waight, a perfect and iust measure shalt thou haue. Ezech. 45.10. Ye shall haue iust balancer, a true Ephah, and a true Bush. Mich. 6.11. Shall I susteine the wicked balance, and the bagge of deceitfull waight?

IV. Hee that hireth any thing, must not onely pay the appointed hire, but make that which he hired good, if ought but good come vnto it, by his default. Exod. 22.14, 15. If a man borrow any thing of his neighbour, and it be hurt, he shall surely make it good, &c.

V. The pledge or pawne ought to be redeemed, & if it be of important necessity, as that which preferreth the life of our neighbour, it must be restored to him incontinently. Exod. 22.26. If thou take thy neighbours rayment to pledge, thou shalt restore it againe before the sunne goe downe: for that is his covering only. Deut. 24.6. No man shall take the neuber or opper Adulterers to pledge, for this gage is his living. Neither may a man in a pledge be his owne carner, but he must take such an one as is offered. Deut. 24.10. When thou shalt aske against of thy neigh- bour any thing lent, thou shalt not goe into his house to fetch his pledge. 11. But thou shalt stand without, and the man that borrowed it of thee, shall bring the pledge out of the doores vnto thee. 12. Furthermore, if it be a poore body, thou shalt not sleepe with his pledge. 13. But shalt restore him his pledge, &c.

VI. To become surety onely for men that are honest: and very well known: and that warily, with much deliberation. Prou. 11.15. He shall be sore vexed that is surety for a stranger. And he that hateth suretieship is sure. Prou. 17.18. A man destitute of vnderstanding toucheth the hand, and becometh surety for his neighbour. Prou. 22.26. But if it be so that a man hath intangled himselfe by suretieship, the best way is to craue his creditours fauour, by his owne humble suit, & the instant request of his friends. Prou. 6.1. My sonne, if thou be surety for thy neighbour, and hast stricken hands with the stranger: 2. Thou art snared with the words of thine owne mouth. 3. Doe this now, my sonne, and deliver thy selfe, seeing thou art come into the hand of thy neighbour, &c., and humble thy selfe, and sollicit thy friends. 4. Goe no sleepe to thine eie, nor slumber to thine eyelids. 5. Deliver thy selfe, as a Doe from the hand of the hunter, & as a bird from the band of the fowler.

VII. All iust covenants and promises, though they be to our hinderance, must bee performed. For a promise doth binde, if it be lawfull, so far forth as he will, vnto whom we make the promise. Psal. 15.4. Which sweareth to his hurt and changeth not. Prou. 25.14. A man that boasteth and keepeth not promise, is like clouds and wind without raine. Iudg. 1.24. The Philistines saw a man come out of the cite, and they said vnto him, Shew vs we pray thee, the way into the cite, and we will shew thee mercy. 25. And when he had shewed them the way into the city, they smote the cite with the edge of the sword, but they let the man and all his household depart. Therefore, if after promise made, he either see that hee shall be endamaged thereby, or hindred in the performance of his promise, he may craue release: and if it be granted, accept of it.

VIII. To lend that we doe freely, Luk. 6.35. Lend, looking for nothing againe, and your reward shall be great. And when we borrow, we must be careful to make restitution, euen if neede be, with the sale of our owne goods. 2. King. 4.2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Hee the wife of the sonne of the Prophet Ieltheb her oyle which God sent by the hand of Elshaz, to pay her creditour.

IX. To restore that which is committed to our custodie without delay. Matth. 21.41. He will destroy the euill husbandmen, and let out his vineyard to others, which shall deliver him the fruits in their season. Prou. 3.28. But if such a thing be lost, not by our default, we are not vrged to repay it. Exod. 22.7. If a man deliver his neighbour money, or stuffe to keepe, and it be stolen out of his house, if the thiefe be found, he shall pay three double. 8. If the thiefe be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought before the iudges to sweare, whether hee haue put his hand to his neighbours goods or no.

X. That

X. That which a man findeth, is to be kept in his own hand, if the true owner cannot be heard of; but if he be, he must restore it. Deut. 22.1. Thou shalt not see thy brother's ox, or his sheep go astray, and withhold thyself from them, but shalt bring them again unto thy brother. 2. If he be not near unto thee, or thou know him not, thou shalt deliver it unto thine house, and it shall remain with thee until thy brother seek after it, then shalt thou deliver it to him again. 3. So shalt thou do with all lost things.

XI. To get our owne, we may, if we cannot doe otherwise, sue our neighbour in law. But we must follow our suites in all holy manner, and with these cautions. I. In all suites, we must not doe any thing, that may prejudice the profession of Christian religion. Therefore all suites in law offend, when they trust more in man, then in God, and make their religion a left to worldlings; partly by triuing about things of small importance, and partly by not admitting any conditions of reconciliation. 1. Cor. 6.1. Dare any of you, having business against another, be adjudged under the unjust, and not under the Saints? II. Law must be the last remedy, as a desperate medicine is the last remedy the Physician useth: We must assay all means possible, before we sue this, especially to a brother. 1. Cor. 6.7. There is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another: why rather suffer ye wrong? why rather suffer ye not harm? III. In all suits of Law, we must be mindfull of the law of charity, and not so much indevout to maintain our owne right, as to recall our brother, which erreth, into the right way.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning the ninth Commandement.

The ninth commandement concerneth the preservation of our neighbours good name.

The words are these: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

The Resolution.

Thou shalt not bear: That is, answer when thou art asked before a iudge. Deut. 19. 17. Then both the men which strue together, shall stand before the Lord, even before the priests and iudges which shall be in those daies. 18. And the iudges shall make a diligent inquisition, and if the witness be found false, and hath given false witness against his brother.

Witness: By a figure, signifieth every word, whereby the credit and estimation of our neighbour is either impaired or diminished.

The negative part.

Thou shalt not diminish or hurt the good name and estimation of thy neighbour.

Here is forbidden:

I. Envy, dislike of others, desire of a mans own glory, 1. Tim. 6.4. He is puffed up, and knoweth nothing, but doeth about questions, and strife of words, whereof cometh envie, strife, railing, 1. Pet. 2.1. Wherefore laying aside all malice, unselfish, and envie, and all guile, and evill speaking. Math. 12.15. But when the chief Priests and Scribes saw the miracles that he did, and the children crying in the Temple, and saying, Hosanna the sonne of David, they did disdain.

II. Evill suspitions. 1. Tim. 6.4. 1. Sam. 17. 28. And Eliab his eldest brother heard when hee spake unto the men, and Eliab was angry with David, and said, Why comest thou downe hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride and the malice of thine heart. Act. 28.4. Now when the Barbarians saw the worme hang on his hand, they said among themselves, This man surely is a murderer, whom though hee hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance hath not suffered him to live. Here are condemned, hard censures and finister iudgements against our neighbour. Math. 7.1. Judge not, that ye be not iudged. 2. For with what iudgement ye iudge; ye shall be iudged: and with what measure ye mete; ye shall be measured to you againe. These iudgements which Christ forbiddeth, are private & reprochfull or slanderous iudgements: namely, when either a good or an indifferent action is interpreted to the worse part; or when a light offence is made hainous through evill will, without all desire either to amend or to couer the same. Act. 2.13. And others mocked and said, they are full of new wine. 14. But Peter standing with the eleven lift up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Iudea, and all ye that inhabit Jerusalem, be this knowne unto you, and hearken unto my words: 15. For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, since it is but the third houre of the day. 1. Sam. 1.13. For Hannah spake in her heart, her lips did move only, but her voice was not heard, therefore Eli thought she had bene drunken. But wee must know, that there are three kinds of iudgements, which are not forbidden by this commandement of Christ. The first, is the ministerie of the Gospel, which iudgeth & reproacheth sinne. The second, is the iudgement of the Magistrate. The third, is the iudgement of a friend admonishing vs: as when he saith, Abstaine from the company of such a man, for I know him to be a drunkard, &c.

III. A relation of the bare words onely, and not of the fence and meaning of our neighbour. Math. 26.59. Now the chief of the Priests, and the elders, and all the whole Councell, sought false witnesses against Iesus, to put him to death. 60. But they found none, and though many false witnesses came yet found they none: but at the last came two false witnesses. 61. And said, This man said, I can destroy the Temple of God, & build it in three daies. Indeed, Christ said some such thing in words, as appeareth, Ioh. 2.19. Iesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three daies I will raise it up againe.

IV. A lie, whereby every falsehood with purpose to deceive, is signified, whether in words, or in deeds, or concealing the truth, or any other way whatsoever: be it for neuer so great a good to our neighbour.

any

V. To pronounce vniu's sentence in iudgements to rest in one witness; to accuse another wrongfully to betray a mans cause by collusion. 1. Kin. 2.1. 12. They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth among the chief of the people. 13. And there came two wicked men, and sat before him, and the wicked men witnessed against Naboth in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God & the king: then they carried him away out of the city, & stoned him with stones, that hee died. Deu. 17.6. As the mouth of two or three witnesses shall he that is worthy of death die; but as the mouth of one witness he shall not die.

VI. Openly to raise forged and hurtfull tales and reports of our neighbour, or privily to defile the same. Rom. 1.29. *Whisperers, 30. Backbiters, haters of God, proud boastful, detesters of evill things. 1. Lu. 19. 16. Thou shalt not walke about with tales among thy people, thou shalt not walke against the blood of thyneighbour: I am the Lord. 1. Tim. 5.13. And likewise if being idle, they learne to get about from house to house: yea, they are not onely idle, but also praters, and busie bodies, speaking things which are not comely. To spread abroad flying tales, or to faile & adde any thing unto them. Pro. 26.20. Without wood the fire is quenched, & without a tale, beaver strife ceaseth. 21. As a coale maketh burning coals, & wood a fire, so the contentious man is apt to kindle strife. 22. The words of a tale bearer are as flatterings, and they go downe into the bowels of the bellie. 2. Cor. 12.20. For I feare lest when I come, I shall not finde you such as I would, & lest there be strife, envying, wrath, contentions, backbitings, whisperings, wrangling, and discords among you. To receive or beleue those tales which we heare of others. Exod. 23.1. *Thou shalt not receive a false tale, neither shalt thou put thine hand with the wicked, to be a false witness. 1. Sam. 24.10. And David said to Saul, Wherefore giueth thou an eare to mens words, that say, behold, David seeketh evill against thee?

VII. To accuse our neighbour for that which is certain and true, through hatred and with intent to hurt him. 1. Sam. 22.9. Then answered Dagg the Edomite (who was appointed our the servants of Saul) & said, I saw the son of Iphai when he came to Nob, so Ahimelech the son of Ahiah. 10. Who asked counsel of the Lord for him, and gave him victuals, and he gave him also the sword of Goliath the Philistin. Of this deed David thus speaketh. Psal. 52.1. Why boastest thou thyself in thy wickednes, O man of power? the loving kindness of the Lord endureth for ever. 2. Thy tongue imagineth mischief, and is like a sharp razor: shalt utterest deceitfully. 3. Thou dost leave evil more then good; and lies, more then to praise the truth. 4. Thou hast all words that may destroy, O deceitfull tongue.

VIII. To open or declare our neighbors secrets to any man, especially, if hee did it of infirmity. Mat. 18.15. Moreover, if thy brother trespasseth against thee, go and tell him his fault be- sweete thee and him alone: if he heare thee, thou hast won thy brother. Pro. 11.13. He that goeth about as a slanderer, discometh a house: he that is of a faithful heart, concealeth a matter.

IX. All babbling talke and bitter words. Eph. 5.3. But fornication and all uncleannes, let it not be once named among you. Neither filthines, neither foolish talking, neither ising, which are not comely, but rather giving of thanks. Ioh. 9. 34. They answered & said unto him, thou art altogether borne in sin, and dost thou teach us? so they cast him out. This letting, or as it is now termed, wit, which Aristotle the Philosophier accommeth a vertue, is by Paul the Apostle accounted a vice: and that not without cause: I. Such quips as sting others; though they bee a great pleasure for some to heare, yet are they very offensive to such as are so gyrded. II. If it be very hard to make Christian both godly and gravity to agree with such behaviour.

Obiect. But faine and tart speeches are vsuall in the Scriptures, 1. Kin. 18.27. Eliab mocked the priests of Baal. Eia. 14.9.

Ans. Such speeches are not spoken to please others, but are sharply denounced against Gods enemies to his glory.

X. Flattery, whereby we praise our neighbour above that we know in him. Pro. 27.6. The words of a flatterer are faithful, but the kisses of an enemy are to be shunned. 14. He that praise his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, he shall be counted to him as a curse. Act. 12. 22. And the people gave a shout, saying, The voice of God, and not of man. This is a grievous sin in the ministers of the word. 1. The. 2. 5. Neither did we ever oyle flatterers words, as ye know, nor coloured countenances, God is record. Ier. 6.13. For from the least of them, enter unto the greatest of them, every one is given unto countenances, & from the Prophet, even unto the Priest, they all deale falsely. 14. They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people with sweet words, saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. Rom. 16.18. For they that are such, serve not the Lord Iesu Christ, but their own bellies, & with sweet speech and flattering deceive the hearts of the simple.

XI. Foolish and over confident boasting. Pro. 27.1. Boast not thyself of to morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. 2. Let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth, a stranger, and not thine own lips.

XII. To accuse or witness against one fallily. 1. Kin. 21.13. Naboth blasphemed God and the king.

The affirmative part.

Preferre the good name of thy neighbour. Eccl. 7.3. A good name is better then a good oylment. Here is commanded.

I. A rejoicing for the credit and good estimation of thy neighbour. Gal. 5.22. But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, gentleness. Rom. 1.8. First I thank my God through Iesu Christ, for you all, because your faith is published throughout the whole world.

II. Willingly to acknowledge that good.

neff we see in any man whatsoever, and onely to speake of the same. Tit. 3. 2. I but they speake euill of no man, that they be no fighters, but self, shewing all meeknes to all men. Moreover, we must withall desire, receiue, and beleuee reuolt of our neighbours good. Act. 16. 1. Then came he to Derbe and Lystra, and beheld a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, a woman's son which was a Jewisse, and beleued, but his father was a Grecian. 2. Of whom the brethren which were at Lystra and Iconium reported wel. 3. Therefore Paul would that he should goe forth with him, and toke and circumcised him. Notwithstanding this must be so performed of vs, that in no wife we proue and allow of the vices and faults of men. Chro. 25. 2. And he did uprightly in the eyes of the Lord, but not with a perfect heart. & 27. 2. And he did uprightly in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father Pashiah did, save that he entered into the temple of the Lord, & the people did yet corrupt their waies.

III. To interpret a doubtfull euill to the better part. 1. Cor. 13. 5. Love thinketh not euill. 7. It beleueth all things, it begeth all things. Gen. 37. 31. And they took Joseph's coat, & killed a kid of the goats, & dipped the coat in the blood. 32. So they sent that purple-colored coat, & they brought it to their father, & said, this haue we found. So now, whether it be thy sons coat, or no. 33. Then he knew it, and said, It is my sons coat, a wicked beast hath denoured him, Joseph is surely come in pieces.

And here obserue the religion of that Joseph, which was betrothed to Mary, who when he saw that Mary was with child, was ready to conclude, that before her betrothing she was with child by committing fornication, then after by committing adultery. Math. 1. 19. But for all this, men must not be too too credulous or light of belief. Ioh. 2. 24. But Iesus did not commit himselfe vnto them, because he knew them all.

IV. Not to beleue an euill report, running abroad amongst the common people, by the whispering of tale-bearers, as it were by conduit pipes. Psal. 15. 3. He that slandereth not with his tongue, nor doth euill to his neighbor, nor receiveth a fable report against his neighbor. Ier. 40. 14. And they said vnto him, Knowest thou not that Baal is the King of the Ammonites, thou shalt not say that Baal is the son of Nerabiah, so sayest thou? but Gedaliah the sonne of Ahikam, beleued him not. 16. But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, said vnto Iohanan the sonne of Kareah, thou shalt not do this thing, for thou speakest falsly of Ishmael. But we ought also to be angry at such whisperings. Pro. 2. 23. As the North Wind driueth away the raine, so doth an angry countenance the flattering tongue.

V. To keepe secret the offence of our neighbour, except it must of necessity bee revealed. Prou. 10. 12. Hatred stirreth up contention: but love covereth all trespasses. Math. 1. 19. Then Joseph her husband being a iust man, and not willing to make her a publicke example, was minded to put her away secretly.

A man would suppose, that by this meane, we should be partakers of other mens finnes. But we must know, that we ought to conceale our neighbours imperfections, lest he should be provoked to offence, yet in the meane season, hee must be admonished, that hee may amend. Gal. 6. 1. Iam. 5. 19. Brethren, if any of you haue erred from the truth, and some man hath converted him, 20. Let him know, that he which hath converted the sinner from going astray out of his way, shall save a soule from death, and shall hide a multitude of finnes.

But if the sinne which is concealed, cannot thereby be taken away, then must we in loue and chatity, declare the same to those, which may remouee and amend the same. Gen. 37. 2. When Joseph was seauenteene yeares old, he kept sleep with his brethren, & the child was with the women of Bilhah, and with the sons of Ziphah, his fathers wives: and Joseph tolde vnto their father, that he euil sayings. 1. Cor. 1. 11. For it hath bin declared vnto me, my brethren of you, by them that are of the house of Cloe, that they are contentions among you. Math. 18. 16. But if he heare thee not, take with thee one or two, that by the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be confirmed.

VI. To get a good name and estimation among men, and to keepe the same when we haue gotten it. Phil. 4. 8. For hereafter in euery, whatsoeuer things are true, whatsoeuer things are honest, whatsoeuer things are iust, whatsoeuer things are pure, whatsoeuer things are of good report, if there be any vertue, if there be any praise, think on these things. A good name is gotten. 1. If we, seeking the kingdom of God before all things, do repent vs of al our sins, and with an earnest desire, embrace & follow after righteousness. Pro. 10. 7. The memoriall of the iust shall be blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. Mar. 14. 9. Verily I say vnto you, whosoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also shall be spoken of in remembrance of her. 2. We must haue a care both to iudge, & speake wel of others. Mar. 7. 2. With what iudgement ye iudge, ye shall be iudged. Eccl. 7. 23. Give not thine heart also to all the words that men shall say, lest thou doe heare thy neighbor cursing thee. 24. For oftentimes also thine heart knoweth, that thou likewise hast cursed others. 3. We must abstaine from all kinde of wickednesse, for one only vice or sinne doth obscure and darken a mans good name. Eccle. 10. 1. Dead flies cause to stink, & purrife the ointment of the Apothecary: so doth a little folly him that is in estimation, or wisdom, and for glory. 4. We must in all things earnestly seeke for the glory of God only, and not our own. Mat. 6. 5. And when thou prayest, be not as the hypocrites, for they loue to stand & pray in the Synagogues, & in the corners of the streetes, because they would be seene of men: verily, I say vnto you, they haue their reward. 6. But when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber, and when thou hast shut thy doore, pray vnto thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

. But

But if when we forsake the glory of God, honesty and godly men doe praise & testifie well of vs, we must not despise their testimony and commendation: and although they neuer praise vs, nor testifie of vs at all, yet must we take it in good part. 1. Cor. 1. 12. For our reioicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly purpasse, and not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God we haue had our conversation in the world, and most of all to you words. And c. 10. 13. But we will reioyce of things which are not within our measure, but according to the measure of the line, whereof God hath distributed to vs a measure, to attaine vnto you. Psal. 116. 5. This Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, and of my cup: thou shalt maintain mine inheritance, vnto me. 6. The lusts are fallen vnto me in pleasant places: yea I haue a faire heritage. 1. Cor. 1. 31. He that reioyceth, let him reioyce in the Lord.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of the tenth Commandement.

The tenth Commandement concerneth concupiscences against our neighbour.

The words are these:

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbours house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbours wife, nor his seruant, nor his maide, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that thy neighbour hath.

The Reiteration.

Covet.] The cogitation or motion of the heart, is of three sort: the first is some glancing or sudden thought, suggested to the mind by Satan, which suddenly vanissheth away, and is not received of the minde: This is no sin. For it was in Christ when he was tempted by the diuill, Math. 4. 1. 3. The second, is a more permanent thought or motion, the which as it were tickleth and inueigleth the mind with some inward ioy. The third, is a cogitation drawing from the wil and affection, full assent to sin. We are to vnderstand this commandement of the second sort of motions only: for the third kind which haue consent of wil, be long to the five former Commandements.

Now then to covet is to thinke inwardly, & also to desire any thing, whereby our neighbour may be hindered, albeit there ensue no assent of the will, to commit that euil. For the very Philosophers condemne couetousnesse of the heart; and Ciuilians disallow a purpose only to do euill, if it be conioyned with a manifest deliberation. And as for the concupiscence in this place forbidden, wee may well thinke it is more close and secret; because S. Paul, a Doctor of the Law, was altogether ignorant of it. Rom. 7. 7. I had not knowne lust, except the Law had said, Thou shalt not lust. A gaince, if that concupiscence immediately going before the consent, were not prohibited in this place, there must be a great confusion in the Decalogue. For the sixteenth commandement forbiddeth some kinde of coveting of our neighbours wife.

How.] The commandement is illustrated by an argument drawn from the distribution of the objects of concupiscence; whence it is apparent, that only euill concupiscence is condemned in this place. Col. 3. 5. For there is a good concupiscence or desire: as of meate and drinke, and that of the spirit. Gal. 5. 17. The spirit lusteth against the flesh.

The negative part.

Thou shalt not covet that which is thy neighbors.

Here are prohibited, 1. Concupiscence is selfe, namely, original corruption, in as much as it is hurtfull to our neighbour. Iam. 1. 14.

II. Each corrupt and fadden cogitation and passion of the heart, springing out of the bitter roote of concupiscence. Gal. 5. 17. The flesh lusteth against the spirit. Luke 10. 27. Then shalt thou love the Lord, with all thy soule. To this place appertaineth Satans suggestion, if after the first offer it be entertained and receiued in the closet of the heart.

III. The least cogitation and motion, the which, though it procure not content, delights, & tickles the heart. Ibid. Of this kind are these foolish wishes: I would such an house were mine, such a lining, such a thing, &c. And hitherto may we reuerse all vncleane dreames, arising from the force of concupiscence.

The affirmative part.

Covet that only which is allowable to thy neighbors good.

Here are commanded:

1. A pure heart towards our neighbor. 1. Tim. 1. 5. The end of the commandement is love out of a pure heart, a good conscience, & faith vnfeined. 11. Holy cogitations, and motions of the spirit. Paul prayeth, 1. Thess. 5. 23. That the Thessalonians may be holy, not onely in body and soule, but also in spirit. Eph. 4. 23.

III. A content against the euill affections and lusts of the flesh. Rom. 7. 22. I reioyce in the law of God, in regard of the inward man. 23. But I see another law of my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, and making me captive to the law of sin, which is in my members. 24. Miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death? 2. Cor. 12. 7, 8, 9.

CHAP. XXX.

Of the office of the Law.

The use of the Law in vntenerate persons, is three-fold.

The first, is to lay open sinne, and make it knowne. Rom. 3. 20. By the workes of the law shall no flesh be iustificed in his sight: for by the law comes the knowledge of sinne.

The second vice, is accidentally to eff. & augment sinne, by reason of the flesh, the which causeth man to decline from that which is commanded, and euer to incline to that which is prohibited. Rom. 7. 8. Sin took occasion by the commandment, and wrought in me all manner of concupiscence: for without the Law sinne is dead. 9. For I once was alive without the Law, but when the commandment came, sin revived. 10. But I did, and that commandment which was ordained unto life, was found to be unto me unto death.

The third vie, is to denounce eternall damnation for the least disobedience, without offering any hope of pardon. This sentence the law pronounceth against offendours, and by it, partly by threatening, partly by terrifying, it reigneth and ruleth ouer man. Rom. 3. 19. We know that whatsoeuer the law saith, it saith to thi which are under the law, that every mouth may be stoped, & al the world be culpable before God. Gal. 3. 10. As many as are of the works of the Law, are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all that is written in the booke of the law to do them. 2. Cor. 3. 7. If the ministration of death written with letters, & engraven in flowers, was glorious: 8. How shall not the ministration of the spirit be more glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation were glorious, &c.

The end why sinne reigned in man, is to vrge sinners to flee vnto Christ. Gal. 3. 22. The Scripture hath concluded all under sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should be giue to them that beleue. 24. Wherefore the Law was our school-master to Christ, Heb. 12. 18, 19, 20.

The continuance of this power of the law is perpetual, unless a sinner repent; and the very first act of repentance to free him, that he shall no more be under the law, but under grace. 2. Sam. 12. 13. Then said David to Nathan, I haue sinned against the Lord: wherefore Nathan saith to David, the Lord also hath forgiven thy sin, and thou shalt not die. Rom. 6. 14. Sin shall not have dominion ouer you: for ye are not under the Law, but under grace.

If therefore, thou desirest seriously eternal life: first, take a narrow examination of thy selfe, and the course of thy life, by the square of Gods law: then set before thine eyes the curse that is due vnto sinne, that thus bewailing thy misery, & despairing utterly of thine owne power, to attaine euerlasting happines, thou maist renounce thy selfe, and be pronounced to seeke and flee vnto Christ Iesus.

The vse of the Law in such as are regenerate, is far otherwise: for it guideth them to new obedience in the whole course of their life, which obedience is acceptable to God by Christ. Rom. 2. 3. 1. Do we therefore through faith make the law of none effect? God forbid: nay we rather establish the law. Plal. 119. 24. Thy testimonies are my delight, they are my counsellors. V. 105. Thy words is a lamp vnto my feet, and a light vnto my pathes.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of the covenant of Grace.

Hitherto concerning the covenant of works, and of the Law, now followeth the covenant of grace.

A The covenant of grace, is that whereby God freely promising Christ, and his benefits, exacts againe of man, that he would by faith receiue Christ, & repent of his sins. Heb. 2. 18. In that day will I make a covenant for them, &c. 19. And I will marry thee vnto me for euerye. 20. I will marry thee vnto me in righteousness, and in iudgement, and in mercy, and in compassions. 20. I will marry thee vnto me in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord. Ezch. 36. 25. I will purge cleane water vpon you, and ye shall be cleane: yea, from all your filthinesse, and from all your idolls will I cleanse you. 26. And I will giue you a new heart: & a new spirit will I put within you. 27. And cause you to walke in my statutes. Mal. 3. 1. The Lord, Whome ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple: even the messenger of the covenant whom ye desire: behold, he shall come saith the Lord of Hosts.

This covenant is also named a Testament: for it hath partly the nature & properties of a testament or will. For it is confirmed by the death of the testator. Heb. 9. 16. Where a testament is, there must bee the death of him that made the testament. 17. For the testament is confirmed when men are dead: for it is yet of no force, so long as he that made it, is alive. Secondly, in this covenant we doe not much offer, for promise any great matter to God, as in a manner onely receiue: euen as the last will and testament of a man, is not for the testators, but for the heires commodity.

C The Couenant, albe it he be one in substance, yet is it distinguished into the old and new testament.

The old testament or covenant is that, which in types and shadowes prefigured Christ to come, and to be exhibited.

The new testament declareth Christ already come in the flesh, and is apparently shewed in the Gospel.

The Gospel is that part of Gods word which containes a most worthy & welcome message: namely, that mankind is fully redeemed by the blood of Iesus Christ, the onely begotten Son of God, manifested in flesh, so that now for all such as repent & beleue in Christ Iesus, there is prepared a full remission of all their finnes, together with saluation & life euerlasting. Ioh. 3. 14. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness: so must the son of man be lifted up. V. 15. That whoso beleueth in him, should not perish, but haue euerlasting life. Act. 10. 43. To him also giue all the Prophets witness, that through his name, al that beleue in him, shall receiue remission of sins.

D The end and vse of the Gospel is, first to manifest that righteousness in Christ, whereby the whole law is fully satisfied, and saluation attained. Secondly, it is the instrument, and, as it were, the conduit pipe of the holy Ghost, to fashion and detieue faith into the foule: by which faith, they which beleue, doe, as with an hand, apprehend Christ righteousnes. Rom. 1. 16. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God to saluation to as many as beleue, to the Iewe first, and then to the Grecian. 17. For the inflicke of God is reuelled by it, from faith to faith. Ioh. 6. 63. It is the spirit which quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing: the words which I speake are spirit and life. 1. Cor. 1. 21. It pleased God by the foolishnesse of preaching, to save such as beleue.

The Gospel preached is, in the flourishing estate of Christ church, that ordinary means to beget faith: but in the ruinous estate of the same, when as by apostasie, the foundations thereof are shaken, and the cleere light of the word is darkened, then this word read or repeated, yea the very sound thereof being but once heard, is by the assistance of Gods spirit, extraordinarily effectually, so them whom God will haue called out of that great darkness into his exceeding light. Rom. 10. 14. How shall they call on him in whom they haue not beleued? and how shall they beleue in him, of whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a preacher? Act. 11. 19. And they which were scattered abroad, because of the affliction that arose about Steuen, walked throughout til they came to Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antiochia, preaching the word to no man, but to the Iewes only. 20. Now some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which when they were come into Antiochia, spake vnto the Grecians and preached the Lord Iesu.

21. And the hand of the Lord was with them, so that a great number beleued, and turned vnto the Lord. Ioh. 4. 28. The woman then left her water-pot, & went her way into the city, and said to the men. 29. Come, and see a man which hath told me all things that euer I did: Is not he the Christ? then they went out of the city, & came vnto him. 39. Now many of the Samaritans beleued in him, for the saying of the woman, which testified, He hath told me all things that euer I did. 41. And many more beleued, because of his owne word. 42. And they said vnto the woman, now we beleue, not because of thy saying: for we haue heard him our selves, and know that this is indeed the Christ the Saviour of the world. Rom. 10. 18. I demand, haue they not heard? no doubt: their sound went through all the earth, and their words into the ends of the world. Thus we may see, how many of our fore-fathers, & ancestors in the midst of Popery obtained eternal life. Reu. 12. 17. The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went & made war with the remnant of her seed, which kept the commandments of God, & haue the testimony of Iesu Christ. Rom. 11. 4. What faith the diuine Oracles? I haue referred me to 7. thousand men, which neuer bowed knee to Baal.

CHAP. XXXII.

Of the Sacraments.

Thus much of the preaching of the word: now followeth the appendants to the same: namely, the Sacraments.

A Sacrament is that, whereby Christ and his fauing graces, are by certaine externall rites, signified, exhibited, and sealed to a Christian man. Roman. 4. 11. He receiued the signe

A of circumcision, as the seale of the righeousnes of the faith which he had, when he was uncircumcised. Gen. 17. 11. Te shall circumcision be the forskin of your flesh, and it shall be a signe of the couenant betwene me and you.

God alone is the author of a Sacrament, for the signe cannot confirme any thing at all, but by the consent and promise of him, at whose hands the benefite promised must be received. Therefore God it is alone, which appointeth signes of grace, in whose alone power it is to bestow grace.

And God did make a Sacrament, by the sacramentall word, as August. witnesseth, saying: Let the word come to the element, & there is made a Sacrament.

B The sacramentall word, is the word of institution, the which God after a full manner, hath set down in each Sacrament. Of this word there are two parts: the commandment, and the promise. The commandment is, by which Christ appointeth the administration of the Sacraments, and the receiving of the same. As in Baptisme, See into al the world, baptizing them in the name, &c. Mat. 28. 19. In the Lords Supper, Take, eate, drinke, doe ye this. Mat. 26. 26. The promise is the other part of the institution, whereby God ordained elements, that they might be instruments and seales of his grace. As in Baptisme, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the holy Ghost. In the Supper, This is my body giuen for you: and, This is my blood of the new Testament. Therefore this word in the administration of the Sacrament ought to be pronounced distinctly and aloud, yea, and as occasion serueth, explained also: to the end, that all they to whom the commandment and promise appertaineth, may know and vnderstand the same. And hence it is very plaine, that the Ministers impietie, doth not make a nullity of the Sacrament, neither doth it any whit hinder a worthy receiuer: no more then the piety of a good minister can profite an vnworthy receiuer: because all the efficacy in worthinesse thereof, dependeth onely vpon Gods institution, so be it that be observed.

The parts of a Sacrament are, the signe, and the thing of a Sacrament.

D The signe is either the matter sensible, or the action come faint about the same.

The matter sensible, is usually called the signe.

The mutation of the signe, is not natural: by changing the substance of the thing; but respectiue, that is only in regard of the vse. For it is secured from a common to an holy vse: Therefore there is not any such either force or efficacy of making vs holy, inherent or tyed vnto the externall signes, as there is naturally bathes to purifie corrupt diseases: but all such efficacy is wholly appropriate to the holy spirituality, so as it is an inseparable companion of true faith and repentance, and to such as turne vnto the Lord, is, together with the signe, exhibited. Whence it cometh to passe, that by Gods ordinance ; a certaine signification of grace, and feeling thereof agreeeth to the signe.

The thing of the Sacrament, is either Christ and his graces which concerne our saluation, or the action conuerfant about Christ.

I say first Christ, and then his grace, because no man receiued grace from Christ, vntlesse he be made truly partaker of his very body and blood ; euen as no man can by right reape any fruite of the ground, whereof first he hath no iust title and interest.

The action about Christ is spirituall, and is either the action of God, or of faith.

The action of God, is either the offering, or the application of Christ and his graces to the faithfull.

The action of faith, is the consideration, desire, apprehension, and receiuing of Christ, in the lawfull vse of the Sacrament.

Thus much of the parts of the Sacrament : now followeth the vnion of the parts.

This sacramentall vnion, I. Is not naturall according to place : for there is no mutation of the signe into the thing signified, neither is the thing signified, either including in, or fastned vpon the signe. But II. It is respectiue, because there is a certaine agreement and proportion of the externall things with the internall, and of the actions of one with the actions of the other: whereby it commeth to passe, that the signes, as it were certen visible words incurring into the externall senses, doe by a certaine proportionable resemblance draw a Christian minde to the consideration of the things signified, and to be applied.

This mutuall, and, as I may say, sacramental relation, is the cause of so many figuratiue speeches and Metonymies which are vsed : as when one thing in the Sacrament is put for another. As.

I. The signe is vsed for the thing signified.

Ioh. 6. 51. I am the living bread, which came downe from heauen: if any eate this bread, he shall liue for euer, &c. the bread which I will giue, is my flesh, which I wil giue for the life of the world. I. Cor. 5. 7. Christ our Pasche is sacrificed for vs I. Cor. 10. 17. We that are many, are one bread, &c. one body because we are all partakers of one bread.

II. The name of the thing signified, is giuen to the signe; as; The bread is Christs body, the cup is Christs blood. I. Cor. 11. 24. Mat. 26. 28. Te shall eate it (namely the Lambe) in haste, for it is the Lords Pasche. Exod. 12. 11.

III. The effect of the thing signified, is giuen to the signe, as circumcision is a covenant, Gen. 17. 10. Act. 7. 8. The cup is the new Testament in Christs blood. Luk. 22. 20. Baptisme is the washing of the new birth. Tit. 3. 5.

IV. That which properly belongeth to the signe is attributed to the thing signified. Deut. 10. 16. Circumcise the foreskinne of your heart. Ioh. 6. 53. Who eate the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye shall haue new life in you.

The end why a Sacrament was ordained, is, 1. for the better confirmation of our faith: for by it, as by certaine pledges giuen, God of his great mercy, doth as it were, binde him selfe vnto vs. Now a Sacrament doth confirme our faith, not by any inherent or proper power it hath in it selfe, as hath a soueraigne medicine receiued by a patient, the which, whether a man sleepe or wake, confirmeth his strength: but rather by reasoning, and vsing the signes ; when the holy Ghost shall frame in our hearts such a conclusion as this :

All such as are conueried, rightly vsing the Sacraments, shall receiue Christ and his graces.

But I am conueried, and either now doe, or before haue rightly vsed the Sacraments?

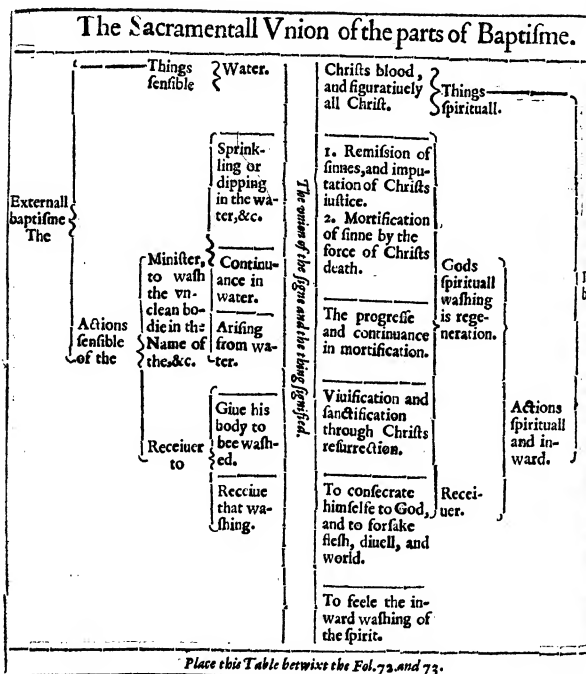

Therefore, I shall receiue Christ and his graces.

II. That it may bee a badge and note of that profession, by which the true Church of God is distinguished from other congregations. III. That it might be a meanes to perseuer and spread abroad the doctrine of the Gospell. IV. It serueth to binde the faithfull, that they doe continue both loyall and gratefull to their Lord God. V. It is the bond of mutuall amity betwixt the faithfull.

How a Sacrament is necessary to saluation. The covenant of grace is absolutely necessary to saluation: for of necessity a man must be within the covenant, and receiue Christ Iesus the very substance thereof ; or perish eternally ; but a Sacrament is not absolutely necessary, but only as it is a proppe and stay for faith to leane vpon. For it cannot title vs into the inheritance of the sons of God, as the covenant doth, but onely by reason of faith going before, it doth seale that which before was bestowed vpon vs. As wee see in humane contracts the bond ariseth from the mutuall consent of the parties ; but the instrument or bill, &c. the setting to of the seale, they do not make but rather confirme the bond mutually before made : the which mutuall consent remaining firme, the contract standeth still in force, though the instrument or seale be wanting.

Therefore the want of a Sacrament doth not condemne, but the contempt is that which will condemne a man. The want of a Sacrament is, when we are iustly hindred from the receiuing of the same: as when one is preuented by death, or liueth in such a place where he cannot receiue the Sacrament. And as for the neglect of a Sacrament, albeie it be a very grievous sinne, yet it is such an one, as for which hee that is heartily penitent for the same, may well hope for pardon.

The holy vse of a Sacrament is, when such as are truly conueried, doe those rites which God hath prescribed vnto the true ends of the Sacrament. Therefore 1. the reprobate, though God offer the whole Sacrament vnto them, yet they receiue the signes alone without the things signified by the signes: because the signe without the right vse thereof, is not a Sacrament to the receiuer of it. So Paul saith, Rom. 2. 25. Circumcisia verily is profitable if thou keep the law: but if thou be a transgressor of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision. And Augst. hath this saying, If thou receive it carnally, yet carnally it is not to be spirituall, though to thee it be so. II. The elect, as yet not converted to the Lord, doe receive in like manner the bare signes without the thing signified; yet so as that Sacrament shall in them afterward haue his good effect. For the Sacrament receiued before a mans conversion, is afterward to the penitent both ratified, and becometh profitable: and that vse of the Sacrament which before was vnderly vnlawfull, doth then become very lawfull. III. The elect already converted, doe to their saluation receive, both the signe and the thing signified together; yet so, as that for their vnworthie receiving thereof, the which cometh to passe by reason of their manifold iniquities, and relapses into sinne, they are subiect vnto temporall punishments.

The difference betwixt a Sacrament and a Sacrifice, is; in a Sacrament God bestoweth his graces vpon vs: but in a sacrifice we returne vnto God faith and obedience.

There are many differences betwixt the Sacraments of the Old Testament, and these of the new. I. They were many; these but few. II. They pointed at Christ to come; these shew that he is come. III. They were appropriate vnto the posteritie of Abraham; but these are common to the whole Church culled out of the Iewes and Gentiles.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of Baptisme.

THere are two Sacraments. 1. Cor. 10. 1. I would not haue you ignorant, that all our Fathers were vnder the cloud, and all passed through the sea. 2. And were all baptized vnto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea. 3. And did all eate the same spirituall meat. 4. And drinke all the same spirituall drinke: (for they drinke of the spirituall rocke that followed them, which rocke was Christ.) Tertul. 4. booke contra Marcion. Augst. de Symbol. ad Catechum. 4. booke. 6. cap.

The first Sacrament is that, whereby Christians are initiated, and admitted into the Church of God: and this is Baptisme.

The second Sacrament, whereby they are perpetually preferred and nourished in the same Church, is the Lords Supper.

Baptisme, is a Sacrament, by which such as are within the couenant, are washed with water, in the name of the Father, the Son, & the holy Ghost, that being thus engrafted into Christ, they may haue perpetuall fellowship with him. Mat. 28. 19. Go, teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son, & the holy Ghost, Mar. 16. 16. He that beleueth & is baptized, shall be saved: he that beleueth not shall be condemned. 1. Cor. 1. 13. Is Christ diuided? was Paul crucified for you? whether were ye baptized into the name of Paul? 14. I thank God, I baptized none of you but Christ, and Gainus. 15. Least any should say, I had baptized into mine owne name.

Within the couenant are all the seede of Abraham, or the seede of the faithfull. These are either of riper yeares, or infants.

Those of riper yeares, are all such as adioyning themselves to the visible Church, doe both testifie their repentance of their sins, and hold the foundations of religion, taught in the same Church, Math. 3. 6. And they were baptized of him in Iordan, confessing their sins. A. C. 8. 35. As they went they came to a water, then the Eunuch said, See, here is water, what hindereth me to be baptized? 37. Then Philip said, If thou beleeue with all thine heart, thou mayest: he said, I beleeue that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God.

38. And they went downe into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and bee baptized him. Exod. 12. 48. If a stranger dwell with thee, and will obserue the Passouer of the Lord, let him circumcise all the males that belong vnto him, and then let him come and obserue it, and then he shall be as one that is borne in the land: for none uncircumcised person shall eate thereof.

Infants within the Couenant, are such as haue one at the least of their parents faithfull. 1. Cor. 6. 14. The vnbetlewed husband is sanctified by the wife, & the vnbetlewed wife is sanctified by the husband, also were your children vnclean, but now they are holy. Rom. 11. 16. If the first fruits be holy, so is the whole lump: & if the root be holy, so are the branches. Gen. 17. 7. I will establish my couenant between me & thee, & thy seed after thee, in their generatiou for an everlasting couenant, to be God vnto thee, & thy seed after thee, 13. He that is borne in thine house, and he that is bought with money, must needs be circumcised: so my couenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting couenant.

A. C. 16. 31. They said, beleeue in the Lord Iesus, and thou shalt be saved, and thy whole household. Quest. How are the children of faithfull parents in the couenant?

Ans. Holy parents are two waies to be considered. First, as they were the founnes of the first Adam, and so are as yet partly carnall: In this estate they in like sort doe beget their fonnest the children of wrath. For the father begetteth a son, not as he is a good man, but simply as a man; and therefore being impure, he must needs beget that which is impure. Secondly, we must consider the parents as they are the founnes of God, engrafted into the second Adam: In this estate though they cannot deriue faith vnto their posterity, (for the founnes of God are not made such by naturall generation, but by the Adoption of God the Father, yet may they beleeue both for themselves and others, according to the tenour of the couenant of grace: as Adam did fin both for himselfe & others: and as Parents in bargaines do couenant both for themselves and their heires after them. Hence it is that Paul saith, 1. Cor. 7. 14. that the parents are like vnto the first fruits which sanctifie the whole lump. So then, the faith of the Parents maketh those their children to be accounted in the covenant, which by reason of their age doe not yet actually beleue.

To be baptized into the name of the Father, &c. is by the receipt of the outward signe of washing, to be made one of Gods family, which is his Church, and to be partaker of the priuiledges thereof. Gen. 48. 16. The Angel which hath deliuered me from all euill, blesse the children, & let my name be named vpon them, and the name of my father, Abraham and Isaac, that they may grow as fish into multitude, in the midst of the earth. Etsa. 4. 1. In that day shall I seane Women take hold of one mans saying, We will ease our owne bread, & we will weare our owne garments: onely let vs be called by thy name, and take away our reproach. By this it is manifest, that in this washing of Baptisme, there is propounded and sealed a maruileous solemne covenant and contract: first of God with the baptized; that God the Father vouchsafeth to receiue him into fauour, the Sonne to redeeme him, the holy Ghost to purifie and regenerate him: secondly, of the baptized with God; who promitteth to acknowledge, inuocate, and worship none other God, but the true Iehouah, which is the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost.

The externall and visible matter of Baptisme, is water: for the Minister may not baptize with any other liquor, but onely with naturall water.

This was the iudgement of the Primitive Church. For when as a certaine minister, for want of water, took sand, and baptized one with that: she partie thus befouled, was further baptized, the former being esteemed of none effect. Niceph. hitor. 3. booke, 33. chapter.

The externall forme of baptisme, is the Ministers washing of the baptized, according to the prescript rule of Gods word.

The ancient custome of baptizing, was to dippe, and, as it were, to digne all the body of the baptized in the water, as may appeare in Paul, Rom. 6. and the Councils of Laodicea, and Neocæsarea: but now especially in cold countries, the Church vseth only to sprinkle the baptized, by reason of childrens weaknes; for very few of ripe yeares are now adaeis baptized. We neede not much to maruelle at this alteration, seeing charitie and necessity may dispence with ceremonies, and mitigate in equitie the sharpnesse of them.

The Sacramentall vnion of the parts of baptisme, is on this fort.

The element of water whereby the vncleanes of the body is purified, by a most conuenient proportion shadoweth out the blood of Christ, and by the figure Synecdoche, taking the part for the whole, Christ. 1. Ioh. 1. 7. And the blood of Iesuu Christ cleanseth vs from all sin.

The action of the Minister, is his washing of the party baptized with the element of water. This sealeth and confirmeth a double action of God. 1. the ingrafting or incorporating of the partie baptized into Christ. Gal. 3. 27. As many as are baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ. 1. Cor. 12. 13. By one spirit we are all baptized into one body. 11. Our spirituall regeneration. Tit. 3. 5. Not by the workes of righteousness, which we had done, but according to his mercy hee saued vs, by the washing of the new birth, and the renewing of the holy Ghost.

Of washing there be three parts. The putting into the water: the continuance in the water: and the coming out of the water.

The putting into, or the sprinkling of water, doth ratifie, 1. the shedding of the blood of Christ for the remission of all our sins, and the imputation of his righte outnesse. Act. 22. 16. Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins in calling on the name of the Lord. 1. Cor. 6. 11. And such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are iustified in the name of the Lord Iesuu, & by the spirit of our God. 11. The mortification of sin by the power of Christs death. Rom. 6. 3. Know ye not, that all we which haue bene baptized into Iesuu Christ, haue bene baptized into his death? 6. 7. Know this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serue sin: for he that is dead is freed from sinne.

The continuance in the water, noteth the buriall of sinne; namely, a continuall increase of mortification by the power both of Christ his death and buriall. Rom. 6. 4. We are buried then with him by baptisme into his death.

The coming out of the water, doth confirme our spiritual viuification to newnesse of life in all holines and iustice, the which we attain vnto by the power of Christs resurrection. Rom. 6. 4. Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father: so we also should walke in the newnes of life. 5. for if we be grafted with him to the similitude of his death, euen so shall we be to the similitude of his resurrection.

The action of the party to be baptized, is two-fold.

The first, is to offer himselfe to be baptized before the Minister, and that in the presence of the congregation. This signifieth that he doth consecrate himselfe vnto the Lord, and that he vterly renounceth the flesh, the world and the diuell. 1. Pet. 3. 21. To the which also the figure which now saucth vs, euen baptisme agreeth, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but in that a good conscience maketh request vnto God) by the resurrection of Iesuu Christ.

The second, is to receive the externall washing by water: this signifieth, that the partie baptized doth receiue the internall washings, which is by the blood of Christ, or at the least, that it is offered vnto him.

Rebaptizing is at no hand to be admitted: for as in naturall generation man is once only born, so is it in spirituall regeneration. Therefore they that are baptized of a minister, which is an heretike, not yet degraded from that calling, (if the externall forme of administration be obserued) must not be baptized againe of the Church of God; especially, if after baptime they haue beene made partakers of the Lords Supper: onely they ought to be instructed in the true faith. Ensch. Eccles. bish. lib. 7. cap. 8. faith. There was with vs an ancient professour of the faith, yea, before I was created Bishop, may, before my predecessour Hieracles: who when he was present at the Baptisme of some, and heard what questions they were asked, and what answer they returned, forthwith came sweeping vnto me, and humbling himselfe before me, confessed that he was baptized by an heretike: yet in regard of that administration which he saw in our Church, he accounted that no baptisme, in that the confession there used, was fraught with blasphemies. This also he added that he was for this offence so fore grieved, that he durst not so much as lift up his eyes to heauen: wherefore he most earnestly besought mee, that he might be cleansed and purified with the baptisme of our Church, & so receive the grace of the 14. Ghost. The which notwithstanding, I durst not presume to administer, but said, it was sufficient for him that he had bin so long a professour among vs, & that at the receipt of the Lords Supper: he answered, Amen, these things I told him were of force enough to purge him. And therefore I aduised him, to rest him selfe in his former faith and conscience already sufficiently purified, especially in that he so long was partaker with vs in the Sacraments. Augult. lib. 3. cap. 1. contra. Petil. literas.

The right vse of baptisme is this. When inwardly in thine heart thou sensibly feelest, that through the heat of concupiscence, thou art moued to commit some sin, then begin to haue some holy meditation of that solemne vow, which thou didst make to God in baptisme.

Again, if through infirmities, thou fallest once or often into some sinne, still haue recourse vnto baptisme, that there thou maist receive courage to thy soule. For although baptisme be but once onely administered, yet that once testifieth that all mens finnes past, present, and to come, are washed away. 1. Pet. 3. 21. Eph. 5. 25, 26, 27. Therefore baptisme may be truly termed the Sacrament of repentance, and as it were, a board to swimme vpon, when a man shall feare the ship-wrackle of his soule. Mark. 1. 4. 1. Tim. 1. 19. Rom. 6. verse 4. 6.

Last of all, see thou neuer rest, till such time as thou haue a feeling of that renewing power signified in baptisme: namely, the power of Christs death mortifying sinne, and the verue of his resurrection, in the renouation of the spirit.

CHAP. XXXIV. Of the Lords Supper.

The Lords Supper is a Sacrament, where with in the signes of bread & wine, such as are engrafted into Christ, are in him daily, in a spirituall manner, nourished to eternall life. 1. Cor. 11. 23, 24, 25. Rom. 6. 5.

The proportion of the parts of the Lords Supper, is on this wise.

The elements of bread and wine, are signes and scales of the bodie and blood of Christ.

The action of the Minister, is a note of Gods action.

The Ministers action is four-fold. The first, is his taking the bread and wine in his owne hands: this doth seale the action of God the Father, by which he from all eternitie, did separate and elect his Sonne, to performe the dutie of a Mediatour betwixt God and man, Ioh. 6. 27. For him both the Father sealed.

The second, is his blessing of it, whereby he, by the recital of the promises, & prayers conueined to that end, doth actually separate the bread and wine receiued from their common vnto an holy vse. This doth seale that action of God, by which he did in the fulnes of time, send Christ to performe the office of a Mediatour, vnto the which he was fore-ordained.

The third, is the breaking of the bread, and powring out of the wine; this doth seale the passion of Christ, by which he verily vpon the crosse was, both in soule and body, bruised for our transgressions.

The fourth, is his distributing of the bread and wine into the hands of the communicants. This sealeth the action of God, offering Christ vnto all, yea, to the hypocrites: but giuing him in dedee vnto the faithful, for the daily increase of their faith, and repentance.

The action of the receiver, is double. The first, is his taking the bread and wine in his hand. This sealeth a spirituall action of the receiuer, namely, his apprehension of Christ by the hand of faith. Ioh. 1. 12.

The second, is his eating of the bread, and drinking of the wine, to the nourishment of his bodie. This sealeth the application of Christ by faith, that the feeling of his true vnion and communion with Christ may daily be increased. 1. Cor. 10. 16. The cup of blessing which we blesse, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? the bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the bodie of Christ?

The doctrine of transubstantiation, which teacheth, that the bread turned into the very body of Christ, & the wine into his blood, is a very fable: the reasons why, are these. I. In the first institution of the Supper, which was before Christ his passion, the bodie of Christ was then eaten as already crucified: Now, how the body of Christ crucified should after a corporall manner be eaten, he himselfe being not as yet crucified, it is impossible to imagine. II. The bread after the consecration, is distributed into parts: but the whole body of Christ is receiued of euery singular communicant. III. The bread is the communion of Christs body: therefore not his very body. IV. By this means the body of Christ should not onely be made of the substance of the virgin Mary but also of the bakers bread. V. Let the bread and wine be kept for a time, and the bread will mould, and the wine turne to the vinegar after the confection; by which we may conclude, that there did remaine the substance of bread and wine. V. This opinion quite overthroweth the sacramental vni-^unamely, the proportion which is betwixt the signe and the thing signified.

The like make be said of the Lutherans substantiat^o, whereby they beare men in hand that there is a coexistence, by which the bodie of Christ, is either in, or with, or vnder the bread. Against this, these reasons may suffice: I. The whole action of the Supper is done in remembrance of Christ: now what need that, if the body of Christ were really present? II. 1. Cor. 10. 16. & 17. Whom the beaues must containe, until the time that all things must be reuered. III. This is an effectual property of every magnitude, and therefore of the body of Christ, to be in one place, and circumscribed or compassed of one place. IV. If that Christs body were eaten corporally, then should the wicked be well as the faithful be partakers of the flesh of Christ: but to cate his flesh, is to beleue in him, & to haue eternall life. V. It were very absurd to thinke, that Christ sitting amongst his Disciples, did with his own hands take his own body, & giue it wholly to each of his Disciples.

Such as will in an holy sort prepare themselves to celebrate the Lords Supper, must haue: First, a knowledge of God, and mans fall, and of the promised restauration into the cocumane by Christ. 1. Cor. 11. 26. So often as ye shall eate this bread, and drinke of this cuppe, ye shew the death of the Lord till he come. 29. And discern his body.

Secondly, true faith in Christ: for euery man receiueh so much, as he beleueh he receiueh. Heb. 4. 2. For vnto vs was the Gospel preached, as also vnto them: but the word that they heard, profited not them, because it was not mixed with faith in things that heard it. Furthermore, true repentance of their sins. Esa 66. 3. He that killeth a bullocke is as if he slay a man: he that sacrificeth a sheepe, as if he cut off a dogges necke: he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swines blood: he that remembereth himselfe, as if he blessed an idol: yea they haue chosen their owne waies, and their soules delighteth in their abominations. Psal. 16. 6. I wash mine hands in innocency, O Lord, and come before thine altar.

Thirdly, renewed faith and repentance, for daily & new sins committed vpon infirmity: because euery new sinne requireth a new act, both of repentance and faith: and this reputation must be scene by our reconciliation of our selues to our neighbours, for iniuries and wrongs. Math. 5. 22. If thou bring thy gift to the altar, & there rememberst thy brother hath ought against thee, 24. Leave thy gift before the altar, & goe first be reconciled to thy brother, then come and offer thy gift. If thou canst come furnished with these things, abstaine not from the Lords table, by reason of thy many infirmities.

A If being thus prepared, thou feelest that thou hast a corrupt & rebellious heart, know this: that then thou art well disposed to the Lords table, when thou art liuely touched with a sense of thy crooked disposition. Luk 4. 18. The spirit of the Lord is vpon me, because he hath anointed me, that I should preach the Gospel to the poore: he hath sent me, that I should heale the broken hearted, that I should preach deliverance to the captiues, and recovering of sight to the blind, that I should set at liberty them that are bound. Mat. 15. 24. He answered & said, I am not sent, but to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. The Lords Supper is a medicine to the diseased and languishing soules: and therefore men must as well seeke to purifie & heale their hearts in it, as to bring pure and found hearts vnto it.

B If thou feele in thy selfe some great defect and want of faith, pray vnto God earnestly, that he will vouchsafe to increase it. Mark. 9. 24. The father of the child crying with teares, said Lord, I beleue, helpe mine unbeliefe.

If thou canst not doe this thy selfe, vnto the aide of the faithfull, which may by their faith carrie thee, as men did the sicke of the palfie vpon their shoulders, and laide him before Christ. Mark. 2. 3.

If thou come not furnished on this manner to the Lords table, thou shalt be adiudged guilty of the body & blood of Christ: as he is guilty of high treason, who doth counterfeite or clip the Princes coine. 1. Cor. 11. 27. He that eateh this bread, & drinkeh this cup unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of Christ.

But such as feele not themselves penitent, they neither can come to the Lords table without repentance, lest they eate and drinke their own damnation, neither must they defer repentance, by which they may come, lest they procure to themselves final destruction.

CHAP. XXXV.

Of the degrees of executing Gods decree of Election.

VVE haue hitherto declared the outward means, whereby Gods decree of election is executed. Now follow the degrees of executing the same.

D The degrees are in number two. The loue of God, and the declaration of his loue. Eph. 1. 6. To the praise of the glorie of his grace, where with he hath made vs accepted in his blood. 9. And hath opened vnto vs the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in him.

Gods loue is that, whereby God doth freely loue all such as are chosen in Christ Iesus, though in themselves altogether corrupt. 1. Ioh. 4. 19. We loue him because he loued vs first. Rom. 5. 8. God setteth out his loue towards vs, seeing that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. 10. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Sonne, much more we being reconciled shall be saved by his life.

The declaration of Gods loue is two-fold, The first, towards infants elected to saluation,

the second, towards men of riper yeares.

The declaration of Gods loue towards Infants, is on this manner:

Infants already elected, albeit they in the wombe of their mother before they were borne, or presently after, depart this life, they, I say, being after a secret & vnspokeable manner by Gods spirit engrafted into Christ, obtaine eternall saluation. 1. Cor. 12. 13. By one spirit we are all baptized into one bodie, whether Iewes, or Grecians, bond, or free, and haue bene all made to drinke into one spirit. Luk. 1. 35. The Angel answered, and said vnto her. The holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, and the power of the most High shall ouer shadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the Sonne of God. 41. And it came to passe, as Elizabeth heard the salutation of Mary, she babe sprang in her belly, and Elizabeth was filled with the holy Ghost. 64. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake and praised God. 80. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit. Lec. 1. 9. Before I formed thee in the wombe, I knew thee, and before thou camest out of the wombe, I sanctified thee.

I call the manner of Infants saluation secret and vnspokeable, because I. they want actual faith to receiue Christ for actual faith necessarily presupposeth a knowledge of Gods free promise, the which he that beleueh, doth apply vnto himselfe: but this, infants cannot any waies possibly performe. And surely, if infants should haue faith actually, they generally either loose it when they come to mens estate, or at least they no signes thereof, neither of which could be true, if before they had receiued actual faith. Nay, we see that in those of riper yeares, there are not so much as the shadowes or sparkes of faith to be scene, before they be called by the preaching of the Gospel. II. Infants are said to be regenerated onely in regard of their internal qualities and inclinations, not in regard of any motions, or actions of the minde, will, or affections. And therefore they wait those terrors of conscience, which come before repentance, as occasions thereof, in such as are of riper yeares of discretion. Again, they are not troubled with that conflict & combat betwixt the flesh and the spirit, where with those faithfull ones that are of more yeares are maruellously exercised.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Concerning the first degree of the declaration of Gods loue.

THE declaration of Gods loue, in those of yeares of discretion, hath especially foure degrees. Rom. 8. 30. 1. Cor. 1. 30.

The first degree, is an effectual calling, whereby a sinner being seuered from the world, is entertained into Gods family. Eph. 2. 17. And came, and preached peace vnto you, which were a farre off, and to them that were nere. 19. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and sojourners, but citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God.

A Of this there be 2. parts. The first is election, which is a separation of a sinner from the cursed estate of all mankind. Ioh. 5. 19. If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne: but because ye are not of the world, but I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

The second, is the reciprocal donation or free gift of God the Father, whereby he becometh the sinner full man to bee faued vpon Christ, and Christ againe actually & most effectually vpon that sinner full man: so that he may boldly say this thing, namely Christ, both God & man, is mine, and I for my benefit and vse enjoy the life. The like we see in wedlocke: The husband faith, this woman is my wife, whom her parents haue giuen vnto me, so that, she being fully mine, I may both haue her, and gouerne her: Again, the woman may say, this man is mine husband, who hath bestowed himselfe vpon me, and doth cherish me as his wife. Rom. 8. 32. He spared not his owne Son, but gave him for vs. Esa. 9. 6. Vnto vs a child is borne, & vnto vs a son is giuen. Ioh. 17. 2. Thou hast giuen him power vpon all flesh, that he should giue eternall life to all them whom thou hast giuen him. 6. I haue declared thy name to the men which thou hast sent me out of the world: thine they were, and thou hast kept them, and they kept thy word. 7. Now they know that all things which thou hast giuen me, are of thee. Ioh. 10. 29. My father, which gave them me, is greater than all, & none is able to take them out of my fathers hands.

C Hence cometh that admirable vni-^o, or conjunction, which is the ingrafting of such as are to be faued, into Christ, & their growing vp together with him: so that after a peculiar manner, Christ is made the head and euery repentant sinner, a member of his mystical bodie. Ioh. 17. 20. I pray not for these alone, but for them also which shall beleue in me, through their word. 21. That they all may be one, as thou, O father, art in me, and I in thee: even that they may be also one in vs. Eph. 5. 30. We are members of his body of his flesh, and of his bones. Ioh. 15. 1. I am that true vine, and my father is the husbandman. 2. Every branch that beareth not fruit in me, he taketh away: and euery one that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Eph. 2. 20. Built vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, whose corner stone is Iesus Christ: 21. In whom all the building coupled together, groweth vnto an holy temple in the Lord. 22. In whom ye are all built together, to be the habitation of God by the spirit.

This albeit it be a most nere and reall vni-^o, yet we must not thinke, that it is, by touching, mixture, or, as it were, by folding of one soule with another, neither by a bare agreement of the soules among their selues: but by the communion and operation of the same spirit, which being by nature infinite, is of sufficient ability to conioyne those things together, which are of themselves farre distant from each other: the like we see in the soule of man, which conioyneth the head with the

foote. Eph. 2. 22. 3. Pet. 1. 4. Whereby most great and precious promises are given unto us, that by them ye should be partakers of the godly nature, in that ye see the corruption, which is in the world through law. Phil. 2. 1. If there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, &c.

The things vni'd. In this vnion not our soule alone is vni'd with Christs soule, or our flesh with his flesh: but the whole person of euery faithful man, is verily cōiōined with the whole person of our Saviour Christ God and man.

The manner of their vnion is this. A faithful man first of all and immediately is vni'd to the flesh, or humane nature of Christ, and afterward by reason of the humanitie, to the Word it selfe, or diuine nature. For saluation & life dependeth on that fullnesse of the godhead which is in Christ, yet it is not communicated vnto vs, but in the flesh, and by the flesh of Christ. Ioh. 6. 53. Except ye eat the flesh, and drinke the blood of the Son of man, ye haue no life in you. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

The bond of this vnion. This vnion is made by the spirit of God applying Christ vnto vs: and on our parts by faith receiuing Christ Iesus offered vnto vs. And for this cause it is termed a spiritual vnion.

Christ, because he is the head of the faithful, is to be considered as a publike man sustaining the person of all the elect. Hence is it that the faithful are said to be crucified with Christ, and with him to die, and to be buried. Rom. 6. 4, 5, 6. to be quickned. Eph. 2. 5. to be raised vp and placed in heauen. v. 6. Col. 3. 1. the which is not only in regard of the hope of the faithful, but because they are accepted of God certainly to haue done all these things in Christ: euen as in Adams first sinne all his posteritie afterward was tainted of sinne.

A member of Christ is diuerly distinguished: and it is so either before men, or God.

Before men they are the members of Christ, who outwardly professing the faith, are charitably reputed by the Church as true members. But such deceiuing at length, both themselves and the Church, may be reprobates: and therefore in Gods preſence they are no more true members, than are the noxious humors in mans body, or a wooden leg or other ioynt cunningly fastened to another part of the body.

Again, members before God, are such, as either are decreed to be so, or actually are so already.

Such as are decreed to be so, are they, who being elect & foal eternitie, are either as yet not born, or not called. Ioh. 10. 16. Other sheep haue I, which are not of this fold: the also must I bring.

Actual members of Christ, are either liuing or dying members.

An actual liuing member of Christ is euery one elected, which being engraffed by faith, and the spirit into Christ, doth feele and shew forth the power of Christ in him.

An actual dying or decaying member, is euery one truly engraffed into Christ, who hath no feeling of the power and efficacy of the quickening spirit in him. He is like vnto a benumbed leg without sense, which indeede is a part of mans body, and yet receiue no nourishment: such are those faithlesse ones, who for a time doe faint and are overcome vnder the heauy burden of tentations, & their sins: such are also those excommunicate persons, who in regard of their engraffing are true members, howsoeuer in regard of the externall communion with the Church, and efficacy of the spirit, they are not members, till such time, as they being touched with repentance, doe begin as it were, to liue againe.

God executeth this effectual calling by certaine means.

The first, is the fauing hearing of the word of a God, which is, when the said word outwardly is preached, to such an one as is both dead in his finnes, and doth not so much as dreame of his saluation. And first of all, the Law shewing a man his sin, & the punishment thereof, which is eternall death: afterward the Gospell, shewing saluation by Christ Iesus, to such as beleue. (c) And inwardly the eyes of the mind are enlightened, the heart & eares opened, that he may see, heare, and vnderstand the preaching of the word of God. * Ezech. 1. 6. When I passed by thee, I saw thee polluted in thine owne blood, and said vnto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, thou shalt liue. Eia. 55. 1. Ho, euery one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, & ye that haue no siluer, come buy, and eate: come I say, and buy wine and milke without siluer, and without money. Ioh. 1. 12. as many as receiued him, so to he gave this priuiledge, that they should become the sonnes of God: namely, to them which beleued in his name. (b) Rom. 7. 7. I knew not sin, but by the law: for I had not knowen law, except the law had said, Thou shalt not lust. c. 1. Ioh. 2. 27. But the anointing which ye receiued of him, dwelleth in you: and ye neede not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is true, and is not lying, and as it is taught you, ye shall abide in him. Act. 1. 6. 14. A certaine woman named Lydia, a seller of purple of the cite of the Thyatirians, a worshipper of God, heard vs, whose heart God opened, that she attended to the things that Paul said. Pla. 40. 6. Thou art not delighted with sacrifice and burnt offerings, but mine eares hast thou opened. Ioh. 6. 44. No man can come vnto me, except the Father which hath sent me, draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day. Eia. 54. 6. The Lord hath called thee, being as a woman forsaken, and as a yong wife, when thou wast refused, saith the Lord.

The second, is the mollifying of the heart, the which must be bruised in peeces, that it may be fit to receiue Gods fauing grace offered vnto it. Ezech. 11. 19. I will giue them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within their bowels: and I will take the stumpe hearts out of their bodies, and I will giue them an heart of flesh.

There

There are for the bruising of this stony heart, four principal hammers. The first, is the knowledge of the Law of God. The second, is the knowledge of sin, both originall and actual, and what punishment is due vnto them. The third, is compunction, or pricking of the heart, namely a sense and feeling of the wrath of God for the time finnes: The fourth, is an holy desperation of a mans own power, in the obtaining of eternall life. Act. 2. 37. When they heard these things, they were pricked in heart, and said vnto Peter, and the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we doe? 38. Peter said vnto them, Repent, and be baptized euery one of you in the name of Iesus for the remission of finnes, and ye shall receiue the gift of the holy Ghost. Luk. 15. 17. Then he came to himselfe, and said, How many breadcrumbs as my fathers haue bread enough, and I dye for hunger? 18. I will rise and goe to my father, and say vnto him, Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee, 19. And am no more worthy to be called thy sonne: make me as one of thy hired seruants. Eia. 60. 15. 24. He answered, and said, I am not sent, but to the lost sheepe of Israel.

The third, is faith, which is a miraculous and supernaturall facultie of the heart, apprehending Christ Iesus being applied by the operation of the holy Ghost, and receiuing him to it selfe. Ioh. 1. 12. 6. 35. Iesus said vnto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh vnto me shall neuer hunger, and he that beleueth in me shall neuer thirst. Rom. 9. 30. What shall we say then? the Gentiles which follow not righteousness, haue attained vnto righteousness, when the righteousnes which is of faith.

Christ is receiued, when euery seuerall person doth particularly apply vnto himselfe, Christ with his merits; by an inward perswasion of the heart, which cometh none other way, but by the effectual certificate of the holy Ghost concerning the mercie of God in Christ Iesus. 1. Corinth. 2. 2. We haue receiued, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are giuen to vs of God. Zach. 12. 10. I will poure the spirit of grace and of compassion vpon the house of Dauid, and vpon the inhabitants of Ierusalem, and they shall looke vnto me, whom they haue wounded. Rom. 8. 16. His spirit beareth witness to our spirit, that we are the sonnes of God. Eph. 1. 13. In whom also ye haue trust, after that ye heard the word of truth, euen the Gospell of your saluation, wherein also after that ye beleued, ye were sealed with the holy spirit of promise. 2. Cor. 1. 22.

In the work of faith, there are five degrees, or motions of the heart, linked and vni'd to euery, and are worthy the consideration of euery Christian.

The first, is knowledge of the Gospell, by the illumination of Gods spirit. Eia. 33. 11. By his knowledge shall my seruant iustifie many. Ioh. 17. 3. This is life eternall, that they know thee to be the only vey God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ.

To this in such as are truly humbled, is annexed a serious meditation of the promises in the Gospell, stirred vp by the sensible feeling of their owne beggerie.

And after the foreaid knowledge in all such as are enlightened, cometh a generall faith, whereby they subscribe to the truth of the Gospell, Heb. 4. 2. Vnto vs was the Gospell preached, as also vnto them: but the word that they heard professed not them; because it was not mixed with faith in those that heard it. 1. Tim. 1. 19. Having faith and a good conscience, which some haue put away, and as concerning the faith, haue made disparacke. 1. Tim. 2. 4. Who will that all men should be saved, and come vnto the knowledge of the truth.

This knowledge, if it be more full and perfect, is called in Greeke enkyria eis entinos, that is, the full assurance of vnderstanding, Coloss. 2. 2. That their hearts might be comforted, and they knit together in love, and in all riches of the full assurance of vnderstanding, so know the mystery of God, euen the Father, and of Christ. Rom. 14. 14. I know, and am perswaded through the Lord Iesus, that there is nothing vnlawfull if it be lawfully done. 1. 1. For as much as many haue taken in hand to forsake the story of Iesus, whereof the Gospel was perswaded. 1. Thess. 1. 5. Our Gospel was vnto you not in word only, but also in power, and in the holy Ghost, and in much assurance.

The second, is hope of pardon, whereby a sinner, altho he yet feeleth not that his finnes are certainly pardoned, yet he beleueth that they are pardonable. Luk. 15. 18. I will go vnto my Father, and say to him, I haue sinned against heauen and against thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne, make me as one of thy hired seruants.

The third, is an hungering and thirsting after that grace which is offered to him in Christ Iesus, as a man hungereth and thirsteth after meat & drinke. Ioh. 6. 35. & 7. 37. Reu. 21. 6. And he said vnto me, It is done, I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end: I will give to him that is athirst of the well of the water of life freely. Mat. 5. 6. Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be satisfied.

The fourth, is the approaching to the throne of Grace: that there flying from the terror of the Law, they may take hold of Christ, and finde fauour with God. Heb. 4. 16. Let vs therefore go boldly to the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercy, and find grace to perfect in euery need.

This approaching hath two parts. The first, is an humble confession of our finnes before God, particularly if they be knowen finnes; and generally, if vnknowen: this done, the Lord forthwith remitteth all our finnes, Plal. 32. 5. I thought, I will confesse against my self my wickednes vnto the Lord, and thou forganest the punishment of my sinne. Salab. 2. Sam. 12. 13. Dauid said to Nathan, I haue sinned against the Lord: wherefore Nathan said to Dauid, The Lord hath taken away thy sinne, thou shalt not die. Luk. 15. 10.

The second, is the craving pardon of some fins, with vnspokeable figures, and in persequ-rance. Luk. 15. 21. Act. 8. 22. Repent of this wickedness, and pray God, that if it be possible, the thoughts of these hearts may be forgiven thee. Rom. 8. 26. The spirit helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray as we ought: but the spirit itself maketh request for us, with sighs which cannot be expressed. Hol. 14. 2. 3. O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. Take unto you words, & turne to the Lord, & say to him. Take away all iniquity, & receive us graciously.

The fifth arising of the former, is an especial perswasion imprinted in the heart by the holy Ghost, whereby every faithfull man doth particularly apply vnto himselfe those promises which are made in the Gospell. Mat. 9. 2. They brought unto him a man sicke of the palsey, lying on a bed: and when Iesus saw their faith, hee said vnto the sicke of the palsey, Sonne of good comfort, thy sins are forgiven thee. Mat. 15. 28. O Woman, great is thy faith, be it vnto thee as thou desirest. Gal. 2. 20. I live, yet not I now; but Christ liues in me; and that I now live in the flesh; I live by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loved mee, and given himselfe for me.

This perswasion is, and ought to be in euery one, euen before he haue any experience of Gods mercies. Math. 15. 22. A woman, a Canaanite, came out of the same coasts, and cried, saying vnto him, Haue mercy on me, O Lord, the sonne of David, my daughter is miserably vexed with a diuill. Mat. 23. 24, 25, 26, 27. Ioh. 20. 29. Iesus said vnto him, I know, because thou hast seene me, thou belieuest: blessed are they which haue not seene, and haue believed. Hebr. 11. 1. Faith is the ground of things hoped for, and the euident of things which are not seene. In Philosophie we first see a thing true by experience, & afterward giue our assent vnto it as in natural Philosophie; I am perswasied that such a water is hot, because when I put mine hand into it, I perceive by experience an hot quality. But in the practice of faith it is quite contrary. For first, we must consent to the word of God, resisting all doubt and diffidence, & afterward wil & experience & feeling of comfort follow. 1. Chr. 20. 20. Put your trust in the Lord your God, and ye shall be assured: beleeue his Prophets, and ye shall prosper. They therefore do very ill, who are fillina doubt of their salvation; because as yet, they feele not in themselves, especial motions of Gods spirit.

Thus much concerning the way which God vseth in the begetting of Faith. There are besides this, 3. notable degrees of faith. The one is the lowest, & as I may speake, the positive degree, the other is the highest, or superlative.

The lowest degree of faith, is called beginning, a little or weak faith, like a graine of mustard-seed, or smoking flaxe, which can neither giue out heat nor flame, but onely smoke. Math. 8. 25. His Disciples awaked him, saying, Save vs, Master, wee perishe. 26. And hee said vnto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Mat. 17. 20. If ye haue faith as much as a graine of mustard-seed, ye shall say vnto this mountaine, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove.

Esa. 42. 3. The smoking flaxe shall he not quench. Faith is then said to be weak and feeble, when as, of those five degrees aboue mentioned, either the first, which is knowledge, or the fifth, which is application of the promises, is very feeble, the rest remaining strong. Rom. 14. 2. One beleueth that he may eat all things, and another which is weak, eats herbs. 3. Let not him that eateth, despise him that eateth not: and let not him which eateth not, iudge him which eateth: for God hath received him. The Apostles although they beleued, that Christ was the Sonne of the living God; yet they were ignorant of his death and resurrection. Mat. 16. 16. Ioh. 6. 69. Math. 17. 22. Luk. 9. 45. They understood not this word: for it was hid from them, that they could not perceive it. Act. 1. 6. They asked him saying, Lord, wilt thou restore at this time the kingdom to Israel?

For the better knowledge of this kinde of faith, we must obserue these two rules:

I. A serious desire to beleue, & an endeavour to obtaine Gods fauour. is the seede of faith. Mat. 5. 6. Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be satisfied. Reu. 21. 6. I will giue to him that is athirst, of the well of the water of life freely. Psal. 145. 19. He will fulfill the desire of them that feare him: he also will heare their cry, and will saue them. For in such as begin to beleue, and to be renied, the minde will not lie idle; but being moued by the holy Ghost, striveth with doubtfullnes and distrust, and endeavour to purthie assent to the sweete promise made in the Gospell, and firmly to apply the same to themselves; and in the sense of their weakenesse, desire assistance from aboue; and thus faith is belowed.

II. God doth not despise the least sparke of faith; if so be; by little and little, doe encrease, and menue the means to encrease the same. Luk. 17. 5. The Apostles said vnto the Lord, Encrease our faith. 6. And the Lord said, If ye had faith as much as a graine of Mustard-seed, and should say vnto this mulberry-tree, Plucke thy selfe up by the roote; and plant thy selfe in the Sea, it should euen obey you: Man must therefore stirre up his faith by meditation of Gods word, serious prayers, and other exercise belonging vnto faith.

The highest degree of faith, is assurance, a full assurance, which is not onely a certaine and true, but also a full persuasion of the heart, whereby a Christian much more firmly taking hold on Christ Iesus, maketh full and resolute account that God loveth him, and that he will giue to him by name, Christ and all his graces pertaining to eternall life. Rom. 4. 20. Neither doth he doubt of the promise of God through unbeliefe, but was strengthened in the faith, and gave glorie to God. 21. Being fully assured, that he which had promised, was able also to do it. Rom. 8. 38. I am perswasied, that neither life, nor death, nor danger, nor separation vs from the love of God which is in Christ Iesus: I Samuel 17. 38. Thy servant sue both the Lyon and the Beare: therefore thy vntirecircled Philistine shall bee as one of them them, seeing he hath rayled on the host of the living God. Psal. 23. 6. Doubtlesse, kindnesse and mercie shall follow me all the daies of my life. Conferred with ver. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Man cometh to this high degree, after the fence, obseruation, and long experience of Gods fauour and loue.

Question. Whether is iustificing faith commanded in the law?

Answer. It is commanded in the law of faith, namely, the Gospell, but not in the law of works, that is, in the morall law. Rom. 3. 27. The reasons are these: I. That which the law reuealeth not, that it commandeth not: but the law is so farre from reuealing iustificing faith, that it neuer knew it. II. Adam had fully, before his fall, written in his heart the morall law: yet had he not iustificing faith, which apprehended Christ.

Obiect. I. Incredulitie is condemned by the law.

Answer. That incredulitie which is towards God, is condemned in the law; but that incredulitie which is against the Messiah Christ Iesus, is condemned by the Gospell. For as by the Gospell, not by the Law, incredulitie in the Sonne as Mediatour, appeareth to be a sinne: so likewise not by the law is incredulitie in the Messiah condemned, but by the gospell, which commandeth vs to heare him and to beleue in him. Mat. 17. 21. Ioh. 3. 23. Thus it is plaine that this sinne, not to beleue in Christ, is expressly and distinctly made manifest, & condemned by the Gospell. And albeit the knowledge of sin be by the law, yet not euery thing which doth reprove and declare some sinne, is the law of works, or belongeth thereto.

Obiect. II. But ceremonies belong to the decalogie.

Answer. Ceremonies may be as examples referred to the decalogie, but indeed they are appendants to the Gospell.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Concerning the second degree of the declaration of Gods loue.

The second degree is iustification, whereby such as beleue, are accounted iust before God, through the obedience of Christ Iesus. 2. Cor. 5. 21. He hath made him to be sin for vs, which knew no sinne: that we should be made the righteousness of God in him. 1. Cor. 1. 30. Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one (that is, Iesus Christ) shall many also be made righteous.

Quest. Whether did Christ performe full obedience to the Law, for vs men alone, or for himselfe also?

Answer. I. Not for himselfe, as some not rightly would haue him: for the flesh of Christ being hypostatically vnited to the word, and in it selfe fully sanctified, was euen from the first moment of conception, most worthy to be blessed with eternall life. Therefore by all that obedience which he performed after his conception, Christ merited nothing for himselfe. II. For vs, namely, for the faithfull, he fulfilled all the righteousness of the law, and hence it is, that hee is called the end of the law vnto righteousness, to euery one that beleueth, Rom. 10. 4.

Here may be objected: I. Christ as hee is man, is bound to performe obedience to the law for himselfe.

Answer. He is not bound by nature, but of his owne accord: for he was not a meere man, but God and man. And albeit Christ did neuer suffer nor fulfill the law, but in that flesh which he tooke vpon him; yet by reason of the hypostatical vnion, this his passion and obedience hath respect vnto the whole person, considered as God and man, and therefore his obedience was not due on his part, and so was without merit to himselfe: yea, in that the flesh of Christ is vnited to the person of the word, & so exalted in dignity and sanctity, aboue all Angels, it may seeme to be exempted from this naturall obligation of performing the law.

II. Obiect. If then Christ performed the law for vs, we are no more bound to the obseruance of the same: as we do not vndergo eternal punishments for our sins, the which Christ in his person did beare vpon the crosse.

Answer. If we keepe the same respect of performing obedience to the law, the consequence is very true, otherwise it is not: for Christ performed obedience to the law for vs, as it is the satisfaction of the law: but the faithfull they are bound to obedience, not as it is satisfactorie, but as it is a document of faith, and a testimony of their gratitude towards God, or a means to edifie their neighbours: euen as Christ suffering eternall punishments for our finnes, we also suffer punishments, as they are either trials, or chastisements vnto vs.

III. Obiect. The law and iustice of God doth not together exact both, namely obedience, and punishment.

Answer. In mans perfect estate, the iustice of God requirith onely obedience: but in his estate corrupted, he requires both obedience, and punishment. Punishment, as the law is violated: Obedience, that legall iustice may be performed. Gal. 3. 10. It is therefore plaine, that not only Christs passion, but also his legal obedience, is our righteousness before God.

Iustification hath two parts: Remission of sins, and imputation of Christs righteousness.

Remission of finnes, is that part of iustification, whereby he that beleueth, is freed from the guilt and punishment of sinne, by the passion of Christ. Coloss. 1. 21, 22. You hath been reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to make you holy and unblemished, and without fault in his sight. 1. Pet. 2. 24. Who in his owne selfe, bare our finnes in his body, on the tree, that wee beinge deliuered from sinne, should line in righteousnesse, by whose stripes ye are healed.

Imputation of righteousnesse, is the other part of iustification, whereby such as beleuee, haneing the guilt of their finnes couered, are accounted iust in the sight of God, through Christs righteousnesse. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Pal. 32. 1. Blessed is he, whose wickednes is forgiven, & whose sin is couered. Rom. 4. the whole chapter, where the Apostle repeats imputation eleuentimes. Phil. 3. 8. 9. I haue counted all things losse, and do iudge them to be dung, that I might win Christ, and might be found in him, that is, not haneing mine owne righteousnesse which is by the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, euen the righteousnesse which is of faith.

The forme of iustification, is, as it were, a kinde of translation of the beleueers finnes vnto Christ, and againe Christs righteousnesse vnto the beleuer, by a reciprocall or mutual imputation. As is apparent in this picture following.

This obedience of Christ, is called the Righteousnes of God, and of Christ. Of God, I. not because it is in God, but of God: for it taketh all the power and merit it hath from the deitie of the Sonne whence it is that Ieremie faith, I leuoued our Righteousnesse. II. God doth onely accept of it for vs, because that alone makes vs boldly to approach vnto Gods throne of grace, that we may haue pardon for our finnes, and be receiued to eternall life. It is also called the Righteousnesse of Christ, because being out of vs, it is in the humanity of Christ, as in a fabric.

Obiect. I. No man is made iust by any other mans iustice.

Answer. This iustice is both anothers, and ours also. Another, because it is in Christ as in a fabric: ours, because by meanes of the fore named vnion, Christ, with all his benefites, is made ours.

Obiect. 1. The ancient Fathers neuer dreamed of this imputative iustice, and it may seeme to bee of no greater continuance then fiftie yeares.

Answer. This is both false, and impious to affirm e. August. 3. Tract. vpon Iohn, faith, All such as are iustified by Christ, are iust not in them- selnes, but in him. Bernard in his Sermon (ad exiles temple, cap. 17.) Mors in Christi morte fugatur, & Christi iustitia nobis imputatur: that is, Death in Christ is put to flight, and the iustice of Christ is imputed vnto vs. And in his 62. sermon vpon the Canticles: Where is there any rest (saith he) but in the wounds of our Saviour? I will for ever sing, but what? mine owne iustice? nay, O Lord, I will remember thy iustice alone: for that is also my iustice. For thou wast made of God vnto mee iustice. But should I feare, whether that one iustice would suffice two? nay, it is not a short cloake that is able to couer a comple. Thy iustice is iustice for euermore, and will both couer thee and mee: it is largely large, and eternall iustice: and in me it couereth the multitude of my finnes, &c. August. lib. de spiritu & littera, cap. 9. & 26. We must understand this saying so. The doers of the Law shall be iustified, that we may know, that there are no doers of the law but such as are iustified, so that they are not first doers of the law, and then iustified, but first iustified, and then doers of the law. So it is said, they shall be iustified, as if it should be said, they shall be reputed iust and accounted iust.

Iustification hath annexed vnto it Adoption, whereby all such as are predestinate to bee adopted, receiue power, to be actually accounted the sonnes of God by Christ. Eph. 1. 5. who hath predestinate vs to bee adopted through Iesus Christ, vnto himselfe, according to the good pleasure of his will.

By meanes of adoption, God hath bestowed many notable priuiledges vpon his Children. I. They are the Lords heires apparent. Rom. 8. 17. If we be children, we be also heires, euen the heires of God.

II. They are fellow heires with Christ, yea kings. Rom. 8. 17. Reu. 1. 6. And made vs Kings and Priestes, euen to God his Father.

III. All their afflictions, yea euen their wants, and offences, are turned to trials or fatherly chastisements, iustified vpon them for their good. Rom. 8. 28. We know that all things worke together for the best, vnto them that loue God. 36. It is written for thy sake are we killed all the day long: we are counted as sheepe for the slaughter. 37. Neuertheless, in all these things, we are more then conquerours through him that loued vs. Pa. 89. 32. I will visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquities with strokes. 33. Yet my loving kindness will I not take from him. 2 Cor. 12. 7. There was giuen vnto me a pricke in the fleshe, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, because I should not be exalted out of measure. 2 Sam. 7. 14. I will be vnto him a father, and be shall be to me a sonne; and if he sin, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the playnes of the children of men.

IV. They haue dominion ouer all creatures, yet so, as that in this life they haue onely right to the thing; but after this life they shall haue right in the same. 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23. Whether it be Paul, or Apollo, or Cepha, or the world, or life, or death, whether they be things present, or things to come, euen all are yours. Heb. 1. 7. Thou madest him little inferior to the Angels, Thou crownedst him

him with glory and honour, and hast set him aboue the works of thine hands. 8. Thou hast put all things in subiection vnder his foete.

Lest of all, they haue the Angels as ministering spirits attending vpon them for their good. Heb. 1. 14. Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for their sake, which shall be heires of saluation? Pal. 34. 7. The Angel of the Lord pitcheth round about them that feare him, and deliuereth them.

Whence it is apparent, that the faithfull alone haue the true vse of the Lords goods, I. Because their perfs are in Christ acceptable vnto him, in whom also they haue restitution made vnto them of those goods which they lost in Adam, that they may with a good conscience vse them. II. They vse them with thanksgiving to their ends appointed by God.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Concerning the third degree of the declaration of Gods law.

The third degree, is Sanctification, whereby such as beleuee, being deliuered from the tyrannie of sinne, are by little and little renewed in holinesse and righteousness. 1. Ioh. 3. 9. Who soeuer is borne of God, sinneth not: for his seed remaineth in him; neither can he sinne, because he is borne of God. Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to those which are in Christ Iesus, which walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit.

Sanctification hath two parts: Mortification, and Viuification.

The mortification of sinne, is the first part of sanctification, whereby the power of sinne is abated, and crucified in the faithfull. Rom. 6. 2. How shall we that are dead to sinne, liue yet therein? 3. Know ye not, that all we which haue bin baptized vnto Iesu Christ, haue bin baptized into his death? 5. We are buried then with him by baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, by the glory of the Father, so we also should walke in newnesse of life. Eccles. 5. 6, 7, 11, 12, 13. Galat. 5. 24. They which are in Christ, haue crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts thereof.

The meane of mortification, is the death and buriall of Christ, from which proceedeth such vertue, as at the first giuing sin his deadly wound, doth bereaue it of power to rage and reigne in man, and causeth it to die and consume, as it were in a graue.

The vertue of Christs death, is a certaine power, issuing from his Deitie into his humanity when he dyed, whereby, hee did in the same humane vanquish our sinne imputed vnto him, being our surer, as well in regard of the punishment, as of the guilt thereof, that in like sort by the same power hee might abolish the corruption of sinne in his members.

Viuification, is the second part of sanctification: whereby inherent holipes being begun, is still augmented and enlarged. First, we receiue the first fruits of the spirit, then a continuall increase of them. Eph. 4. 23. Be renewed in the spirit of your minde. 24. And put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness, and true holinesse. Eph. 2. 1. And you hath he quickened that were dead in trespasses and finnes. Gal. 2. 20. Thus I liue, yet not I now, but Christ in me: and in that I know liue in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, & giuen him selfe for mee. Rom. 8. 23. We which haue the first fruits of the spirit, euen wee doe fight in our fleshe, waiting for the adoption, euen the redemption of our bodies. 1. Cor. 15. 45. The first man Adam was made a liuing soule, and the second Adam was made a quickning spirit.

The meane of Viuification, is a vertue derived from Christs resurrection, to those that are quickened, which maketh them to rise vp to newnesse of life. Phil. 3. 10. That I may know him, and the vertue of his resurrection.

The power of Christs resurrection is that, whereby hee first, did in his owne fleshe, as conqueror ouer death and sin, begin to liue with God, and to be exalted aboue euery name; and then in his members, sinne being dead and buried, he causeth in them an endeaueur and purpose to liue according to the will of God.

The efficient cause of them both, is the holy Ghost, who doth by his diuine power conuey himselfe into the beleueers hearts, & in them, by applying the power of Christs death, & resurrection, createth holinesse. Ioh. 3. 24. 25. Romanes 8. 9. Now ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, because the spirit of God dwelleth in you: but if any man haue not the spirit of Christ, the same is not his. 11. But if the spirit of him that raised up Iesus from the dead dwell in you; bee that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies, because that his spirit dwelleth in you.

Furthermore, this inherent holinesse is to be distinguished into parts, according to the feuerall faculties of the body and soule of man. 1. Thess. 5. 23. The very God of peace sanctifies you throughout: and I pray God, that your whole spirit, soule, and body may be kept blamelesse, vnto the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

I. The holinesse, or reining of the minde, which is the illumination thereof, to the knowledge of the will of God; Colosians 3. 10. We cease not to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be fully filled with knowledge of his will, and wisdom, and spiritual understanding. 1. Corinth. 12. 8. Talent is giuen by the spirit the speech of wisdom, to another the speech of knowledge, by the same spirit.

Illumination, is either spiritual understanding, or spiritual wisdom.

Spiritual understanding, is an illumination of the minde, whereby it acknowledgeth the knowne truth of the word of God.

Spiritual wisdom, is an illumination of the minde, whereby the same truth, is applied to the good ordering of particular both things and actions: as person, place, and time require.

These two have the effects, which follow.

To differenciate between good and evil. Heb.

5.14. Strong meats belongeth to them that are of age, which through long custome have their wittes exercised to discern both good and evil. Phil. 1. 10. That ye may discern things that differ one from another.

II. To discern of spirits. 1. Ioh. 4. 7. Decreely beloved, beleeve not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God. 1. Thes. 5. 21. Try all things, and keepe that which is good. Act. 17. 11. These were more noble men then they which were at Tbesalonica, which received the word with all readinesse, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so.

III. To meditate upon the words & works of God. Psal. 1. 1. But his delight is in the Law of God; and in that Law doth he exercise himselfe day and night. Psal. 119. 15. I will meditate in thy precepts, and consider thy wayes. Psal. 107. the whole psalme.

IV. To discern and acknowledge mans owne inward blindness. Psal. 119. 33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I will keep it unto the end. 1. 8. Open mine eyes that I may see the wonders of thy Law.

II. The sanctitie of the memory is an ability to keepe a good thing, when it is offered to the minde, and as it were set forth to remembrance. Psal. 119. 11. I have hid thy precepts in mine heart, that I might not sinne against thee. Psal. 16. 7. I will praise thee, Lord, with all my heart, with all my might, with all my strength, with all my minde, with all my power, with all my heart, with all my might, with all my strength, with all my minde, with all my power.

III. The sanctitie of conscience is a grace of God, whereby a mans conscience exerciseth him for all his sins, after they are forgiven him in Christ, as also of his upright walking in the whole course of his life. 1. Tim. 1. 19. Having faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, 1. Cor. 4. 4. I know nothing by myself; yet am I not thereby justified. Act. 23. 1. Paul said, I have in all good conscience, served God with all simplicity, with a pure heart, with a good conscience, and with a pure heart, with a good conscience, and with a pure heart.

IV. The sanctitie of the heart is a grace of God, whereby a mans heart is purified from all unclean thoughts, and is made up to God, as also of his upright walking in the whole course of his life. 1. Tim. 1. 19. Having faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, 1. Cor. 4. 4. I know nothing by myself; yet am I not thereby justified. Act. 23. 1. Paul said, I have in all good conscience, served God with all simplicity, with a pure heart, with a good conscience, and with a pure heart.

Heaven in all gold, men are seen the inward peace of God, and the outward alacrity in the countenance. Phil. 4. 4. The peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall preserve your hearts and mindes in Iesus Christ. Prou. 28. 1. The wicked flee, when none pursue him, but the righteous are bold as a Lyon.

IV. Sanctitie of will, whereby man beginneth to will that which is good; and to refuse the contrary. Therefore in this estate, the will is partly freed from bondage, partly in bondage to sin. Phil. 2. 13. It is God which worketh in you, both the will and the deeds, even of his owne pleasure. Rom. 7. 18. I know that in mee, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with mee, but I find no means to performe that which is good. 6. v. 19, 20, 21, 22.

V. Sanctitie of affections, is the right moving of them. 1. Thes. 5. 23. Rom. 7. 24.

Affections of most speciall note, are these: 1. Hope, whereby men with sighing, looke for the accomplishment of their redemption, Rom. 8. 23.

2. This hope, when it is once strong and lively, hath also her confidence, that is, full assurance; as faith hath. Heb. 6. 11. And we desire that every one of you shew the same diligence, to the full assurance of hope, unto the end. 1. Pet. 1. 3. Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercie, hath begotten us againe unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Iesus Christ from the dead.

II. Feare of offending God, because of his mercy. 1. Pet. 1. 17. If ye call him Father, which without respect of person, judgeth according to every mans work, passe the time of your dwelling here in feare. Psal. 130. 4. There is mercy with thee, that thou mayest be feared.

III. A bafe account of all worldly things, in respect of Christ Iesus. Philip. 3. 7. But the things that were an advantage to me, I have counted losse for Christs sake. 8. Tea doubtlesse, I have lost all things, for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ Iesus my Lord, for whom I have counted all things, and doe judge them to be dung, that I might winne Christ.

IV. The love of God in Christ, which is like unto death and as a fire that cannot be quenched. Cant. 8. 5. Love is strong as death, jealousy is cruel as the grave: the coales thereof are fire coales, and a vehement flame.

V. A fervent zeale to Gods glory. Rom. 9. 3. I would wish myselfe to be separate from Christ, for my brethren, that are my kinsmen, according to the flesh.

VI. Anguish of minde for our owne finnes and others also. Psal. 119. v. 136. Mine eyes gush out with teares, because men keepe not thy law. 2. Pet. 2. 7. And delivered into Lot, being vexed with the violently concupiscence of the wicked. 8. For he being righteous, and dwelling among them, fasting, and bearing vexed his righteous soule from day to day, with their unlawfull deeds.

VII. Exceeding great joy in the holy Ghost. Rom. 14. 17. The kingdom of God is not meat and drinke, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghost.

VIII. Sanctitie of body, whereby it is a instrument for the soule to accomplish that which is good. Rom. 6. 19. As ye have given your members servants to uncleannes, and to iniquity, to commit iniquities, now give your members servants unto righteousness in holiness.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Of Repentance and the fruites thereof.

From Sanctification, Repentance is derived, because no man can earnestly repent, pent, except he denying himselfe, doe hate sin, even from his heart, and embrace righteousness. This no man either will, or can performe, but such an one, as is in the fight of God regenerated & justified, & indured with true faith.

Therefore albeit in such as are converted, repentance doth first manifest it selfe, yet regarding the order of nature, it followeth both faith and sanctification. Hence also it is evident, that this repentance, (legall contrition being some occasion, and as it were, a preparation to true conversion,) is wholly begotten by the preaching of the Gospell.

Repentance is, when a sinner turneth to the Lord. Act. 26. 20. Hee shewed first unto them of Damascus, and then to Jerusalem, and through all the coasts of Iudaea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turne to God, and doe works worthy amendment of life. 1. Ioh. 3. 3. Every man that hath this hope in him, purgeth himselfe, as he is pure.

This is performed, when as any one by the instinct of the holy Ghost, doth purpose, will, desire, and endeavour to relinquish his former finnes, and to become a new man. Psal. 119. 112. I have applied my heart to fulfill thy statutes alway, even unto the end. 1. Ioh. 3. 3. Act. 11. 23. Who when he was come, and had sent the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

The fruit of Repentance, is a Christian conversion: wherein are brought forth fruites worthy amendment of life. Mat. 3. 8. Bring ye therefore forth fruits worthy of repentance.

A Christian conversion, is such a course of life, whereby we following Christs example, do by him, performe new obedience to God. Math. 11. 29. Take my yoke on you, and I will ease you, for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. 1. Pet. 4. 1. For as much as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arme your selves likewise with the same minde, which is, that he which hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sinne. 1. Pet. 2. 21. For hereunto are ye called, for Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps. 1. Pet. 3. 10, 31. If any man long after life and to see good daies, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speake no guile. Let him eschew evil, and doe good: let him seek peace, and follow after it.

There are two parts of new obedience: the denial of our felices, & the profession of Christ. Math. 6. 24. If any man will follow me, let him forsake himselfe, take up his crosse, and follow me.

The denial of our felices, consisteth partly in Christian warfare, partly in the patient bearing of the crosse.

CHAP. XL.

Of Christian Warfare.

Christian warfare, is concerning the right way of fighting in the spiritual battle.

The parts thereof, are the preparation to battle, and the combat it selfe.

To the preparation, wee must give the complete armour of God. Eph. 6. 1. 3. For this cause, take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to resist in the evil day, and having finished all things, stand fast.

The parts hereof, are especially six. I. Truth. II. Justice. III. Evangelical obedience. IV. Faith. V. The word of God. VI. Continall & fervent prayer with watching. Eph. 6. 14. Stand therefore, and your loynes girded about with verity, and having on the breastplate of righteousness. 15. And your feet shodde with the preparation of the Gospell of peace. 16. Above all, take the shield of faith, wherewith ye may quench all the fierie darts of the wicked. 17. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God. 18. And pray alwayes with all manner of prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watch therewith with all perseverance & supplication for all Saints. 1. Pet. 5. 8. Be sober, and watch: for your adversary the devill, as a roaring lyon walketh about seeking whom he may devour.

The combat, is a mutual conflict of them that fight spiritually.

The warriors, are the tempter, and the Christian souldier. Eph. 6. 12. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, and against the worldly governments, the princes of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickednesse, which are in high places.

The tempter, is the Prince, or his helpers. The Prince is Satan and his angels, which are spiritual wickednesse, in high things. His helpers are the flesh and the world.

The conflict of all these, is temptation, whereby man is provoked to commit such wickednesse, as is hurtfull to the salvation of his soule. 2. Pet. 2. 11. Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims, abstaine from fleshly lusts, which fight against the soule.

In the souldier, two things are to be considered: his resisting and his fall.

Resistance is an action, whereby the souldier doth withstand temptation, through grace working inwardly in him. 1. Ioh. 2. 14. I write unto you babes, because you have known I. Fathers: I have written to you fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning: I have written to you young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked. 1. Pet. 5. 8. Eph. 6. 16. Psal. 119. 13. Thou shalt walke upon the lyon and aspe: the young lyon and the dragon shalt thou tread under feet.

To confirme this, these prefiguratives which follow are very necessarie.

I. When thou art tempted to sinne, doe not only abstaine from it, but earnestly loue and follow after the contrary. Iohn 8. 44.

II. Neuer yeeld or consent to Satans words, whether he speake the truth, accuse falsely, or flatter dissemblingly. Ioh. 8. 44. Tce are of your fathers the devill, and the lusts of your fathers ye will doe: hee hath bene a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him: when he speaketh alie, then speaketh he of lye.

his voice: for he is a liar, and the father thereof, Mark. 1. 24. And cried with a loud voice, & said, what have I to do with thee, Jesus, the Sonne of the most high God, And Jesus said, Hold thy peace and come out of him. Act. 16. 17. See followed Paul and vs, and cried saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation, &c. Aug. serm. 241.

III. One temptation is to be looked for after another, and then especially, when our enemy, as though hee had made truce with vs, is at rest: for the diuell neuer maketh an end of his malice. 1. Pet. 5. 8.

The fall is, whereby the fouldier through infirmities fainteth, being subdued by the power of the enemy. Gal. 6. 1. Brethren, if a man bee fallen by occasion into any fault, yet which are spiritual, restore such an one with the spirit of meeknesse, considering thy selfe, least thou also bee tempted.

To this appertaining the spiritual remedy. A remedy, is a thing hauing apenes to restore him which is falle, to his former estate. Gal. 6. 2.

And here two things mult alwayes be throught on.

I. If there be a willing minde, every one is accepted for that grace which he hath, not for that which he hath not. 2. Cor. 8. 12. For if there bee first a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

II. In all these things, whosoever will lead a godly life in Christ, the power of God is to be made perfect through their infirmities. 2. Cor. 12. 9. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee, for my power is made perfect through weakness: very glad therefore will I reioyce rather in mine infirmities: that the power of God may dwell in me. 10. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproches, in necessities, in persecutions, in anguishes for Christ: I take joy when I am weak, then am I strong.

CHAP. XLII.

Of the first assault.

Assaults are three-fold.

The first, is about the Christian mans effectual calling. The temptation is the enterprize of the diuell to blind-fold mans mind, & to harden his heart, least the word of GOD should worke in him to salvation. Math. 13. 4. And as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowles came and devoured them up. 5. And some fell upon stony ground, where they had not so much earth, and anon they sprang up, because they had no depth of earth. 6. And when the Sunne rose up, they were perished, and for lacke of rooting withered away. 7. And some fell among thornes, & the thornes sprung up and choked them. 19. Whensoever a man heareth the word of the kingdom, & understandeth it not, the euill one cometh, & catcheth away that which was sowed in his heart: and this is he which hath receiued the seed by the way side.

A resistance in those that are to be called, is wrought by the spirit of God, that causeth men to lend their eares to heare, and doth ingraffe the word in their hearts, that the immortal feed of regeneration may spring in them. Psal. 40. 6. Ioh. 6. 44. Act. 16. 14. Iam. 1. 21. Wherefore lay apart all filthinesse, and superfluities of maliciousnesse, and receiue with meekenesse, the word that is grafted in you, which is able to save your soules. 1. Pet. 1. 22. Seeing your soules are purified in obeying the truth through the spirit: to love brotherly, without feining, love one another with a pure heart fervently. 1. Ioh. 3. 9. Whosoever is borne of God sinneth not: for his seede remaineth in him, neither can hee sinne, because he is borne of God. A resistance in those that are called, is when in a sincere heart they doe ioyne the word which they have heard with faith. Luke 8. 15. But that which fell in good ground, are they which with an honest and good heart, heare the word and keepe it, and bring forth fruit with patience. Heb. 4. 2.

Here are certaine prefratuues to be noted.

I. Premeditation of the power and vfe of the word. Eccles. 4. 17. Take heede to thy feete, when thou enrest into the house of the Lord, and be more weere to heare, then to give the sacrifice of foules: for they know not that they doe euill. Chap. 51. Be not ashy with thy mouth, nor let thine heart be swift to vnder a tongue before God: for God is in the heauen, and thou art on the earth, therefore let thy words be few.

II. Diligent attentio of the mind. Act. 16. 14.

III. An hanging desire of the heart, Ioh. 7. 37. Now in the last and great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst let him come to me and drinke.

IV. Integrity of life. Psal. 26. 6.

V. The casting away of euill affections. Iam. 1. 22. And be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiuing your owne soules.

VI. The inward consent and agreement of the heart with the word preached. Act. 2. 37.

VII. An hiding of the word in the heart, lest we should sinne. Psal. 119. 11. I have hidde thy word in my heart, that I might not sinne against thee.

VIII. A trembling at the presence of God in the assemblée of the Church. Eccl. 6. 6.

IX. For all these things, both mine hand made, and all these things, haue bene, saith the Lord, and to him will I looke, euen to him that is poore, & of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my words. Act. 10. 33. Then I am I for thee immediately, & thou shalt be well done to come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to heare all things that are commanded thee of God.

The fall, is either a coldnesse in receiuing the word, and a neglect thereof, or else a falling into errors.

The remedie for this, is subiection, which must be made to the iudgement & censure of the brethren and ministers. Reuel. 3. 15. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot. Gal. 6. 2. 1. Tim. 1. 20. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander, whom I haue deliuered unto Satan, that they might learne not to blasphem.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLIII.

Of the second Assault.

The second assault is, concerning faith.

The temptation, is an illusion which the diuell casteth into the hearts of godly men: as when he saith, Thou art not of the elect: thou art not iustified: thou hast no faith: thou mult certainly bee condemned for thy finnes, Math. 4. 3. Then came to him the tempter, and said, If thou be the Son of God: command that these stones be made bread.

The occasions which he taketh of these illusions, are;

I. Aduersities: as dangers, losses, persecutions, grievous offences, &c. Psal. 73. 12. Loee these are the wicked, yet prosper they alway, and increase in riches. 13. Certainly, I haue cleansed mine heart in vaine, and washed mine hands in innocencie. Iob 13. 23. How many are mine iniquities and sinners? shew me my rebellion and my sone. 24. Wherefore hiddest thou thy face, and takest me for thine enemy? 25. With thine breake a leafe driuen to and fro, and wilt thou pursue the fine fiddle?

II. The remembrance of finnes past. Iob 13. 26. For thou writest bitter things against me, & mislead me to possess the iniquities of my youth.

III. A feeling of death euen already at hand.

The resistance is made by a true faith applying Christ with all his merits particularly, after this manner. I assuredly beleue that I shall not be condemned, but that I am elected, and iustified in Christ, and am out of all doubt, that all my finnes are pardoned. Eley 53. 12. He shall be the cruell of his soule, and shall be iustified, by his knowledge shall my righteous servant iustify many: for he shall beare their iniquities. Rom. 8. 38. For I am perswaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come. 39. Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate vs from the love of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord.

The prefratuue, is in temptation, not to behold faith, but the object of faith which is Christ. Phil. 3. 12. Not as though I had already attained unto it, either were already perfect: but I follow, insofar as I may comprehend that, for whose sake also I am comprehended of Christ Iesus. 13. One thing I do forget that which is behind, and endeavour my selfe: that which is before, 14. And follow hard toward the marke, for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Iesus. Ioh. 3. 14. And as Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lift up, that he that belieueth in him, &c.

The falling, is doubtfulness, and distrust of our election, and of Gods mercy. Psal. 77. 6. I called to remembrance my song in the night: I communed with my owne heart, and my spirit searched diligently. 7. Will the Lord absent himself for euer? & will hee shew no more fauour? 8. Is his mercy cleane gone for euer? durt his promise faile for euermore? So Dauid of himselfe saith, Psal. 22. 1. My God my God, why hast thou forsaken me, and art so farre from my healt, and from the words of my roaring?

The remedy is double.

First, the operation of the holy Spirit stirring vp faith, and increasing the same. Phil. 1. 6. I am perswaded of this same thing: that he that hath begunne this good worke in you, will performe it: vntill the day of Iesus Christ. Luke 22. 32. And the Apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our faith.

The second, is an holy meditation, which is manifold.

I. That it is the commandment of God, that we should beleue in Christ. 1. Ioh. 3. 23. This is then his commandment, that we beleue in the name of his Son Iesus Christ, and love one another: as he gaue commandment.

II. That the Euangelical promises are indefinite, and doe excludeno man, vntill peraduenture any man doe exclud himselfe. Eley. 55. 1. Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and ye that haue no flace, come, buy, and eate, come, I say, buy wine & milk without silver and without money. Math. 11. 28. Come unto me, all ye that are weary & laden, and I will ease you. Ioh. 3. 15. That whosoever beleueth in him should not perish, but haue eternall life. Also the Sacraments of Baptisme and the Lords supper, doe to every one effectually apply indefinite promises, and therefore are very effectual to enforce particular assurance or plerophorie of forgiveness of finnes.

III. That doubtfulness and despaire are most grievous finnes.

IV. That contrary to hope, men must vnder goe beleue with Abraham. Rom. 4. 18. Which Abraham aboue hope, beleued unto hope, that he should be the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken to him, So shall thy seed be.

V. That the mercy of God, and the merit of Christs obedience, being both God and man, are infinite, Eley. 54. 10. For the mountains shall remove, and the hills shall fall down: but my mercy shall not depart from thee, neither shall my covenant of peace fall away, saith the Lord, that hath compassion on thee. Psal. 103. 11. For as high as the heauen is above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that feare him. 1. Ioh. 2. 1. My babes, these things write I vnto you, that ye sin not: and if any man sinne, we haue an advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ, the iust. 2. And he is the reconciliation for our finnes: and not for ours only, but also for the finnes of the whole world. Psal. 130. 7. Let Israel waite on the Lord, for with the Lord is mercy, and with him is great redemption.

VI. That God measureth the obedience due vnto him, rather by the affection and desire to obey, then by the act and performance of it. Rom. 8. 5. For they that are after the flesh, fauour the things of the flesh, but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit. 7. Because the wisdom of the flesh, is enemie against God: for it is not subiect to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Rom. 7. 20. Now if I doe that? would not, it is no more I that do it, but the sinne that dwelleth in me. 21. I find then by the law, that when I would doe good, euil is present with me. 22. For I delight in the law of God, concerning the inner man. Mal. 3. 13. I will spare them, as a man spares his sonne that reuerenceth him.

V II. When one sinne is forgiven, all the rest are remitted also; for remission being given once without any prescription of time, is given for ever. Rom. 11. 29. For the gifts & calling of GOD are without repentance, &c. 10. 43. To him also give all the Prophets witness, that through his name, all that believe in him, shall receive remission of sinnes.

V III. That grace and faith are not taken away by falls of infirmity, but thereby are declared and made manifest. Rom. 5. 20. Moreover, the law entered thereupon, that the offence should abound; neverthelesse, where sinne abounded, their grace abounded much more. 2. Cor. 17. 7. And lest I should be exalted out of measure, &c. there was given unto mee a prick in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me. 8. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. 9. He sayd, My grace is sufficient for thee.

X. That all the works of God are by contrary means. 2. Cor. 12. 9. My power is made perfect through weakness.

CHAP. XLIII.

Of the third assault.

The third Assault, is concerning Sanctification.

The temptation, is a prouoking to sinne, according to the disposition of every man, and as occasion shall offer it selfe. 1. Chro. 21. 1. And Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel. Ioh. 13. 2. And when supper was done, &c. the diuell had now put into the heart of Iudas Iscariot, Simons sonne, to betray him.

In this temptation, the diuell doth wonderfully diminish and extenuate those sins, which men are about to commit, partly by objecting closely the mercy of God, and partly by couering or hiding the punishment which is due for the sinne.

Then there are helps to further the diuell in this temptation.

First, the flesh, which lusteth against the spirit, sometimes by begetting euill motions and affections, and sometimes by ouerwhelming and oppressing the good intents and motions. Gal. 5. 17. For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary one to another, so that ye cannot do the same thing: that you would. 19. Moreover the works of the flesh are manifest, which are adultery, fornication, uncleanness, wantonnes, 20. Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, debate, emulations, wrath, contentions, seditions, heresies, 21. Envy, murders, drunkennes, gluttony, and such like, whereof I tell you before, as I also haue told you before, that they which doe such things, shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Iam. 1. 14. But every man is tempted, when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence, and is infused.

Secondly, the world, which bringeth men to disobedience, through pleasure, profit, ho-

our, and euill examples. Eph. 2. 3. Among whom we also had our conversation in time past, in the lust of our flesh, in fulfilling the will of the flesh, and of the minde, and were by nature the children of wrath, as well as others. 1 Ioh. 2. 16. For all that is in the world, as the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye, and pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of this world.

Resistance is made by the desire of the spirit, which worketh good motions and affections in the faithfull, and driueth forth the euill. Gal. 5. 22. But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, 23. Meeknesse, temperance: against such there is no law. 24. For they that are Christs, haue crucified the flesh, and the affections: and the lusts thereof, 26. Let vs not be desirous of vaine glory, prouoking one another, enuying one another.

The prelatiues are these, whereby men are strengthened in resisting.

I. To account no sinne, light or small. Gal. 5. 9. A little leaven doth leaven the whole lump. Rom. 6. 23. For the wages of sinne is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Iesum Christ our Lord.

II. To auoide all occasions of sinne. To these rather agreeeth the prouerbe vfed of the plague: lagni, tarde, cito: that is, alittle, slowly, quickly. 1 Thess. 5. 22. Abstaine from all appearance of euill. Iud. vers. 23. And other saue with feare, pulling them out of the fire, and hate enter the garment spotted by the flesh.

III. To accustom thy selfe to subdue the lesser sinnes, that at the last, thou maiest overcome the greater, Rom. 13. 4.

IV. To apply thy selfe to thy appointed calling, and alway to be busily occupied about something in the fame.

V. To oppose the law, the iudgements of God, the last iudgement, the glorious presence of God, and such like, against the rebellion and loosnesse of the flesh. Prou. 28. 14. Blessed is the man that feareth alway: but hee that hardeneth his heart shall fall into euill. Gen. 39. 9. There is no man greater in his house than I: neither hath he kept any thing from me, but only thee, because thou art his wife, how then can I doe this great wickednesse, and so sinne against God?

Here certain prelatiues take place.

Against vniust anger, or priuate desire of reuenge. Here meditate, I. That injuries happen vnto vs by the Lords appointment, for our good. 2 Sam. 16. 10. II. God of his great goodness forgiveth vs far more sins, then it is possible for vs to forgive men. III. It is the duty of Christian loue to forgive others. IV. We must not desire to destroy them, whom Christ hath redeemed with his precious blood. V. Wee our selues are in danger of the wrath of God, if we suffer our wrath to burne against our brother. Forgive (saith he) and it shall be forgiven. Math. 6. 14. VI. We know not the circumstances of the facts, what the minde was, and purpose of them against whom we swell.

Bridles,

Bridles, or externall remedies, are these: I. In this we shall imitate the clemencie of the Lord, who for a very great season doth often tolerate the wicked. Learn of me, for I am humble and meke. Mat. 11. 29. II. There must be a pausing and time of delay, betwixt our anger and the execution of the same. Attenuandum commended Augustus, that hee being angry, should repeat all the letters of the Alphabet, or A B C. before he did either speake or doe any thing against another. III. To depart out of those places where those are, with whom we are angry. I V. To auoid contention, both in word and deede. Doe nothing through contention. Phil. 2. 3.

Remedies against those bad desires of riches, and honour, I. God doth euen in famine quicken and reuiue them which feare him. Pal. 33. 18, 19. The eye of the Lord is vpon them that feare him, to deliver their soules from death, and to preserve them from famine. I I. Godliness is great gaine, if the minde of man can be therewith content, 1 Tim. 6. 6. III. We doe waite and looke for the resurrection of the body, and eternal life: therefore we should not take such carking care for this present mortall life. IV. We are seruants in our fathers house, therefore looke what is comenient for vs, that will hee lovingly bestow vpon vs. V. The palpable blindness of an ambitious minde desireth to be set aloft, that hee may haue the greater downefall; and hee feared to be humbled, least he should not be exalted. VI. Adam when he would needs be checkmate with God, did bring forth himselfe and his posterity headlong to destruction. VII. He is a very ambitious rob-God, which desireth to take that commendation to himselfe, which is appropriate onely to the Lord.

Prelatiues against the desires of the flesh. I. He that will be Christs Disciple, must euen day take vp his crosse. Luk. 9. 23. II. They which are according to the spirit, fauour of such things as are according to the spirit. Rom. 8. 5. III. They that walke after the flesh shall die. Rom. 8. 13. IV. We ought to behaue our selues as citizens of the kingdome of heauen. Phil. 3. 20. V. We are the temple of God. 1. Cor. 3. 16. Our members they are the members of Christ. 1. Cor. 6. 15. And wee haue dwelling within vs the spirit of Christ, which we should not grieve. Eph. 4. 30. Concerning this, looke more in the explication of the fiftenth commandment.

In this temptation, the fall is, when a man being ouertaken, falleth into some offence. Gal. 6. 1.

Here Satan doth wonderfully aggravate the offence committed and doth accuse & terrifie the offendour with the iudgements of God. Mat. 27. 3. Then when Iudas which betrayed him, saw that he was condemned, he repented himselfe, and brought againe the thirty peeces of silver to the chief Priests & Elders, saying I haue sinned, betraying the innocent blood: but they said,

What is that to vs? see thou to it. 5. And when he had cast downe the silver peeces in the temple, hee departed, and hanged himselfe.

The remedie, is a renewed repentance, the beginning whereof is sorrow in regard of God for the same sinne: the fruits whereof are especially feuen. 2. Cor. 7. 9. Now I reioyce not that ye were sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye sorrowed godly, so that in nothing ye were hurt by vs. 10. For godly sorrow causeth repentance vnto saluation, not to berepented of: but worldly sorrow causeth death. 11. For behold, this thing that ye haue bene godly sorrow, what great care it hath wrought in you: yea, what clearing of your consciences: yea, what indignation: yea, what feare: yea, how great desire: yea, what zeale: yea, what punishment: in all things ye haue followed your selues, that ye are pure in this matter.

I. An endeavour and purpose to doe well, according to the rule of Gods word.

II. An Apologie, that is a confession of the sinne before God, with an earnest intreaty of pardon for the offence. Pal. 32. 5. Then I acknowledged my sinne vnto thee, neuer hid I mine iniquitie: for I thought, I will confesse against my selfe, my wickednesse vnto the Lord, and thou shalt forgive the punishment of my sin. 2 Sam. 2. 13. Then David said vnto Nathan, I haue sinned against the Lord: and Nathan said to David, The Lord also hath put away thy sinne, thou shalt not die.

III. Indignation against a mans selfe, for his offence.

IV. A feare, not so much for the punishment, as for offending the Lord. Pal. 130. 3. If thou thoroughly marrest iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand?

V. A desire to be fully renewed, and to bee delivered from sinne.

VI. A fervent zeale to loue God, and to imbrace and keepe all his commandments.

VII. Reuenge, whereby the flesh may be tamed and subdued, least at any time afterward, such offences be committed.

CHAP. XLIV.

Of the patient bearing of the crosse.

The patient bearing of the crosse, teacheth how Christians should vndergoe the burden.

The crosse, is a certaine measure of afflictions, appointed by God, to every one of the faithfull. Math. 16. 24. If any man will follow me, let him forsake himselfe, take vp his crosse, & follow me. Col. 1. 24. Now reioyce I in my sufferings for you, and fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the Church.

Wee ought to take vp his crosse willingly, euen with both hands, when it shall please God to lay it vpon vs.

And after we haue taken it vp, we must beare it with patience and perseverance. Col. 1. 11. Strengthened with all might, through his glorious power, vnto all patience and long suffering with ioyfulness. Luk. 21. 19. Possesse your soules with patience.

The prelatiues of patience are: I. Strength by the holy Ghost. Phil. 4. 13. I am able to doe all things through the help of Christ, which strengtheneth me. Phil. 1.29. It is given to you for Christ, that not only ye should believe in him, but also suffer for his sake. 11. An holy meditation, which is manifold.

1. That the afflictions of the faithfull come not by chance, but by the counsell and providence of God, which disposeth all things in a most excellent sort. Gen. 45.4-5. It was God that sent Joseph into Egypt. 2. Sam. 16.10. The Lord biddeth Shemei curse David. Plal. 119.71. It was good for me, that I was afflicted, that I might learn by my statutes. Hence it is evident, that afflictions to the godly are inevitable. Act. 14.22. By many afflictions you must enter into the kingdom of God. Matthew 7.14. The gate is strait, and the way narrow that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Ioh. 16.33. In the world ye shall have troubles.

11. That albeit afflictions are grievous, yet are they good and profitable: for they are helps, whereby men being troubled for their finnes before God, obtaine peace and holiness of life. 2. Cor. 1.9. We received sentence of death in our selves, because we should not trust in our selves, but in God, which raiseth the dead. Efa. 26.16. Lord in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a prayer, when they chastening was upon them. Hof. 5.15. I will goe, and returne to my people, till they acknowledge their fault, and seek me in their affliction they will seek me diligently. Plal. 78.34. When he slew them, they sought him, & they returned, and they sought God early. Ierem. 31.18. I have heard Ephraim lamenting thus, Thou hast corrected mee, and I was chastised as an untrained calf: I convert thou me, and I shall be converted. Heb. 12.11. No chastisement for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous: but afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousness unto them, which are thereby exercised. Plal. 30.5. Weeping may abide as eating: but joy cometh in the morning. Ioh. 15.2. Every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit: I. Pet. 1.6. Wherein ye rejoice, though now for a season (if need require) ye are in heaviness through many temptations. 2. Cor. 1.4. The God of all comfort, which comforteth us in all our tribulations, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any affliction: by the comfort wherewith wee our selves are comforted of God. Rom. 5.3. We boast in afflictions, knowing that affliction bringeth patience. Heb. 2.10. He did consecrate the Prince of their salvation through afflictions. Wee permit Chirurgians: that they should both bind vs lying diseased in our beds, and scare vs with hot yrons, yea, lanch and searh our members with razours: and lastly, wee send them away vitally with friendly and kinde speeches: and often with a golden fee for their thus handling vs. Shall wee then suffer so many things of a Chirurgeon to cure a bodily disease, and will wee not give God leave to cure by affliction the most infected diseases of our soules?

By this also may we gather, that the afflictions of the Godly are signes of their adoption.

on. Heb. 12.6. Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and he scourgeth every one whom he receiveth. 7. If ye endure chastisement, God offereth himself unto you, as unto sinners.

And that they are to them the Kings high way to heaven. Iam. 1.12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. 2. Cor. 4.17. For our light affliction which is but for a moment, causeth unto us a far more excellent and an eternal weight of glorie.

11. That God hath promised favour, mitigation of punishment, his presence, and deliverance. Phil. 1.29. 1. Cor. 10.13. God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above measure, but with temptation will give deliverance. 2. Sam. 7.14. Plal. 50.15. Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. Plal. 121.4. He that keepeth Israel will neither slumber nor sleepe. Efa. 43.2. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the floods: that they doe not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the very fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kinde upon thee. 3. For I am the Lord thy God, the holy one of Israel, thy Saviour.

IV. That in all troubles of the faithfull, Christ is a companion. 1. Pet. 4.13. Rejoice, that ye are partakers of the afflictions of Christ. 2. Cor. 4.10. Every where we beare about in our body the dying of Christ, that the life of Iesus might also be made manifest in our bodies. Col. 1.24.

V. That the Angels are ready to defend such as feare God. Plal. 34.7. 2. King. 6.16. Feare not, there are more with us then against us.

CHAP. XLV.

Of the ending upon God.

Thus much concerning the denall of our selves, now followeth the profession of Christ: which respecteth either Christ himselfe, or his members: namely, the faithfull, Mat. 25.40. Verily I say unto you, in as much as ye did it to one of the least of my brethren, ye did it unto me.

That profession which directly concerneth Christ, is either continuall, or only in the time of danger.

Continuall, is the calling vpon the name of God, and ought ever to be performed of vs, in the name of Christ Iesus our Mediator. 1. Cor. 1.2. To the Church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Iesus, Saints by calling, with all that call on the name of our Lord Iesus Christ in every place, both their Lord and ours. Act. 9.14. He hath authority from the high Priest, to bind all that call upon thy name. Col. 3.17. Whatsoever ye shall doe in word or in deede, doe it in the name of the Lord Iesus, giving thanks to God, and the Father by him.

The calling vpon Gods name, is by prayer, or thanksgiving. Phil. 4.6. In all things let your requests be shewed unto God, in prayer and supplication, with giving of thanks.

Prayer hath two parts: Petition, and Assent. Mark. 11.24. I say unto you, whatsoever ye desire when when ye pray, believe that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you.

Petition, is the first part of prayer, whereby we, according to the rule of Gods word, aske his helpe, for the obtaining of such necessities as we want, 1. Ioh. 5.14. This is the assurance that we have in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth us.

In every petition wee mult expresse two things: 1. A sense of our wants. 11. A desire of the grace of God to supply those wants. 1. Sam. 1.10. Shee was troubled in her minde, and prayed unto the Lord, and wept sore. Dan. 9.4. And I prayed to the Lord my God, and made my confession, saying, 5. We have sinned and have committed iniquities, &c. 16. O Lord according to thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy wrath be turned from the city Hierusalem, &c. to the 20. verse. Plal. 130.1. Out of the deepe I called to thee O Lord. 1. Sam. 1.15. Then Hannah answered & said, Nay my Lord, but I am a woman troubled in spirit: I have drunke neither wine nor strong drink, but have poured out my soule before the Lord, &c. to the 17. verse. Plal. 143.6. I stretch forth mine hands unto thee, my soule desireth after thee, as the thirly land.

Assent, is the second part of prayer, where, by we beleue, and profess to beare God, that he, in his due time, will grant unto vs those our requests, which before we have made unto his maiesty. 1. Ioh. 5.14, 15. This is the assurance that we have in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we aske, we know that we have the petitions that wee have desired of him. Math. 6.1. Leade us not into temptation: but deliver us from euill. For thine is the kingdom, thine is the power, and thine is the glory, for ever and ever, Amen.

As for the faithfull, howsoever they in their prayers, bewray many infirmities: yet no doubt they have a notable sense of Gods favour, especially, when they pray zealously, and often unto the Lord. Iam. 5.16. Pray one for another, that ye may be healed: for the prayer of a righteous man availeth much if it be fervent. Luk. 1.13. The Angel said unto him, Feare not Zacharias: for thy prayer is heard. Iona. 4.1. It displeased Iona exceeding, and he was angry. 2. And Iona prayed unto the Lord, and said, I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my saying, when I was yet in my country? therefore I presented it to sit unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and mercifull, slow to anger, and of great kindeheart, and repentest thee of the euill. Rom. 8.26. Gen. 19.18. Let said unto them, Do not so, I pray you my lords, &c. Plal. 6.1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chastise me in thy wrath, &c. verse 2, 3, 4, 5. Plal. 8.9. Plal. 20.5. Plal. 35.9. 18.28. Plal. 16.7.

Thanksgiving, is a calling vpon Gods name, whereby we with ioy and gladnesse of heart, doe praise God for his benefits either received, or promised. Plal. 45.1. Mine heart will utter forth a good matter, I will intrust in thy words of the King: my tongue is as the penne of a swift writer. Eph. 5.20. Giving thanks alwaies for all things unto God even the Father, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ. Plal. 36.8.9. How excellent is thy mercy, O God? therefore the children of men trust under the shadow of thy wing. They shall be satisfied with the sameness of thine house, and thou shalt give them drinke out of the fountains of thy pleasures. Coloss. 3.16, 17.

CHAP. XLVI.

Of Christian Apologie, and Martyrdome.

The profession of Christ in dangers, is either in word, or deede.

Profession in word, is Christian Apologie, or the confession of Christ. Rom. 10.10. With the heart, man believeth unto righteousness: and with the mouth man confesseth to salvation. Plal. 22.22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee.

Christian Apologie, is the profession of Christ in word, when as we are ready with feare and meeknesse, to confesse the truth of Christian religion, to often as need requirith; and the glory of God is endangered, even before unbelieveers, especially if they be not past all hope of repentance. 1. Pet. 3.15. Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready alwaies to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you: 16. And that with meeknesse and reverence, having a good conscience, that when they speak euill of you as of euill doers, they may be ashamed, which blame your good conversation in Christ. Act. 7. the whole chapter. Stephen there maketh an Apologie for himselfe.

Mat. 7.6. Give not that which is holy to doges, nor cast your pearls before swine, lest they treade them under their feet, and turning againe all to rent you.

Profession, which is indeede, is called Martyrdome. Martyrdome is a part of Christian profession, when as a Christian man doth for the doctrine of faith, for iustice, & for the salvation of his brethren, vndergoe the punishment of death, imposed vpon him by the adulteraries of Christ Iesus. Mar. 6.18. 27, 28. He that hateth his life, it is not lawful for thee to hate thy brothers wife. And immediately the king sent the hangman, & gave him charge that his head should be brought: so he went and beheaded him in the prison. 2. Cor. 12.5. I will most gladly bestow, and be bestowed for your soulds, though the more I love you, the less am I loved.

Notwithstanding, it is lawful for Christians to lie in persecution if they find themselves not sufficiently resolved and strengthened by Gods spirit to stand. Mat. 10.23. When they persecute you in one citie, flee into another. Verily I say unto you, ye shall not have finished all the cities of Israel, till the sonne of man come. Ioh. 10.39. Against, they flattered to apprehend him, but he escaped out of their hands. Act. 9.30. When he brethren knew it, they brought him to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tarfus. 1. King. 18.17. Was it not told my Lord what I did, when I sawed flax the Prophets of the Lord, how I bid an hundred men of the Lords Prophets, by stripes in a cane, and fed them with bread and water? A. 20. 22. Now behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Hierusalem, and know not what things shall come unto me there.

CHAP. XLVII.

Of Edification, and Almes among the Faithfull.

That profession of Christ, which concerneth his members, namely, the Saints and faithfull ones, is either Edification, or Almes. Edification is every particular duty towards our brethren, whereby they are furthered either to grow up in Christ, or els are more fully vnitied to him. Rom. 14. 19. Let us follow those things which concerne peace, and wherein we one may edifie another.

To Edification, these things which follow appertaine:

I. To give good example. Matth. 5. 16. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good work, and glorifie your Father which is in heauen. 1. Pet. 2. 12. Have your conversation honestly among the Gentiles, that they which speake euill of you as of euill doers, may by your good workes which they shall see, glorifie God in the day of visitation.

II. To exhort. Heb. 3. 13. Exhort one another daily, while it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the sight of the deceitfullnesse of sinne. Rom. 1. 12. That I might be stirred up together with you, through our mutual faith, both yours and mine.

III. To comfort. 1. Thess. 5. 14. Comfort the feeble minded, beare with the weak, be patient towards all men. 1. Iam. 5. 16. Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. 20. He that converteth a sinner from going astray out of this way, shall save a soule from death, and shall hide a multitude of sinnes. 1. Thess. 4. 18. Comfort your felues one another with these words.

IV. To admonish. Rom. 15. 14. I myself am persuaded of you, brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, and filled with all knowledge; and are able to admonish one another. 1. Thess. 5. 14. We desire you, brethren, admonish them that are vniuely.

They shall obserue an holy manner of admonition, who in the spirit of meeknes, & as it were, guilty of the like infirmities themselves, doe admonish forthwith all their brethren of such faults, as they cernely know by them, & that out of Gods word. Gal. 6. 1. Brethren, if any man by escaype be fallen into any fault, ye, which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meeknes, considering thy selfe, lest thou also be tempted. Math. 7. 5. Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see to take the mote out of thy brothers eye. 2. Tim. 4. 2. Preach the word: be instant in season, and out of season: im- prove rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and do- line. Mat. 18. 15. If thy brother trespass against thee, goe and tell him his faults betweene thee and him alone: if he heare thee, thou hast wonne thy brother.

1. Rom. 15. 14. 2. Tim. 4. 2. Leu. 19. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, but thou shalt plainly rebuke thy neighbour, and suffer him not to sinne.

Reliefe peculiar to the godly among themselves, is a dutie, whereby the rich doe out of their plenty supply the wants of the poore, both according to their ability, & sometimes beyond their ability. 2. Cor. 8. 3. To their power (I beare record) ye, beyond their power they were willing. A. 2. 44. 45. All that bled were in one place, and had all things common; and they sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every one had need.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Of the fourth degree of the declaration of Gods loue: and of the estate of the Elect after this life.

The fourth degree of the declaration of Gods loue, is Glorification, Rom. 8. 30. Glorification, is the perfect transforming of the Saints into the image of the Son of God. Phil. 3. 21. Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himselfe. 1. Cor. 15. 44. It is sowne a naturall body, and it is raised a spiritual body: there is a naturall body, and there is a spiritual body. 45. As it is also written, The first man Adam was made a liuing soule: the last Adam was made a quickning spirit. 49. And as we haue borne the image of the earthly, so shall we beare the image of the heavenly. Phil. 17. 15. I will behold thy face in right conscience, and when I awake, I shall be satisfied with thine image.

The beginning of Glorification is in death, but it is not accomplished and made perfect before the last day of iudgement.

The death of the Elect, is but a sleepe in Christ, whereby the body & soule is seuered. The body (b) that after corruption it may rise to greater glory. The soule, that it being fully sanctified, may (d) immediately after departure from the body, be transported into the kingdom of heauen. (a) 1. Cor. 15. 17. If Christ be not raised, they which are asleepe in Christ, are perished. A. 7. 60. When he had thus spoken, he slept. (b) 1. Cor. 15. 36. Of foule, what which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. (c) Reu. 21. 27. There shall enter into it none: vncleane thing, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or lies: but they which are written in the Lambs book of life. Rom. 7. 25. I myself in my mind serue the law of God, but in my flesh the law of sinne. (d) Luk. 13. 42. He said to Iesus, Lord remember me when thou comest to thy kingdom. 24. Then Iesus said to him, Thy faith shall thee with me in Paradice. Reu. 14. 13. Then I heard a voice from heauen, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead, which hereafter die in the Lord. Euen so saith the spirit: for they rest from their labours, and their works follow them.

Against the feare of death, note these pre-fermatiuies:

I. Death

I. Death, it freeth the godly from the tyranny of Satan, sinne, the world, the flesh and eternall damnation, yea, from infinite both perils and losses, and doth place vs both life and happy, vnder the shadow, as it were, of Christs wings.

II. Christ by his death, hath sanctified vs to vs both death and the graue.

III. Christ is both in life and death, gaine to the godly. Phil. 1. 21.

IV. Those consolations which the spirit of Christ doth suggest to the soules of the faithfull, doe by many degrees surmount the dolours of death.

V. The desire of that most bright and glorious beholding of god, and the presence of those Saints which are departed before vs.

VI. In stead of our bodies, we shall be clothed with glory, 2. Cor. 5. 1.

VII. The thing of death, namely sinne, is then so taken away, as that that Serpent can no more hurt vs. 1. Cor. 15. 55. O death, where is thy sting? O graue, where is thy victory? Hebr. 2. 15. That he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death, were all their life-time subiect to bondage.

VIII. We should not so much thinke of our death, as to take an exact accounte of our life. For that man cannot die ill, who hath liued well: and he seldom dieth well, that hath liued badly.

IX. The angels they stand at our elbowed, tho so soone as a Saint departeth, they may with all speed, immediately transport his soule into heauen.

Soules being once in heauen, remaine there till the last day of iudgement, where they partly magnifie the name of God, & partly doe waite, and pray for the consummation of the kingdom of glorie, and full felicitie in bodie and soule. Reuel. 5. 8. And when he had taken the booke, the foure beasts, and the foure & twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, hauing euery one harp, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of the Saints. 9. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the booke, and to open the seales thereof, because thou wast killed, and hast redeemed vs to God by thy blood, out of euery kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. Reuel. 14. 2. I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harpers. 3. And they sung as in were, a new song before the throne. Reuel. 6. 10. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, Lord holy and true; dost thou not iudge, and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

CHAP. XLIX.

Of the estate of the Elect at the last day of iudgement.

The last day of iudgement shall be on this manner:

I. Immediately before the coming of Christ, (a) the powers of heauen shall bee shaken: the Sunne and Moone shall be darkened, and the Starres shall seeme to fall from heauen: (b) that which fight the elect then liuing shall reioyce, but the reprobate shall shake euery ioynt of them. (c) Math. 24. 29. Immediately after the tribulation of those daies shall the Sonne be darkened, and the Moone shall not give her light, the Starres shall fall from heauen, & the powers of heauen shall be shaken: 30. And then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in heauen: and then shall all the kindreds of the earth mourn, & they shall see the sonne of man come in the clouds of heauen, with power and great glorie. (b) Luk. 21. 26. Mens hearts shall faile them for feare, and for looking after these things, which shall come on the world. 28. And when these things begin to come to passe, then looke up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth neere. 2. Tim. 4. 8. Henceforth is laid up for me the crowne of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous iudge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto them that loue his appearing.

II. Then the heauens, being all set on fire, shall with a noife like to that of chariot wheeles, suddenly passe away, & the elements, with the earth, and all therein shall bee dissolved with fire. 2. Pet. 3. 12. Looking for, and hastning onto the coming of the day of God, by which the heauen being sette on fire, shall bee dissolved, and the elements shall melt with heate. 13. But we looke for new heauens, and a new earth, according to his promise, wherein dwelleth all righteousness.

At the same time, when as all these things shall come to passe, (a) the found of the last Trumpet shall be heard, founded by the Archangel. (b) And Christ shall come suddenly in the clouds, with power, & glory, and a great traine of Angels, (c) Mat. 24. 31. And he shall send his Angels with a great found of a Trumpet: 1. Thess. 4. 16. The Lord himselfe shall descend from heauen with a shout, even with the voice of the Archangel, and with the Trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. (b) Mat. 24. 30. 1. Thess. 4. 17. Then shall we which are liue and remaine, be caught up with them also in the cloudes to meete the Lord in the air, and so shall we euer be with the Lord.

III. Now at the found of the Trumpet, the Elect which were dead, shall rise with those very bodies which were turned to dust, and one part rent from another, shall by the omnipotent power of God, be recreated, and the foules of them shall descend from heauen, and be brought againe into those bodies, and be brought againe into those bodies. As for (a) them which then shall be aliue, they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and this mutation shall bee in stead of death. And at that time, the bodies shall recieue their full redemption; (b) and all the bodies of the Elect shall be made like the glorious bodie of Christ Iesus, and therefore shall bee spiritual, immortal, glorious, and free from all infirmity. (c) 1. Cor. 15. 51. 52. We shall not all sleepe, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last Trumpet. 43 (b) 1 is sown in dishonour, it is raised in honour: it is sown in weaknesse, it is raised in power. 44. It is sown a naturall body, it is raised a spirituall bodie.

IV. Last of all, when they are all conuened before the tribinall seate of Christ, he will forthwith place the Elect, secured from the reprobate, & taken vp into the aire, at his right hand, and to them being written in the booke of life, will he pronounce this sentence: Come ye blessed of my father, possesse the kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world. Mat. 25. 33. He shall set the steepe on his right hand, and the goates on the left. 1. Thess. 4. 17. Reu. 20. 15. Whoſeuer was not found written in the booke of life, was cast into the lake of fire.

CHAP. L.

Of the estate of the Elect after indgement.

THe last iudgement beeing once finished, the elect shall enjoy immediately blessednesse in the kingdome of heauen.

[illegible]

Blessednesse hath two parts: Eternall life, and perfect glory.

Eternal life is that fellowship with God, (2) whereby God himself is, through the Lamb Christ, life vnto the Elect. For in the kingdom of heaven, the elect shall not need meat, drinke, sleepe, aire, heate, colde, phisicke, apprell, or the light of the Sunne and Moone, (3) but in place of all these, that they haue in them Gods spirit, by which immediately they shall be quickened for euer, (4) 1. Ioh. 14. 23. If any man loue me, he will keepe my word, and my father will loue him, and we will come vnto him, and dwell with him. 1. Ioh. 4. 15. Who euer confesseth that I Christ is the Sonne of God, God dwells in him, and he in God. Rec. 21. 3. And I heard a voice, saying Beholde the Tabernacle of God is with vs, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himselfe shall be with them and dwell with them. 23. At that Christ hath no need of Sunne or Moone to shine in; for the glorie of God did light it, and the Lambe is the light of vs. Rec. 22. 2. In the midst of the street of it, and of either side of the river, Was the tree of life, which bare twelue manner of fruites, and gaue fruitie eueri moeth; and the leaues of the tree (served to heale the nations with). 4. And there shall be no night there, and they neede

no candle, nor light of the Sunne, for the Lord giueth them light, and they shall raigne for euermore, (b) 1. Cor 15. 45. Rom. 8. 11. If the spirit of him that raised up Iesus from the dead, dwell in you hee that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortall bodies, because that his spirit dwelleth in you.

Perfect glorie, is that wonderfull excellencie of the Elect, whereby they shall bee in a farre better estate then any heart can wish. This glorie consisteth in three points. I. In that they shall first beholde the face of God, which is his glorie and maiestie Reu. 22.4. As they shall see his face, and his name shall bee in their forehead. Psalme 17. 15. I will behold thy face in righteousness, and when I awake I shall be satisfied with thine image. II. In that they shall be most like to Christ, namely, iust, holy, incorruptible, glorious honourable, excellent, beautiful, strong, mightie and nimble. 1. Ioh. 3. 2. Deeply beloved, now are wee the sonnes of God, but yet it doth not appeare what we shall be, and we know that when he shall appeare, we shall be like him, for we shall be like him as he. Philipp. 3. 21. Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himselfe. III. They shall inherit the kingdome of heauen, yea, the new heauens and the new earth shall bee their inheritance. 1. Pet. 1. 4. God hath begotten you to an inheritance immortall and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heauen for you. Math. 25. 34. Then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, possess the kingdome prepared for you before the foundations of the world were laid. Reu. 5. 10. Thou hast made vs unto our God Kings and Priests, and wee shall reigne on the earth. Reu. 21. 7. Hee that ouercometh shall inherite all things, and I will bee his God, and he shall be my sonne.

The fruit that commeth from both these parts of blessednesse, is of two sorts : Eternall ioy, and the perfect seruice of God. Psalm. 16.

11. Thou wilt shew me the path of life, in thy presence is the fulnes of ioy: and at thy right hand there are pleasures for euermore. Psal. 36.8. They shall be satisfied with the fatnesse of thine house, and thou shalt give them drinke out of the riuer of thy pleasures. 9. For with thee is the well of life, and in thy light shall we see light.

The parts of Gods service, are Prayer, and Thanksgiving. Reul. 21. 3. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the Tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them: and they shall be his people, and God himselfe shall be their God with them. Cap. 5. 12. Saying with a loud voice, worthy is the Lambe that was killed, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and prayse, &c. 13. Cap. 11. 17. The foure & twenty Elders which sat before God out their faces, fell on their faces and worshipped God saying, we give thee thanks, Lord God almighty, Which art, and Which was, for which art to come: for thou hast received thy great might, and hast obtained thy kingdom.

A view of the distribution of the causes of Salvation and Damnation, as the Church of Rome would have it.

Place this Table between the fol. 95. 96.

The manner of performing this service, is to worship God by himselfe immediately. In heaven there shall neither bee temple, ceremony, nor Sacrament, but all these wants shall God himselfe supply together with the Lambe, that is, Christ, Reuelat. 21. 22. I saw no Temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lambe, are the Temple of it.

This service shall be daily, and without intermission. Reuel. 7. 15. They are in the presence of the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple.

A Corollarie, or the last conclusion.

THUS God, in saving the elect doth clearly set forth his iustice and mercy. His iustice, in that hee punished the finnes of the Elect, in his Sonnes owne person. His mercy, in that hee pardoned their sinne, for the merites of his Sonne. Ephes. 1. 18. That the eyes of your understanding may be lightened, that ye may know what the hope is of his calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritance is in his Saints. 19. And what the exceeding greatnes of his power towards vs, which belene, according to the working of his mighty power. 20. Which he wrought in Christ, cap. 3. 18. That ye may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, & length, & depth, and height: 19. And to know the love of Christ.

All these things the Lord himselfe doth thus decree, and in his good time will accomplish them to the glorious praise of his name. Pro. 16. 4. The Lord hath made all things for his owne sake: yea, even the wicked for the day of euil.

CHAP. LI.

CONCERNING THE ORDER of the causes of Salvation, according to the doctrine of the Church of Rome.

THERE are two things requisite to obtaine saluation: Predisposition, and the Execution thereof.

Predisposition, is a fore-ordaining of the reasonable creature to grace in this life, and glory in the life to come. Sebastian. Cattaneus. Enchir. tract. 1. cap. last.

This, in regard of the first effects thereof, which are vocation, election, and ordination to eternall life, hath the cause of it in God, namely, his will: but in regard of the last effect, which is the execution of such an ordinance, and the obtaining of eternall life, it hath the cause of it in man; because according to the common opinion, Gods predisposition is by reason of workes fore-seene in men, that is, God doth therefore predetermine or reiect some man, because he foreseeth that he will well or badly vse his grace. But for the more euident declaration of this, here follow conclusions must be set downe.

I. The Predisposition, and Reprobation of God, doe not constrain or enforce any necessity vpon the will of man.

I I. God hath predetermined all men, that is, he hath appointed and disposed all mankind, as they might obtaine eternall saluation. I I

III. Man is neither by necessity, nor chance saved or condemned, but voluntarily.

I V. God hath predetermined some, which hath he reiected.

V. Those whom God hath predetermined by his absolute predetermination, which cannot be lost, shall infallibly die in grace: but they which are predetermine, by that predetermination which being according to present iustice, may be lost by some mortall sinne, which followery are not infallibly saved, but oftentimes such are condemned, and lose their crowne & glory. Hence ariseth that position of theirs, that he which is iustified may be a reprobate, and perish eternally. Torrens. Aug. Confess. 2. booke. 4. chap. 20. Sect. Therefore predetermination is not certaine, seeing it may be lost.

V I. God alone doth know the certaine, and set number of them which are predetermine.

V II. There is one set number of them which are predetermine, or reiect, and that can neither be increased nor diminished.

The Execution of predetermination, is either in infants, or those of yeeres of discretion.

Concerning Infants, the merit of Christ is applied vnto them by baptism rightly administered: so that whatsoever in original corruption may truly and properly be accounted for sinne, is not onely, as I may say, not pardoned away, or not imputed, but vterly taken away.

For there is nothing that God can have in such as are renewed. Concil. Trid. 5. sect. 5. Can.

Neuertheless we must confesse, that there remaineth yet in such as are baptized, concupiscence, or the relics of sin. The which seeing it is left in men to wastle withall, it hath no power to hurt but such as yeeld vnto it.

The execution of Predetermination in such as are of riper yeares, hath fixe degrees.

The first, is Vocation, whereby men, not for their owne merites, but by Gods preuenting grace through Christ, are called to turne themselves vnto God.

The second, is a Preparation to righteousness, whereby men, through the inherent power of Free-will, do apply themselves to iustification, after that the same power is stirred vp by the holy Ghost. For Free-will is onely somewhat diminished, and not extinguished: and therefore so soone as the holy Ghost toucheth and enlighteneth the heart, it worketh together with the same spirit, freely assenting vnto the same. This Preparation hath seauen degrees, Biel 4. booke 13. dist. 2. quest.

The first is faith, which is a knowledge and an assent, whereby men agree that those things are true which are deliuered concerning God and his will, reuealed in the word of God.

This is the foundation of iustification, & prepareth the heart: because it stirrs vp free-will, that it may affect the heart with those motions by which it is prepared to iustification.

I. The act of faith, is to apprehend the vgliness of sinne, and the wages thereof.

II. After this, followeth a feare of Gods anger, and of hell fire.

III. Then begin men to dislike, and in some sort to detest sinne.

And herein stands the disposition of Con- gruity, not immediately, nor sufficient, but far removed.

IV. At the length, faith turneth it selfe to the contemplation of Gods mercies, and beleeueth that God is ready to forgive sinnes, by the infusion of charitie into those, which are before sufficiently prepared and disposed.

V. Out of this contemplation proceedeth the act of hope, whereby they begin to desire God, as the chiefest good.

VI. Out of this act of hope, ariseth loue, whereby God is loved about all things, by the strength of nature.

VII. After this loue, followeth a new dislike, and a detestation of sinne, not so much in regard of feare of the punishment in hell fire, as in regard of the offence to God, who is finally loved more then all other things.

VIII. After all these, followes a purpose of amendment of life: and here comes in the measure of congruity, that is, sufficient: or else the immediate, sufficient, and last disposition before the infusion of grace.

The third degree of Predestination, is the first iustification, whereby men of vniuers, are made iust, not onely through the remission of their sinnes, but also by a sanctification of the inward man, by his voluntary receiuing of grace and gifts.

The efficient cause of this iustification, is the mercy of God, and the meritorious passion of our Sauour Christ, whereby he purchased iustification for men. The instrumentall cause, is baptisme. The formal cause, is not that iustice which was inherent in Christ, but which hee infused into man: and that is especially hope, and charity.

The fourth degree, is the second iustification, whereby men are of iust, made more iust: the cause hereof is faith, joined with good works.

It is possible for such as are renewed, to keep the commandments: and therefore it is false, that a iust man committeth so much as a venial sinne in his best actions, much lesse, that he deserteth eternall death for the same.

The fifth degree, is the reparation of a sinner by the Sacrament of Penance. The which is, as it were, the second boord after a shipwracke. The cause why this reparation is necessary, is, because men lose the grace of iustification by enery mortall sinne.

The last degree, is the fruit of iustification, namely, the glory of eternall life, the which workes done in grace, do ex condigno, condignely merit, or by sufficient worthinesse.

Condigne merit, is when as the reward is after such fort due, as that if it bee not given, iniustice will be committed: This by the ri-gour of iustice is due.

Two conditions are requisite to make a merit. I. That a reward should by some compact or bargain be due: And this condition is in works, in regard of God. For God in the scriptures hath promised a reward to such as work well. II. That besides this compact whereby the debtor is bound, there should bee also some worthinesse in the worke, or some proportion of the worke to the reward.

The worthinesse or dignity of the worke, dependeth. I. On Christ, because Christ did not onely merit that his own proper actions should be meritorious, but the actions also of his members. II. On the holy Ghost. For the holy Ghost doth conspire, excite, and moue men to doe. III. On an habitual grace, which is a certaine participation of the diuine essence.

Thus much concerning the degrees of executing Predestination. Now followes the applying of Predestination particularly to the persons of men.

No man, so long as he liueth in this mortall life, ought so much to presume on the secret mystery of Gods Predestination, as to determine vndoubtedly that hee is in the number of them whom God hath ordained to eternall happinesse. For no man without especiall reuelation can know, whom God hath chosen to be his heires, Self. Eccl. x. 1.

The summe of all these, is this: God by a certaine grace giuen freely, or rather a grace preuenting, or comming before, the which is termed an speciall ayde, doth moue a man, that he may dispose himselfe vnto his iustifying grace, namely, that he may beleeue, feare, repent, loue, and propound to himselfe newnesse of life, &c.

Furthermore, if a sinner doe by his free will yeeld his assent vnto this diuine motion, and doth consequently and accordingly rightly dispose himselfe, God doth incontinently forgive him his sinne, and withall doth infuse into him iustifying grace, by which hee may doe good workes, and so by them merit eternall life. Beaum.

Errors of the Papists in their distributing of the causes of saluation.

And this is the doctrine of the Church of Rome, surely a very blasphemous doctrine, and no better to be accounted of, then as a gallows set vp for the torture and massacre of mens consciences. And that this may the more manifestly appeare to bee so, I will set downe the most principall errors of popish doctrine in this case.

The I. error.
Predestination is onely of the Elect, the Reprobates they are onely fore knowne.

The confusion.
The name of Predestination, by a figure called Synecdoche, the whole for the part, is taken taken indeed sometimes in the good part, & spoken of the Elect and faithful called, as Rom. 8. 30. Whom he predestinated, them also he called, and whom hee called, them also he iustified, and whom hee iustified, them also he glorified. So are the Ephesians said to be predestinate into the adoption of the sonnes of God, Eph. 1. 5. Yet may this word Predestination, neuertheless generally be extended vnto the decree of God, whether it be that of predestination to eternall life, or the other vnto eternall death. The reasons: I. Act. 13. 28. They gathered themselves together against thine holy Sonnes Iesus to doe whatsoeuer thine hand and thy counsell had determined (or fore-ordained, or predestinated, as we say) before hee was done. II. August. de Bono perue. Chap. 17. he calleth Predestination the disposition of future workes: and in his 15. booke of the Citie of God, chap. 1. he diuideth all mankind into two cities: Where of one is predestinate to reigne with God eternally, the other predestinate to vndergoe eternall punishment with the diuill. And in his Manuel to Laurentius, chap. 100. hee saith, That God hath wisely predestinated wicked men vnto punishment, & mercifully predestinated the good vnto grace. Thomas of Aquine 1. part. quest. 23. artic. 4. It mattereth not in regard of the name of predestination, whether a man be said to be predestinate to life eternall or not.

Furthermore, for a man to say that the Reprobates are fore-knowne, and not predestinate; is very inuiolous: because Gods foreknowledge, may in nothing which is to be, be shuered from his will and eternall decree. For that, which beeing hereafter to bee, is fore-knowne of God, that assuredly will come to passe, and shall be, & that either by the will of God, or without his will: if with his will, then no doubt, he both decreed & pre-ordained the same: if without or against his will, how is God then omnipotent? And surely euil it selfe, albeit God will it not in his approuing or allowing wil yet wil hee the free & willing permission thereof. August. in his Manuel or Enchiridon to Laurentius, cha. 100. hath an excellent saying to this purpose. Although (saith he) that those things which are euil, in that they are euil, cannot be good, yet that there are not onely good, but also euil things, it is very good: to the intent that after a maruillous & vnspokeable manner, that thing may not bee besides, or without his will, which also is done against his will, because it should not be done, vnlesse hee suffered it, neither doth hee suffer it against his will, but willingly.

The II. Error.
That Predestination is mutable. For, (according to the common opinion of the Papists) whosoever is predestinate, he is contingently predestinate as well on Gods part, as on manes: whence it followeth, that he which is predestinated, that is appointed to saluation, may be condemned; and he which is foreknowne that is, appointed to damnation, may be saved.

The Confutation.
The contrary to this their doctrine is most true. Namely, that the decree of God concerning euery mans eternall both saluation and damnation, is from all eternity set downe, and immutable. The reasons: I. Testimonies of Scripture. Rom 11. 26. The gifts and calling of God they are without repentance, such as are without repentance. Math. 24. 22. There shall arise false Christs and false Prophets: and shall doe great signes and miracles, so that [if it were possible] they should deceiue euen the elect. Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that iustifieth, who shall condemne? 2. Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God standeth sure, and hath this scale, The Lord knoweth who are his. II. Election and reprobation are in God, not in men: now there can be nothing in God which is not immutable. Mal. 3. 6. I the Lord am not changed.

II. My counsell shall stand, and I will do whatsoeuer I will. III. If this Popish conclusion should be granted, then would it follow of necessity, that the foreknowledge of God must be made void, his power weakened, and his will changed, each of which is impious once to dreame of. For hee which changeth his counsell, or his will, doth therefore change it; either because he at the length seeth that hee might haue taken better aduise, or else in that he seeth that hee could not bring his former purpose about as he would: Either of which are farre from our Lord God. IV. If were so, that the counsell of God is in any way mutable, it wil by this come to passe, that euery man must bee vncertaine whether he bee predestinate to life or not: whereby that notable say and only ground of our full assurance to be faued, is vtterly shaken and ouerturned. Wherefore let this truth bee maintained of vs, namely, that both the election and reprobation of God stand immutable, so that neither the Elect can become reprobates, nor the reprobates elect; and consequently neither these be faued; nor they condemned.

Against this doctrine, the popish fort except. If you speake in a compound sense or meaning (in sensu compo) it is very true, that the predestinate cannot be damned, nor such as are foreknowne be faued: but if in a simple sense (in sensu diuiso) it is not so. This distinction is plaine by this example. White colour in a compound meaning cannot bee blacke, because blacknes is repugnant and contrarie to whitenesse: But in a diuided sense, white colour now may afterwards be made blacke. In like sort, one predestinated to saluation may, by reason of the free-will be filthy, sinne, and so be damned. Answe. These are silly shifts, and meere sophismes, because such as are predestinated to the end, namely, saluation, are necessarily predestinated to the means and saluation, the which they cannot but vse, and by them come to the end it selfe.

The III. Error.
All men are predestinate, that is, disposed and ordained of God, so as they might attaine eternall life. Sebast. Cattenens in his Enchirid. ch. p. of Predett.

The confusion.

This is manifestly false. For, I. infants who so soone as they are borne, depart this life, seeing for want of time they cannot in this life vie the means of saluation, albeit they may haue life eternall, yet obtaine they it not by vying the means vnto the fame. II. That which the Lord indeede actually doth, the very same hath he determined to doe. For hee doth nothing neither vnaduisedly, or vnwillingly: but he actually forsaketh a very great part of mankind, the which being shut vp vnder contumacie, he doth leaue to it selfe. Act. 14. 16. whom times past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their owne waies. Hence also is it, that Eph. 2. 12. all the Gentiles are said to be without God in the world. Therefore God decreed to forsake some men in this life, & consequently he ordained not all men to the obtaining of eternall life. Nay if God once but would in his secret will, that all men should be saved, it were vnpossible for any to perish: because Gods willing, is his doing of it: and if the that was ordained to saluatori perih, then must God now needs haue left off to will that, which he would fro al eternitior els being to will that, which before hee would not; the which cannot be said of God, without blasphemie. I. I. Paul, 2. Thess. 2. 10. faith, that there be certaine men, simoniacos, which perse, and them he distinguisheth from the elect. v. 13. Rom. 9. 21. 22. hath not the potter power, &c. where there is not only mention made of vessels of glory, & mercy, but also of certaine, made, and fashioned in Gods eternall counsel, as vessels of wrath. Now looke whome God hath made to wrath and destruction, them he neuer disposed to obtaine eternall life.

The IV. Error.

Predestination, in regard of the last effects thereof, hath his cause in man, that is, in mans free-will, and Works: for they whome God had foreseen, that they would receive grace offered in Christ, & leade their life according to the Law, them he predestinated, not of works, but of his mercy; yet so, as that he had respect vnto works, or to deale with them according to their works: or as others say) to ordaine them by their works foreseen. As for example: God did from all eternitie foresee and foreknow that Peter should be saved, and Indus condemned; because he from the same eternitie did foresee & foreknow, that Peter would accept of the grace offered vnto him, and after of the same aright: and hee did also foresee that Indus should receive the grace offered, yet notwithstanding by reason of his peruerse will, use the same peruerly.

The confusion.

This their forged denie of foreseene works, I. Paul doth shew to be plainly counterfeit, when as he faith that the Ephesians were elected in Christ before the foundations of the world were laid: Eph. 1. 3. and that not because he did foresee that they would be holy, but that they might be holy and vnblemished before God with I. ue. And c. 2. v. 10. he faith, they were created

A. to good works in Christ, that they might walke therein. In which places, good works they are made effects of predestination; but the effect foreseene can not be the cause of his cause: for that enery cause; in the order both of nature & knowledge, doth goe before his effect. I. I. Tit. 3. 5. Not of works which we haue done, but according to his mercie did God elect and saue vs. III. God in electing vs, did not regard anything out of himselfe, but in himselfe did he elect vs, Eph. 1. 4. and 9. Therefore did hee not regard future works. IV. Some of the Popish schoolemen confesse, that Predestination, doth put nothing in the partie predestinated, in respect of him, for which God did predestinate him. Thom. 1. prime. quest. 13. art. 2. V. Election is onely of Gods mercy. Rom. 9. 16. VI. God saw no grace in man, but that which he himselfe mult bestow vpon him; whence it is apparent, that in election the beginning thereof proceedeth from grace. VII. Seeing there is nothing either about God, or greater then God, it must needs bee impious to assigne any cause of his will, either out of, or about his maiestie: and therefore that his fore-knowledge of faith and workes should bee accounted the impulsue cause of his decree, concerning mans saluation, wee doe rightly denie.

The V. Error.

By Baptisme rightly administered, not onely the guiltines, but also the corruption of originall sinne, is washed away, as that it is not afterward properly accounted a sinne.

The confusion.

We contrarily do thus distinguish of sinne. Sinne, in regard of the guiltinesse of Gods wrath, and also in regard of the punishment, together by one act is takē away in Baptisme: but in regard of that error and corruption of nature, it is not at the first quite taken away, but successiue; & by little and little it is extinguished; euen as our renouation wrought by the holy Ghost, is by little and little begun and increased in vs. Reasons. I. Paul would not so greatly bewaile his originall sinne, if after Baptisme it ceased any more to be sinne, see, faith he, another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my minde, and leading mee captive vnto the law of sinne which is in my members. O miserable man I who shall deliuer mee from this body of death? Rom. 7. 23. 24. II. Originall sinne, is called a sinne out of measure insupport. Rom. 7. 13. And, Heb. 12. 1. a sinne that hangeth fast on, or, easily compasseth vs about. III. Concupiscence is the roote of all actuall sinne: and therefore euen after Baptisme, it must properly be a sin. IV. Vnlesse that concupiscence were a sinne, where would or could bee that vehemēt and hot combate betwene the flesh and the spirit? Gal. 5. 17.

The VI. Error.

Baptisme is absolutely necessary to saluation, especially for children.

The

The Confutation.

Wee deny that Baptisme is of absolute necessity to saluation. Reasons. I. Sacraments do not conferre grace, but rather confirme grace when God hath conferred the same. The children of faithfull parents are borne holy, not by naturall generation, but by the grace of God, and are not first made holy by baptisme: and as for such as are of yeeres of discretion before they be baptized, they cannot be baptized vnlesse they beleue. Now all such as beleue, are both iustified, and reconciled to God; and therefore albeit they without their owne default, are deprived of the Sacraments, it is vnpossible for them to perish. II. God did precisely appoint circumcision to bee on the eigh't day, not on the first, or the second: now there is no doubt, but that many infants, before their eight day, were preuented of circumcision by death, all which for a man peremptorily to set downe as condemned, were very absurd. III. If circumcision were of such absolute great necessity, why was it for the space of forty yeares in the desert intermitted: and that onely because the Israelites being often in iourney, such as were circumcised were by it in iopardie of death: no doubt Moses and Aaron would neuer haue omitted this Sacrament so long, if it had beene absolutely necessary to saluation. IV. This doctrine of the absolute necessity of Baptisme, was vnknowne to the ancient Fathers. For the primitive Church did tolerate very Godly men though wee allow not their fact) that they should defer their baptisme many yeares, yea often to the time of their death. Hence was it, that Constantine the great was not baptized till a little before his death: and Valentinian by reason of his delay, was not at all baptized: whom notwithstanding Ambrose pronounceth to be in heauen. And Bernard in his 77. epist. doth putreth, that not euery deprivation of baptisme, but the contempt or palpable negligence is damnable.

The VII. Error.

As soon after the fall of Adam hath free will as well to do that which is good, as that which is euill; although it be in a diuers manner, that is, hee hath free-will to do euill simply, & without any external aide: but to do well, none at all, but by the grace of God preuenient, or guiding vs: the which grace notwithstanding enery man hath, and to the which grace it is in our free will either to consent and together worke with the same, or not. And therefore the power of free will to do that which is good and acceptable to God, is onely attenuated and weakened before conserfion, not quite taken away, and therefore man can of himselfe worke a preparation to iustification.

The Confutation.

Man not regenerated, hath free-will to doe onely that which is euill, none to doe good. Hee being not already conuered cannot so much as will to haue faith, and be conuered. Reasons. I. Man is not said to be weake or

A. sicke, but dead in sinne. Eph. 2. 1. Col. 1. 13. As hee therefore that is corporally dead cannot stirre vp himselfe, that he may performe the works of the liuing, no not them when others help him. so he that is spiritually dead, cannot moue himselfe to liue vnto God. II. Hee is the seruant of Satan, & bondslau of sin. Eph. 2. 2. Rom. 6. 13. Now we know, that a seruant standeth at the beck and pleasure of another, and can do nothing els. III. That which no man can by himselfe know and beleuee, the same he can not will: but no man can know and beleuee those things that appertaine to the kingdome of God. 1. Cor. 2. 14. The naturall man perceiueh not the things of the spirit of God. 2. Cor. 3. 5. We are not sufficient of our selues, to thinke any thing as of our selues. Therefore no man can will by himselfe, those things that appertaine to Gods kingdome. IV. That which is a deadly enemy to goodnes, and is directly repugnant thereunto, the same desireth not that which is good; but the will is an enemy, and directly repugnant vnto goodnes. Rom. 8. 7. The wisdom of the flesh is hatred against God: for it is not subiect to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

Obiect. I. The word is nere vnto thee in thine heart, and in thy mouth, that thou maist doe the same. Deut. 30. 14. Ans. It is not easie to performe the law legally, but Euangelically. Now this is done, when as any man doth fulfill the law by a Mediator, and from him receiuing the spirit of God, doth endeavour to performe new obedience.

Obiect. II. God giueth many precepts by which wee are commanded to repent, & beleue, obey God, &c. Therefore to do these, we haue free-will. Ans. Such places do admonish vs, not of our strength, but of our duty & infirmities: neither do they shew what men can doe, but what men should doe. I. I. They are instruments of the holy Ghost, whereby hee doth reue and conuert such as shall be saved. They obiect againe. God in commanding these, doth not require things impossible. Ans. He doth not indeede to men in their innocencie, but now to all such as fell in Adam hee doth, and that by their owne default, not Gods.

Obiect. III. Phil. 2. 13. Work out your saluation with feare and trembling. Ans. Paul speaketh of such as are already conuered, which haue their will in part freed.

Obiect. IV. If the will be a meere patient, it is constrained to do that which is good. Ans. The will both in it selfe, and of it selfe, is a meere patient in her first conuerfion vnto God; but if it be considered as it is mooned by the spirit of God, it is an agent. For, beeing mooued, it moueth. It is not therefore compelled, but of a willing will, is made a willing will.

The VIII. Error.

The holy Ghost doth not giue grace to will, but onely that vnlesse the will which before was chained, and also doth excite the same: so that the will by her owne power, doth dispose her selfe to iustification.

The

The Confutation.

It is apparently false. To will those things which concerne the kingdom of God, as faith, conversion, and new obedience, is the meere gift of Gods Spirit. Mat. 11. 27. No man knoweth the Father but the Sonne, and he to whom the Sonne will reveale him. Luk. 8. 10. To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Phil. 2. 13. It is God which worketh in you to will and to doe. 1. Cor. 12. 3. No man can say that Iesus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghost. Briefly, he who according to God is to be created in righteousness and holiness, Eph. 4. 24. cannot any waies dispose himselfe to iustification, or new creation. For it is impossible that a thing not created, should dispose it selfe to his creation.

The IX. Error.

That preparation to grace, which is caused by the power of free-will, may by the merit of congruity deserve iustification.

The Confutation.

These things smell of more then Satanicall arrogancie. For what man, but such an one, as were not in his right minde, would beleefe, that he, vnto whome so many millions of condemnations are due, could once merit the least dramme of grace? The prodigall sonne was not received into fauour by reason of his deserts, but by fauour. Luk. 15. 21. His sonne said vnto him, I haue sinned against heauen, and against thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne.

The X. Error.

The faith of the godly, or that which iustifieth, is that whereby a man doth in generall beleefe the promises & blessing of GOD, and by which also he giueth his assent to other mysteries reuealed of God concerning the same.

The Confutation.

Faith is not onely a generall knowledge, & assent to the historie of the Gospell, but further also a certaine power, both apprehending and feuerally applying the promises of God in Christ, whereby a man doth assuredly set downe that his sins are forgiven him, and that he is reconciled vnto GOD. Reasons. I. A particular assurance of the fauour of God, is of the nature of faith. Eph. 3. 10. By whom we haue boldnesse, and entrance with confidence, by faith in him. Rom. 4. 20. Neither did he doubt of the promise of GOD through vnbeleefe, but was strengthened in the faith, & gave glory vnto God. 21. Being fully assured that hee which had promised, was also able to doe it. Heb. 10. 22. Let vs draw nere with a true heart in assurance of faith. II. Particular doubting is reprehended. Mar. 14. 31. O thou of little faith, why dost thou doubt? Luk. 12. 29. If hee ye not in suspense. III. That which a man prayeth for to God, that must he assuredly beleefe to receive. Mark. 11. 24. But the faithfull in their prayers make request for adoption, iustification, and life eternall: and therefore they must certainly beleefe that they shall receive these benefits. IV. Rom. 5. 1. Wee being therefore iustificed, haue peace with

A GOD. But there can be no peace, where there is not a particular assurance of Gods fauour. V. That which the spirit of God doth testifie particularly, that must also be beleefe particularly: But the spirit of God doth giue a particular testimony of the adoption of the faithfull. Rom. 8. 16. Gal. 4. 6. This therefore is in like sort to be beleefe.

Whereas they say, that no man hath a particular assurance, but by special reuelation, as was that which Abraham and Paul had, is false. For the faith of these two is set down in Scripture, as an example which we should all follow. For this cause Abraham is called the Father of the faithfull. Rom. 8. 11. and Paul testifieth the very same of himself, 1. Tim. 1. 16

B For this cause, (saith he) was I received to mercy, that Iesus Christ should first shew on me all long suffering, vnto the example of them, which shall in time to come beleefe in him vnto eternall life. Augustine, whereas they say, that we haue a morall assurance, but not the assurance of faith, it is a popish deuise. For, Rom. 8. 16. the spirit of adoption (quasi pater) together beareth witness to our spirit. Where wee see two witnesses of our adoption, our owne spirit, and the Spirit of God. Our spirit doth testifie morall of our adoption, by sanctification, and the fruites thereof: and therefore also the spirit of God witnesseth after another manner, namely, by the certainty of faith, declaring and applying the promises of God.

C Obiect. I. We are commanded to worke our saluation with feare and trembling. Ans. This feare is not in regard of Gods mercy forgiving our sins, but in respect of vs, and our nature, which is euer prone to slide away, and starting from God.

Obiect. II. In respect of Gods mercy, we must hope for saluation: but in respect of our vnworthinesse, we must doubt. Ans. I. We may not lawfully doubt of Gods mercy, and because doubtfulness is not of the nature of faith but rather a naturall corruption. II. If we consider our own vnworthinesse, it is out of all doubt, we must be out of all hope, and despair of our saluation.

Obiect. III. There be many sins vnknowne vnto vs, and so also uncertaine whether they be pardoned vnto vs. Ans. Hee that certainly and truly knoweth that but one sinne is pardoned him, he hath before God all his sins remitted, whether they be known or vnknown.

Obiect. IV. No man dare sweare, or die in the defence of this proposition: I am the child of God, or in Gods fauour, and iustificed. Ans. They which haue an vnfaide faith, will, if they be lawfully called, not onely testifie their adoption by an oath, but seale it also by their blood.

Obiect. V. A man may haue this faith which the Protestants talke of, and lye in a mortall sinne, and haue also a purpose to perseuere in a mortall sinne. Ans. It is farre otherwise: for Act. 15. 9. A true faith purifieth the heart,

Thefe

The Sophisters doe further affirme, that this faith, which to them is nothing but a knowledge and illumination of the mind, concerning the truth of Gods word, is the roote and foundation of iustification. The which, if it be true, why should not the diuell be iust? for he hath both a knowledge of Gods word, and thereunto by beleeuing doth giue his assent; who notwithstanding hee haue such a faith, yet can hee not be called one of the faithfull.

Here they except and say: The diuels faith is void of charity, which is the forme of faith: But this is a doting surmise of their owne brain. For charity is the effect of faith. 1. Tim. 1. 5. But the effect cannot informe the cause.

The XI. Error.

Man: lone of God, doth in order and time go before his iustification and reconciliation with God.

The Confutation.

Nay contrarily, vnlesse we be first perswaded of Gods loue towards vs, we neuer loue him. For we loue him, because he loued vs first. 1. Ioh. 4. 19. Again, it is impossible, that Gods enemy should loue him: but he which is not yet iustified, or reconciled to God, he is Gods enemy. Rom. 5. 9. 10. Neither is any man before the act of iustification, made of Gods enemy his friend.

The XII. Error.

Inferred or inherent iustice, is the formall cause of iustification, whereby men are iustified in the sight of God formally.

The Confutation.

We doe contrarily hold, that the materiall cause of mans iustificatio, is the obedience of Christ in suffering & fulfilling the law for vs: but as for the formall cause, that must needs be imputation, the which is an action of God the Father, accepting the obedience of Christ for vs, as it were our owne. Reasons. I. Look by what we are absolved from all our sinnes, and by which we are accepted to eternall life, by that alone are we iustified: but by Christs perfect obedience imputed vnto vs, we are absolved from all our sinnes, and through it we are accepted of God, to eternall life, the which we cannot attaine vnto by inherent holines. Therefore by Christs perfect obedience imputed vnto vs, we are alone iustified. This will appeare to be true, in the exercises of imprecation on Gods name, and also of repentance.

For intencion, and conflicts with sinne and Satan, faith doth not reason thus: Now I haue charitie and inherent grace, and for these God will accept of me: But faith doth more rightly behold the Sonne of God, as hee was made a sacrifice for vs, and sitteth at the right hand of his Father, there making intercessio for vs: so, him, I say, doth faith see, & is assured, that for this his Sonne, God will forgive vs all our sinns, and will also be reconciled vnto vs, yea, and account vs iust in his sight, not by any quality inherent in vs, but rather by the merit of Iesus Christ. Rom. 5. 19. II. As Christ is made a sin ner, so by proportion such as beleefe are made iust. But Christ was by imputation onely made and accounted a sinner for vs. 2. Cor. 5. 21. For he became suretie for vs, and a sacrifice for our sinnes, vpon which all both the guiltinesse of Gods wrath, and punishment for vs was to be laid. Hence it is, that he is said to become (vniuersa) a curse for vs: therefore wee againe are made iust onely by imputation. III. The contrary to condemnation is remission of sinns; and iustification is the opposite of condemnation. Rom. 8. 33. It is God that iustificeth, who shall condemne? Therefore iustification is the remission of sinns. Now remission of sinns dependeth onely vpon this imputation of Christs meritis. IV. Albeit infused & inherent iustice may haue his due place, his praise, and also deserts, yet as it is the worke of the holy Ghost, it is not in this life complete, & by reason of the flesh wherto it is vnited it is both imperfect, and infected with the dregs of sin. Eia. 64. 6. Therefore before Gods iudgement: sear it cannot claime this prerogative, to absolve any from the sentence of condemnation.

Obiect. I. This imputation is nothing else but a vain conceit. Ans. I. Yes, it is a relation or diuine ordinance, whereby one relation is applied to his correlative, or as the Logicians say, is as the foundation to the Terminus. II. As the imputation of our sinnes vnto Christ, was indeede something, so the imputation of Christs iustice vnto vs, must not bee thought a bare conceit. III. Again, the Church of Rome doth her selfe maintaine imputative iustice, namely, when as by Ecclesiasticall authorities she doth apply the merits and satisfactions of certaine persons, vnto other members of that Church. When it is apparant, that euen the Popes indulgences they are imputative.

Obiect. II. Imputative iustice is not euertlasting: but that iustice which the Messias brings is euertlasting. Ans. Although after this life there is no pardon of sinnes to be looked for, yet that which is giuen vs in this life, shall to our saluation continue in the life to come.

Obiect. III. If iustification bee by imputation, he may before God be iust, who indeede is a very wicked man. Ans. Not for any waies: for he that is once by imputation iustified, he is also at that same instant sanctified.

The XIII. Error.

There is also a second iustification, and that is obtained by worke.

The Confutation.

That, popish deuice of a second iustification, is a satanicall delusion. For, I. the word of God doth acknowledge no more but one iustification at all, & that absolute and complete of it selfe. There is but one iustice, but one satisfaction of God being offended: therefore there cannot be a manifold iustification. II. If by reason of the increase of inherent iustice, iustification should be distinguished into several kinds or parts, we might as well make an hundred kinds, or parts of iustification, as two. III. That which by order of nature doth follow after full iustification before God, cannot be said to iustifie. But good works do by order of nature follow mans iustification, and his absolution from sinnes: because no worke can please God except the person it selfe, that worketh the same, do before please him: But no mans person can please God, but such an one as being reconciled to God, by the merits of Christ, hath peace with him. IV. Such workes as are not agreeable to the rule of Legall iustice; they before the tribunall Seate of God, cannot iustifie, but rather both in, and of themselves are subiect to Gods, eternal curse. For this is the sentence of the Law. Deut. 27. 26. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the booke of the law to doe them. Now the workes euen of the regenerate, are not squared according to the rule of Legall iustice: wherefore Dauid being, as it were stricken, with the consideration of this, durst not once oppose, nor not his best workes to the iudgement of God, that by them hee might plead pardon of his sinns; whence it is that hee crieth out and saith, Psal. 142. 2. Enter not into iudgement with thy servant, O Lord, for then no flesh living shall be iustified in thy sight. The like doth Iob 9. 3. If I see (namely, Iuchan one as faith he is iust) contend with God, he cannot answer him one of a hundred. And Dan. 9. 18. We doe not present our supplications before thee for our owne righteousness, but for thy great tender mercies. V. Iustification by workes, let them be whatsoever they can bee, doth quite ouerturne the foundation of our faith. Gal. 2. If ye be circumcised, Christ will profit you nothing, and yet. Ye are absolved from Christ, whosoever are iustified by the law: ye are fallen from grace. In this place the Apostle speaketh of them, not which did openly resist Christ, and the Gospell; but of such, as did with the merit of Christ, mingle together the workes of the Law; as though some part of our saluation consisted in them. Exception. This place doth onely exclude such morall workes of the flesh, as doe goe before faith, or the workes of the law of Moses. Ans. This is vntue. For euen of Abraham being already regenerated, and of those his workes which were done when hee was iustified, Paul speaketh thus, Rom. 4. 5. To him, not which worketh, but which beleueth, is faith imputed. Those workes which GOD hath prepared that the regenerate should walke in them, are morall workes, and workes of grace; but these are excluded from iustification, and working mans saluation. Eph. 2. 10. And Paul being regenerate faith thus of himselfe, 1. Cor. 4. 4. I am not guilty unto my self of any thing, yet am I not thereby iustified. VI. The cause of the cause, is the cause of the thing caused; but grace without workes, is the cause of mans predestination, the which is the cause of his iustification: and therefore, grace without workes shall much more be said to be the cause of iustification.

Obiect. I. 1. Enit. 18. 5. He that keepeth my statutes shall live in them. Ans. This saying is a legall sentence: and therefore sheweth not what men can doe, but what they should doe.

Obiect. II. Psal. 119. 1. Blessed are they that walke in the law of the Lord. Ans. Man is not here said to be blessed, because he walketh uprightly, but because the person of such a walker is by the merits of Christ, iustified before God.

Obiect. III. Judge me according to my righteousness. Psal. 7. 8. And the fact of Phinees was imputed to him for righteousness. Ans. These places are not meant of that righteousness of the person, by which it is righteous before God; but of the righteousness of some particular cause, or worke. For whereas Dauid was accused of this crime, that he did affect Sams kingdom, he in this point doth in the words above mentioned, tell his innocence before God.

Obiect. IV. Mat. 25. v. 34. 35. &c. Wee are iudged according to our workes: therefore also by them we are iustified. Ans. There is not like: because the last iudgement is not the iustifying of a man, but a declaration of that iustification which we had before obtained. Therefore the last iudgement must be pronounced and taken, not from the cause of iustification, but from the effects and signes thereof.

Obiect. V. Luk. 16. 9. Make you friends of unrighteous Mammon, &c. that they may receive you into eternal habitations. Ans. This they doe, not as authors of saluation, but as witnesses of the same.

Obiect. VI. Dan. 4. 24. Redeeme thy sinnes by righteousness, and thine iniquities by mercy towards the poore. Ans. It is rather, break off thy sinnes, then redeeme, for so is the original: uow men break off their sinnes, by ceasing from them, not satisfying for them.

Obiect. VII. Evill workes condemne: therefore good workes iustifie. Ans. It followeth not; because good workes are not perfectly good, as euill workes are perfectly euill.

Obiect. VIII. We are saved by hope. Rom. 8. 24. Ans. We must distinguish between iustification, and saluation: saluation is the end iustification, is one degree to come to the end: but there is more required to the end than to a degree subordinate to the end: therefore we are saved by hope and faith, but iustified by faith alone.

Obiect. IX. Afflictions can give eternal glory. 2. Cor. 4. 17. Ans. This it doth not, as by it owne merit, effecting the same, but rather as a path and way manifesting and declaring the same.

Obiect. X. 1. am. 2. 21. Abraham was iustified by workes. Ans. Not as any cause of iustification, but as a manifestation thereof.

Obiect. XI. Rev. 22. 11. He that is iust, let him be more iust. Ans. This place must be understood of iustification before men, namely of sanctification, or an holy life: not of iustification in the sight of God.

Obiect. XII. We are iustified by faith; therefore by

by a worke. Ans. We are iustified by faith, not as it is a vertue and a worke, but as it is an instrument apprehending the iustice of Christ, whereby we are iustified. And in this respect, faith is said by the figure called Metonymia, to be imputed vnto vs vnto righteousness.

Obiect. XIII. The workes of grace are dyed in the blood of Christ. Ans. They are indeed dyed therein, but to the end they might the better please God, to iustifie man; and whereas they are so stained, as that they neede dying in the blood of Christ, therefore can they not any waies iustifie sinfull man. And the person of the worker, is as wel dyed in Christs blood, as is his worke, yet he cannot say that his person doth therefore iustifie him.

And as I have now proued, that this doctrine of the Papists is very erroneous; so I also anouch that it is most ridiculous. Because for a man to say that inherent righteousness is augmented by good workes, namely, the fruits of righteousness, is as if a man should say, that the vine is made more fruitfull by bearing grapes, or that the internal light of the Sunne is augmented by the external emission of the beames. Luthers saying is farre more true, Good workes doe not make a good man, but a good man doth make workes good.

The XIV. Error.

Grace is quite extinguished, or rather utterly lost by any mortall sinne.

The Confutation.

I. The word of God doth manifestly declare that it is farre otherwise. Ioh. 6. 37. All that the Father giueth me shall come vnto me: and him that cometh vnto me, I cast not away. Math. 16. 18. Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my Church: so that the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it. 1. Ioh. 2. 19. They went out from vs, but they were not of vs: for if they had bin of vs, they would haue continued with vs. Rom. 5. 1. Being therefore iustified, we haue peace with God. Now how could this be true, if hee that was before iustified, could any way quite fall from grace, and so perish? II. The elect after their very grievous fallings from God, forthwith repented them of their sinnes, as we may see in the example of Dauid, Peter, &c. the which argueth that they had not quite fallen from grace, and lost the spirit of God. III. If grace bee once vtterly lost, then the ingrafting of that partie into Christ is quite abolished: therefore for such as repent, there must needs succeed a second new ingrafting into Christ: and then it will also follow, that they must of necessity be baptized anew, which is absurd to thinke.

But for all this, we deny not, but grace may in part, and for a time be lost, to the end that the faithfull may thereby acknowledge, and know their weakness, and for it be humbled; but that there is any total, or small falling from grace, we vtterly deny.

The XV. Error.

It is possible to fulfill the Law in this life.

The Confutation.

The Law is euangelically fulfilled by belecting in Christ; but not legally, by doing the workes thereof. Reason. They which are carnall cannot possibly fulfill the law of God; but the most regenerate, so long as they live in this life, are carnall in part. Rom. 7. 14. I am, faith Paul of himselfe, carnall, and old vnder sin. Prou. 20. 9. Who can say, Mine heart is pure, I am pure from sinne? Eccl. 7. 22. There is none so iust vpon earth, which doth good, and sin not. Psal. 130. 3. If thou Lord, observe what is done amiss, Lord who shall abide it? We are daily taught to pray vnto God. Math. 6. 12. Forgiue vs our sinns. Exception. Indeed if the iustice of the faithfull be absolutely considered, it is imperfect, but as God doth exact it of our frailtie, it is perfect. Ans. This is but the fantasie of some doting Iesuite. For this sentence of the law is simple, eternal, and incommutable. Gal. 3. 10. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things, which are written in this booke, to do them. Neither may we imagine, that God will not therefore exact the full accomplishing of the law, because we are fraile. For we are creatures and debtors: now we know, that the debt doth not decrease, by reason of the debtors poverie.

Obiect. The faithfull are said to be perfect in this life. Ans. There is a two-fold perfection, the one incomplete the which is an endeaour or care to obey God in the obseruation of all his precepts; the other is tearmed complete, this is that iustice which the law requirith, namely a perfect and absolute iustice, according to that measure which man performeth to God in his innocency. In the first sense, the faithfull are said to be perfect, not in this latter.

The XVI. Error.

Workes done in grace, doe (ex condigno) condignely merit eternal life.

The Confutation.

I. Eternal life is the free gift of God. Rom. 6. 23. The wages of sinne is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Iesum Christ. Therefore it is not obtained by the merit of workes. II. The merit of condignitie is an action belonging to such a nature as is both GOD and man, not to a bare creature. For the Angels themselves cannot merit any thing at Gods hands: yea and Adam also, if hee had stood in his first innocency, could haue deserved nothing of God, because it is the bounden duty of the creature to performe obedience vnto his Creator. The merit therefore of condignity, doth only agree vnto Christ God & man, in whom each nature doth, for the effecting of this merit, performe that which belongeth to it. For the humanity doth minister matter vnto the meritorious worke, by suffering, and performing obedience; but the Deitie of Christ, whereunto the humanity is hypostatically vnited, doth conferre full and sufficient worthinesse vnto the worke: Hence is it that the Father doth speake thus of his sonne,

Math. 3. 17.

Mat. 3. 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (videmus) III. In the second commandment God doth promise eternal life to the keepers of his commandments, yet he faith not that they shall obtaine it by desert, but that he will shew merite to thousands of them that love him, and keepe his commandments. IV. That a worke may be meritorious, first, it must haue an equal proportion with legal iustice, and eternal life: secondly, merit doth presuppose this also, that in God there must be a due debt towards man; for God the ought of dutie, not by fauour to accept of the person of man: But all our works, yea our most holy workes, cannot come neere vnto legal righteousness. For, seeing all the regenerate are partly carnall, and partly spiritual, all their good workes in like sort are imperfectly good. For looke what the causes are, such must the effects needs be. Again, good workes doe presuppose a due debt in man, none in God. V. The ancient Fathers do not acknowledge this merit of condignitie as current. August. in his Manuel. cap. 25. My merit is Gods mercy. Greg. mor. 2. booke, cap. 4. Grace found me void of merit as my first corruption, and the same grace hath kept me void of merit ever since. Bernard. ferm. 68. upon the Cant. It is sufficient to know this, that merits are not sufficient. And ferm. 61. Cant. Mans iustice is Gods goodness. And Epist. 190. That the satisfaction of one may be imputed to all, as the finnes of all were borne by one. And as for ancient Doctors, merit was nothing els to them, but a good work acceptable to God. Aug. epist. 105. to Stetus. If it be grace, then is it not bestowed by reason of any merit, but upon free mercy. What merit of his own can he that is set at libertie bragge of, whos he had his merits, should have bene condemned? Good workes are wrought by man, but faith is wrought in man, without which no man could worke good workes. So the word merit doth signifie to due well, so be acceptable, to please; as the old interpreter hath, (for iniquitatem, signifying to please God,) vied this Latine word promereri, comereri.

Obiect. I. Workes haue attributed vnto them reward. Ans. Reward is not so much attributed to the worke, as to the worker, and to him not for himselfe, but for Christs meritis apprehended by faith. Therefore not our merit, or personal merit; but Christs merit, and our reward are correlatives.

Obiect. II. 2 Thess. 1. 6. It is a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulations, &c. Ans. It is righteous, not because God ought so to doe of dutie, but because he promised: now for God to stand to his word, is a part of iustice.

Obiect. III. Christ hath merited, that works might merit. Ans. I. This taketh quite away the intercession of Christ. II. It is against the nature of legal worke, to merit (ex condigno) condignly: because both the Law of nature & creation do bind man to performe legal workes vnto God. And further, all works are very imperfect, and mixed with sin. III. This doctrine concerning works, doth obscure & darken the merit of Christ: because that the obtaining of eternal life is withdrawn from his death and obedience, & attributed vnto works. For they say thus, that Christ by his passion did merite indeed for the sinners iustification, but a sinner once iustified, doth for himselfe by his owne meritis euen condignly merit eternal life.

Obiect. IV. The workes of the regenerate, are the workes of the holy Ghost, therefore perfect & pure. Ans. I. The workes of God are all perfect, but yet in their time, & by degrees: therefore sanctification which is a worke of God, must in this life remaine incomplete, and is made perfect in the world to come. II. The workes of God are pure, as they are the workes of God alone, not of God & impure man: but now good workes they doe come immediately from the natural faculties of the soule, namely, from the vnderstanding, and the will, (in which they being as yet, but partly regenerated, some corrupt qualities of sinne doe yet remaine) and are not immediately and simply, or wholly deriued from Gods spirit. And hence it is that they are all stained with sinne.

The XVII. Error.

Man knoweth not but by speciall reuelation, whether he be predestinated or not.

The Confutation.

The contrary to this, is a plaine truth. Reason I. That which a man must certainly beleue, that may he also certainly know without an especiall reuelation: but every faithfull man must beleue that he is elected: it is Gods commandment that we should beleue in Christ, 1 Ioh. 3. 23. Now to beleue in Christ, not onely to beleue that we are adopted, iustified, and redeemed by him; but also in him elected from eternitie, whereby it is apparent, that he which beleues not this, doth not beleue the whole Gospel. II. That which is sealed vnto vs by the spirit of God, of that we are very free without speciall reuelation: but our adoption, and so consequently our election, is sealed vnto vs by the spirit of God. 1 Cor. 2. 12. We haue not receiued the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God: that wee might know the things that are given to vs of God. Therefore is our election certainly knowne to vs. Eph. 1. 13. In whom also ye haue trusted after that ye heard the word of truth, even the Gospel of your salvation, wherein also after that ye beleueed, ye were sealed with the holy spirit of promise.

Exception. The holy Ghost doth seale vnto vs our adoption morally by workes, and therefore the knowledge of our adoption is but only probable. Ans. It sealeth vnto vs our adoption, by begetting a speciall trust and confidence. For when as we heare Gods promises, and withall thinke vpon them, then doth the holy Ghost by the same promises moue our vnderstandings and wils to embrace them, and in mouing them, doth make vs both to giue our assent vnto them, and in them to rest our felices; whence ariseth a speciall assurance that we are adopted, and in the fauour of God. Luk. 10. 20. Reioyce rather that your names are written in beauen. But no man can be glad for that good which he is in doubt whether he haue receiued it or not. IV. 2. Pet. 1. 10. Study to make your vocation and election sure, because many will be false: but this is not in respect of Gods but our felices.

Obiect. No man must by the Catholike faith beleue any thing which God hath not reuealed either in the written or vnwritten word, namely tradition. But there is no such either writing or tradition as this, namely that such a particular man, suppose Peter, or Henrie is predestinated of God. Therefore no man must particularly beleue that he is saved. Ans. Albeit this particular proposition, I am elected, is not expressly set downe in the Scriptures, yet it is inclusively comprehended in them, as the Species in his Genus, as the Logicians speake: so that it may by iust confidence be gathered out of Gods word, if we reason thus: They which truly beleue are elected, 1 Ioh. 6. 35. I truly beleue, for he which beleueth doth know himselfe to beleue: therefore I am elected. The first proposition is taken from the Scriptures: the second, from the beleueers confidence, and from them both, the conclusion is easily deriued.

CHAP. LII.

Concerning the decree of reprobation.

Thus much shall suffice for the decree of Election, now follows the decree of Reprobation.

The decree of Reprobation, is that part of predestination, whereby God, according to the most free and iust purpose of his will, hath determined to reiect certaine men vnto eternal destruction, and miserie, and that to the praise of his iustice. Rom. 9. 21. Hath not the potter power over the clay, so make of the same lump one vessel to honour and another to dishonour? 1. Pet. 2. 8. To them which stumble at the word, being disobedient, vnto which thing (nisi) they were euen ordained. Iud. v. 4. There are certaine men crept in, which were before of old (semper) ordained to this condemnation. 1. Thess. 5. 9. God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but vnto salvation. In the Scriptures Cain and Abel, Ismael and Isaac, Esaue and Jacob, are propounded vnto vs as types of mankind, partly elected, and partly reiected.

Neither doe we here set downe any absolute decree of damnatio, as though we should thinke that any were condemned by the mere and alone will of God, without any causes inherent in such as are to be condemned. For vnto the decree of God it selfe, there are certaine means for the execution thereof annexed, and subordinate. And therefore though we neuer do, or can separate Gods decree, and the means to execute the same, yet doe wee distinguish them, and doe consider the purpose of God, sometimes by it selfe alone; and sometimes againe not by it selfe, but with middle causes subordinate thereto. And in this second respect, Christ is said to be predestinate: but in the former, namely, as the decree is considered by it selfe, he is not predestinated, but together with God the Father is a predestinator.

Again, the decree of God is secret. I. Because it ariseth onely from the good pleasure of God, vnsearchable, and adored of the verie Angels themselves. II. Because it is not knowne, but by that which is after it, namely, by the effects thereof.

CHAP. LIII.

Concerning the execution of the decree of Reprobation.

In the executing of this decree, there is to be considered, the foundation or beginning, and the degrees or proceeding thereof.

The foundation of executing the decree of Reprobation, is the fall of Adam, by which fall he was subiect both to sinne and damnation. Rom. 11. 32. For God hath sent vs all in vn-beliefe: that he might haue mercie on all. 1. Pet. 2. 8. Here we must note, that God hath so decreed to condemne some, as that notwithstanding, all the fault and desert of condemnation remaineth in the men onely.

Further, whom God reiecteth to condemnation, those he hateth: this hatred of God is, whereby he detesteth and abhorreth the reprobate when he is fallen into sin, for the same sin. And this hatred which God hath to man, comes by the fall of Adam: and it is neither an antecedent, nor a cause of Gods decree; but onely a consequent, and followeth the decree.

Reprobates are either infants, or men of riper age.

In reprobate infants, the execution of Gods decree is this: As soone as they are borne, for the guilt of originall and naturall sinne, being left in Gods secret iudgement vnto themselves, they dying are reiected of God for euer. Rom. 5. 14. *But death reigned from Adam to Moses, ouer them also that sinned not after the like manner of the transgression of Adam, which was the figure of him that was to come.* Rom. 9. 11. For ere the children were borne, and when they had neither done good or euill, that the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by workes, but by him that calleth.

Reprobates of riper age, are of two sorts: they that are called (namely, by an vneffectual calling) and they that are not called.

In the reprobates which are called, the execution of the decree of reprobation hath three degrees, to wit, an acknowledgement of Gods calling, a falling away againe, and condemnation.

The acknowledgement of Gods calling, is whereby the reprobates for a time, doe subiect themselves to the calling of God, which calling is wrought by the preaching of the word,

K 2

Matth.

Math. 22. 14. For many are called, but few are chosen. And of this calling there are five other degrees.

The first is, an enlightning of their minds, whereby they are instructed of the holy Ghost to the vnderstanding and knowledge of the word. Heb. 6. 4. For it is impossible that they which were once lightened, &c. 2. Pet. 2. 20. For if they after they haue escaped from the filthines of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord, and of the Saviour Iesus Christ, are yet tangled againe therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them then the beginning.

The second, is a certaine penitency, whereby the Reprobate, I. Doth acknowledge his sinne. II. Is pricked with the feeling of Gods wrath for sinne. III. Is grieved for the punishment of sinne. IV. Doth confesse his sinne. V. Acknowledgeth God to be iust in punishing sinne. VI. Desireth to be cured. VII. Promitteth repentance in his misery or afflictions, in these words, I will sin no more. Mat. 27. 3. Then when Iudas which betrayed him, saw that he was condemned, he repented himselfe, and brought againe the thirtie pieces of silver, to the chiefe Priests & Elders. Heb. 12. 17. For ye know, that afterward also when he would haue inherited the blessing, he was reiected: for he found no place to repentance, though hee sought the blessing with teares. 1. King. 21. 27. Now when Abiath heard those words, he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth vpon him, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly. Numb. 23. 10. Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his. Palm. 78. 32. For all this, they sinned still, and beleued not his wondrous workes. 33. Therefore their daies did he consume in vanity, & their yeares hastily. 34. And when he slew them, they sought him, and they returned, and sought God early. 35. They remembered that God was their strength, and the most high God their Redeemer.

The third degree, is a temporarie faith, whereby the reprobate doth confusedly beleue the promises of God, made in Christ, I say, confusedly, because he beleueth that some shall be saved, but he beleueth not, that he himselfe particularly shall be saved, because he being content with a generall faith, doth neuer apply the promises of God to himselfe, neither doth he so much as conceiue any purpose, desire, or endeavour to apply the same, or any wrestling or straining against securitie or carelesnesse and distrust. 1. am. 2. 19. Thou beleuest that there is one God, thou dost well: the diuels also beleue it and tremble. Math. 13. 20. And he that receiveth seed in the stony ground, is he which heareth the word, and incomueniently with ioy receiveth it. 21. For he hath no roote in himselfe, and dureth but a season. Ioh. 2. 23. Now when he was at Ierusalem at the Passouer in the feast, many beleued in his Name when they saw his miracle: which he did. 24. But Iesus did not commit himselfe vnto them, because he knew them all.

The fourth, is a tasting of heavenly gifts: as of Iustification, & of sanctification, and of the virtues of the world to come. This tasting is verily a sence in the hearts of the Reprobates, whereby they doe perceiue and feele the excellency of Gods benefits; notwithstanding they doe not enioy the same. For it is one thing to tast of dainties and a banquet, and another thing to feede and to be nourished thereby. Heb. 6. 4. 5. For it is impossible, that they which were once lightened, and haue tasted of the heavenly gifts, and were made partakers of the holy Ghost, and haue tasted, &c.

The fifth degree is, the outward holinesse of life for a time, vnder which, is comprehended a zeale in the profession of religion, a reuerence and feare towards Gods ministers, and amendment of life in many things. Mar. 6. 20. For Herod feared Iohn, knowing that he was a iust man, and an holy, and reuerenced him, and when he heard him, he did many thinges, and heard him gladly. Act. 8. 13. Then Simon himselfe beleued also, and was baptised, and continued with Philip, and wondered when he saw the signes and great miracles which were done. Hol. 6. 4. O Ephraim, what shall I doe vnto thee? O Iudah, how shall I reuocate thee? For your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the morning dew it goeth away.

The second degree of the execution of Gods counsell of reprobation, in men of ripe age which are called, is a falling away againe, which for the most part is effected & wrought after this manner: First, the reprobate is deceived by some sinne. Secondly, his heart is hardened by the same sinne. Thirdly, his heart being hardened, becometh wicked and peruerse. Fourthly, then followeth his incredulitie and vnbeliefe, whereby he consenteth not to Gods word, when he hath heard and known it. Fifthly, an Apostasie, or falling away from faith in Christ, doth immediately follow this vnbeliefe. Heb. 3. 12. 13. Take heede, brethren lest at any time there be in any of you an euill heart, and vnfaithfull, so depart away from the liuing God. 1. Tim. 1. 19.

This Apostasie, is sometimes sinne against the holy Ghost. In the sinne against the holy Ghost, wee haue these severall points to be considered: 1. The name; it is called a sinne against the holy Ghost, not because it is done against the person, or deitie of the holy Ghost, (for in this respect he that sinneth against the holy Ghost, sinneth in like sort against both the Father, and the Sonne) but it is so called, because it is done contrary to the immediate action, namely, the illumination of the holy Ghost. For albeit this be an action common to the whole Trinitie, yet the Father and the Sonne doe effect the same by the holy Ghost. 1. 1. The efficient cause of it: which is a set and obstinate malice against God, and against his Christ. Therefore when a man doth in the time of perfection, either for feare, or rashly denie Christ, hee doth not commit this sinne against the holy Ghost, as may appeare by the example of Peter who denied Christ. Matth. 26. 73, 74, 75. Neither doth he which

A frame of the doctrine of Predestination, out of the writings of some later Divines in Germanie.

Gods eternall decree, whereby he decreed:

1. To create mankind.
2. To give a law to his creature, with condition both of life and death.
3. After the giving of the law to permit the fall.
4. To redeeme all mankind in Christ; so that election is in this place made ununiversal.
5. To call mankind so redeemed in time: here is an universal vocation.

Predestination or special election, whereby God purposed with himselfe vpon his meere mercie, to bestow faith vpon some certaine of Adams posteritie called: and in like sort freely, not by faith or workes foreseene, to iustifie, and glorifie.

Iscredulitie and contumacie foreknowne: whereby the rest of Adams posteritie, refuse grace offered in the Gospel.

The decree of Reprobation, whereby God, for their contumacie foreknowne, decreed to condemne them to destruction.

The manifestation of Gods glorie.

Place this Table betweene Fol. 106. and 107.

persecuteth Christ and his Church vpon ignorance fall into this sinne. Paul persecuted the Church of Christ, and yet God had mercy on him, because he did it ignorantly. 1. Tim. 1. 13. Many of the Iewes crucified our Saviour Christ, who afterward, because they committed that grievous fact vpon ignorance, repenting at Peters sermon, they did obtaine remission of their finnes. Act. 3. 17. and 2. 37. 111. The object, namely, God himselfe, & the Mediatour Christ Iesus. For the malice of this sin is directed against the very maiestie of God himselfe, and against Christ. Heb. 10. 29. Of how much sorer punishment suppose yee shall bee worthy, which treadeth vnder foot the Sonne of God, and countereth the blood of the testament as an unbloody thing, wherewith he was sanctified, and doth despise the spirit of grace? Therefore this sinne doth directly respect the first table of the morall law, and is not some particular slipping aside from the obseruation of those commandments which are contained in this first table, such as are some doubtings concerning God, or of the truth of the Scriptures, or of Christ, &c. but it is a generall defection and apostasie from God, and that totally. 1 V. The subject in which it is. This sin is found in none at all, but such as haue bin enlightened by the holy Ghost, & haue tasted of the good gift of God. Heb. 6. 5. 6. Neither is it in him a bare cogitation alone, but an externall action, or rather such a blasphemie against God, as proceeds from a malicious and obstinate heart. Matth. 12. 31. V. The Elect cannot commit this sinne: and therefore they who feele in themselves a sure testimony of their election, neede neuer to despair: may this sin is not in euery reprobate: for many of them die before they haue this illumination by Gods spirit. V I. This sinne cannot be forgiven, not because it is greater then that Christs merit can satisfie for it, but because after a man hath once committed this sinne, it is impossible for him to repent. For the gift of repentance proceedeth from the holy Ghost, and the holy Ghost remaineth in vs through Christ apprehended by faith: now no man doth apprehend Christ, that doth maliciously despise and contemne him.

V II. It is very hard to know when a man committeth this sinne, because the root thereof, namely, set malice, lurketh inwardly in the heart, and it is not so easily discerned.

Out of all this which hath beene spoken, we may thus define this sinne. The sinne against the holy Ghost, is a voluntarie, and obstinate deniall of, and blasphemie against the Sonne of God, or that truth which was before acknowledged concerning him, and so consequently, an vniuersall defection from GOD and his true Church. We haue an example of this sin, partly in the diuel, who albeir he knew well enough that Iesus was that Christ, yet he neuer ceased both wittingly and willingly with all his power to oppugne the sacred Maiestie of GOD, together with the kingdome of Te-his Christ, as farre forth as he could, vtterly to supplant the same; partly in the Pharisees, Mat. 12. 32. 1oh. 3. 2.

After apostasie followeth pollution, which is the very fulnesse of all iniquitie, altogether contrary to sanctification. Gen. 15. 16. And in the fourth generation they shall come thither againe, for the wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full.

The third degree, is damnation, whereby the Reprobates are deliuered vp to eternal punishment. The execution of damnation begins in death, and is finished in the last iudgement. Luk. 16. 22. And it was so that the beggar died, & was carried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome: the rich man also died and was buried. 23. And being in hell torments, he lift up his eyes and saw Abraham as farre off, and Lazarus in his bosome.

The execution of this degree of reprobation in infidels which are not called, is this: First they haue by nature ignorance and vanitie of minde. After that followeth hardnes of heart, whereby they become void of all sorrow for their finnes. Then comes a reprobate sence, which is, when the naturall light of reason, and of the iudgement of good and euill, is extinguished. Afterward when the heart ceaseth to sorrow, then riseth a committing of sinne with greedinesse. Then commeth pollution, which is the fulnesse of sinne. Lastly, a iust reward is giuen to all these, to wit, fearefull condemnation, Eph. 4. 18. Having their cognition darkened, and being strangers from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the hardnesse of their hearts. Rom. 1. 28. For as they regarded not to know God, euen so God delivered them up to a reprobate minde, to doe those things which are not conuenient.

CHAP. LIV.

Concerning a new devised doctrine of Predestination, taught by some new and late Diuines.

Certaine new Diuines of our age, haue of late erected vpon a new doctrine of Predestination, in which, fearing belike, lest they should make GOD both vniuersal and vniuersally full, they doe in the distribution of the causes of saluation and damnation, turne them upside downe; as may appeare by their description in this table.

But this their doctrine hath some foule errors and defects, the which I, according as I shall be able, will briefly touch.

The 1. Error.

There is a certaine vniuersall or generall election, whereby God, without any either restraint, or exception of persons, hath decreed to redeeme by Christ, and to reconcile vnto himselfe all mankind vniuersally fallen in Adam, yea euery singular person, as well the Reprobate, as the Elect.

The Confutation.

The very name of Election doth fully confute this: for none can be said to be elected, it so be that God would have all men elected in Christ, for he that electeth or maketh choise, Christ, nor be said to take all neither can he that accepteth of all, be said to make choise only of some.

Obiect. Election is nothing els but dilection, or loue; but this we know, that God loueth all his creatures; therefore he electeth all his creatures.

Answer. I. I denie that to elect is to loue, but to ordaine & appoint to loue. Rom. 9. 13. II. God doth loue all his creatures, yet not all equally, but every one in their place.

Furthermore, this position doth flatly repugne the most plaine places of holy Scripture. Tit. 2. 14. Who gave himselfe for vs, that hee might redeeme vs from all iniquities, & purge vs to be a peculiar people vnto himselfe. Ioh. 10. v. 15. I gine my selfe for my sheepe. Exception. All men are the sheepe of Christ. Ans. Iohn addeth, v. 27. 28. And my sheepe heare my voice, and I know them & they follow me, and I gine vnto them eternal life, neither shall they perish. Eph. 5. 23. Christ is the head of the Church, and the same is the Saviour of his body. v. 25. Christ loved the Church, and gave himselfe for it. Redemption, and remission of finnes, is the inheritance of the Saints, and of such as are made heires of the Kingdom of Christ. Coloss. 2. 12, 13, 14.

Againe, looke for whom Christ is an advocate, to them only is he a redeemer; for redemption and intercession, which are parts of Christs priesthood, the one is as general and large as the other, and are so surely vnitid and fastened together, as that one cannot be without the other. But Christ is onely an advocate of the faithfull. Iohn. 17. vers. 9. In that his solemne prayer, hee first prayeth for his owne, namely, his Disciples, elected not onely to the Apostleship, but also to eternall life; and then verse. 20. hee prayeth likewise for them that should beleue in him by their word. Now against thee, hee opposeth the world, for which he prayeth not, that it may attaine eternal life. And Roman. 8. 34. Who shall accuse Gods elect? Christ sitteth at the right hand of the Father, and maketh intercession for vs. Furthermore, the members of Christs Church are called the Redeemed of the Lord, Plal. 107. 2. Therefore this priuiledge is not given to all alike.

Exception. This vniuersall reconciliation, is not in respect of man, but of God himselfe, who, both made it for al, and offereth it to all. Ans. If Christ became once before God a reconciliation for all mens finnes, yea and also satisfied for them all, it must needs follow that before God all those finnes must bee quite blotted out of his remembrance. For the actually blotting out of finnes, doth inseparably depend vpon satisfaction for finnes; and satisfaction with God, doth necessarily imply the very real and generall abolishment of the guilt and punishment of finne.

Obiect. I. Christ tooke vpon him mans nature: therefore hee redeemed mans nature generally. Answer. I. It followeth not, except wee would say, that Christ redeemed his owne humanity, which cannot be any waies possible. II. Every woman doth partake the humane nature of every man, yet is not every man each womans husband, but hers alone, with whom by the covenant in matrimony, hee is made one flesh: and in like sort Christ did by his incarnation (sua compassio) take also vpon him mans nature, and that common to all Adams progenie, yet is he the husband of his Church alone, by another more peculiar coniunction, namely, the bond of the spirit and of faith. And by it the Church is become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone. Ephes. 5. 30. And therefore hee alone may iustly claime title to the death of Christ, and all his merits.

Obiect. II. Christs redemption is as general, as Adams fall was: and therefore it appertaineth to all Adams posteritie. Answer. Adam was a type of Christ, & Christ a counter-type correspondent to Adam. Adam was the roote of all his successours, or all that should come of him, from the wich first Adam, was sinne & death deriued: againe, Christ is also a roote, but of the elect onely, and such as beleue, to whom, from him proceede righteousness, and life eternall. He cannot be said to be the roote of all, and every singular man, because that all do not drinke and receiue this his righteousness, and life, neither are they actually by him made righteous. Rom. 11. 17. 19. Obiect. The benefit of Christs death redounded to al. Ans. It did to all that beleue. For as Adam destroyed all those that were borne of him, so Christ doth iustifie and saue all those that are borne anew by him, and none other. Obiect. If that Adams sinne destroyed all, and Christs merit doth saue all: then is Adams sinne more forcible to condemne, then Christs mercie is to saue. Ans. We must not esteeme of the mercie of Christ by the number of men which receiue mercie (for so indeed, I graunt, that as Adams fall made all vniust, so the mercie of Christ and his redemption should actually iustifie all) but we must rather measure it by the efficacy and dignitie thereof, then by the number on whom it is bestowed. For it was a more eafie thing to destroy all by sinne, then by grace to saue but one. Man, being but meere man, could destroy all: but to saue euen one, none could do it, but such an one as was both God and man.

Obiect. III. Many places of Scripture there are which affirme this, that the benefite of Christs death doth appertaine vnto all. Rom. 11. 32. God hath shut vp all vnder sin, that he might haue mercie vpon all. 1 Tim. 2. 4. God would haue all men to be saued. 2 Pet. 3. 9. God would not haue any to perish, but all to come to repentance. Ans. I. You must vnderstand all that beleue, as it is Mat. 11. 28. All that are weary, and heauie laden. Ioh. 3. 16. All that beleue. Gal. 3. 22. The Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ, should be giuen to them which beleue. Act. 10. 43. All which beleue. And surely there is as well a generality of them that beleue, as of the whole world. II. We may vnderstand by [all] of all sorts some, not every singular person of all sorts. So, Renel. 5. 9. Christ is said to haue redeemed some out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nations. And Gal. 3. 28. There is neither Iew nor Greeke, neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for yet are all one in Christ Iesus. Math. 4. 23. Christ is said to haue healed every disease, that is, every kinde of disease. And Augustine to this purpose hath a fit rule. All is often used for many, as Rom. 5. 18, 19. Augustine in his Manuel to Laur. chap. 103. It is thus said (saith Augustine) God would haue all to be saued, not because there was no man which he would haue damned, who therefore would not doe miracles amongst them, which would, as he saith, haue repented, if he had done miracles: but that by all men, wee should vnderstand all sorts of men, yea, of euery distinction, whether Kings, private persons, &c. And in his booke de Corrupt. & gratia. cap. 14. It is said, he would haue all to be saued, so as we must vnderstand all such as are predestinate to bee saued, because amongst them there are of all sorts of men as he said to the Pharisees, I ouersee every hearbe. III. These two, to be willing to saue a man, & that he should come to the fauing knowledge of the truth, are vnseparably vnited together. 1 Tim. 2. 4. But the second we see doth not agree to all and every singular person: therefore the first cannot.

Ob. V. In many places of Scripture Christ is said to redeeme the world, as 1 Ioh. 2. 2. He is a propitiatio for the sinnes of the whole world. Ans. This word world, significth, I. The frame of heauen & earth. II. All men both good & bad together. III. The company of vnbeleueers, & malignant haters of Christ. IV. The cōgregation of the elect, dispersed ouer the face of the whole earth, & to be gathered out of the same. In this 4. significatio we must vnderstand such places as are aboue mentioned. Abraham is called the heire of the world, that is, of many nations.

Obiect. V. God will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may repent and line. Ans. Augustine in his first booke to Simplicius, a quest. answereth this question. Ton must (saith he) distinguish betwixt man, as he is man, & man as he is a sinner. For God is not delighted with the destruction of man, as he is man, but as he is a sinner: neither will he simply the death of any as he is a sinner, or as it is the ruine & destruction of his creature: but in that by the destruction & reuenge of sin with eternal death, his glory is exceedingly advanced. God therefore will the death of a sinner, but as it is a punishment, that is, as it is a meane to declare & fetter out his diuine iustice: and therefore it is an vntruth for a man to say, that God would haue none condemned. For whereas men are once condemned, it must be either with Gods will, or without it: if without it, then the will of Gods mult needs suffer violence, the which to affirme is great impietie: if with his will, God mult needs change his sentence before set downe, but we must not presume to say so.

Obiect. VI. God is the father of all. Mal. 2. 10. Ans. This place is meant of Gods church, out of which all men, standing in that corrupt estate by Adam, are the children of wrath, & of the diuel.

Obiect. VII. If God did elect some, & reiect others, hee mult needs be [reuerent] a respecter of persons. Ans. I. One is said then to accept, or haue respect of persons, when as he by some circumstances inherent in the person, is moued to do this or that. Now as for God, he did vpon his meere pleasure elect some, & reiect others eternally, not moued or vrged thereunto by any thing whatsoeuer out of himselfe. II. He is debter to none, but may by good right doe with his creatures what seemeth good vnto him in his owne eyes. III. It is one thing with God to accept of persons, & another to make choise of men. This wee should not grant: it wold follow that God wuld be deemed blame-worthy, because he made not all his creatures most glorious Angels.

Ob. VIII. If God decreed to reiect certain men, then did hee hate his creature. Ans. God decreed to reiect his creature and workmanship, not because hee hated it, but because he appointed it to hatred. And it is one thing to hate, & another to appoint to hatred. And indeede God doth not actually hate any thing, but for sin. That saying of August to Simplicius is fit for this purpose. When God maketh the wicked, whom he doth not iustifie, vessels of wrath, he doth it not to hate them, which he made for in that he made them vessels, they haue their owe, namely, that by their pannes to which they were ordained, the vessels of honour might reape profit. God therefore doth not hate them, in that they are men, or vessels, neither any thing that he made in them by creation, or ordination. For God hateth nothing which he hath made. But in as much as he made the vessels of destruction, he doth it to instruct others. As for their impietie, which he neuer made, that he hateth vterly. Ans. therefore a iudge hateth thei in a man, but he doth not hate his punishment: that he is sent to work in the mines; For the thei doth the first, the iudge the latter; so God, whereas of the company of thei that perish, he maketh vessels of perdition, he doth not therefore hate that which he maketh, that is, the cōdemnation of those which perish in their due punishment for sin.

Ob. IX. The reprobates are said in many places of Scripture to be redeemed by Christ. Ans. First, we must not vnderstand such places meant of all reprobates, but of such as are for a time in the Church. II. They are said to be redeemed, justified, & sanctified, both in their owne iudgments, & the churches also, in as much as they make an external profession of the faith. But this is a iudgement of charity, not of cōscience.

Obiect. X. God might be thought cruel, if that he had ordained the greatest part of the world to destruction. Ans. God could welle-nough haue decreed, that euen all men should vterly haue bene reiectid, and yet he should haue bene neuer wiser either cruel nor vniust.

Reasons. I. He adiudged all and every one of those foule and wicked spirits, which fell from him to eternal torments. II. He decreed also, as is apparent by the euent, that men should lye by the slaughter of beasts; and yet God is not therefore cruell against them: and surely God is no more bound vnto man, then vnto the very brute beasts.

Exception. God appointed all to be faued, with this caveat and condition, If they beleue. Ans. This is absurd to affirme: for, I. by this means the decree of God should depend vpon the will of man, when as contrarily Gods decree doth limit and order all inferior causes. II. It quite taketh away the certentie of Gods decree, because a conditionall proposition doth set downe nothing as being; or, it doth not certainly affirme any thing.

Obiect. If the merit of Christ did not extend it selfe as farre as the fall of Adam, then is not the head of the Serpent broken, nor Satans kingdome abolished in Christ. Ans. This bruising of the Serpents head, is seene in them onely which are at enmitie with the Serpent, namely, in such as truly beleue. Gen. 3. 15. compared with Rom. 16. 20.

To conclude, that is not true which they say, namely, that this opinion of an vniuersall and effectual redemption of euery singular man, is a notable remedy to comfort afflicted consciences. For I appeale to the iudgements of all men, whether in this manner of consolation, be any great co[n]fort to the conscience afflicted.

Christ dyed for all men.

Thou art aman:

Therefore Christ dyed for thee.

The 11. Error.

God did foreknow the fall of Adam, but hee did not by his eternal decree fore-ordaine the same, and therefore that his fall was without the agent permission of God.

The Confutation.

It is false. For, I. There is not the least thing in nature, but it commeth to passe by the decree and will of God. Math. 10. 30. Wherefore such as affirme, that God did onely foreknow this, or that, they doe either quite ouerturne the prouidence of GOD, or at the least, imagine that it is a very idle prouidence. II. The fact of Herod and Pilate, in deliuering Christ, against their owne consciences, to be crucified, may seeme to be as heinous as was Adams fall, and yet they are said to haue done that, which the hand of the Lord had fore-ordained to be done. Act. 4. 28. Again, the fall of Adam was two manner of wayes, by Gods active, or rather operative permission. I. In as much as the fall was an action: for in God alone we liue, we moue, and haue our being. II. In as much as that this fall was but a bare triall of his loyalty to God, whereby God would, trie both the power and will of his creature.

The 11. Error.

God by reason that he did fore-see the disobedience of some, or that they would contemne the Gospel, did decree their destruction and condemnation. The Confutation.

We utterly deny, that the foreseeing of the contempt of grace in any, was the first and principall cause of the decree of reprobation. Reasons. I. Paul, Rom. 1. 18. doth deride the common condemnation of the Gentiles from hence, namely; that they withheld the truth in unrighteousness; that is, because they did wittingly extinguish that light of nature, by their wicked doings, which they had of the knowledge of God, & would not obey their consciences inwardly checking them for the same.

I. I. If that faith fore-seene, be not the cause of the decree of election, it cannot bee that the want of faith fore-seene, should be the cause of the decree of reprobation; but rather, as faith doth, in order of causes, follow after election, so must incredulitie reprobation. For there is the like reason or proportion of contraries.

III. Many infants depart this life, both being out of the true Church, and before they haue any vfe of reason: and againe, many there are, which albeit they lye long, yet being either idiots and fooles, or borne deafe, they cannot come to the true vfe of reason: in all which it is not credible, that there should be suspected any contempt of the Gospel, which they could not learne. I. V. Esau was hated of God for none other cause, but for that it pleased him. Rom. 9. 18. V. If this opinion should be true, then would it follow, that men should be condemned of nothing else but incredulitie, the which is not so. Ioh. 3. 36. Christ speaking of vblese, faith not, that for it the wrath of God came vpon man, but remaineth vpon him.

And why should we daily aske pardon for our finnes, if nothing but incredulitie or vblese condemned vs? nay, although that there were neuer any contempt of the Gospell, yet that corruption of original sinne, were sufficient enough to condemne men. VI. Also that admiration which Paul hath, Rom. 9. 20. O man, who art thou, which disputest with God! doth plainly shew that the cause of the decree of God in reiecting some, is vnsearchable; & that it doth not at all depend vpon any fore-seene contumacy towards the grace of God offered in the Gospell. For if it were otherwise, we might easily giue a reason of Gods decree.

August. epist. 105. faith very well. Who (saith hee) created the reprobates, but God? and why, but because it pleased him? but why pleased it him? O man, who art thou that disputest with God?

Some Diuines perceiving that this is an hard sentence, they goe about to mitigate it in this sort. The matter, say they, of obiect of predestination, is a reasonable creature, and that not simply or absolutely considered, but partly as it selfe, partly as of it selfe it was subiect to fall: and thereupon God preordaining men from euertlasting, considered them, not simply as he was to make them men, but as they were such men as might fall into sin, and as they were redeemed by Christ, and after called to the light of the Gospell. The efficient or first moue cause, was not any foreknown cause, either this or that, but the mere will of God. For he disposed all things not of, or by his knowledge, but rather according to the same. But these things, albeit they may seeme to be subtle deuises, yet are they not altogether true. Reasons. I. The Potter when he purpeth to make some vessell, doth not consider the clay, and regard in it some inherent qualitie, to make such a vessell, but hee maketh it of such and such a forme, to this or that vfe, euen of his alone free-will and pleasure. II. Rom. 9. 21. Hath not the potter power to make of the same lump one vessell to honour, and another to dishonor? In which place we may not vnderstand by the name lump, all mankind corrupted & fallen, and so to be redeemed in Christ: for then Paul would not haue said, that God made vessells of wrath, but rather that he did forsake them after they were made.

III. This seemeth preposterous that God did first foreknow mankind created, fallen, and redeemed in Christ: and that afterward he ordained them so foreknown to life or to death. For the end is the first thing in the intention of the agent: neither will a very vnskillfull worke-man first prepare means by which he may be helped to doe a thing, before he hath set downe in his minde all the ends, both such as are most neere, and them that are very far off. Now we know this, that mans creation, and his fall in Adam, are but means to execute Gods predestination, and therefore are subordinate vnto it: but the end of Gods decree, is the manifestation of his glory, in fauing some, and condemning others. Therefore wee may not once imagine, that God did first consist of the means whereby he determined to execute his decree, before he deliberated of the election, and reprobation of man.

The 12. Error.

Gods calling to the knowledge of the Gospell, is vniuersall, yea, of all men, and euery singular person, without exception.

The Confutation.

This is a very vnreasonable position. Reasons. I. God would not haue all men called vnto Christ. Math. 20. 16. Many are called, but few are chosen. He saith not that all, but many are called. Christ in his Disciples first embassage, chargeth them that they should not preach to the Gentiles of his coming: and to the Cananitic woman he saith, Math. 15. 26. It is not meete to giue the childrens bread vnto dogges. Math. 13. 11. It is not giuen to euery one to know the mysteries of the kingdome of God. Rom. 16. 25. The mysteries of the Gospell (whether it be meant of Christ, or the calling of the Gentiles) was kept secret from the beginning of the world. II. There be many millions of men, which haue not so much as heard of Christ. Act. 14. 16. God in times past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their owne waies. III. The greatest part of the world hath euer bin out of the covenant of grace. Eph. 2. 12. We were, I say, at that time without Christ, & were aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, and had no hope, and were without God in the world: but now ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but citizens with the Saints, &c. ver. 19.

Obiect. They are said to bee [ἀποκλεισμένοι] not simply alienated, but alienated from God: now how could they be alienated, except either they or their predecessors had bin in the covenant? Ans. The Gentiles are not said to be alienated, from the covenant, but from the common-wealth of Israel: because that God had then by certaine lawes, rites, and ceremonies, vnterly secured, and distinguished the people of the Iewes from all other nations.

Obiect. This generall calling, is not to bee vnderstood simply of the ministry of the word, but of the wil of God deliuered presently after the fall in his vnwritten words: and afterward in his written word: and this all men ought to know, although many, through their owne default know it not. Answer. But the Scriptures were committed to the custodie of the Church of God, & euery one was not credited with them. Rom. 3. 2. Vnto the Iewes were of credis committed the Oracles of God. 1 Tim. 3. 15. The Church is the pillar & the ground of truth. Plal. 147. 19. He shewed his words vnto Jacob, and his statutes & lawes to the house of Israel. 20. He hath not dealt so with euery nation: therefore they haue not knowne his lawes. Plal. 76. 1. The Lord is famous in India, and in Israel is his name great.

Obiect. The covenant of Grace was made with Adam and Eue, and in them all mankind was received both into the Church, and covenant, & also called to the knowledge of God. Ans. I. This reason wanteth euen common reason and sense, to say that God giuing his promise in the daies of Adam and Noah, did in them call all mankind that should come after. II. Adam before his fall, did indeede receive the grace both for himselfe, and for others also; and in the fall, hee lost it both for himselfe, and for all others; but after the fall, hee received the promise for himselfe alone, and not for the whole world; otherwise the first Adam should not onely haue beene a liuing creature, but a quickening spirit, the which is proper to the second Adam. 1 Cor. 15. 55.

The Conclusion.

If we should grant this doctrine to be true, then must we needs allow of these absurdities in Diuinitie, which follow. I. That God would haue all, & each singular man to be faued: and withall he would haue some ordained to hatred and perdition: That in regard of God, all men are elected, & redeemed, but in regard of the euient many perish. II. The guilt of Adams sin must not be imputed to any one of his posteritie, because that God, hauing mercie of all generally in Christ, did take into the covenant of reconciliation all mankind. Now if by the guiltiness of Adams fall bee taken away, the punishment forthwith ceaseth to bee a punishment, and corruption it

felis by little and little abolished in all men. A

CHAP. LV.

Of the state and condition of the Reprobates when they are dead.

TH death of the reprobate, is a separation of the bodie and the soule: is of the body, that for a time it may ly dead in the earth: of the soule, that it may feele the torments of hell, even untill the time of the last iudgement: at which time the whole man shall be cast into the most terrible and fearfull fire of hell. 1. Pet. 3. 10. By the which he allowed and preached unto the spirits that are in prison. Luk. 8. 2. 2. Pet. 2. 4. For if God spared not the Angels that sinned, but cast them downe into hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness to be kept unto dammation, &c.

The reprobates when they die, doe become without fence and armed like vnto a stone: or else they are overwhelmed with a terrible horreur of conscience, and despairing of their salvation, as it were with a gulfe of the sea overturning them. 1 Sam. 25. 37. Then in the morning when the wine was gone out of Nabal, his wife told him those words, and his heart died within him, and he was like a stone. 38. And about ten daies after the Lord smote Nabal that hee dyed. Matth. 27. 5. And when hee had cast downe the silver pennes in the temple, he departed, and went and hanged himselfe.

CHAP. LVI.

Of the condemnation of the Reprobates in the last iudgement.

IN the last iudgement, at the sound of the trumpet, the liuing being stricken with horreur and feare, shall be changed in a moment, the dead shall rise againe to condemnation: both the liuing and the dead shall then haue immortal bodies, but without glory: and they standing vpon the earth at the left hand of Christ the iudge, shall heare the sentence of condemnation: Depart from me ye cursed into euertlasting fire, which is prepared for the diuell and his angels. Matth. 25. 41. And they shall come forth that haue done good, vnto the resurrection of life: but they that haue done euill, vnto the resurrection of condemnation. Ioh. 5. 29. 1 Thess. 4. 16. For the Lord himselfe shall descend from heauen with a shout, and with the voice of the Arch-angel, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. 17. Then shall we, which are liue and remaine, be caught up with them also in the cloudes, to meete the Lord in the ayre: and so shall we be euer with the Lord.

CHAP. LVII.

Of the estate of the Reprobates in hell.

After that the sentence of condemnation is pronounced, then followeth euertlasting death: whereof this is the estate.

1. The reprobates are separated from the presence and glory of God.

11. They are punished with eternall confusion, and most bitter reproches: because all their secret wickednes and finnes are revealed. 2 Thess. 1. 9. Which shall be punished with euertlasting perdition, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. Math. 5. 8. Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. 1 Ioh. 2. 28. And now little children abide in him, that when he shall appeare, we may be bold, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

111. They haue fellowship with the diuell and his angels, Matth. 25. 41.

1V. They are wholly in body and soule tormented with an incredible horreur, and exceeding great anguish, through the fence and feeling of Gods wrath, powred out vpon them for euer. Esa. 66. 2. And they shall go forth, & looke vpon the carkeffes of men, that haue transgressed against mee: for their worme shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring vnto all flesh.

Herceupon is the punishment of those that are condemned, called hell fire, a worme, weeping and gnashing of teeth, vtter darknesse, &c. Rev. 21. 8. But the fearful, and unbelieuing, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and forcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Mat. 13. 42. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Esa. 66. 24.

A Corollarie.

AN no this is the full execution of Gods decree of reprobation, whereby appeareth the great iustice of God in punishing sinne: from whence also cometh Gods glorie, which he propoundeth to himselfe, as the last and chiefest end in all these things. Therefore let euery Christian propound the same end vnto himselfe. Rom. 9. 14. What shall we say then? is there vnrighteousnesse with God? God forbid. 15. For he said to Moyses, I will haue mercie on whom I will show mercie: and will haue compassion on whom I will haue compassion. 16. So then it is not in him that willeth: nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercie. 17. For the Scripture saith vnto Pharaoh, For this same purpose I haue stirred thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. 1 Cor. 10. 31. Whether therefore ye eat, or drinke, or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God.

CHAP. LVIII.

Of the Application of Predestination.

TH right applying of Predestination to the persons of men, is very necessary: and it hath two parts. The first, is the iudgement of particular predestination, and the second, is the vsc of it.

The iudgement and discerning of a mans owne predestination, is to bee performed by meanes of these rules which follow.

1. The Elect alone, and all they that are elect, not onely may bee, but also in Gods good time, are sure of Election in Christ to eternall life. 1 Cor. 2. 12. 2 Cor. 13. 5.

11. They haue not this knowledge from the first causes of Election, but rather from the last effects thereof: and they are especially two: The testimonie of Gods spirit, and the works of Sanctification. 2 Pet. 1. 10. Rom. 8. 16

111. If any doubt of this testimonie, it will appeare vnto them, whether it come from the spirit of God, or their owne carnall presumption: First, by a full perswasion which they shall haue; for the holy Ghost will not barely say it, but perswadeth such, that they are the children of GOD, the which the flesh cannot in any wise doe. Secondly, by the manner of perswasion: for the holy Ghost draweth not reasons from the works, or worthines of man, but from Gods fauour & loue; and this kind of perswasion is farre different: from that which Satan vseth. Thirdly, by the effects of that testimonie. For if the perswasion arise from presumption, it is a dead perswasion: but contrariely, it is most liuely and stirring, if it come from the H. Ghost. For such as are perswaded that they are elected, & adopted children of God, they will loue God, they will trust in him, and they will caly vpon him with their whole heart.

1V. If the testimonie of Gods spirit be not so perswading in the elect, then may they iudge of their election, by that other effect of the holy Ghost, namely, Sanctification, like as we vse to iudge by hate, that there is fire; when we cannot see the flame it selfe.

V. And of all the effects of Sanctification, these are most notable: 1. To seele our wants; & in the bitterness of heart to bewaile the offence of GOD in euery sinne. 11. To striue against the flesh, that is, to resist, and to hate the vngodly motions thereof, and with griefe to thinke them burthenous & troublesome. 111. To desire earnestly and vehemently the grace of GOD, and meritor of Christ, to obtaine eternall life. 1V. When it is obtained, to account it a most precious iewel. Phil. 3. 8 V. To loue the miniter of Gods word, in that he is a miniter; & a Christian, in that he is a Christian: and for that cause, if neede require, to be ready to spend our blood with them. Matth. 10. 42: 1 Ioh. 3. 16. VI. To call vpon GOD earnestly, and with teares. VII. To desire and loue Christs coming and the day of iudgement; that an end may be made of the dayes of sinne. VIII. To flee all occasions of sinne, and seriously to endeavour to come to newnes of life. IX. To perseuer in these things to the last gaspe of life. Luther hath a good sentence for this purpose, Hee that will serue God, must, faith he, helde that which cannot be seene, hope for that which is deferred, and loue God when hee sheweth himselfe an enemy, and thus remaine to the end.

VI. Now, if to be all the effects of the spirit are very feeble in the godly, they must know this, that God trieth them, yet so as they must not therewith be dismayed, because it is most sure, that if they haue faith, but as much as a graine of mustard seed, and be as weak as a young infans, it is sufficient to engraft them into Christ, & therefore they must not doubt of their electio, because they fee their faith feeble & the effects of the H. Ghost faint within the.

VII. Neither must he, that as yet hath not felt in his heart any of those effects, presently conclude that he is a Reprobate: but let him rather vse the word of God, & the sacraments, that he may haue an inward sense of the power of Christ, drawing him vnto him, & an assurance of his redemption by Christs death & passion. VIII. No man may peremptorily set downe, that himselfe, or any other is a Reprobate. For God doth oftentimes prefer those which did seeme to be most of all estranged from his fauour, to be in his Kingdome above those, who in mans iudgement were the children of the kingdome. Hence it is that Christ saith, Mat. 21. 31. The Publicanes and harlots go before you: and, Math. 23. 6: many an one is called at the eleventh houre, as appeareth by that notable example of the thiefe vpon the crose.

The vices, which may be made of this doctrine of predestination, are very many. First, for our instruction, we are taught these things.

1. That there is neither any iustificatio by works, nor any works of ours that are meritorious: For election is by the free grace of GOD: and therefore in like sort is iustificatio. For, as I haue said before, the cause of the cause, is the cause of the thing caused: And for this reason, in the worke of salvation, grace doth wholly challenge al to it selfe. At this time there is vnmanner through the election of grace. Who hath saved vs, and called vs with his holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his owne purpose and grace, which was given to vs, through Christ Iesus, before the world was: vnto you it is given for Christ, that not onely ye should beleeue in him, but also suffer for his sake. We are iustified freely by grace. Not by the works of righteousness, which we haue done, but according to his merie hee saved vs: for his sake, you in waite in my faithnes. Rom. 6. 23. The gift of God is eternal life.

11. That Atrology teaching, by the casting of Naturies, what men will be, is ridiculous, & impious: because it determineth, that such shall be very like in life, & conseruation, whom God in his predestination hath made vnlike. Jacob and Esau, borne of the same parents, and almost in the same moment of time, (for Jacob Gen. 25. 26. held Esau by the heele as he was born) were of most vnlike dispositions; & had diuers characters. The like may see in all twins, and others, which are borne at the same time.

111. That God is most wise, omnipotent, iust, and mercifull. Rom. 11. 33. O the wonderful riches, both of his wisdom and knowledge of God, how vnsearchable are his iudgements, & his wayes, past finding out. Eph. 1. 5. Who hath predestinated, us, to bee adopted through Iesus Christ vnto himselfe, according to the good pleasure of his will.

Secondly, being the seruants of Christ we are admonished,

I. To fight against al doubting & diffidence of our salvation, because it neither dependeth vpon workes, nor faith, but vpon Gods decree which is immutable. Reioyce that your names are written in the booke of life. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that iustificth, who shall condemne? This teacheth, that the anker of hope must be fixed in that truth and stability of the immutable good pleasure of God: so that albeit our faith be so tossed, as that in danger of shipwracke, neuertheless it must neuer linke to the bottome, but euen in the midst of danger take hold vpon repentance as on a board, and so recover it selfe.

II. To humble our soules vnder the mighty hand of God: for wee are, as clay in the hand of the potter. Rom. 11. 20. They through infidelitie are broken off, but thou standest through faith. Be not high minded, but feare.

III. To giue all glory to God. 2. Thess. 2. 13. Wee ought to giue thanks alway to God for you brethren, beloved of the Lord, because that God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation.

IV. To beare croeses patiently. Rom. 8. 39. Those which be knew before, hee hath also predestinated, to be made like to the image of his sonne. This likeness to Christ, is the bearing afflictions. Phil. 3. 10. I haue known him, and the virtue of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his afflictions, to be made conformable to his death.

V. To doe good workes. Eph. 2. 10. We are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus to doe good workes, which God hath ordained, that wee should walke in them.

Thus much concerning Theologie.
AT. EXCELLENT TREATISE of comforting such as are troubled about their Predetermination.

Taken out of the second answer of M. Bezato D. Andreas, in the act of their Colloquie at Mompelgart, &c.

VNlesse (saith D. Andreas) regeneration bee alwayes united to baptisme, and remission in such as are baptized, & haue should be troubled with consciences of those be called & comforted, who because they feele not in themselves any good motions of Gods holy spirit, finde none other refuge, but the Word & Sacraments, especially the Sacrament of Baptisme? Now this remedy would be of small force, excepte be opposed against those imaginations, which the diuill casteth into a troubled heart, yea excepte it taughte such, that God is greater then our heart, who in baptisme hath not onely offered vs the adoption of sonnes, but hath indeed bestowed the same vpon vs: as it is said by Christ, Mark. 16. 16. He that beleeueth and is baptized, shall be saved. And by Paul. Gal. 3. 27. Yee which are baptized, haue put on Christ. David being armed with the like comfort from his circumcision, feared not to toyne battell with the Gibeonites: & if this were not so, it must needs follow, that Baptisme were nothing els, but an idle ceremonie, & also the persons of the Trinity would be thought lyars. Wherefore those afflicted men, when Satan assaileth them, must resist him with these words: Depart from me Satan, thou hast neither part nor portion in the inheritance of my soule, because I am baptized in the name of the holy Trinity, and so am I truly made the Son of God by adoption. And these are the strong weapons, which so many times, and in so many wordes, haue bin objected against me by D. Andreas, & wherby he hath gotten the victorie: but because this his reason is somewhat intricate, I will explaine it after this sort: First, for the place of Scripture which he alleadgeth, namely that GO is greater then our hearts: 1. Ioh. 3. 20. It is so far from comforting an afflicted conscience, that it will rather drive him to despair. Neither doth Ioh. 1. Epist. 3. 20. make mention of it, to ease such as are in despair, shewing vnto them by that sentence, the greatnes of Gods mercies; but rather that he might thereby euen bruite in pieces the hearts of proud persons, when they consider the greatnes of Gods maiesty. And for the other place, when as a man doubteth of his salvation, and feeleth no testimonies of faith in himselfe, (for such an one we here speake of) what comfort, thinke you can he haue in these wordes: Mar. 16. 16. He that beleeueth, and is baptized, shall be saved. For hee would rather reason contrarily thus. I indeed am baptized, yet for al that I beleeue not, & therefore my baptisme is not auailable. I must needs be condemned. For the saying of Augustine in his treatise vpon Ioh. 6. is very true, who speaking of Simon Magus, saith: What good did it to him to be baptized? Brag not therefore, saith hee, that thou art baptized, as though thou were iustified for thee, so in herit the kingdom of heauen. As for the place of Paul. Gal. 3. 12. I shewed plainly before, how D. Andreas did violently wrest it to his purpose.

Neither are his reasons taken from the absurdity that would follow of more force then the former, albeit he maketh the speciall pillars to vnderpropp the truth of his cause: For, I pray you, is God of lesse truth, because his truth is neglected & derided of them that contemne it? Is the ceremony of Baptisme therefore in vaine, because some refuse the grace offered in Baptisme: others (if wee may beleeue D. And.) reiect that grace wher they haue receiued it? What? Is not the Gospel therefore the power of God to salvation, because it is to such as beleeue not, the fauour of death to eternall death? May not the Supper of the Lord, be a pledge of Gods couenant, because so many abuse these holy signes, or (as D. Andreas is of opinion) the very body and blood of our Saviour Christ? And that I may reason from that which is true in the experience of euery childe: can the Sunne be said to be without light, because they which are blinde, and asleepe, haue no benefit by the light thereof, neither such as shut their eyes so close that they will not enioy the comfort of the light? But amongst all, this one is most childish, that D. Andreas will make this his principal argument, namely, that in vaine did men, thus tempted, flie at all vnto baptisme, vnlesse wee conclude with him, that all such as are baptized, are in Baptisme adopted the sons of God. For first, if this were a good consequent from baptisme, it were in vaine, for such an afflicted conscience, to gather vnto himselfe a testimony from the word of God, and the other Sacrament of the Lords Supper, vnlesse wee make all those to be in like sort regenerate and adopted, vnto whom the word of God is preached, and the Lords Supper administered, either of which for D. Andreas to affirme, is a bold vtnuth.

But to omit this, what if we grant this which D. Andreas requireth concerning Baptisme? may not for all that, any that is so tempted, by Satans policy, reuell this great comforter, by his owne argument after this sort: I will grant D. Andreas your question: suppose I haue bin baptized and adopted the sonne of God, yet seeing you teach, that the grace of God is not so sure, but that I may fall from the same, as indeede I feele that I haue grievously fallen, what do you now else but lift me vp with one hand to heauen, and with the other cast mee downe into hell? What meane you therefore to teach me those things which are so far from easing me, as that contrarily, they do more and more lay out vnto mee mine abominable and vngratefull heart? See now what sure consolation, confidences grievously afflicted may reape by this doctrine of their coforter D. Andreas.

Now if any be desirous to know, what spirittual comfort is most meete to bee ministred vnto consciences so troubled, I will shew them that which is grounded vpon a sure foundation, and which I my selfe haue often found to be true in mine own experience: the which also I purpose to handle more largely, for the benefit of the Christian reader. First therefore we teach, contrarily to that which D. Andreas doth most falsly object against vs, that the eternal decree, or, as Paul speaketh, the purpose of God, must not be sought in the bottomlesse counsell of God, but rather in the manifestation of it, namely, in his vocation, by the Word and Sacraments. This I speake of such as are of yeeres of discretion, as they must needs be, whom we seeke to comfort in this place.

Now because that external vocation, is not proper only to the elect. Mat. 22. 14. (for many are called, but few are chosen) but such a vocation as is effectual, that is, whereby the vnderstanding is not onely enlightened with the saving knowledge of God, but in the will also there is created a true, though not a perfect hatred of sin, from whence ariseth an abhorring of sinne, and loue of that which is good, or rather a desire to will, and do that which is right. Therefore when we see one thus dangerously tempted, wee apply vnto his afflicted conscience, that true Nepenthes, and comfortable and restorative medicine, which is taken from Gods effectual vocation, as it were out of an Apothecaries boxe.

If therefore I haue to do with such an one, who either was neuer called by the preaching of the Gospel, or if he were called, yet seemeth both to himselfe and others, neuer to haue regarded him that called; and hence concludeth that hee is not in the number of them, whom God hath purposed to take pittie vpon: I forthwith tell him, that Satan plauieth the Sophister in teaching him thus to conclude: for this his reason is as vntrue, as if a man looking at midnight, and seeing that the Sun is not then risen, should therefore affirme, that it would neuer rise. And this is that which when I objected to D. Andreas p. 482. he very boldly corrupting my meaning, printed this as mine assertion, Say vnto a man that is afflicted, the Sun is risen, although as yet it be not risen. But I teach not lies, how fouler this deprauation of my words came from D. Andreas printers or himselfe. And whereas D. Andreas excepted, that this consolation were of no purpose, because he that was afflicted might doubt whether this Sunne would ever rise or not: I answered to him, that which the printers haue quite left out, and which I will therefore now more fully repeat. I was wont therefore to tell the partie thus troubled, after hee had forsaken his false and diuillish position: that although an external vocation were not of force enough to appease an afflicted conscience, yet it was of sufficient force and efficacy against the diuill. For I tell him that they which neuer had external nor internal calling, they (if we regard an ordinary calling) must needs perish: but whosoever is once called, he hath fecas it were his foot into the first entry into the kingdom of heauen: & vnlesse it be by his own default, hee shall come afterwards into the courts of God, and so by degrees into his maiesties palace. And for the confirmation of this, I vfe diuerse waies. For why, say I, doubtst thou of his good will towards thee, who in mercy hath sent me a minister to call thee vnto him? thou hast no cause, vnlesse thou alleadgest the number of thy finnes. If this be all, why oppose the infinite greatnes of Gods mercy against thy finnes, who hath sent me to bring thee vnto him. The Lord vouchsafeth to bring thee into the way of the elect, why art thou a stumbling block vnto thy self? & resistest to follow him? if thou feelest not as yet inwardly thy selfe to be stirred forward, pray that thou maist know this for a most sure truth, that this desire in thee is a pledge of Gods fatherly good will towards thee. He neither can, nor will be waiting to thee which he hath stirred vp in thee. After these exhortations, I shew him how some are called at the eleventh houre, how the Gentiles after many 1000. yeeres were called to be Gods people, how the thiefe was saved vpon the croesse: these & other remedies I vfed, whereof, I neuer remember, that it repented me.

But if I deale with such as haue before obeyed

the Lords calling, & either by reason of some grievous sinne, into which they haue fallen, or because they haue absented themselves from the Church of God, or in that they, refusing publicke and private admonitions, haue beene offensive to the Church, or, which in mine experience hath befallen many very good and godly persons, whilst they satisfied not themselves, they are so altogether busily conuersant in reprehending and iudging themselves, that they for a while forget the mercy of God: with these, to omit such as for some naturall infirmities, are if they procure not speedy helpe of some expert Physitian, most dangerously tempered: with these, I say, I vie this order:

First, I desire that they intimate vnto me, that which especially grieueth them, & as I vnderstand both the thing, and measure thereof by them: I take especiall care of this, that they being already ouermuch cast downe, that I then, by the seuerer denunciation of the law, do not quite ouerturne them: yet so, as that I doe not altogether withdraw them, either from condemning their former sins, or the meditatio of Gods iudgement: And so, as much as I can, re-C clepe the words of consolatio, as that I nothing cloake Gods anger against them for their sins.

After I haue thus prepared them, I then demand, whether they haue bin euer in this case or no: nay (say they, for the most part) the time was, when in great ioy & peace of conscience, I seru'd the Lord, then was I an happy person, full of faith, full of hope: but now wretch that I am, haue lost my first loue: & there is nothing vexeth me more, then to remember those times past. But say I, whether consideration is more grievous vnto thee, the apprehension of Gods iudgements, or the dislike of thy self that thou shouldst offend so gracious & louing a father? Both say they, but especially the latter. Therefore, say I, sin also displeaseth thee in that it is sin, namely, because it is euill, and God who is goodnes it selfe, is offended with it: It is euen as you told vs, say they, & I am now ashamed that so vile and wicked a wretch as my selfe, should come before so gracious and mercifull a father. Then I tell them, that no man is of-
 D fended, but rather is glad, when he can iniurie one whom he hateth: this they grant, & withall say, God forbid, that albeit the Lord hate me, I in like sort should hate him, vnto whom, if it were possible, I would bee reconciled againe. Then I adde this: Be of good comfort, my deare brother, you are in good case. For who can loue God, especially when hee is wounded by him? who can bewaile the losse of his friendship? who can desire to come againe into his fauour, but he, whom God still loueth, although for a time he be angry with him? except peraduenture you haue not learned thus much, that the knowledge of our saluation cometh not from flesh and blood, but from God himselfe, who first vouchsafed to instruct vs, and from Christ Iesus, manifesting the Father vnto vs: And that it is Gods blessing, that we doe loue God, who loued vs first, when wee were his enemies. You haue therefore, my good brother, iust cause, why you should be greatly displeased with many things past, but there is no cause why you should despaire. Briefly, you haue inwardly, & as it were dwelling with you, euident testimonies of your future recõciliation with God: especially if you cease not to pray vnto him earnestly, who hath laid the foundation of repentance in you, to wit, a dislike of sin, & a desire to be reconciled vnto him. The sheepe which wandered out of the fold, ceased not to be a sheepe, albeit it went astray for a time: you now are that sheepe, to whom that faithfull Shepheard of all those sheepe, which the Father hath committed to him, leauing those ninety and nine, doth not so much by my ministerie, declare that he seeketh you, as hauing already fought you, though you not seeking him, hath indeed found you. Mar. 7. 7. Knocke (saith he) and it shall be opened vnto you. And haue you now forgotten those promises, which were so often made to them that repent? and also, which they had experience of, who in the sight of the world were in a desperate case? But I, saith he againe, feeble no sense of faith, or hope: but I feelee all the contrary. Nay, say I, you deceiue your selfe, as I told you before. For it is the Comforter alone, which teacheth you to hate sinne, not so much for the punishment, as because it is euill and disliked of God, albeit he sheweth not himselfe so fully at the first: because you had so many waies grievously offended him: as that he seemeth for a while quite to forsake you. And, that you haue not quite lost him, but that he is yet in some secret corner of your soule, from whence at your instant prayers he will shew himselfe vnto you, this wil plainly declare vnto you, which I now admonish you of the second time. But let vs grant as much as you can say: yet sure it is, that your faith was not dead, but only possessed with a spirituall lethargy. You liued in the wombe of your mother, and there were ignorant of your life. A drunken man, although he lose for a time the vse of reason, & also of his limmes, yet he neuer loseth reason it selfe. You would thinke that in winter the trees were dead, but they spring againe in the summer season. At night the Sunne setteth, but in the next morning it riseth againe. And how often see wee by experience, that hee which at one time tooke the soyle in a combat, at another did win the prize? And know this, that in a spirituall combat of the flesh with the spirit, the like we may see in many, partly by reason of the weaknes of our nature, partly through sloth to resist, and partly for default to beware. To these he replyeth (for such temptations are very hardly remoued) I would to God, saith he, I could perswade my selfe that these promises belonged to mee. For my present estate constraineth mee to doubt, whether I am the child of God, or not.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE,

EDWARD LORD RUSSELL, EARLE

OF BEDFORD, GRACE, AND

PEACE, &c.

RIGHT Honourable, excellent is the saying of Paul to Titus: To the pure all things are pure: but to the impure and vnbeleeuing is nothing pure, but euen their mindes and consciences are defiled. In which words he determines three questions. The first, whether things ordained & made by God, may become vn-clean or no? his answer is, that they may: and his meaning must be conceiued with a distinction. By nature things ordained of God are not vnclane: for Moses in Genesis saith, that God saw all things which he had made, and they were very good: yet they may become vnclane either by law, or by the fault of men. By law, as when God forbids vs the things which in themselves are good: without whose commandment, they are as pure things not forbidden. Thus, for the time of the old Testament, God forbade the Iewes the vse of certain creatures; not because they were indeede worse then the rest, but because it was his pleasure upon speciall cause to restrain them: that he might put a difference betweene his owne people, and the rest of the World: that he might exercise their obedience, and aduertise them of the inward impurity of mind. Now this legal impurity was abolished at the ascension of Christ. By the fault of men things are vnclane when they are abused, and not applied to the ends for which they were ordained. The second question is, to whom things ordained of God are pure? He answers, to the pure: that is, to them whose persons stand iustified and sanctified before God in Christ in whom they beleue, who also doe vse Gods blessings in holy manner to his glory and the good of men. The third question is, who they are to whom all things are vnclane? His answer is, to the vnclane: by whom he vnderstands all such: I. whose persons displease God, because they doe not indeede beleue in Christ. II. Who vse not the gifts of God in holy manner, sanctifying them by the word and prayer. III. Who abuse them to bad ends, as to riot, pride, and oppression of men, &c. Now that to such, the vse of all the creatures of God is vnclane, it is manifest: because all their actions are sinnes, in that they are not done of faith: and a mans person must first please God in Christ, before his action or worke done can please him. Again, they vse the blessings and creatures of God with euill conscience, because so long as they are forth of Christ, they are but usurpers thereof before God. For in the fall of the first Adam, we lost the title and interest to all good things: and though God permit the vse of many of them to wicked men; yet is not the former title recovered but in Christ the second Adam, in whom we are aduanced to a better state, then we had by creation.

Hence it followes necessarily, that (to omit all other things) Nobility, though it be a blessing and ordinance of God in it selfe, is but an vnclane thing, if the enioyers thereof be not truely engrafted into Christ, and made bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. The blood vnclained before men, is stained blood before God by the fall of Adam, if it be not restored by the blood of Christ the Lamb of God. And hence it followes againe, that Nobility must not dwell solitarie, but combine her selfe in perpetuall fellowship with hearty loue and sincere obedience of pure and sound religion: without the which all pleasant pastimes, all sumptuousnesse of building, all brauery in apparrell, all glistering gold, all delicate fare, all delightfull musike, all reuerence done with cap and knees, all earthly pleasures and delights that heart can wish, are but as a vanishing shadow, or like the mirrour that begins with laughing, and ends with woe. A happy thing were it, if this consideration might take place in the hearts of all Noble men: it would make them honour God, that they might be honoured of God with excelling honour: and it would make them kisse the Sonne lest he be angry, and they perish in the way.

I speake not this as though I doubted of your Lordships care in this very point: but my only meaning is, to put you in minde, that as you haue begun to cleane vnto Christ with full purpose of heart, so you would continue to doe it still, and doe it more; and withall to manifest the same vnto the whole world, by honouring Christ with your owne honour, and by resembling him especially in one thing, in that as he grew in stature and yeares, he also grew in grace and fauour with God and men. And for this very cause (without any further consideration of earthly respects) I further present vnto you an Exposition of another part of the Catechisme, namely, the Symbole or Credo of the Apostles: which is indeed the very pith and substance of Christian religion, taught by the Apostles, embraced by the ancient Fathers, sealed by the blood of Martyrs, used by Theodosius the Emperour, as a meane to end the controversies of his time: and hereupon hath beene called the rule of faith, the key of faith. And furthermore, I hope that your Lordship will accept the same in good part, the rather because you vouchsafed when you were in Cambridge, to be an hearer thereof when it was taught and deli-uered. Thus craving pardon for my boldnesse, I take my leave, commending your Lordship and yours to the protection of the Almighty. Anno 1595. Apr. 2.

The Resolution of the Creede.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE CREEDE.

I beleue in God, &c.

Man iustly can bee offended at this, that I beginne to treat of the Doctrin of faith without a Text, though some be of minde, that in Catechizing the Minister is to proceede as in the ordinarie course of Preaching, only by handling a set portion of Scripture: and therefore that the handling of the Creede being no scripture, is not conuenient. Indeed I graunt, that other course to bee commendable: yet I doubt not, but in Catechizing the Minister hath his libertie to follow, or not to follow a certaine text of Scripture, as we do in the vsuall course of preaching. My reason is taken from the practise of the primitive Church; whose Catechisme (as the author of the epistle to the Hebrews sheweth) was contained in five principles or grounds of religion, which were not taken out of any set text in the old Testament; but rather was a forme of teaching gathered out of the most cleare places thereof. Hence I reason thus; That which in this point was the vse and manner of the primitive Church, is lawfull to be vsed of vs now: but in the primitive Church it was the manner to catechize without handling any set text of scripture: and therefore the Ministers of the Gospel at this time may with like libertie do the same: so be it they doe confirme the doctrine which they teach with places of scripture afterward.

Now to come to the Creede, let vs beginne with the name or title thereof. That which in English wee call the Apostles Creed, in other tongues is called Symbolum, that is, a shot or a badge. It is called a shot, because as in a feast or banquet euery man payeth his part; which being all gathered, the whole (which is called the shot) amounteth: and so out of the feuerall writings of the Apostles, ariseth this Creede or bricfe confession of faith. It is a badge, because as a souldier in the field by his badge and livery is knowne of what band hee is and to what Captaine he doth belong: even so by this beleefe a Christian man may be distinguished & knowne from all Iewes, Turkes, Atheists, and all false professors: and for this cause it is called a badge.

Again, it is called the Creede of the Apo-files, not because they were the penners of it, conferring to it besides the matter (4) the very stile and frame of words, as we haue them now set downe. Reasons. I. There are in this Creede certaine words and phrases, which are not to be found in the writings of the Apostles: and namely these; He descended into hell; the Catholicke Church. The latter whereof, no doubt, (b) first began to be in vse, when after the Apostles dayes the Church was dispersed into all quarters of the earth. II. If both matter and words had bene from the Apostles, why is not the Creede Canonical scripture, as well as any other writings? III. The Apostles had a summary collection of the points of Christian Religion which they taught, and also deliuered to others to teach by; consisting of two heads, faith and loue: as may appeare by Pauls exhortation to Timothy, wishing him to keepe the patterne of wholesome words: which he had heard of him, in faith and loue, which is in Christ Iesus. Now the Creede consists not of two heads, but of one, namely of faith only, and not of loue also. Wherefore I rather think, that it is called the Apostles Creede, because it doth summarily containe the chiefe and principall points of religion, handled and propounded in the doctrine of the Apostles: and because the points of the Creede are conformable and agreeable to their doctrine and writings.

And thus much of the title. Now let vs heare what the Creed is. It is a summe of things to be beleued concerning GOD and concerning the Church, gathered forth of the Scriptures. For the opening of this description: first I say, it is a sum of things to be beleued, or an abridgement. It hath bin the practise of teachers both in the new and old testament, to abridge and contract summarily the religion of their time. This the Prophets vsed. For when they had made their sermons to the people, they did abridge them and penned them briefly: setting them in some open places, that all the people might read the same. So the Lord bad Habakkuk to write the vision which he saw, & to make it plaine upon tables, that he may rume that readeth it. And in the new Testament, the Apostles did abridge those doctrines, which otherwise they did handle at large, as may appeare in the place of Timothy 13.

afore named. Now the reason why both in the old and new testament the doctrine of religion was abridged, is that the vnderstanding of the simple, as also their memories might be hereby helped, & they better inabled to iudge of the truth, and to discern the same from falshood. And for this end the Apostles Creed being a summarie collection of things to be beleueed, was gathered briefly out of the word of GOD (d) for helping of the memory and vnderstanding of men. I adde that this Creede is concerning God and the Church. For in these two points consisteth the whole summe thereof. Lastly, I say, that it is gathered forth of the Scripture, to make a difference betweene it and other writings, & to shew the authoritie of it; which I will further declare on this manner.

There be two kinds of writings in which the doctrine of the Church is handled, and they are either Diuine or Ecclesiasticall. Diuine, are the bookes of the old and new Testament, penned either by Prophets or Apostles. And these are not only the pure word of God, but also the scripture of God; because not only the matter of them; but the whole disposition thereof, with the style and the phrase was set downe by the immediate inspiration of the holy Ghost. And the authoritie of these bookes is diuine, that is, absolute and soueraigne: and they are of sufficient credit in and by themselves, needing not the testimony of any creature, nor subiect to the censure either of men or Angels; binding the consciences of all men at all times, and being the onely foundation of our faith, and the rule and canon of all truth.

Ecclesiasticall writings are all other ordinarie writings of the Church consenting with Scriptures. These may be called the word or truth of God, so farre forth as their matter or substance is consenting with the written word of God: but they cannot be called the Scripture of God, because the style and phrase of them was set downe according to the pleasure of man, and therefore they are in such sort the word of God, as that also they are the word of men. And their authoritie in defining of truth and falshood in matters of religion is, not soueraigne, but subordinate to the former: and it doth not stand in the authoritie and pleasure of men and Councels, but in the consent which they haue with the Scriptures.

Ecclesiasticall writings are either general, particular, or proper. General, are the Creedes and confessions of the Church dispersed ouer the whole world, and among the rest the Creede of the Apostles, made either by the Apostles themselves, or by their hearers and disciples, Apostolical men, deliuered to the Church, and conceiued from hand to hand: our times. Particular writings, are the confessions of particular Churches: proper writings, are the bookes and confessions of priuate men. Now between these we must make difference.

For the generall Creede of the Apostles, (other vniuersall Creedes in this case not excepted) though it be of lesse authoritie then Scripture; yet hath it more authoritie then the particular and priuate writings of Churches and men. For it hath beene receiued and approved by vniuersall consent of the Catholike Church in all ages, & so were neuer theles: in it the meaning and doctrine cannot be changed by the authoritie of the whole Catholike Church; and if either the order of the doctrine, or the words wherby it is expressed, should vpon some occasion be changed, a particular Church of any countrey can not doe it, without Catholike consent of the whole Church: yet particular writings and confessions made by some speciall Churches, may be altered in the words, and in the points of doctrine by the same Churches, without offence to the Catholike Church. Lastly, it is receiued as a rule of faith among all Churches, to trie doctrines and interpretations of Scriptures by, not because it is a rule of it self, for that the Scripture is alone; but because it borroweth his authoritie from Scripture with which it agreeth. And this honour no other writings of men can haue.

Here some may demand the number of Creedes. Ans. I say but one creede, as there is but one faith: and if it be alledged, that we haue many Creedes, as besides this of the Apostles, the Nicene Creede, and Athanasius creede, &c. I answer, the severall Creeds and confessions of Churches, containe not several faith and religions, but one and the same: and this called the Apostles Creede, is most ancient, and principall: all the rest are no new Creeds in substance, but in some points penned more largely for the exposition of it, that men might better auoid the heresies of their times.

Further, it may be demanded, in what forme this Creede was penned? Ans. In the forme of an answer to a question. The reason is this. In the Primitiue Church, when any man was turned from Gentilisme to the faith of Christ, and was to be baptized, this (?) question was asked him. What beleeuest thou? then he answered according to the forme of the Creede, I beleue in God, &c. And this manner of questioning was vsed euen from the time of the Apostles. When the Eunuch was conuerted by Philip, he said, What doth let me to be baptized? Philip said, If thou desirest beleue with all thine heart, thou mayest. Then he answered, I beleue that Iesus Christ is the Son of God. By this it appeares, that although all men, for the most part amongst vs can say this Crede, yet not one of a thousand can tell the ancient and first vse of it: for commonly at this day of the simpler sort it is said for a prayer, being indeed no prayer: and when it is vsed so, men make it no better then a charme.

Before wee come to handle the particular points of the crede, it is very requisite that we should should make an entrance thereto by describing the nature, properties, and kinds of faith, the confession and ground whereof is set forth in the Creede. Faith therefore is a gift of God, whereby we giue assent or credence to Gods word. For there is necessary relation betweene faith and Gods word. The common property of faith, is noted by the author of the Hebrewes, when he saith, Faith is the ground of things hoped for: and, the demonstration of things that are not seene. For all this may be vnderstood, not onely of iustifying faith, but also of temporary faith, and the faith of miracles. Where faith is said to be a ground, the meaning is, that though there are many things promised by God, which men doe not presently enioy, but onely hope for: because as yet they are not yet faith doth after a sort giue subsisting or being vnto them. Secondly, it is an evidence or demonstration, &c. that is, by beleueing a man doth make a thing as it were visible, being otherwise inuisible and absent.

Faith is of two sorts: either common faith, or the faith of the elect: as Paul saith, hee is an Apostle according to the faith of Gods elect: which also called faith without hypocrisie. The common faith is that which both the Elect, and reprobate haue, and it is three-folde. The first is hyssorical faith, which is, when a man doth beleue the outward letter and history of the word. It hath two parts: knowledge of Gods word, and assent vnto the same knowledge: and it is to be found in the diuell and his angels. So Saint James saith, the diuells beleue, and tremble. Some will say, what a faith haue they? Ans. Such as thereby they vnderstand both the Law and the Gospell; besides, they giue assent to it to be true: & they doe more yet, in that they tremble and feare. And many a man hath not so much. For amongst vs, there is many a one which hath no knowledge of God at all, more then hee hath learned by the common talke of the world: as namely, that there is a God, and that he is mercifull, &c. and yet this man will say, that he beleeueth with all his heart: but without knowledge it cannot be that any should truly beleue, and therefore hee deceiue himselfe. Quest. But whence haue the diuells hyssorical faith? were they illuminated by the light of the spirit? Ans. No: but when the Gospell was preached, they did acknowledge it, & beleued it to be true, and that by the vertue of the reliques of Gods image, which remained in them since their fall. And therefore this their faith doth not arise from any speciall illumination by his spirit, but they attaine to it euen by the very light of nature, which was left in them from the beginning.

The second kind of faith, is Temporary faith, so called, because it lasteth but for a time and season, and commonly not to the end of a mans life. This kinde of faith is noted vnto vs in the parable of the seede, that fell in the stonie ground. And there be two differences or kinds of this faith. The first kinde of temporary faith, hath in it three degrees. The first, is to know the word of God, and particularly the Gospell. The second, to giue an assent vnto it. The third, to professe it, but to go no further: and all this may be done without any loue to the word. This faith hath one degree more then historical faith. Examples of it we haue in Simon Magus, Act. 8. 13. who is said to beleue, because hee held the doctrine of the Apostles to be true; and whichall professed the same: and in the diuells also, who in some sort confessed, that Christ was the Son of the most high, and yet looked for no saluation by him. Mark. 5. 7. Act. 19. 15. And this is the common faith that abounds in this land. Men say they beleue as the Prince beleueeth, and if religion change, they will change. For by reason of the authority of Princes lawes, they are made to learne some little knowledge of the word: they beleue it to be good, and they professe it: and thus for the space of thirty or forty yeares men heare the word preached, and receiue the Sacraments, being for all this as void of grace as euer they were at the first day: and the reason is, because they doe barely professe it, without either liking or loue of the lawe. The second kinde of temporary faith, hath in it fise degrees. For by it, first a man knowes the word. Secondly, hee assenteth vnto it. Thirdly, hee professeth it. Fourthly, hee reioyceth inwardly in it. Fifthly, hee bringeth forth some kinde of fruit: and yet for all this hath no more in him but a faith that will faile in the end: because hee wanteth the effectual application of the promise of the Gospell, and is without all manner of found conseruation. This faith is like Come in the house top, which groweth for a while, but when heat of Summer cometh, it withereth. And this is also set forth vnto vs in the Parable of the Seede, which fell in stony ground, which is hasty in springing vp: but because of the stones, which will not suffer it to take deepe roote, it withereth. And this is a very common faith in the Church of God: by which, many reioyce in the preaching of the Word, and for a time bring forth some fruits accordingly, with few of great forwardnes yet afterward shake off Religion & all. But (some will say) how can this be a temporary faith, seeing it hath such fruit? Ans. Such a kinde of faith is temporary, because it is grounded on temporary causes, which are three. I. A desire to get knowledge of some strange points of religion. For many a man doth labour for the fise former degrees of temporary faith, onely because he desires to get more knowledge in Scripture then other men haue. The second cause, is a desire of praise among men, which is of that force, that it will make a man put on a shew of all the graces which God belittoweth vpon his owne children, though otherwise hee want them: and to goe very farre in religion; which appeareth thus. Some there are which seeme very bitterly to weepe for the finnes of other men, and yet haue neither sorrow nor touch of conscience for their owne: and the cause hereof is nothing else but pride. For he that sheldes teares for another mans finnes, should much more weepe for his owne, if hee had grace. Again, a man for his owne finnes will pray very slackly and dully, when hee prayeth privately: and yet when hee is in the company of others, he prayes very feruently and earnestly. From whence is this difference? surely often it springeth from the pride of heart, and from a desire of praise among men. The third cause of temporary faith, is profit, commodity, the getting of wealth and riches: which are common occasions to moue to chooseth or refuse religion, as the time serueth: but such a kind of beleeuers imbrace not the Gospell because it is the Gospell, that is, the glad tidings of saluation; but because it brings wealth, peace, and libertie with it. And these are the three causes of temporary faith.

The third kinde of faith, is the faith of Miracles: when a man grounding himselfe on some special promise or reuelation from God, doth beleue, that some strange and extraordinary thing, which he hath desired or foretold, shall come to passe by the worke of God. This must be distinguished from historical and temporary faith. For Simon Magus hauing both these kinds of faith, wanted this faith of miracles, and therefore would haue bought the same of the Apostles for money. Yet we must know, that this faith of miracles may be in hypocrites, as it was in Indus, and at the last iudgement it shall be found to haue bene in the wicked and reprobate; which shall say to Christ, Lord in thy name wee haue prophesied; and cast out diuels, and done many great miracles.

And thus much for the three sorts of common faith: Now wee come to true faith, which is called the faith of the Elect. It is thus defined: Faith is a supernaturall gift of God in the minde, apprehending the fauing promise with all the promises that depend on it. First, I say, it is a gift of God, Phil. 1.29. to confute the blinde opinion of our people, that thinke that the faith whereby they are to bee saued, is bredde and borne with them. I adde that this is a gift supernaturall, not onely because it is about that corrupt nature in which we are borne, but also because it is about that pure nature, in which our first parents were created; for in the state of innocency they wanted this faith, neither had they then any neede of faith in the Sonne of GOD as he is Messias: but this faith is a new grace of God added to regeneration after the fall, and first prescribed and taught in the covenant of grace. And by this one thing, faith differeth from the rest of the gifts of GOD, as the feare of GOD, the loue of GOD, the loue of our brethren, &c. for these were in mans nature before the fall; and after it, when it plea-seth God to call vs, they are but renewed; but iustifying faith admits no renewing. For the first ingrafting of it into the heart, is in the conuersion of a sinner after his fall.

The place and seat of faith (as I thinke) is the minde of man, not the will: for it stands in a kind of particular knowledge or perswasion, and there is no perswasion to be in the minde. Paul faith indeede, that wee beleue with the heart, Rom. 10.9. But by the heart he vnderstands the soule, without limitation to any part. Some do place faith partly in the minde, & partly in the will, because it hath two parts; knowledge, and affiance: but it seemes not greatly to stand with reason, that one particular and single grace should be seated in diuers parts or faculties of the soule.

The forme of faith, is to apprehend the promise of Gal. 3.14. That wee might receiue the promise of the Spirit through faith: and Ioh. 1.12. to receiue Christ, and to beleue, are put one for another; and to beleue, is to eate and drinke the body and blood of Christ; to apprehend properly, is an action of the hand of man, which layes hold of a thing, and pulls to himselfe: and by resemblance it agrees to faith, which is the hand of the soule, receiuing and applying the fauing promise.

The apprehension of faith, is not performed by any affection of the will, but by a certaine and particular perswasion, whereby a man is resolueth, that the promise of saluation belongs vnto him; which perswasion is wrought in the minde by the holy Ghost, 1. Cor. 12.12. And by this, the promise which is generall, is applied particularly to one subiect.

By this one action, fauing faith differeth from all other kinds of faith. From historical; for it wanteth all apprehension, and standeth onely in a generall assent. From temporary faith, which though it make a man to professe the Gospell, & to reioyce in the same, yet doth it not thoroughly apply Christ with his benefites. For it neuer brings with it any through touch of Conscience, or lively sense of Gods grace in the heart. And the same may be said of the rest.

The principal and maine object of this faith, is the fauing promise: God so loued the World, that hee gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoener beleues in him, shall not perih, but haue euermlasting life. But some will say, Christ is commonly said to be the object of faith. Ans. In effect it is all one to say, the fauing promise, and Christ promised, who is the substance of the Covenant. Christ then, as he is set forth vnto vs in the Word & Sacraments, is the object of faith. And here certaine questions offer themselves to be skanned.

The first: What is that particular thing, which faith apprehendeth? Ans. Faith apprehendeth whole Christ, God and man. For his Godhead without his manhood, and his manhood without his Godhead, doth not reconcile vs to God. Yet this which I say, must be con-

conceiued with some distinction according to the difference of his two natures. His Godhead is apprehended, not in respect of his efficacy or nature, but in respect of his efficacy manifested in the manhood; whereby the obedience thereof is made meritorious before God: as for his manhood, it is apprehended both in respect of the substance or thing it selfe, and also in respect of the efficacy and benefites thereof.

The second, in what order faith apprehends Christ? Ans. First of all it apprehends the very bodie and blood of Christ: and then in the second place the vertue and benefites of his bodie and blood; as a man that would feede in his bodie the vertue of meate and drinke, must first of all receiue the substance thereof.

To goe forward. Besides this maine promise, which concerns righteoussesse and life euermlasting in Christ, there be other particular promises touching strength in temptations, comfort in afflictions, and such like, which depend on the former: and they also are the object of iustifying faith: and with the very same faith wee beleue them, wherewith wee beleue our saluation. Thus Abraham by the same faith wherewith hee was iustified, beleueed that he should haue a sonne in his old age, Rom. 4.9.22. And Moses by that faith wherewith he was made heire of righteoussesse, beleueed that hee and his family should be preserved in the flood: this conclusion being alwaies laid downe, that to whom GOD giues Christ, to them also he giues all things needfull for this life, or the life to come, in and by Christ. And hereupon it comes to passe, that in our prayers, besides the desire of things promised, wee must bring faith, whereby wee must be certainly perswaded, that God will graunt vs such things as hee hath promised: & this faith is not a new kind or distinct faith from iustifying faith. Thus wee see plainly what fauing faith is.

Whereas some are of opinion, that faith is an affiance or confidence, that seemes to be otherwise; for it is a fruite of faith: and indeede no man can put any confidence in God, till he be first of all perswaded of Gods mercie in Christ towards him.

Some againe are of minde, that loue is the very nature and forme of faith: but it is otherwise. For as confidence in God, so also loue is an effect which proceedeth from faith. 1. Tim. 1.5. The end of the law is loue from a pure heart, and good conscience, and faith vnfeined. And in nature they differ greatly. Christ is the fountaine of the water of life. Faith in the heart is as the pipes and leads that receiue in, and hold the water: and loue in some part is as the cocke of the condir, that lets out the water to euery comer. The propertie of the hand is to hold, and of it selfe it cannot cut: yet by a knife or other instrument put into the hand, it cutteth the hand of the soule is faith, and his propertie is to apprehend Christ with all his benefits: and by it selfe can doe nothing else: yet ioyne lone vnto it, and by loue it will bee effectual in all good duties.

Now to proceede further: first, wee are to consider, how faith is wrought: secondly, what be the differences of it. For the first, faith is wrought in and by the outward ministry of the Gospell, accompanied by the inward operation of the Spirit; and that not suddenly, but by certaine steps and degrees: as nature frameth the bodie of the infant in the mothers wombe, 1. by making the braine and heart: 2. by making veines, sinewes, arteries, bones: 3. by adding flesh to them all. And the whole operation of the spirit stands in two principall actions. First, the enlightning of the minde; the second, the mouing of the will. For the first, the holy Ghost enlightens mens minds with a further knowledge of the law, then nature can afford; and thereby makes them to fee the finnes of their hearts and liues with the vgliness thereof; & withall to tremble at the curse of the law. Afterward the same spirit opens the eye to vnderstand and consider seriously of righteoussesse and life eternall promised in Christ. This done, then comes the second worke of the holy Ghost, which is the inflaming of the will, that a man hauing considered his fearefull estate by reason of sinne, and the benefit of Christs death, might hunger after Christ; and haue desire not so much to haue the punishments of sinne taken away, as Gods displeasure; and also might enioy the benefites of Christ. And when he hath stirred vp a man to desire reconciliation with God in Christ, then will hee giue him Grace to pray not onely for life eternall, but especially for the free remission and pardon of all his finnes; and then the Lords promise is, Knocke and it shall be opened, seeke and ye shall find. After which he further sends his spirit into the same heart, that desireth reconciliation with God, and remission of finnes in Christ; and doth seale vp the same in the heart by a liuely and plentifull assurance thereof.

The differences & degrees of faith are two: 1. A weak faith: 2. A strong faith. Concerning the first, this weak faith shewes it selfe by this grace of God, namely, an vnfeined desire, not onely of saluation, (for that the wicked and careless man may haue) but of reconciliation with God in Christ. This is a sure signe of faith in euery touched and humbled heart; and it is peculiar to the elect: and they which haue this, haue in them also the ground and substance of true fauing faith: which afterwaies in time will grow vp to great strength. Reason. 1. Promise of life euermlasting, is made to the desire of reconciliation, Psal. 10.17. Lord thou hast heard the desire of the poore. Psal. 14.36. My soule desireth after thee, as the thirfie land. Psal. 145.19. He will fulfill the desire of them that feare him. Math. 5.6. Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteoussesse, for they shall be satisfied. Reu. 21.6. I will giue vnto him which is a thirst, of the well of the water of life freely. II. The hungry desire after grace is a sanctified affection: where one affection is sanctified; all are sanctified: where all are sanctified, the whole man is sanctified: and he that is sanctified, is justified and beleueus. III. God accepts the will and desire to repent and beleue, for repenting and beleueing ininde: wherefore this desire of reconciliation (if it bee soundly wrought in the heart) is in acceptance with God as true faith indeede. But carnal men will say, If faith, yea true faith shew it self by a desire of reconciliation with God in Christ for all our sins, then we are well enough, though wee live in our finnes: for we haue very good desires. Answer, that there bee many fundrie fleeting motiōs & desires to do good things, which grow to no issue or head, but in time vanish as they come. Now such passions haue no foundnesse in them, and must be distinguished from the desire of reconciliation with God, that comes from a bruised heart, and brings alwaies with it reformation of life: therefore such, whatsoeuer they are that live after the course of this world, and thinke notwithstanding that they haue desires that are good, deceive themselves.

Now faith is said to be weak, when a man either faile in the knowledge of the Gospel; or els hauing knowledge, is weak in grace to apply vnto himselfe the sweet promises thereof. As for example, wee know that the Apostles had all true fauing faith (except Iudas) and when our Saviour Christ asked them, whom they thought he was; Peter in the person of the rest, answered for them all, and said: Thou art Christ the Sonne of the living God: for which our Saviour commended him, and in him, them all, saying: Thou art Peter, and upon this rocke, (that is, vpon Christ, which Peter confessed in the name of them all) will I build my Church. And yet about that time we shall finde in the Gospel, that they are called men, of little faith. Now they failed in knowledge of the death of Christ, and of his passion, and resurrection; and were carried away with a vaine hope of an earthly kingdom: And therefore when our Saviour shewed them of his going downe to Hierusalem, and of his sufferings there, Peter a little after his notable confession beganne to rebuke Christ and said, Master haue pittie on thy selfe, this shall not be vnto thee. And vntill hee had appeared vnto them after his death, they did not distinctly beleue his resurrection.

Againe, weak faith, though it be ioyned with knowledge, yet it may faile in the applying or in the apprehension and appropriating of Christs benefits to a mans owne selfe. This is to be seene in ordinarie experience. For many a man there is of humble and contrite heart, that serueth God in spirit and truth; yet is not able to say without great doubtings & wauering; I know and am fully assured that my finnes are pardoned. Now shall wee say, that all such are without faith? God forbid. Nay, we may resolue our selues, that the true childe of God, may haue an hungry desire in his heart after reconciliation with God in Christ for all his finnes, with care to keepe a good conscience, and yet be weak sometime in the apprehension of Gods mercie, and the assurance of the remission of his owne finnes.

But if faith faile either in the true knowledge, or in the apprehension of Gods mercies, how can a man be faued by it? Ans. We must know, that this weak faith will as truly apprehend Gods mercifull promises for the pardon of sinne, as strong faith, though not so soundly. Euen as a man with a palfie hand can stretch it out as well to receive a gift at the hand of a king, as hee that is more found, though it be not so firmly and stedfastly. And Christ faith, that he will not breake the bruised reede, nor quench the smoking flaxe.

The Church of Rome beares men in hand, that they are good Catholikes, if they beleue as the Church beleueus; though in the meane season they cannot tell what the Church beleueus. And some papists commend this faith, by the example of an old deuout father, who being tempted of the diuell, and asked how he beleued; answered, that he beleued as the Church beleued; being againe asked how the Church beleued, he answered, as I beleue: whereupon the diuell (as they say) was faine to depart. Well, this fond and ridiculous kind of faith we renounce, as being a meanes to nuzzle men in blindness, superstition, and perpetual ignorance: yet withal we do not denie but there is an implicate or infolded faith; which is, when a man as yet hauing but some little portion of knowledge in the doctrine of the Gospel, doth truly performe obedience according to the measure thereof; and withall hath care to get more knowledge, and shewes good affection to all good meanes whereby it may bee increased. In this respect a certaine ruler, who by a miracle wrought vpon his child, was moued to acknowledge Christ for the Messias, and further to submit himselfe to his doctrine, is commended for a beleuer: and so are in like case the Samaritans.

And thus much of weak faith: which must bee vnderstood to be in a man, not all the daies of his life, but while hee is a young babe in Christ. For as it is in the state of the bodie, first we are babes and grow to greater strength as we grow in yeares; so it is with a christian man. First he is a babe in Christ, hauing weak faith, but after growes from grace to grace, till he come to haue a strong faith: example whereof wee haue in Abraham, who was strong and perfect both in knowledge & apprehension. This strong faith, is when a man is indued with the knowledge of the Gospel, and grace to apprehend and apply the righteousness of Christ vnto himselfe for the remission of his owne finnes: so as he can say distinctly of himselfe and truly, that he is fully resolved in his owne conscience, that he is reconciled vnto God in Christ for all his finnes, and accepted in him to life euermlasting. This degree of faith is proper to him that begins to bee a tall man, and of ripe yeares in Christ. And it comes not at the first calling of a man vnto grace: and if any shall thinke that hee can haue it at the first, he deceiue himselfe: for as it is in nature, first we are babes, and then as we increase in yeares, so we grow in strength: so it is in the life of a Christian: first, ordinarily, he hath a weak faith, & after growes from grace to grace, till he come to stronger faith: and at the last he be able to say, he is fully assured in his heart and conscience of the pardon of his finnes, and of reconciliation to God in Christ. And this assurance ariseth from many experiences of Gods fauour and loue in the course of his life by manifold preservations and other blessings, which being deeply and duly considered, bring a man to be fully perswaded that God is his God, and God the Father his Father, and Iesus Christ his redeemer, and the holy Ghost his sanctifier.

Now howsoeuer this faith be strong, yet is it alwaies imperfect, as also our knowledge is: and shall so long as wee live in this world bee mingled with contrary vnbeleife and sundry doubtings more or lesse. A great part of men amongst vs, blinded with grosse ignorance, say they haue faith, and yet indeede haue not. For aske them what faith they haue, they will answer, they beleue that God is their Father, and the Sonne their redeemer, &c. aske them how long they haue had this faith, they will answer, euer since they could remember: aske them whether they euer doubt of Gods fauour? they will say, they would not once doubt for all the world. But the case of these men is to be pitied: for howsoeuer they may perswade themselves, yet true it is, that they haue no sound faith at all, for euen strong faith is assaulted with temptations and doubtings: and God will not haue men perfect in this life, that they may alwaies goe out of themselves, and depend wholly on the merit of Christ.

And thus much of these two degrees of faith. Now in whomsoeuer it is, whether it be a weak faith, or a strong, it bringeth forth some fruites, as a tree doth in the time of sommer. And a speciall fruit of faith, is the confession of faith;

I beleue in God, &c. so Paul faith, With the heart a man beleueus vnto righteousness; and with the mouth man confesseth to saluation. Confession of faith, is when a man in speech and outward profession doth make manifest his faith for these two causes: I. That with his mouth outwardly he may glorifie God, and doe him seruice both in body and soule. II. That by the confession of his faith, he may feuer himselfe from all false Christians, from Atheists, hypocrites, and all false seducers whatsoeuer. And as this is the duty of a Christian man, to make profession of his faith: so heere in this Creede of the Apostles, we haue the right order and forme of making confession set downe, as we shall see in handling the parts thereof.

The Creed therefore sets downe two things concerning faith, namely, the action of faith, and his object, which also are the parts of the Creede. The Action, in these words, I beleue: the object in all the words following, in God the Father Almighty maker, &c. And first let vs begin with the action.

I beleue in God We are taught to say, I beleue, not we beleue, for two causes: First, because (as we touched before) in the Primitive Church this Creed was made to be an answer to a demand or question, which was demanded of euery particular man that was baptized: for they asked him thus: What doest thou beleue? then he answered, I beleue in God the Father, &c. And thus did euery one of yeares make profession of his faith, and it is likely that Peter alladed hereunto, saying, The Bishoppe or answere of a good conscience maketh request to God. The second cause is, howsoeuer we are to pray one for another, by saying, Our Father, &c. yet when we come to yeares, we must haue a particular faith of our owne: no man can bee faued by another mans faith, but by his owne, as it is said: The iust shall live by his faith. But some will say, this is not true, because children must be faued by their parents faith: the answer is this; The faith of the parent doth bring the childe to haue a title or interest to the cōuenant of grace, and to all the benefits of Christ: yet doth it not apply the benefits of Christs death, his obedience, his merits, and righteousness vnto the infant: for this the beleuer doth onely vnto himselfe, and to no other. Againe, some may say, if children doe not apprehend Christs benefits by their parents faith, how then is Christs righteousness made theirs and they faued? Ans. By the inward working of the holy Ghost, who is the principall applier of all graces, whereas faith is but the instrument. As for the places of Scripture that mention iustificatiō and saluation by faith, they are to be restrained to men of yeeres: whereas infants dying in their infancie, and therefore wanting actall faith, which none can haue without actall knowledge of Gods will and word, are no doubt faued by some other speciall working of Gods holy Spirit, not known to vs.

Furthermore, to beleue, significeth two things, to conceiue or vnderstand any thing, and withall to giue assent vnto it to be true: and therefore in this place to beleue, significeth to know and acknowledge that all the points of Religion which follow, are the truth of God. Here therefore we must remember, that this clause (I beleue) placed in the beginning of the Creede, must bee particularly applied to all and euery article following. For so the case stands, that if faith faile in one maine point, it faileth a man in all: and therefore faith is said to be wholly expatiatiue. It is not sufficient to hold one article, but he that will hold any of them them for his good, must hold them all : and hee which holds them all in shew of words, if he ouerturne but one of them indeed, he ouerturnes them all.

Hab. 2. 4.

Againe, to beleue is one thing, and to beleue in this or that, is another thing : and it contains in it three points or actions of a beleuer. I. To know a thing. II. To acknowledge the same. III. To put trust and confidence in it. And in this order must these three actions of faith be applied to euery article following, which concerns any of the persons in Trinitie. And this must be marked as a matter of a speciall moment. For alwayes by adding them to the words following, we do apply the article vnto our selues in a very comfortable manner. As I beleue in the Father, and doe beleue that hee is my Father : and therefore I put my whole trust in him, and so of the rest.

Now wee come to the obiect of general faith, which is either God or the Church ; in handling of both which, I will obserue this order. I. I will speake of the meaning of euery article. II. Of the duties which we ought to learne thereby. III. And lastly, of the consolations which may be gathered thence. Concerning God, three things are to be considered. And first, by reason of manifold doubtings that rise in our minds, it may be demanded, whether there be a God? Many reasons might be vsed to resolute those that haue scruple of conscience; otherwaies we are bound to beleue that there is a God without all doubting. As for the Atheists which confidently auaunt there is no God, by Gods Law they ought to die the death : nay, the earth is too good for such to dwell on. Malefactours, as theues and rebels, for their offences haue their reward of death : but the offence of those, which deny that there is a God, is greater; and therefore deserves a most cruell death.

The second point followeth, namely, what God is? Ans. Moses desiring to see Gods face, was not permitted but to see his hinder parts : and therefore no man can bee able to describe God by his nature, but by his effects and properties, on this or such like manner: God is an essence spirittuall, simple, infinite, most holy. I say first of all, that God is an essence, to shew, that he is a thing absolutely subsisting in himselfe, and by himselfe, not receiving his being from any other. And herein he differs from all creatures whatsoever, which haue subsisting and being from him alone. Againe, I say he is an essence spirittuall, because he is not any kinde of body, neither hath he the parts of the bodies of men or other creatures, but is in nature a spirit invisible, not subiect to any mans senses. I adde also, that he is a simple essence, because his nature admits no manner of composition of matter or forme of parts. The creatures are compounded of diuers parts, and of varietie of nature, but there is no such thing in God : for whatsoever thing he is, he is the same by one & the same singular & indiuisible essence. Furthermore he is infinite, & that diuers waies: infinite in time, without any beginning and without end : infinite in place, because he is euery where, & excluded no where, within all places, and forth of all places. Lastly, he is most holy, that is, of infinite wisdom, mercy, loue, goodness, &c. and he alone is rightly termed most holy, because holiness is of the very nature of God himselfe: whereas among the most excellent creatures it is otherwise. For the creature itselfe is one thing, and the holines of the creature another thing. Thus we see what God is, and to this effect God describes himselfe to be Lebanah, Elolium: and Paul describes him to be a King everlasting, immortal, invisible, and only wise, to whom is due all honour and glorie for ever.

The third point, is touching the number of Gods, namely whether there be more Gods then one or no. Ans. There is none, neither can there be any more Gods then one. Which point the Creede auoucheth, in saying, I beleue in God, not in Gods : and yet more plainly the Nicene Creede, and the Creede of Athanasius, both of them explaining the words of the Apostles Creede in this manner, I bel. one in one God. Howsoever some in former times haue erroneously held, that two Gods were the beginning of all things, one of good things, the other of euill things; others, that there was one God in the old Testament, another in the new: others again, namely the Palestinians, that there were thirty couples of gods : and the heathen people (as Augustine reporteth) worshipped thirty thousand gods: yet we that are members of Gods Church, must hold and beleue one God alone, and no more, Deut. 4.39.

Understand this day & consider in thine heart, that Lebanon here is God in heauen above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none other. Eph. 4.6. One God, one faith, one baptisme. If it be alleged that the Scripture mentioneth many Gods, because (a) Magistrates are called Gods, (b) Moses is called *Aaron*s God, (c) the diuell and all idols are called Gods. The answer is this: They are not properly or by nature Gods, for in that respect there is onely one God: but they are so termed in other respects. Magistrates are gods, because they are Vicegerents placed in the roome of the true God, to gouerne their subiects: Moses is Aarons God, because he was in the roome of God to reueale his will to Aaron: the diuell is a god, because the hearts of the wicked would giue the honour vnto him, which is peculiar to the euerting God: Idols are called gods, because they are such in mens conceits and opinions, who esteeme of them as gods. Therefore Paul saith, an idol is nothing in the world, that is, nothing in nature subsisting, or nothing in respect of the diuinity ascribed to it.

To proceede forward : to beleue in this one God, is in effect thus much. I. To know and acknowledge him as hee hath reuealed himselfe in his word. II. To beleue him to be my God : III. From mine heart to put all mine affiance in him. To this purpose Christ faith

This is eternall life to know thee the only God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. Now the knowledge here meant, is not a bare or generall knowledge, for that the diuels haue, but a more speciall knowledge, whereby I know God not onely to be God, but also to be my God, and thereupon do put my confidence in him.

And thus much of the meaning of the first words, I beleue in God, &c. Now followeth the duties which may be gathered hence. First of all, if we are bound to beleue in God, then we are also bound to take notice of our naturall vnbeliefe, whereby we distrust God, to checke our felts for it, and to strive against it. Thus deale the father of the childe that had a dumb spirit, Lord (saith he) I beleue; Lord blesse mine vnbeliefe. And Dauid, Why art thou cast downe my soule? and why art thou so disquieted within me? waite on God. And that which our Saviour Christ said once to Peter, men should daily speake to themselves: O thou of little faith! why hast thou doubted? But some may say, wherein stands our vnbeliefe? Ans. It stands in two things. I. In distrusting the goodness of God, that is, in giuing too little or no affiance to him, or in putting affiance in the creature. For the first, few men will abide to be told of their distrust in God; but indeede it is a common and ripe corruption: and though they sooth themselves neuer so, yet their vsuall dealings proclaim their vnbeliefe. Goe through all places, it shall be found that scarce one of a thousand in his dealings makes conscience of alie: a great part of men gets their wealth by fraud and oppression; and all kinde of vnjust and vnmisericfull dealing. What is the cause that they can doe so? Alas, alas, if there be any faith, it is pinned vp in some by-corner of the heart, and vnbeliefe beares sway as the Lord of the house. Againe, if a man had as much wealth as the world comes to, he could find in his heart to with for another; and if he had two worlds, hee could bee casting for the third, if it might bee compassed: the reason thereof is, because men haue not learned to make God their portion, & to stay their affections on him: which if they could do, a meane portion in temporall blessings would be enough. Indeeede these and such like persons will vno wisely yeeld that they doe distrust the Lord, vnlesse at sometime they be touched in conscience with a sense and feeling of their sins, and be thoroughly humbled for the same: but the truths, that distrust of Gods goodness is a generall and a mother sin, the ground of all other finnes; and the very first and principall sinne in Adams fall. And for the second part of vnbeliefe, which is an affiance in the creatures, reade the whole booke of God, & wee shall finde it a common and vsuall sin in all sorts of men, some putting their trust in riches, some in strength: some in pleasures, some placing their felicity in one sin, some in another. When king Aha was sicke, hee put his whole trust in the Physicians, and not in the Lord. And in our daies the common practise is when crosses and calamities fall, then there is trotting out to that wife ma, to this cunning woman, to this forcerer, to that wizard, that is, from God to the diuell, and their co. If ill is receiued and practised without any ones making. And this shewes the bitter roote of vnbeliefe, & confidence in vaine creatures, let men smooth it ouer with goodly tearmes as long as they will. In a word, there is no man in the world, be he called or not called, if hee look narrowly vnto himselfe, hee shall finde his heart almost filled with manifold doubtings and distrustings; whereby hee shall feeble himselfe euen carried away fro beleueing in God. Therefore the dutie of euery man is, that will truly say that he beleues in God, to labour to see his owne vnbeliefe, & the fruits thereof in his life. As for such as say they haue no vnbeliefe, nor feeble none; more pittifull is their case, for so much greater is their vnbeliefe.

Secondly, considering that we professe our selues to beleue in God, we must euery one of vs learne to know God. As Paul saith, How can they beleue in him? whom they haue not heard? and how can they beare without a preacher? therefore none can beleue in God, but hee must first of all heare and be taught by the ministration of the word to know God aright. Let this be remembered of young and old, it is not the pattering ouer the believe for a prayer, that will make a man a good beleuer, but God must be knowne of vs, and acknowledged as hee hath reuealed himselfe partly in his word, and partly in his creatures. Blind ignorance, and the right vse of the Apostles Creede will neuer stand together. Therefore it stands men in hand to labor and take paines to get knowledge in Religion, that knowing God aright, they may come stedfastly to beleue in him, and truly make confession of their faith.

Thirdly, because we beleue in God, therefore another duty is, to deny our selues vnto the world, and to become nothing in our selues. Our Saviour Christ requires of vs to become as little children, if we would beleue. The beggar depends not vpo the reliefe of others, till hee finde nothing at home : and till our hearts be purged of selfe-loue and pride, wee cannot depend vpon the fauour and goodness of God. Therefore hee that would trust in God, must first of all bee abased and confounded in himselfe, and in regard of himselfe, be out of all hope of attaining to the least sparke of the grace of God.

Fourthly, in that we beleue in God, and therefore put our whole trust and assurance in him: we are taught, that euery man must comit his body, his soule, goods, life, yea all that hee hath into the hands of God, and to his custodie. So Paul saith, I amnes ashamed of my sufferings for I know whom I haue beleued, and am persuaded, that he is able to keepe that which I haue committed vnto him against that day. A worthy saying, for what is the thing which Paul committed unto the Lord? it was his owne soule, and the eternall saluation thereof. But what moues him to trust God? surely his perswasion, whereby hee knew that God would keepe it. And Peter saith: Let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit their soules to him in well doing, as vnto a faithfull creator. Look as one friend layeth downe a thing to be kept of another: so must a man giue that he hath to the custodie of God. Few or none can practise this, and therefore when any euill befalls them, eyther in body or in goods, or any other way whatsoeuer, then they presently shew themselves rather beafts then men in impatience. For in prosperitie they had no care to put their trust in God, and therefore in aduersitie when crosses come, they are void of comfort. But when a man hath grace to beleene, and trust in God, he commits all into Gods hands: and though all the world should perish, yet hee would not be dismayed. And vndoubtedly, if a man will be thankfull for the perseruacion of his goods, or of his life, he must shew the same by committing all he hath into Gods hands, and suffer himselfe to be ruled by him.

Now followes the consolations and comforts which Gods Church and children reape hereby. Hee that beleeueth in God, and takes God for his God, may assure himselfe of saluation, and of a happy deliuerance in all dangers and necessities. When God threatned a plague vpon Israel for their Idolatry, good King Ishu humbled himselfe before the Lord his God: and he was safe all his daies. And so King Hezekiah, when Sennacherib the king of Assur offered to invade Iudah, trusted likewise in the Lord, and prayed vnto him, and was deliuered: Whereby wee see if a man puts his whole trust in God, he shall haue securitie and quietnesse, as Iehosaphat said to the men of Iudah. And our Saviour Christ when hee was vpon the crosse, and felt the whole burden of the terrible wrath of God vpon him, cryed, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken mee? And it appears in the Epistle to the Hebrews, that Christ was heard in his heaues: whereby we are giuento vnderstand, that they shall neuer bee utterly forsaken, that take God for their God. And King David hauing experience of this, vsed most excellent speeches for this end, to shew that the ground of his comfort was, that God was his God. And it is said, that Daniel had no manner of hurt in the Lyons denne: because hee trusted in the Lord his God. And contrariwise such as distrust God, are subiect to all miseries and iudgements. The Israelites in the wilderness beleued not God, and trusted not in his helpe, therefore God was kindled in Iacob, and wrath came open Israel.

God, the Father, Almighty.] Some haue thought that these words are to be coupled to the former without distinction, as if the title of God had bene proper to the first person the Father, and not common to the rest:

and thus haue some heretickes thought. But indeede there must a pause or distinction be made; that the name or title of God may be set in the fore-front, as common to all the three persons following. For that is the very intent of the order of this Creede, to teach vs to beleue in one God; who is distinct in three subsistences or persons, called the Father; the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. And heere offers it selfe to be considered, even one of the greatest mysteries of our religion: namely, that God is the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: and againe, that the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are one & the same God.

Some at the first may possibly say, that this cannot stand; because it is against all reason, that one should be three, or three one: The answer is, that indeede if one and the same respect be kept, it is not possible, but in diuers considerations and respects it may. And thus the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are three, namely in person; and againe, they three are one not in person, but in nature. By nature is meant, a thing subsisting by it selfe, that is common to many: at the substance of man consisting of body and soule common to all men, which we call the humanitie of a man, is the nature of man. By person is meant, a thing or essence subsisting by it selfe, not common to many, but incommunicable: as among men; these particulars, Peter, Iohn, Paul, are called persons. And so in the misterie of the Trinity, the diuine nature is the Godhead it selfe, simply and absolutely considered; & a person is that which subsisteth in that Godhead, as the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. Or againe, a person is one and the same Godhead, not absolutely considered, but in relation, & as it were, restrained by personal or characteristical properties: as the Godhead or God begetting is the Father; God againe considered not simple, but so far forth as he is begotten, is the Sonne; and God proceeding of the Father, & the Sonne, the holy Ghost. And if any man would conceiue in mind rightly the diuine nature, hee must conceiue God or the Godhead absolutely; if any of the persons, then he must conceiue the same Godhead relatively with personal properties. Thus the Godhead considered with the propriety of Fatherhood or begetting, is the Father: and conceiuing the same Godhead with the propriety of generation, wee conceiue the Sonne; and the Godhead with the propriety of proceeding, wee conceiue the holy Ghost. Neither must it seeme strange to any that wee vse the names of nature and person, to set forth this mysterie by: for they haue bene taken vp by common consent in the Primitive Church, and that vpon weightie consideration, to manifest the truth, and to stop the mouthes of heretickes; and they are not so vsed against the proper sense of the Scriptures; nay they are therein (a) contained. Thus wee see how it comes to passe, that the three things signified by these names, Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, are each of them one and the same God. And this mysterie may well be conceived by a comparison borrowed from light. The light of the Sonne, the light of the Moone, and the light of the Aire, for nature and substance are one and the same light: and yet they are three distinct lights. The light of the Sonne being of it selfe and from none, the light of the Moone from the Sonne, and the light of the aire from them both. So the diuine nature is one, and the persons are three, subsisting after a diuers manner in one and the same nature.

And for the further clearing of this point, we must yet further mark and remember two things: namely, the vniou and the distinction of the persons. The vniou is, whereby three persons are not one simply, but one in nature, that is, consubstantial, or consubstantial; hauing all one godhead. For the Father is God, the Son is God, and the holy Ghost is God: now there are not three distinct Gods, but one God, because there is one God and no more in nature, considering that the thing which is infinite is but one, and is not subiect to multiplication: and the Father is this one God, as also the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. And as these three persons are in nature, so whatsoever agree to God simply considered, agrees to them all three. They are all coequal & coeternal: all most wise, iust, mercifull, omnipotent, by one and the same wisdom, iustice, mercy, power. And because they haue all one godhead, therefore they are not only one with another, but also each in other, the Father in the Son, and the Sonne in the Father, and the holy Ghost in them both. And we must not imagine that these three are one God, as though the Father had one part of the godhead, the Son another part, and the holy Ghost a third. For that is most false, because the infinite and the most simple godhead is not subiect to composition or diuision: but every person is whole God, subsisting not in a part, but in the whole godhead: and the whole entire godhead is communicated from the Father to the Sonne, and from both Father & Son to the holy Ghost. But some may yet say, that this doctrine seemes to be impossible; because three creatures, as for example, Peter, Paul, Timothie, be three persons, & so remaining, cannot haue one and the same nature, that is, the same body, & the same soule. Ans. Three or more men may haue the same nature (b) in kinde, but the truth is, they cannot possibly haue a nature which shall be one and the same (c) in number, in them all three. For a man is a substance created and finite, and the bodies of men are quantities, and therefore diuisible and separable one from another. Hereupon it comes, that the persons of men are not only distinguished by propriety, but also diuided and separated one from another. And though Peter, Paul, and Timothie, haue all one common and vniuersall forme, yet they three are, not one man, but three men. Now it is otherwise with the diuine nature or godhead, which is vncreated and infinite, and therefore admits neither composition nor diuision, but a distinction without any separation: so as the three persons subsisting in it, shall not be three Gods, but one and the same God.

Yet further, some will object, that it is truly said of the Father, that hee is God, but the same godhead is not in the Son, nor in the holy Ghost; for the Son & the holy Ghost haue their beginning from the Father. Ans. The Son & the H. Ghost haue not a beginning of their nature, or of their godhead from the Father, but of their person only: the person of the Son is from the Father; and the person of the holy Ghost is both from the Father and from the Son: but the godhead of all three persons is vncreated & vnbegotten, & proceeding from none. Yet some may say, both the Sonne and the holy Ghost haue received from the Father all their attributes, as wisdom, knowledge, power, &c. Now he that receiveth any thing from another, is in that respect inferior to him that giueth it: and therefore the Sonne and the holy Ghost are not God as hee is. Ans. We must know that that which the Sonne receiveth of the Father, he receiveth by nature, and not by grace: and he receiveth not a part, but all that the Father hath, hauing the personall propriety. And the holy Ghost receiveth from the Father and the Sonne, by nature, and not by grace: and therefore though both the Sonne and the holy Ghost receive from the Father, yet they are not inferior to him, but equal with him. And thus much is both necessary and profitable to be learned of the vniou betweene the three persons in Trinity, whereby they being three haue all one and the same godhead.

The second point to be considered is, that though these three haue but one godhead, and all make but one God, yet they are distinguished one from another: for the Father is the Father, and not the Sonne or the holy Ghost; the Sonne is the Sonne, and not the Father, nor the holy Ghost: and the holy Ghost is the holy Ghost, not the Father nor the Son. This distinction of the persons is notably set forth vnto vs in the baptisme of our Saviour Christ; where it is said, that when Iesu was baptised, he came out of the water: there is the second person: and the holy Ghost descended vpon him in the forme of a dove; there is the third person: and the Father the first person pronounced from heauen, that hee was his only beloued Sonne in whom hee was well pleased. And wee must not conceiue this distinction in such manner, as though the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, were three names of one God: For the three persons do not in name or word, but really in truth distinctly subsist in the same diuine nature. Neither must we imagine that the 3. persons are three formes or differences of one God, as some heretikes have dreamed, who taught that the Father alone is God, and that he is called a Father in one respect, the Sonne in another, and the holy Ghost in a third. For this were nothing else, but to make the personall proprieties to be nothing but imaginarie accidents, which indeede, or at the least in mans conceit, might come and goe, and be either in the persons, or forth of them. For the personall relations, though in (a) minde they may be distinguished from the diuine essence, yet (b) indeede they are one with it. But some will say, if they make this distinction, there is rather a quaternity then a Trinity: for the Godhead is one, the Father another, the Sonne a third, and the holy Ghost a fourth. Thus some heretikes have objected against the distinction of the Trinity: but it is vntue which they say. For the Godhead must not be seuered from the Father, nor from the Sonne, nor from the holy Ghost: for the Father is God or the whole Godhead, so also is the Son and the holy Ghost: and the Godhead likewise is in euery one of these three persons, and euery one of them subsisting in the Godhead, the same must be conceived to be in the nill, and not as a fourth thing out of them. And therefore we must still maintaine, that these three persons are distinguished, and not deuided, as three men are diuided in being and substance: for this diuision cannot be in them, because all three haue one diuine nature and one Godhead. This is the mytery of all mysteries to be receiued of vs all, namely, the Trinitie of the persons in the vnitie of the Godhead. This forme of doctrine must be retained and holden for these causes: I. Because by it we are able to distinguish this true God from all false gods and idols. II. Because among all other points of religion this is one of the chiefest, being the very foundation thereof. For it is not sufficient for vs to know God as wee can conceiue of him in our own imagination; but wee must know him as hee hath reuealed himselfe in his word. And it is not sufficient to saluation to beleue in God confusedly, but wee must beleue in one God distinct in three persons, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: yea, and more then this, wee must holde and beleue, that God the Father is our Father, the Sonne our redeemer, the holy Ghost our sanctifier and comforter. Well then, if we must in this manner beleue in God, then we must also know him; for we can haue no faith in the thing which is vtterly vnknowne. Wherefore if we would beleue in the Father, Sonne, or holy Ghost, wee must know them in part. Ioh. 17. 3. This is life eternal to know thee the only God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. Ioh. 14. 17. The world cannot receiue the spirit of truth, because it hath neither seene him, nor knowne him. I. Ioh. 2. 23. Who seuer denieth the Sonne, hath not the Father. Thirdly, this doctrine directes vs in worshipping God aright: for vnitie in trinitie, and trinitie in vnitie is to be worshipped; one God must be worshipped in the Father, in the Sonne, and in the holy Ghost: & if we worship God the Father, without the Son and the holy Ghost: or if we worship the Son, without the Father and the holy Ghost: and the holy Ghost, without the Father and the Sonne, we worship nothing but an idol. Again, if we worship the three persons not as one God, but as three Gods, then likewise we make three idols.

Note further, that of all the three persons, the first person the Father is set in the first place, and described to vs by three things. I. by his title, that he is a Father. II. by his attribute, that he is Almighty. III. by his effect, that hee is maker of heauen and earth: of these in order, as they lie in the Creed. And first of the title (Father.) It may seeme that he hath some prerogative ouer the Son and the holy Ghost, because he is set before them; but we must know that he is set before them neither in regard of time, nor of dignity, for therein all three are equall: but in regard of order only. The Father is the first, the Sonne the second, and the holy Ghost the third: as may appeare by this similitude. If three Emperours equall in dignity should meet all in one place, being equall also in power and maiestie, if all three should sit downe, though one be no better then another, yet one of them must needs sit downe the first, and another in the second place, and then the third: but yet we cannot say, that he which sate downe first is the chiefest. And so it is in the Trinity, though none be greater or aboue another; yet the Father is in the first place, not because he is before the Sonne, or the holy Ghost in dignity and honour, but because he is the fountaine of the deitie, the Sonne being from him, and the holy Ghost from them both.

Now let vs come to the title of the first person. The name Father in Scriptures, is ascribed either to God taken indefinitely, and so by consequent to all the three Persons in Trinity: or particularly to the first person alone. For the first, God is a Father properly and principally, according to the saying of Christ, Call no man father vpon earth, for there is but one your Father which is in heauen: that is, principally: whereas earthly parents, whom we are commanded to worship and honour, are but certaine images or resemblances of our heavenly Father, hauing this blessing, that they are fathers from him. And hereupon this title agrees to men, not simply, but so farre forth as God honoureth them with fatherhood in calling them to be fathers, whereas God himselfe receiues this honour from none. God is termed a father in respect both of nature and grace. He is a father in regard of nature, because hee created and gouerneth all things. In this regard he is called the (a) Father of spirits: and (b) Adam is called the Son of God. He is a father in respect of grace, because wee are regenerate by him, accepted to bee his sonnes by adoption through the merits of Christ. And in this respect the second person as well as the first is called a Father, and said to haue an off-spring 4 or seede and children. But when the name of Father is given to the first person, it is done vpon a speciall consideration, because he is a Father by nature to the second person, begetting him of his owne substance before all worlds. By this it appeares, that out of the title of the first person, we may fetch a description thereof on this manner. The Father is the first person in Trinitie, begetting the Son. Now to beget, is the personall propriety whereby hee is distinguished from the other two. If it be said, that creatures doe beget, and that therefore to beget is not proper to the Father: the answer is, that in this point there are many differences between God the Father & all creatures. First, the Father begets the Sonne before all eternitie: and therefore God the Father begetting, and the Sonne begotten are equal in time: whereas in earthly generation the father is before the son in time. Secondly, God the Father begets his Sonne by communicating to him his whole essence or Godhead, which can not be in earthly parents, vlesse they should be abolished and come to nothing: Whereas neuertheless, God the Father giuing his whole nature to his Sonne, retaines the same still, because it is infinite. Thirdly, the Father begets the Sonne in himselfe, and not forth of himselfe: but in earthly generation the Father begetting is forth of the child, and the child forth of the Father. And that must not trouble vs which heretikes alleadge against this doctrine, namely, that if the Father who is of one nature with the Sonne, did beget the Sonne, then hee did beget himselfe: for the Godhead of the Father doth not beget either the Godhead or the person of the Sonne: but the person of the Father begets the person of the Sonne, both which in one Godhead are really distinct.

Thus wee see what the Father is. Now to beleue in the Father, is to be perfwaded, that the first person in Trinitie, is the Father of Christ, and in him my Father particularly, and that for this cause I intend and desire for euer to put my trust in him.

The duties which we may learne hence are manifold. And here wee haue occasion offered, first of all to consider who is our father by nature, I shall say to corruption (saith Iob) thou art my father: and to the worme, thou art my mother: seeing God vouchsafeth this great prerogative to them that loue him, that he will be their father, therefore Iob in consideration hereof would haue euery man to haue recourse to his owne naturall condition, to see who is his father by nature. Iob saith, corruption is his father: but if we marke wel the condition of our nature, we shall further see euery man to be the childe of wrath, and that Satan is his father: for so long as a man walks in his sins (which euery man doth by nature) so long doth he shew himselfe to be the liuely child of the diuell. And thus Christ reasoneth against the Scribes and Pharisees Ye are of your father the diuell, & the lust of your father ye will do. And trace it is, that no child is so like his father that beget him, as euery man by nature is like the diuell: and the whole tenour and course of his naturall life without grace, is a liuely resemblance of the disposition of Satan.

Secondly, euery one that beleuees God to be a Father, and in Christ his Father, must as a good childe bee obedient to his fathers will. So Salomon saith, A wise sonne maketh a glad father. How? by doing his will: and therefore when one told our Saviour Christ that his mother and brethren stood without, desiring to speake with him, he said, Who seuer shall doe my Fathers will which is in heauen, the same is my brother, my sister, and mother: wherein we may note, that he that will haue God the Father to be his father, and Christ Iesus his brother, must doe the will of God the Father. And hence God saith, If I be a master, where is my feare? If I be a Father, where is my honour? Where is plainly taught this second duty; that if God be our Father, then as good children wee must shew obedience vnto him: but if we disobey him, then we must know, that that former saying of Christ will be verified vpon vs, that because men doe the lusts of the diuell, therefore they are the children of the diuell. But lest this fearefull sentence be verified of vs, it is the duty of euery man that maketh this confession, that hee beleuees God to be his Father, first, to labour to know Gods wills; and secondly, to performe continuall obedience vnto the same: like vnto a good childe, that would faine please his father, and therefore is alwayes ready to doe the best hee can. And without doubt, that man which vniuersally takes God for his Father, is then most grieued, when as by any sinne hee displeaseth him, and no other crosse or calamity is so grieuous vnto him. The greatest griefe that the prodigall sonne vpon his repentance had, was that he had offended his Father, by sinning against heauen, and against him: the same also must be our griefe: and all our care must be set on this, to consider how wee may be obedient children to this our louing Father.

Thirdly, that man that beleuees God to be his Father, must imitate and follow him: for it is the will of God that his children should be like vnto himselfe. Now wee follow God specially in two things. I. In doing good to them that persecute vs: so saith our Saviour Christ; Pray for them that hurt you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in heauen: for he maketh the Sonne to rise on the euill and on the good, and sendeth raine on the iust and vniust. II. Our heavenly Father is mercifull: for he is the father of the fatherlesse, and therefore hee that will bee a sonne of this Father, must bee mercifull to his poore brethren; as Iob faith of himselfe, I was the eyes to the blind, and I was the feete unto the lame, I was a father to the poore.

Fourthly, seeing we beleue God to be our Father, we are hereby taught to vse moderate care for the things of this life; for if a man know himselfe to be the child of God, then he also knowes, that God will prouide for him, as we know in a family the Father prouideth for all. Now God is a father, & his Church is this family: therefore if thou wilt be a member of Gods Church, and a child of God, thou must cast thy care on God, and follow the counsell of Christ: Be not too careful for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drinke. And marke his reason drawne from the point which we haue in hand: The fowles of the heauen (saith he) they neither sow, nor reape, nor carrie into barnes: and yet your heavenly father feedeth them: are ye not much better then they? But alas, the practise of the world is contrarie: for men haue no care for the knowledge of Gods word, nor the meanes of their saluation: all their minds are set on the things of this life, when as Christ faith: First seeke the kingdom of heauen, and the righteousnesse thereof, and all these things shall bee ministred vnto you. If you should see a young man prouide for himselfe, and no man else for him, wee should presently say, surely his father is dead: euen so, when a mans care is set wholly both day and night for the things of this life, it argues that God hath either cast him off, or else that hee takes him for no father of his.

Fifthly, if God be our father, then we must learne to beare any crosse patiently, that hee shall lay vpon vs, either in body or in minde, and alwaies looke for deliuerance from him: for whom the Lord loueth, them hee chastiseth: and if ye endure chastising (saith the Apostle) God offeth himselfe vnto you as vnto children: which may appeare more plainly by this comparison: If two children should fight, and a man coming by, should part them, and after beate the one, and let the other goe free: every man that seeth this will say, that that child which he beates is his owne sonne. Euen so, when God chastiseth vs, hee sheweth himselfe vnto vs a Father, if we submit our selues. Now if our earthly fathers corrected vs, and wee gave them reuerence, taking it patiently, should wee much rather bee in subiection to the Father of spirits, that we may liue? Therefore the conclusion is this, if we displease God, be ye sure, hee will correct vs; and when his hand is vpon vs, we must not murmur against him, but beare it with a milde spirit: and furthermore when we are vnder the crosse, we must alwaies looke for deliuerance from this Father only. If a sonne when he is beaten should flie to his Fathers enemies for helpe and counsell, it would argue that hee were but a gracelesse child. Sundrie and diuers calamities & crosses befall men in this life; which they cannot brooke: and therefore it is a common practise of many among vs in these daies, when Gods hand is vpon them, to goe for helpe to the diuell: they seeke for counsell at witches and Wisemen (as I haue said) but let them looke vnto it, for that is the right way to double their miserie, and to shew themselves lewd children.

Lastly, if wee confesse and beleue God to be the Father of Christ, and in him our Father also; then in regard of our conuersation, wee must not frame our selues like vnto the world: but the course of our liues must bee in righteousnesse and true holinesse. Paul exhorteth the Corinthians to separate themselves from Idolaters, alledging the place out of the old Testament, where the Lord biddeth the Israelites to come out from Idolaters, and to touch no vncleane thing: and the reason followeth out of Ieremie, that if they doe so, then God will bee their Father, and they shall be his children, euen his sonnes and daughters; which reason Paul vteth in the next chapter to this effect: considering wee haue these promises, that therefore wee should cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit, and grow vp vnto holines in the feare of the Lord. Where if we marke the place diligently, we shall find this lesson: That euery man who takes God for his Father, must not onely in this Sinne of Idolatrie, but in all other sinnes separate himselfe, that men by his godly life may know whose child he is. But some will say, this exhortation is needlesse amongst vs, for we haue no cause to separate our selues from others, because all amongst vs are Christians, all beleue in God, and are baptized, and hope to bee saved by Christ. Answer. In outward profession I confesse wee carrie the shew of Christians, but in deede and truth, by our liues and conuersations, very many among vs deny Christ: for in euery place the common practise is, to spend the time in drunkennesse and surfeiting, in chambering and wantonnesse; yea, great is the companie of those that make a trade of it: take this lewd conuersation from many men, and take away their liues. And on the Lords day it may bee seene both publicly and privately, in houses & in the open streetes, there is such reuells, as though there were no God to seare. In the sixe daies of the weeke, many men walke very painfully in their calling: but when the Lords day cometh, then euery man takes license to doe what hee will: and because of the Princes lawes, men will come formally to the Church for fashions sake: but in the meane time how many doe nothing else but soone, mocke, and deride, and as much as in them lieth, disgrace both the word and the ministers thereof; so that the common saying is this: oh hee is a precise fellow, he goes to heare Sermons, he is too holy for our companie. But it stands men in hand to take out a better lesson; which is, if we will haue God to be our Father, wee must shew our selues to be the children of God by repentance and newnesse of life: hee cannot bee but a gracelesse child, that will lead a rebellious life flat against his fathers mind. Let vs then, so behaue our selues, that we may honour our Father which is in heauen, and not dishonour him in our liues and callings: rather let vs separate our selues from the filthinesse of the flesh, loathing those things which our father loatheth, and flying from those things which our father abhorreth.

And thus much for the duties. Now follow the consolations which arise from this point. But first wee are to know what there are three sorts of men in the world. The first, are such as will neither heare nor obey the word of God. The second sort, are those which heare the word preached vnto them, but they will not obey: both the first sorts of men are not to looke for any comfort hence. Now there is a third sort of men, which as they heare Gods word: so they make conscience of obeying the same in their liues and callings: and these are they to whom the consolations that arise out of this place, do rightly belong, and must be applyed.

First therefore, seeing God the Father of Christ, and in him the father of all that obey and doe his will, is our father, here note the dignity and prerogative of all true beleeuers: for they are sonnes and daughters of God, as Iohn 1. So many as received him, to them he gave prerogative to be the sonnes of God: euen to them that beleeue in his name. This priuiledge will appeare the greater, if we consider our first estate: for as Abraham faith, We are but dust and asher, and in regard of the deprauiation of our natures, we are the children of the diuell: therefore of such rebels to bee made the sonnes of God, it is a wonderfull priuiledge and prerogative, and no digrite like vnto it. And to enlarge it further, he that is the Sonne of God, is the brother of Christ, and fellow-heire with him; and so heire appoynted to the kingdom of heauen: and in this respect, is not inferior to the very Angels. This must be laid vp carefully in the hearts of Gods people, to confirme them in their conuersation among the company of vngodly men in this world.

Secondly, if a man doe indeauour himselfe to walke according to Gods word, then the Lord of his mercy will beare with his wants: for as a father spareth his owne sonne, so will God spare them that feare him. Now a father commands his child to write, or to apply his booke: though all things herein be not done according to his minde, yet if he finde a readinesse with a good indeauour, he is content, and saits to praise his childs writing or learning. So God giueth his commaundement, and though his seruants faile in obedience; yet if the Lord see their hearty indeauour, and their vnfaigned willingness to obey his will, though with sundry wants, he hath made this promise, and will performe it, that as a father spareth his sonne, so will he spare them. If a child be sicke, will the father cast him off: nay, if through the grieuousnesse of his sickness hee cannot take the meate that is giuen him, or if he take it, and for faintnesse picke it vp againe, will the father of the child thrust him out of doores? no: but hee will rather pirtie him. And so when a man doth indeauour himselfe through the whole course of his life to keepe Gods commandments, God will not cast him away, though through weaknesse he faile in sundry things and displease God. This prerogative can none haue, but hee that is the child of God: as for others, when they sione, they doe nothing else but draw downe Gods iudgements vpon them, for their deeper condemnation.

Thirdly, hence we learne, that the child of God cannot wholly fall away from Gods fauour, I doe not say, that he cannot fall at all: for he may fall away in part, but hee cannot wholly. Indeede to oft as he finnes, hee deprives himselfe wholly of Gods fauour as much as in him lyeth: yet God for his part still keepeth the minde and purpose of a Father. Dauid loued his sonne Abishon wonderfully, but Abishon like a wicked sonne played a lewde pranke, and would haue thrust his father out of his kingdom: and Dauid although hee was sore offended with Abishon, and shewed tokens of his wrath, yet in heart hee loued him, and neuer purposed to cast him off. Hereupon when he went against him, he commanded the captaines to intreat the young man Abishon gently for his sake. And when he was hanged by the haire of the head in pursuing of his father, then Dauid wept and cryed, O my sonne Abishon, my sonne Abishon, would God I had dyed for thee, Abishon my sonne. And so it is with God our heauenly Father, when his children sinne against him, and thereby lose his loue and fauour, and fall from grace, hee forsakes them: but how farre? Surely he shewes signes of anger for their wickednesse, and yet indeede his loue remains towards them still: and this is a true conclusion. The grace of God in the adoption of the elect is vncchangeable, and he that is the child of God can neuer fall away wholly or finally. On the contrary, that is a bad and comfortlesse opinion of the Church of Rome; which holdeth, that a man may be iustificed before God, and yet afterward by a mortall sione, finally fall from grace and bee condemned.

Fourthly, the child of God that takes God the Father for his Father, may freely come into the presence of God, and haue liberty to pray vnto him. Wee know it is a great priuiledge to come into the chamber of presence before an earthly Prince: and few can alwaies haue this prerogative, though they bee great men: yet the Kings owne sonne may haue free entrance, and speake freely vnto the king himselfe, because he is his sonne. Now the children of God haue more prerogative then this: for they may come into the presence, not of an earthly king, but of Almighty God the King of kings: and as they are the fomes of God in Christ, so in him they may freely speake vnto God their father by prayer. And this ouerthrowes the doctrine of such as be of the Church of Rome, which teach and hold, that a man must come to speake to God by prayer through the intercession of Saints; for, say they, the presence of God is so glorious, that wee may not bee so bold, as of our selues to speake vnto him; but needs must haue the intercession of others.

5. Lastly, God will prouide for all his Church and children all things needfull both for their bodies and soules: so our Saviour Christ bids his disciples take no thought what they should eate, or what they should drinke, or wherewith they should be clothed, adding this reason: for your heavenly Father knoweth all your wants. And if we take thought, it must be moderate, and not distrustfull: it is a part of the fathers duty to prouide for his Family & children, and not the children for the father. Now shall an earthly father haue this care for his children: and shall not our heavenly Father much more prouide for those that hee loves him? Nay, marke further, in Gods church there be many hypocrites which receiue infinite benefits from God, by reason of his elect children with whom they liue: and wee shall see this to be true, that the wicked man hath euer fared better for the godly mans cause. Sodome and Gomorrah received many benefits by reason of righteous Lot: and when the Lord was purposed to destroy Sodome, hee was faine to pull Lot forth of the citie: for the text saith, the Angell of the Lord could not doe anything, till hee was come out of it. So also in Pauls dangerous voyage towards Rome, all the men in it fared better for Pauls companie: for the Lord told Paul by an Angell, that there should be no losse of any mans life, for the Lord had giuen to him all that sayled with him.

Gen. 19. 22. And vndoubtedly, if it were not for some few that feare God, he would powre downe his vengeance vpon many nations and kingdoms, there is such excess of wickednesse in all sorts. Again, if the Lord doe thus carefully prouide for his children all kind of benefits; What a wonderful wickednesse is this, for men to get their liuing by vngodly meanes; as viliy, carding, dicing and such like exercises? If a man were perwaded, that God were his Father, and would prouide sufficiently both for his body and soule: so that vsing lawfull meanes he should euer haue enough: out of all doubt he would neuer after the fashion of the world vie vnlawfull and prophane meanes to get a liuing. But this reprooeth, that howeuer much men say, God is their Father, yet in dede they deny him.

AR. 27. 24. And thus much of this title, Father, the first thing whereby the first person is described. Now followeth the second point, namely, his attribute of Omnipotence, in the word Almighty.

A. And whereas the Father is said to bee Almighty, it is not so to be vnderstood as though the Sonne were not almighty, or the holy Ghost not almighty; for euery property or attribute (save the personal properties) is common to all the three persons. For as God the Father doth impart his godhead vnto the Sonne, and to the holy Ghost, so doth hee communicate the properties of the godhead to them also.

God is omnipotent two waies: I. Because he is able to doe whatsoever he will. I. I. Because he is able to doe whatsoever he will doe. For the first, that God is able to doe whatsoever he will, Dauid saith, Our God is in heauen, and he doth what he will: for there is nothing that can hinder God; but as he willeth, so euery thing is done. Secondly, that God can doe more then he willeth to be done, it is plaine, where John Baptists saith, God is able of these stones to raise up children vnto Abraham: for though God can doe thus much, yet hee will not doe it. So likewise when Christ was betrayed, the Father could haue giuen him more then 12. legions of Angels to haue deliuered him out of their hands, but yet he would not: and the like may bee said of many other things. The Father is and was able to haue created another world, yea a thousand worlds, but he would not, nor will not. And likewise Christ being vpon the crosse, was able at their bidding to haue come downe, and saved himselfe from death, but he would not: and therefore this is true, the Lord can doe any thing that hee willeth to be done actually, yea and more then he will. But some will say, God can not doe some things which man can doe, as God cannot lie, nor denie himselfe, and therefore he is not omnipotent. Ans. Although some haue thought that God could doe euery thing, and he did them not, because he would not: yet we must know and beleue, that God can neither lie, nor denie himselfe: indeede man can doe both, but these and many other such things if God could doe them, he could not be God. God indeede can doe all things which shew forth his glory and maiestie: but such things as are against his nature he cannot doe: as for example: God cannot sinne, and therefore can not lie: and because he can not doe these things, for this very cause he is omnipotent: for these and such like are workes of impotence: which if God could doe, hee should euen by his owne word be indged impotent. Secondly, he cannot doe that which implies contradiction: as when a thing is, to make it at the same time to be, and not to be: as when the Sunne doth shine, to make it at the same instant to shine and not to shine. And therefore false is the doctrine of that Church, which in their Transubstantiation make the body of Christ, (whose essentiall propertie is to be only in one place at once) to be circumscribed, and not to be circumscribed: to be in one place, and not to be in one place.

And thus much for the meaning. Now follow the duties whereunto we are moued by this doctrine of Gods Omnipotence.

1. Pet. 5. 6. First, whereas God the Father is said to be Almighty, wee are taught true humiliation: Humble your selves vnder the mightie hand of God, saith Peter: where he giueth an exhortation to humilitie, and alleadgeth the cause, because God is Almighty. To make this more plaine. Euery one of vs was borne in sinne, and by nature we are most wretched in our selues: now what an one is God? Surely he is able to doe whatsoever he will, yea and more then he will, and is able to destroy such as rebell against him euery moment. Therefore our dutie is to cast downe our selues for our sins in his presence. This true humiliation was that which our Saviour Christ would haue brought the young man in the Gospel vnto. when hee bad him go sell all that he had and giue to the poore. Therefore whosoever thou art, take heede thou mult: for if thou ruine on thy wickednesse, and fil rebell against God, it is a thousand to one at length he will destroy thee. For hee is an Almighty God, and able to doe whatsoever he will: his hand is mightie, it beere not a man to strue with him: for he was neuer yet ouermastered, and for this cause we must needs cast downe our selues vnder his hand. It is a fearefull thing (saith the holy Ghost) to fall into the hands of the liuing God: therefore if wee would escape his heauy and terrible displeasure, the best way for vs is, to abase our selues, and be ashamed to follow our finnes. Christ biddeth vs not to feare him that is able to kill the bodie, and can go no further: but wee must feare him that is able to cast both body and soule into hell fire. Example of this wee haue in Dauid, who when he was persecuted by his owne sonne: Absolon, hee said vnto the Lord: If hee thus say, I haue no delight in thee, behold here I am, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eyes. But some will say, I will liue a little longer in my finnes, in lying, pride, Sabbath-breaking, in swearing, dicing, gaming, & wantonnes: for God is mercifull, and in my old age I will repent. Ans. Well; sooth not thy selfe: but marke, usually when God holds backe his hand for a season, hee doth as it were fetch a more mighty blow; for the greater confusion of a rebellious sinner; therefore humble, submit, and cast downe thy selfe before God, and doe not strue against him: his hand is mightie, and will ouerthrow thee. Though thou hadst all learning, wisdom, might, riches, &c. yet (as Christ saide to the young man) one thing is wanting, that thou shouldst be humbled; and vntill thou be humbled, nothing is to be looked for but Gods iudgements for sin.

Secondly, seeing God is Almighty, we must tremble and feare at all his iudgements, we must stand in awe, quake, and quier at them, as the poore child doth, when hee seeth his father come with the rod. Example of this wee haue often in Gods word, as when the sonnes

A. of Aaron offered strange fire before the Lord, hee sent fire from heauen, and burned them vp. And though Aaron was very sorry for his sonnes, yet when Moses told him, that the Lord would bee glorified in all that came neere him, then the text saith, Aaron held his peace. So also wee read that the Apostles reprooued Peter, for preaching vnto the Gentiles: but when Peter had expounded the things in order which hee had scene, then they held their peace and glorified God. As also Dauid saith: I held my tongue, O Lord; because thou didst it. Isaiah saith, In hope and silence is true fortitude. If a man be in trouble hee must hope for deliuerance, and be quiet and patient at Gods iudgements. But the practise of the world is flatter contrary: For men are so farre from trembling at them, that they vse to pray to God that plagues, curses, and vengeance may light vpon them, and vpon their seruants and children. Now the Lord being a mighty God often doth answerably bring his iudgements vpon them. Again, many carried away with impatience, with themselves hanged or drowned, which enuils they thinke shall neuer befall them: yet at the length God doth in his iustice bring such punishments vpon them according as they wished. And (which is more) in all ages there haue beene some which haue scorned and mocked at Gods iudgements. Hereof wee had not farre hence a most fearefull example. One being with his companion in a house drinking on the Lords day, when he was ready to depart thence, there was great lightning and thunder: whereupon his fellow requested him to stay, but the man mocking and teeling at the thunder and lightning, said (as report was) it was nothing but a knaues cooper knocking on his tubbes, come what would, hee would goe; and so went on his iourney: but before hee came halfe a mile from the house, the same hand of the Lord, which before hee had mocked, in a cracke of thunder strooke him about the girdlestead, that he fell downe stark dead. Which example is worthy of our remembrance, to put vs in minde of Gods heauy wrath against those which scorne his iudgements: for our duty is to tremble and feare: and it were greatly to be wished, that we could with open eye behold the terriblenesse and fearefulness of Gods iudgements: it would make a man to quake and to leaue off sinne. If a man passe by some high and dangerous place in the night when he cannot see, hee is not afraid; but if yee bring him backe againe in the day, and let him see what a steep & dangerous way hee came, he will not bee perwaded to passe the same way again for any thing: so is it in sinning: for men liuing in ignorance and blindness, practise any wickednesse, and doe not care for Gods iudgements: but when God of his goodnesse bringeth them backe, & openeth their eyes to see the downfall to the pit of hell, and the iudgements of God due to their finnes: then (they say) they will neuer sinne as they haue done, but become new men, and walke in the way to eternal life.

Thirdly, we are taught by the Apostle Paul, that if we be to doe any duty to our brethren, as to releeue them, we must doe it with chearefulness: for he labourerth to perswade the Corinthians to chearefull liberality, and the reason of his perswasion is, because God is able to make all grace to abound towards them. Where also this duty is taught vs, that seeing God is omnipotent, and therefore able to make vs abound, therefore we must giue chearefully to our poore brethren which want.

2. Cor. 9. 8.

Fourthly, whereas there are many in every place, which haue liued long in their finnes, euen from their cradle; some in wantonnesse, some in drunkennesse, some in swearing, some in idlenesse, and such like: out of this place to all such there is a good lesson, namely, that euerie one of them doe now become new men, & repent of all their sins, for all their life past. For mark what Paul saith of the Iewes which are cut off from Christ through vbelieue, and haue continued in hardnesse of heart, and desperate malice against him, almost 16. hundred yeares: If (saith hee) they abide not still in vbelieue, they may be grafted in their olue againe; and his reason is this, because God is able to graff them in againe. Euen so, though we haue liued many yeares in sin, (and sure it is a dangerous and fearefull case for a man to liue 20. 30. or 40. yeares vnder the power of the diuelli) yet we must know, that if we will now liue a new life, forsake all our finnes, and turne to God, we may bee receiued to grace, and be made a branch of the true olue, though wee haue borne the fruits of the wilde olue all our life long. But some will object, that they haue no hope of Gods fauour, because they haue bin so grieuous sinners, and continued in them so long. Ans. But know it, whoeuer thou art, God is able to graff thee in, and if thou repent, hee will receiue thee to his loue and fauour. This must be obserued of all, but especially of such as are old in yeares, and remaine ignorant without knowledge, they must turne to the Lord by repentance: otherwise, if they continue still profane and impenitent, they must know this, that their damnation comes post-hast to meete them, and they to it.

Rom. 11. 23.

And thus much for the duties. Now follow the consolations which Gods Church reape from this, that God the Father is Omnipotent. First, the wonderfull power of God serueth to strengthen vs in prayer vnto God: for he that will pray truly, must onely pray for those things for which hee hath warrant in Gods word: all our prayers must be made in faith, and for a man to pray in faith, it is hard: therefore a special means to strengthen vs herein is the mightie power of God. This was the ground and stay of the leper, whom our Sauour Christ censed, Lord (saith he) if thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And in the Lords prayer, when our Sauour Christ hath taught vs to make fixe petitions; in the end hee giueth vs a reason, or motiue to induce vs to stand vpon, and to wait for the benefits before craved, in these words: Thine is the kingdome, thine is the power, &c.

Secondly, hence wee learne this comfort, that all the gates of hell shall neuer be able to preuaile against the least member of Christ. I doe not say, they shall neuer be able to assault, or tempt them, for that may be: but they shall neuer overcome them. How (will some say) may we be resolute of this? Answer, By reason of Faith; for if a Christian man doe beleue that God the Father, and Christ his Sonne, is Almighty, no enemy shall euer be able to preuaile against him. So S. Iohn reasoneth: Little children, ye are of God, and haue overcome them, that is, all false teachers, because greater is he that is in you (Christ Iesus) his holy spirit, who is God, and therefore Almighty) than he that is in the world; that is, the spirit of Satan: therefore you need not to feare. So Dauid comparerth himselfe to a silly sheepe, and saith: I taught I should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, that is, as it were in the mouth of the Lyon, yet I would feare none euill: why so? because the Lord is with him: thy rod (saith he) and thy staffe comfort me.

1. Ioh. 4. 1.

Ps. 1. 3. 4.

Thus much for the benefits. Now whereas it is said the first Person is a Father, and also Almighty, ioine these two together, and hence will arise singular benefits and instructions. First, whereas we are taught to confesse, that the first Person is a Father Almighty, we, and euerie man must learne to haue experience in himselfe, of the mighty power of this Almighty Father. Why, will some say, that is nothing, for the diuell and all the damned soules feeble the power of the Almighty. True indeed they feeble the power of God, namely, as hee is an Almighty Iudge condemning them; but they feeble not the power of an Almighty Father: this is the point whereof wee must indeuour to haue experience in our selues. Paul prayeth, that the God of our Lord Iesus Christ the Father of glory, would giue vnto the Ephesians the spirit of wisdom, to see what is the exceeding greatness of his power in them which beleue, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ. Which place must be considered:

Eph. 1. 19.

for here the Apostle would haue vs haue such a special manifestation of Gods power in our selues, like to that which hee did once shew forth in Christ. But how did Christ see and finde the power of God as hee was man? Ans. Diuers waies: 1. on the crosse hee died the first death; which is the separation of bodie and soule: and hee suffered the sorrowes of the second death. For in his soule hee bare the whole wrath of God, and all the pangs of hel, and after was buried and laid in the graue, where death triumphed ouer him for the space of three daies. Now in this extremitie God did shew his power, in that hee raised Christ from death to life. And look as his power was manifested in Christ the head: so must it bee manifested in all his members: for euerie man hath his graue, which is naturall sin & corruption, which we draw from our first parents, & looke as a man lyes dead in the graue, and can mooue neither hand nor foote; so euerie man by nature lyes dead in sin. Now as God did shew his power in raising Christ fro death: so euerie one must labour to haue this knowledge & experience in himselfe of the mighty power of God, in raising him from the graue of sinne to newnesse of life. For thus Paul makes a special request, that hee might know Christ, and the vertue of his resurrection, that is, that hee might feelee in himselfe that power whereby Christ was raised from death to life, to raise him also from the bondage of his finnes to a newlife more and more. Furthermore, when Christ was vpon the crosse, and all the gates of hel were open against him, then did hee vanquish Satan, hee bruised the Serpents head; and as Paul saith, Col. 2. 15. He spoiled principalities and powers; and made a shew of them openly, and hath triumphed ouer them on the crosse: hee overcame the diuell and all his angels by the power of his Almighty Father, and by his owne power as he is God. And euen so must Christian men labour to finde the same power in themselves of this Almighty Father by which Christ did triumph ouer Satan: that by it they may tread him vnder their feete, which men can neuer doe by any power in themselves. Againe, Christ prayeth that that cup might passe from him: and yet he saith, Luk. 22. 42. Not my will, but thy will be fulfilled. For it was necessary that Christ should suffer. And this request was heard, not because hee was freed fro death, but because God his Father Almighty gaue him power and strength in his mightie to beare the brunt of his indignation. Now look as this power was effectual in Christ Iesus the head, to make him able and sufficient to beare the pangs of hell: so the same power of God, is in some measure effectual in all the members of Christ, to make them both patient, and of sufficient strength to beare any affliction; as Saint Paul saith, Colossians 1. 11. Being strengthened with all might through his glorious power, vnto all patience, and long-suffering, with ioyfullnesse. And this is a notable point which euerie one ought to learne: that whereas they confesse God to bee their Almighty Father, they should herewithall labour to feelee and haue experience in themselves, that hee is Almighty in the beginning and continuing of grace vnto them, and in giuing them power and patience to suffer afflictions. Further, Christ Iesus, when the work of our redemption was accomplished, was lifted vp into heauen, and set at the right hand of God in heavenly places: farre above all principalities and powers, &c. euen by the power of his Father: well, as this power was made manifest in the head; so must it be in the members thereof. Euerie child of God shall hereafter see and feelee in himselfe

Phil. 3. 10.

Eph. 1. 20, 21.

the same power to translate him from this vale of misery in this life, to the kingdome of heauen. Wherefore to conclude, we haue great cause to bee thankfull and to praise God for this priuiledge, that he shewes his power in his children in regenerating them, in making them dy vnto sin, & to stand against the gates of hell, and to suffer afflictions patiently: as also that hee translateth them from death to life. And euerie one should shew his thankfulness, in labouring to haue experience of this power in himselfe, as Paul exhorteth vs in his Epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians: yea, reade all his Epistles, and we shall finde he mentioneth no point so often as this, namely, the mighty power of God, manifested first in Christ, and secondly in his members: & he accounts all things: loffe, that he might know Christ, & the vertue of his resurrection. This point is the rather to be marked, because this power in the matter of grace is not to be seene with eye; and few there be in respect that haue felt the vertue thereof in themselves: for the diuell doth mightily shew his contrary power in the greatest part of the world, in carrying them to sin and wickednes.

Phil. 3. 10.

Secondly, hence we learne, that which Paul teacheth, namely, to know that all things work together for the best vnto them that loue God. God is Almighty, & therefore able to do whatsoever hee wilthe is also a Father, and therefore is willing to do that which is for our good. But some will say, we are subiect to many crosses, yea to sin: what? can our finnes turne to our good? Ans. If God Almighty be thy Father, he will turne thine afflictions, yea thy finnes which by nature are euill, beyond all expectation vnto thy saluation. And thus much God will doe to all such as bee obedient vnto him; yet no man must hereupon presume to sinne.

Rom. 8. 18.

Thirdly, whereas we beleuee that God is a mighty Father, it serues to confirme Gods children in the promises of mercy reuealed in his word. The chiefest whereof is, that if men will turne from their finnes, and beleuee in Christ, they shall not perish, but haue life euertlasting. I know some men will make it an easie thing to beleue, especially those which neuer knew what faith meant. But such persons need no meanes of confirmation of Faith: therefore let all those which haue tasted of the hardnes of attaining vnto it, learne how to establish their waivering hearts in the promise of God, by the consideration of these two points: God is a Father, & therefore he is willing he is Almighty, and therefore he is able to performe his promise. He that will be resolute of Gods promises, must haue both these settled in his heart, & build on them as on two foundations.

It followeth, Creator of Heauen and Earth. Wee haue spoken of the title of the first person, and of his attributes: now we come to speake of his office, namely, the Creation: but before we come to it, we are to answer a certie obiection which may be made. At the first it may seeme strange to some, that the work of

N Creation

Creation is ascribed to the first person in Trinity the Father: whereas in the Scripture it is common to them all three equally. And first, that the Father is Creator, it was neuer doubted; as for the second person the Sonne, that he is Creator, it is evident: All things are made by it, that is, by the Sonne, who is the substantiall word of the Father, & without it was made nothing that was made. And againe it is said, that God by his Son made the world. As for the Holy Ghost, the worke of creation is also ascribed vnto him: and therefore Moses saith, The spirit moued vpon the waters: and Iob saith, His spirit hath garnished the heauens. How then is this peculiar to the Father, being common to all the three persons in Trinity? I answer, The actions of God are two-fold: either inward, or outward. The inward actions are those, which one person doth exercise toward another: as the Father doth beget the Sonne, and this is an inward action peculiar to the Father: and all inward actions are proper to the persons from whom they are. So the Son doth receive the Godhead by communication from the Father: and the holy Ghost from them both: & these are inward actions peculiar to these persons. So likewise, for the Father to send his Son, it is an inward action proper to the Father, and cannot be communicated to the holy Ghost: and the Sonne to be sent by the Father only, is a thing proper to the Sonne, and not common to the Father, or to the holy Ghost. Now outward actions, are the actions of the persons in the Trinity to the creatures, as the worke of Creation, the work of predestination, and of redemption. These and all such actions are common to all the three persons: the Father createth, the Son createth, and the holy Ghost createth: and so we may say of the workes of government, and of redemption, and of all outward actions of the persons to the creatures. But some againe may say, how then can the work of creation, being an outward action of God to the creature, be peculiar to the first person the Father? I answer, The worke of creation is not so proper to the first person, as that it cannot also be common to the rest: for at the three persons joyntly created all things of nothing; onely they are distinguished in the manner of creating. For the Father is the cause that: beginneth the worke, the Sonne puts it in execution, the holy Ghost is the finisher of it. And againe, the Father createth by the (a) Son, and by the holy Ghost: the Sonne createth by the holy Ghost & from the Father: the holy Ghost createth not by the Father nor by the Sonne: but from the Father and the Sonne. And this is the reason why the work of creation is ascribed here vnto the Father, because he alone createth after a peculiar manner, namely, by the Sonne and by the holy Ghost: but the Sonne & the holy Ghost create not by the Father, but from him.

Thus hauing answered the obiection, wee come to speake of the Creation it selfe. In

A handling whereof, we must withall treat of the Counsell of God, as being the cause thereof, and of the Government of the creatures, as being a worke of God whereby hee continues the creation. And the order which I will obserue, is first to speake of the Counsell of God, and secondly of the Execution of his Counsell, which hath two speciall branches, the first the Creation, the second the preservation or government of things created.

The Counsell of God, is his eternall & vntouchable decree, whereby hee hath ordained all things either past, present, or to come, for his owne glory. First I call it a decree, because God hath in it set downe with himselfe as appointed soveraigne Lord, what shall be, what shall not be. I adde further, that all things whatsoever, come vnder the compasse of this decree, as Paul saith, He worketh all things according to the counsell of his will. And our Saviour Christ saith, that a sparrow cannot fall on the ground without the heavenly Father: yea further, he tells his disciples, that the very haire of their heads are numbered, meaning that they are knowne and set downe in the counsell of God. And considering that God is King ouer heauen and earth; and that most wise, yea wife-dome it selfe and most mightie, yea might and power it selfe: it must needs be that hee hath determined how all things shall come to passe in his kingdom, with all their circumstances, time, place, causes, &c. in such particular manner, that the very least thing may bee, is not left vnappointed and vndisposed.

The counsell of God hath two properties, eternitie and vntouchableness. It is eternall, because it was set downe by God from euertasting before all times, as Paul saith: God hath chosen the Ephesians to saluation before all worlds. And he saith of himselfe, that hee was called according to the purpose of God, which was before all worlds. Againe, the same counsell once set downe, is vntouchable. God saith, I am Iehouah, and I change not. With God (saith S. Iames) there is no variableness, nor shadow of change. Now such as Gods, such is his decree or counsell: And being vntouchable, his counsels also are vntouchable.

D Gods counsell hath two parts: his foreknowledge, and his will or pleasure. His foreknowledge; whereby he doth foresee all things which were to come. His will, whereby in general manner he wills & ordaines whatsoever is to come to passe; and therefore such things as God altogether nillth, can not come to passe. Now these two parts of the counsell of God must bee ioynted together, and not seuered. Will without knowledge is impotent, and foreknowledge without will, is idle. And therefore such as hold that God doth barely foresee sundry things to come, no manner of way either willing or decreeing the issue & cause of them, do bring in little better then Atheisme. For if wee say that any thing comes to passe either against Gods will, or God not knowing of it, or not regarding it, wee shall make him either impotent or carelesse, and raise the very foundation of Gods providence.

And this decree of God must be conceived of vs, as the most generall cause of all things subsisting: being first in order, hauing all other causes vnder it, and most principally, ouerruling all, ouer-ruled by none.

Thus wee see what is to bee held touching Gods counsell: now for the better clearing of the truth, three obiections of some difficultie are to be answered. First may some man say, if God decree & ordaine all things whatsoever, then he decreeth & ordaineth sin: but God decrees not sin: in as much as it is against his will: and therefore he decrees not all things.

Answer. We vse not to say that God doth simply will or decree sinne, but onely in part, adding withall these caues: 1. That God willeth and decreeth sinne, not properly as it is sin, but as it hath in it sundry regards and respects of goodnesse, so farre forth as it is a punishment, or chastisement, or trial, or action, or (a) hath an existence in nature. 2. God can so vse euill instruments, that the worke done by them being a sinne, shall neuertheless in him bee a good worke: because hee knowes how to vse euill instruments well. If it be further alledged, that God willeth no wickednesse. Psal. 5. 5. we must know, that Gods will is two-fold, generall, and speciall. General, whereby God willeth and decreeth that a thing that be: and by this kind of will hee may be said to will sinne: and that without sinne. For though he decree it thus, yet doth he not in still wickednes into the heart of any sinner, & his decree is onely for a most excellent end. For in regard of God which decreeth it, it is good that there should be euill. To this purpose Augustine saith excellently, By an vnspicable manner it comes to passe, that that which is against Gods Will, is not without his will. Now the speciall will of God is that, whereby hee willeth any thing in such manner, that hee approoueth it, and delighteth in it. And thus indeed we can not say without blasphemy, that God willeth sinne. Thus then wee see in what manner, and how far forth God may be said to decree sinne, that is, to will and appoint the permission of it.

Againc, it may be obiected thus: If all things be determined by the vntouchable decree of God, then all things come to passe by an vntouchable necessitie: and men in their actions haue no free will at all, nor liberty in doing any thing. Answer. This must be learned as a certain rule, that the necessary decree of God, doth not abolish the nature of the second causes, and impose necessity vpon the will of man, but only order & incline it without any constraint, to one part. As for example: When a people is gathered together to heare Gods word, there is none of them but they know that they come thither by Gods providence, (and in this respect necessarily) yet before

A they come, they had all freedome and libertie in themselves to come or not to come: and Gods eternall counsell did not hinder the libertie of our wills, in coming or not coming, nor take away the same: but onely incline and turne them to the choise of one part. Another example hereof wee may haue in our Saviour Christ, whose state & conditio of body, if we regard, he might haue lined longer: yet by the eternall counsell of God hee must die at that place, at that time, at that houre, where & when he died. Wherby we may see, that Gods counsell doth not hinder the will of man; but only order and dispose it. Which answer being well marked, we shall see these two will stand together: the necessary & vntouchable counsell of God, and the free will of man: And againe, that the same action may be both necessary & contingent: necessary, in regard of the highest cause, the counsell of God: not necessary, but contingent, in respect of the second causes, as among the rest, the will of man.

Thirdly, some will yet obiect against this doctrine, that if all things come to passe according to Gods vntouchable decree, the what needs the vsing of any means? what needs the preaching of the word? and receiuing of the Sacraments? what needs any lawes, Princes, Magistrates, or government? what needs walking in mens ordinary callings: all is to no end; for let me play, or worke, sleep, or wake: let the do what they will: all is one: for Gods eternall counsell must needs come to passe. Therefore it may seeme in vaine for men to busie themselves about such things. Answer. But wee must know, that as God hath appointed all things to come to passe in his eternall and vntouchable counsell, so in the same decree, he hath together set downe the means & wayes whereby he will haue the same things brought to passe: for these two must neuer be seuered, the thing to be done, and the means whereby it is done. We may read in the Acts in Pauls dangerous voyage towards Rome, an Angell of the Lord told Paul, that God had giuen him all that failed with him in the ship: now the soldiers & mariners hearing this, might reason thus with themselves: Seeing God hath decreed to saue vs all, we may do what we will, there is no danger, for we shall all come to land alive: but mark what Paul saith, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be safe: where we see, that as it was the eternall counsell of God to saue Paul, and all that were with him; so he decreed to saue all by this particular meanes: of their abode in the shippe. King Ezechias was restored to his health, and receiued from God a promise that he should haue 15. yeares added to his dayes, and the promise was confirmed by a signe: now what doth hee say? call of all meanes? no: but as he was preferred, so he applyeth a bunch of dry figs to his fore, and greiue still his ordinary dye. Therefore it is foolish ignorance & madnesse in men, to reason so against Gods decree; God in his vntouchable counsell hath decreed and set downe all things how they shall be: therefore I will vse no meanes, but lue as I list: nay rather wee must say the contrarie; because God hath decreed this thing or that to be done: therefore I will vse the meanes which God hath appointed to bring the same to passe.

Now follows the Creation, which is nothing els but a work of the blessed Trinity, forming and framing his creatures which were not before, and that of nothing. The points to be knowne concerning the creation are many. The first, is the thing by which God did begin and finish the creation. And we must vnderstand that at the first God made all things without any instrument or meanes, & not as men doe which bring to passe their busines by seruants and helpees, but onely by his word & commandement; as the Psalmist saith, He commanded, and all things were made. In the beginning God said, Let there be light, and there was light: and by the same meanes was the creation of euery creature following. The very power of the word and commandement of God was such, as by it that thing was made & had a being, which before was not. It may be demanded, what word this was by which God is said to make all things. Ans. The word of God in Scripture is taken three waies: for the substantiall word, for the sounding or written word, for the operative or powerful word. The substantiall word is the second person begotten of the substance of the Father. Now howsoever it be true, that God the Father did create all things by his word, that is, by his Sonne: yet doth it not seeme to be true that by these words God said, Let there be, this or that the Sonne is meant. For that word which God gaue out in the creation was in time, whereas the Sonne is the word of the Father before all times: and againe, it is a word common to the three persons equally, whereas the Sonne is the word of the Father onely. Furthermore, it is not like that it was any sounding word standing of letters & syllables, and vttered to the creatures after the vsuall manner of men, that was the cause of them: it remains therefore that all things were made by the operative word, which is nothing but the pleasure, will, and appointment of God, & is more powerfull to bring a thing to passe, then all the meanes in the world beside. For Gods willing of any thing, is his effecting and doing of it. And this is proued by Dauid when hee saith, Hee spake the word, and they were made: hee commanded, & they were created. Hence we must take out a speciall lesson, needfull to be learned of euery man. Looke what power God vsed and shewed in making the creatures when they were not, the same power he doth can and will shew forth in re-creating and re-deeming sinfull men by the precious blood of Christ. By his word hee created mans heart when it was not; and he can and will as easily create in vs all new hearts specially whe we vse the good meanes appointed for that end. As, when Christ said to dead Lazarus, Lazarus, come forth, hee arose & came forth of his graue, though bound hand and foot: so when the Lord speakes to our dead heart by his word and spirit, wee shall rise forth of the graues of our finnes and corruptions. In the creation of the great world, God said, Let there be light, and presently darkenesse gaue place: and the same he can doe to the litle world, that is, to man. We are by nature darkened, and let God but speake to our blind vnderstandings, our ignorance shall depart, and we shall be enlightened with the knowledge of the true God & of his will: as Paul saith, God has commanded the light to shine out of darkenesse, it is he which hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glorie of God in the face of Iesus Christ.

Secondly, God made all creatures, without motion, labour, or defatigation: for his very bidding of the worke to be done, was the doing of it. And this thing no creature can doe, but God onely, though vnto Adam labour was with out paine before the fall.

Thirdly, the matter and the first beginning of all creatures was nothing, that is, all things were made, whe as there was nothing wherof they might be made, as Paul saith, God calleth those things which be not, as though they were. And indeede in the first creation, all things must be made either of the essence of God, or of nothing: but a creature cannot be made of the essence of God, for it hath no parts, it is not diuisible: and therefore God made all things that were made out of himselfe or his own essence: the conclusion then is, that the framing of the creatures in the beginning, was not of any matter, but of nothing, because before the creation, out of God there was nothing. This must teach vs to humble our selves. Many there be that stand vpon their ancestors: but let them here looke whence they came first, namely, as Abraham saith of himselfe, of dust and ashes. And what was this dust & ashes made of? surely of nothing: wherefore euery mans first beginning is of nothing. Well then, such men, as are caried away with their pedigree and descent, if they looke well vnto it, they shall find smal cause to boast or bragge: And this consideration of our first beginning, must moue vs to true humiliation in our selves.

Fourthly, God in framing his creatures in the beginning made them good; yea very good. Now the goodnes of the creature is nothing else, but the perfect estate of the creature, whereby it was conformable to the will & minde of the Creator allowing and approving of it, when he had made it: for a creature is not first good, and then approved of God: but because it is approved of God, thereof it is good. But wherein, will some say, stands this goodnes of the creature? I answer, in three things. 1. in the comeliness, beautie and glorie of euery worke in his kind both in forme and constitution of the matter. 1. In the excellencie of the vertue which God hath giuen to it: for as he hath appointed euery creature for some especiall end, so hee hath fitted and furnished it with sufficient power & equiptment for the accomplishing of the same end. 2. In the exceeding benefit and profitableness that came by them to man: But since the fall of man, this goodnesse of the creature is partly corrupted, and partly diminished. Therefore when we see any want, defect, or deformity in any of them, we must haue recourse backe againe to the apostacie of our first parents, and remember our fall in this, & say with a sorrowfull heart, this comes to passe by reason of mans most wretched sin, which hath defiled heauen & earth, & drawne a curse notably vpon himselfe, but vpon the rest of the creatures for his sake, whereby their goodnes is much decayed.

Firstly, the end of creation, is the glory of God, as Salomon saith, God made all thing for his owne sake, yee runne & wiske for the day of exile. And God propounds this principall end to himselfe, not as though he wanted glory, and would purchase it vnto himselfe by the creation; for he is most glorious in himselfe, and his honour and praise being infinite, can neither be increased nor decreased: but rather that he might communicate, and make manifest his glory to his creatures, and giue them occasion to magnifie the same. For the reasonable creatures of God, beholding his glory in the creation, are moued to testifie and declare the fame among men.

The sixth shall be touching the time of the beginning of the world, which is between fise thousand and fixe thousand yeares a goe. For Moses hath set downe exactly the computation of time from the making of the world to his owne daies: and the Prophets after him haue with diligence set down the continuance of the same to the very birth of Christ. But for the exact account of yeares Chronologers are not all of one minde. Some say there bee 3939. from the creation to Christs birth, as Bruilart: some 3952. as Hierome and Bede: some 3960. as Linher and Is. Lucidus: some 3963. as Melton in his Chronicle, and Funtius: some 3970. as Bullinger and Tremolin: some towards 4000. as Buringur. Now from the birth of Christ to this day are 1592. yeeres, and adding these together, the whole time amounteth. And God would haue the verie time of the beginning of the world to be reuealed: First, that it might be knowne to the Church, when the covenant of grace was first giuen to God to man, & whe it was afterward renewed, and how Christ came in the fleshes of time, Gal. 4. 4. Secondly, that we might know that the world was not made for the eternall and euer-liuing God, but for man. Thirdly, that we might learne not to set our hearts on the world, and on the things therein, which haue beginning and end, but seeke for things eternal in heauen. And before the time which I haue named began, there was nothing beside God: the world it selfe, and all thinge were created. Some men vie to object and say, what did God all this while before the world was? how did he employ himselfe to what, was he idle? Ans. The Iewes to this badde question make as badde an answer: for they say hee was continually occupied in making many litle worlds, which he continually destroyed as he made them: because none pleased him till he made this: But we must rather say, that some things are created which God did then, as that he decreed what should come to passe when the world was: & that when the blessed persons in Telsny did see eternall delight each in other. If any man will needs know more, let him hear what Moses saith, Seer things belong to the Lord our God, but things revealed, to vs and our children for euer: and let them marke what one eluding the question, answered: namely, that God was making hell fire to burne all such curious persons as will needs know more of God then hee hath reuealed to them: for where God hath not a mouth to speake, there we must not haue an eare to heare: therefore our duty is, to let such curious questions passe.

Seauently, some may aske in what space of time did God make the world? I answer, God could haue made the world, and all things, in one moment: but hee began and finished the whole worke in fixe distinct daies. In the first day he made the matter of all things and the light: in the second the heauens: in the third day hee brought the sea into his compass, and made the dry land appeare, and caused it to bring forth herbs, plants, and trees: in the fourth day hee made the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres in heauen: in the fifth day he made the fishes of the sea, the fowles of the heauen, and euery creeping thing: in the sixth day he made the beasts of the field, and all cattell, and in the end of the sixth day hee made man. Thus in fixe distinct spaces of time, the Lord did make all things: and that especially for three causes. 1. To teach men that they ought to haue a distinct and serious consideration of euery creature: for if God had made the world in a moment, some might haue said, this work is so mytical, that no man can speak of it. But for the preuening of this caule, it was his pleasure to make the world and all things therein in fixe daies: and the seauenth day hee commanded it to be sanctified by men, that they might distinctly & seriously meditate vpon euery daies worke of the Creation. 2. God made the world, & euery thing therein in fixe distinct daies, to teach vs, what wonderful power & liberty he had ouer all his creatures: for he made the light when there was neither Sun nor Moone, nor Stars; to shew, that in giuing light to the world, he is not bound to the Sun, to any creature, or to any means: for the light was made the first day: but the Sunne, the Moone, and the Stars were not created before the fourth day. Againe, trees and plants were created the third day: but yet, the Sunne, Moone, and the Snares, and raine, which nourish & make hearbs, trees, and plants to grow, were not created till after the third day: which shewes plainly, that God can make trees, plants, and hearbs to grow without the means of raine, and without the vertue and operation of the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres. II. He made the world in fixe distinct daies, and framed all things in this order, to teach vs his wonderfull providence over all his creatures: for before man was created hee provided for him a dwelling place, and all things necessarie for his perpetual preservation, & perfect happiness and felicity. So also he created beasts & cattell before he had made hearbs, plants, and grasse, and all meanes whereby they are preferred. And if God had this care over man when as yet he was not: much more will God have care over him now when he is, and hath a being in nature.

Duties.
And thus much concerning the points of doctrine touching the Creation. The duties follow. And first, by the worke of creation we may discern the true Lebanah from all false gods and idols in the world. This Isaiah maketh plain, bringing in the Lord reasoning thus, I am God, and there is none other God beside me. How is that proved? thus: I form the light, and create darkness, I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things. If a man aske thee how thou knowest the true God from all false gods: thou must answer, by the worke of creation: for he alone is the maker of heaven and earth, and all things in them. This property can not agree to any creature, to any man, Saint or Angell may, not to all men and all Angells: they cannot give being to a creature which before was nothing.

Secondly, whereas God the Father is creator of all things, and hath given vnto man reason, understanding, and ability more then to other creatures, we are taught to consider and meditate of the worke of Gods Creation. This the wise man teacheth vs, saying, Consider the worke of God. And indeed it is a special duty of every man which professeth himselfe to be a member of Gods Church, as he acknowledgeth God to be the Creator, so to looke vpon his workmanship, and view and consider all creatures. A skillfull workman can have no greater disgrace, then when he hath done some famous thing, to have his friend passe by his worke, and not so much as looke vpon it. If it be demanded for what end we must looke vpon the worke of Gods creation: I answer, that in it we may see and discern Gods power, wisdom, love, mercy, and providence, and all his attributes, and in all things his glorie. This is a most necessary duty to be learned of every man: we thinke nothing too much or too good to bestow on vaine shewes and plaies, idle sports and pastimes, which are the vanities of men, and we do most willingly behold them in the meane season vnto neglecting and contemning the glorious worke of Gods creation. Wgill, the Lord hath appointed his Sabbath to be sanctified, not only by the public ministry of the word, and by private prayer, but also by a special consideration and meditation of Gods creatures; and therefore the duty of every man is this, diligently and seriously to view and consider the creatures of God; and thereby take occasion to glorifie his name; by ascribing vnto him, the wisdom, glorie, power, and omnipotence that is due vnto him, & appears in the same.

Thirdly, wee must give God glorie in all his creatures, because hee is the creator of them all. So in the Revelation the four and twenty Elders fall downe before him, and say Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: giving this reason, for thou hast created all things, and for thy will, for they were and have bene created. Reade the Psalmes, 147. and 148. both which tend to this effect, that God must be praised: because hee is the Creator of all things; to whom all glory is due. We know, that when men behold any curious worke of a cunning and skillfull craftsman, straightway they will leave the worke, and inquire after him that made it, that they may praise his skill. The same is our duty in this case, when we come abroad, and behold every where in all the creatures the admirable and vnspokeable wisdom, goodness, and power of God, then we must make hast from the creature, and go forward to the Creator, to praise and glorifie him: and herein must we shew our selues to differ from brute beasts, in that by the vfe and view of Gods creatures, we doe returne due glory, praise, and honour vnto the Creator.

Our fourth duty is set downe by the Prophet Amos, who mouing the people to meet God by repentance, addeth a reason taken from the Creation. He that formeth the mountains and createth the winds, which declareth vnto man what is his thought, which maketh the morning darkness, &c. The Lord God of hosts is his name. The meaning of the Prophet is this: God is a terrible iudge, and we are as traitors and rebels against him: therefore the best way that we can take, is this: he is coming to iudgement, let vs therefore meete him, fall downe before him, & humble our selues vnder his mighty hand. And the holy Ghost by the Prophet would moue the people to meet God by serious repentance, by a reason framed thus: If God who is their Iudge, bee able to create the winds, and to forme the mountains, and to make the morning darkness: then hee is also able to make an eternall iudgement for their confusion. And therefore all such as bee impenitent sinners, let them prepare themselves to turne vnto him: and surely if men had grace to lay this to their hearts, they would not live so long in their sins without repentance as they doe: nay rather they would prepare themselves themselves to meete him in the way before he come to iudgement, because hee is a Creator, & therefore able to bring infinite punishments vpon them at his pleasure, and to bring them to nothing, as he made them of nothing. And let them know it, whoeuer they be that goe forward in their finnes, that God the Creator whensoever hee will, can open hell to deuoure them: and that hee can shew himselfe as mightie in his iudgements to mans destruction, as hee was mightie in the beginning in giuing vs being when we were nothing. Wherefore notable is the practise of David, who inures himselfe to the feare of God by the consideration of his creation, saying, I am fearfully, and wonderfully made, &c.

Lastly, those that have bene impenitent sinners through all their life past, must not onely learne to repent for their finnes; but also indeavour to performe obedience vnto Gods word. God is a Creator, and the thing created should in all respects be conformable to his will: for David saith, Thine hands haue fashioned mee, and framed mee: give me understanding therefore that I may learne thy commandments. And good reason: for there is no man of any trade, but he would faine haue all that he maketh and deuise, to be vfed: but yet so as the vfe thereof must be conformable to the will of the maker. For this cause Moses that faithful seruant of God saith, that the people of Israel dealt wrongfully with the Lord: why? for he hath created them, and proportioned them: be it their father and he brought them: yet they haue dishonoured him by corrupting themselves towards him by their vice.

All creatures in heaven and earth doe the will of the Creator, except man, and the diuel and his angels: for the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres, they keep that course which God hath appointed them: but man though hee bee bound to doe the will of God, because God is his Creator, yet hee rebels against him. The potter, if in tempering his clay, hee cannot make and frame it according to his minde, at length hee will dash it in peeces: so God, hee createth man, not that he should doe his own will, but Gods will: and therefore the Lord in his wrath will confound him eternally, whoeuer he be that followeth the lusts of his own wicked heart, and will not be brought to be conformable to Gods will, but goes on in his rebellion without stay. For this cause it stands every man in hand to yeild himselfe playable to Gods will, and to endeavour to obey it by keeping a good conscience before God and all men, and by walking faithfully in his calling, left the end be confusion. If a man haue a trade and other men come into his shopp, and vfe such tooles and instruments as bee there, to wrong ends, hee will in no wise brooke it, but take the abuse in great displeasure: now the world is as it were an opened shop, in which God hath set forth vnto his glory and maiesty, and the creatures of all kinds to be intruments appointed for excellent vses, and specially man for the accomplishment of his will. And therefore when he rebels against the will of God, and by sin finets the creatures to wrong ends, hee cannot but most grievously offend God.

And thus much of the duties. Now in the third place follow the consolations vnto Gods Church and people. First, as Saint Peter saith, God is a Creator, yea a faithful Creator. The properties of a faithful creatur are two: I. Hee will preferre his creature; no man is so tender over any worke as hee that made it, for hee cannot abide to see it any way abused. God therefore being a faithful creatur, tenderly loues all his creatures. So Iohann saith with God, that hee will not cast him off, because hee is the worke of his hands. II. God will beare with his creature, to see whether it will be brought to any good end and vfe, before hee will destroy it. And to vfe the former comparison: the potter will turne and worke the clay every way to make a vessel vnto his mind; but if it frame no way, then will hee cast it away, & dash it againe the wal. And so God who created man, will preferre him, and vseth all meanes to make him conformable to his will, before hee cast him off. The Lord did long frise with men in the old world, to turne them from their wickednesse: but when nothing would serue them, it is said: It repented the Lord that hee had made man on the earth. And in like manner, if wee which are the creatures of God, shall rebell against this our Creator: it may bee, hee will beare with vs for a time: but if wee continue therein, and doe not turne to him by repentance, hee will bring vpon vs a final destruction both in body and soule. Yet I say, before hee doe this, his manner is to try all meanes to preferre vs, and turne vs vnto him: and afterward if nothing will serue, then will hee shew forth his power in mens confusion: and therefore it stands vs in hand to looke vnto it betime.

Secondly, looke what power the Lord did manifest in the creation of all things, the same power hee both can and will make manifest in the redemption of mankind. In the beginning God made all things by his word; and so likewise hee is able still to make by the power of his word, of a wicked man that is dead in sin, a true and liuely member of Christ: which the Prophet Isaiah signifieth when hee saith, The Lord that created the heauens, and spread them abroad, hee that stretcheth forth the earth, and the bounds thereof, &c. The Lord haue created thee in righteousness. This must not encourage euill men in their wickednesse, but it serueth to comfort the people of God, considering that the same God which once created them, is also able to faue them and will shew himselfe as mightie in their redemption, as hee was in their creation of nothing.

And thus much of the creation in generall. Now it followeth, that we come to the handling of the parts thereof. For it is not said barely that God is a Creator; but particularly that hee is a Creator of heauen and earth: of both which we will speake in order: and first of the creation of heauen.

Heauen in Gods word signifieth all that is aboue the earth: for the aire wherein we breathe is called heauen. And according to this acceptation of the word, there are three heauens, as Paul saith, He was taken up into the third heauen.

The first of these heauens is that space, which is from the earth upward vnto the firmament, where the starres are. Thus the birds which flye in the ayre betwene the earth and the starres, are called the fowles of heauen: and when God sent the flood to drowne the old world,

Moses saith, the windows of heauen were opened: meaning, that God powred down raine from the cloudes abundantly, for the making of a flood to drowne the world. The second heauen is that which containeth the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres: so Moses saith, that God in the beginning created the Sunne, the Moone, and the Starres, and placed them in the firmament of heauen.

Besides these two heauens, there is a third which is inuisible: and yet it is the worke of Gods hands: and it is that glorious place where Christ euen in his manhood sitteth at the right hand of the Father: and whether the soules of the faithfull departed are carried and placed: and in which at the end of the world shall all the elect both in body and soule, haue perfect ioy and blisse in the glorious sight and presence of God for euer.

But for the better conceiuing the truth, we are to skan and consider diligently 3. questions. First, whether this third heauen be a creature; for many haue thought it was neuer created, but was eternall with God himselfe: but it is a grosse error contrary to Gods word. For the Scripture saith, Abraham looked for a city (meaning the heauenly Ierusalem, this third heauen) having a foundation whose builder and maker is God. Further, if it be eternall, it must either be a creature, or a creature: but it is no creature for then it should be God: and therefore must needs be a creature. But some will say, the Lord is eternall, and this third heauen hath alwaies bene the place of the Lords abode, and therefore it is also eternall. Ans. True it is indeed that God doth shew his glory and maiesty in the third heauen: but yet that cannot possibly containe his Godhead, as Salomon saith: Behold the heauens, and the beaues of heauen are not able to contain thee. Wherefore though God doth manifest his eternall glorie in this third heauen, yet doth it not follow, that therefore this place should be eternall: for hee needs no habitation to dwell in, he is euery where, filling all things with his presence, excluded from no place. The second question is, where this third heauen is? Ans. There are some Protestants say, it is euery where: and they hold this opinion to maintaine the reall presence of the Lords body in or about the Sacrament. But if it were euerywhere, the heell should be in heauen, which no man will say: but heauen indeed is aboue these visible heauens which we see with our eyes: so the Apostle saith, Christ ascended on high farre aboue all heauen, &c. And againe, it is said of Stephen, that being full of the holy Ghost, he looked up steadfastly into heauen, and saw them open, and the Sonne of man standing at the right hand of God. Thirdly, it may bee demanded, why God created this third heauen? Ans. God made it for this cause, that there might be a certaine place wherein he might make manifest his glorie and maiesty to his elect Angels and men; for the which cause it was created a thousand-fold more glorious than the two former heauens are, and in this respect is called Paradise, by reason of the ioy and pleasure arising from Gods glorious presence. And our Saviour Christ calleth it the house of Gods Father: because into it must bee gathered all Gods children. It is called the kingdome of heauen, because God is the King thereof, and ruler there in perfect glory. True it is, God hath his kingdome here on earth: but hee ruleth not so fully and gloriously here, as hee shall in heauen: for this is the kingdome of grace, but that is the kingdome of his glory, where hee so reigneth, that hee will be all in all, first in Christ, and then in the elect both Angels and men.

Now follow the duties whereunto we are mooued principally in consideration of the making of the third heauen. First, if God created it especially for the manifestation of his glory vnto men, that at the end of the world, by the fruition of Gods most glorious presence, there they might haue perfect ioy and felicity: we haue occasion here to consider the wonderfull madnesse and forgetfulness that reigneth euery where among men, which only haue regard to the estate of this life, & cast all their care on this world, and neuer so much as once dreame of the ioyfull and blessed estate which is prepared for Gods children in the highest heauen. If a man hauing two houses; one but a homely cottage, and the other a princely palace, should leaue the better, and take all the care and pains for the dressing up of the first, would not euery man say, he were a madde man yes yndoubtedly. And yet this is the spiritual madnesse that takes place euery where among men: for God hath prepared for vs two houses, one is this, our body which we beate about vs, which is an house of clay, as Iob saith, We dwell in houses of clay whose foundation is dust, which shall bee destroyed before the moth; and as Peter saith, a tabernacle or tent, which we must shortly take downe; and wherein we abide but as pilgrims and strangers. Again, the same God of his wonderfull goodness hath provided for vs a second house in the third heauen, wherein wee must not abide for a time and so depart: but for euermore enjoy the blessed felicity of his glorious presence.

fence. For all this make a spirituall phrensie possessing the minds of men: for they employ all their care and industry for the maintaining of this house of clay, whose foundation is but dust: but for the blessed estate of the second house, which is prepared for them in the kingdome of heauen, they haue little regard or care. They will both run and ride from place to place day and night, both by sea and land: but for what? Is it for the preparing of a mansion place in the heauenly Ierusalem? nothing lesse, for they will scarce goe out of the doore to vse any means whereby they may come vnto it: but all their studie is to patch vp the ruines and breaches of their earthly cabin.

Now let all men iudge in their owne consciences, whether, as I haue said, this be not more then senselesse madnesse? Again, the body is but a tabernacle wherein wee must rest as it were for a night, as a stranger doth in an Inne, and so away: but the second house is eternal in the heauen, an euertlasting seate of all felicitie and happinesse. And therefore our dutie is a-boue all thinges to seeke the kingdome of God and his righteousnesse, as Christ himselfe biddeth vs. And if the Lord haue there prepared such a place for vs, then we must in this world vse all good means, whereby we may be made worthy the fruition of it; and also fit and ready at the day of iudgement we shall fully possess both in soule and body, and there reigne eternally in all happinesse with God Almighty our Creator, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. But some may say, how shall a man so prepare himselfe, that hee may bee fit for that place? Ans. This the holy Ghost teacheth vs: for speaking of this heauenly Ierusalem, he saith, There shall enter into it none vncleane thing, neither whatsoeuer worketh abominacion or lies. The meanes then to make our selues fit, is to seeke to bee reconciled to God in Christ for our sinnes past, and withal to induer to haue an assurance of the free remission and pardon of them all in the blood of Christ. And as touching that part of life which is to come, wee must remember what Saint Iohn saith, Every one that hath this hope purifieth himselfe, meaning, that hee which hath hope to reigne with Christ in heauen, vseth the means whereby he may purifie & keep himselfe from sinne: as also he saith after, that he which is borne of God keepeth himselfe, and the wicked one toucheth him not. Signifying that all such persons as are truly iustified and sanctified, carry such a narrow and strait watch ouer the whole course of their liues and conuersations, that the diuel can neuer giue them deadly wounds, and wholly ouercome them. Now the man that is relesed in his conscience of the pardon of his sinne for the time past, and hath a steadfast purpose in his heart to keepe himselfe vpright, and continually to walke in righteousness and true holinesse all the daies of his life; this man, I say, is prepared and made fit to enter into the heauenly Ierusalem: come death when it will, hee is ready. And howeuer hee must not looke for heauen here vpon earth, yet hee is as it were in the suburbs of this heauenly cite: and at the end of this life, the king thereof, the Lord Iesus will open the gates, and receiue him into his kingdome for hee is already entered into the kingdome, of grace. To conclude this point, let euery man in the feare of God, be moued hereby to set his heart to prepare himselfe; that when God shall call him hence, he may be fit to enter into that glory.

Secondly, seeing God hath prepared the third heauen for vs, it teacheth euery man in this world to be content with the estate wherein God hath placed him, whether it be high or low, rich or poore: why so? because here hee is but a pilgrime, and liues in a cottage of clay, & in a tent wherein hee must abide but a while, as a pilgrime doth, oftentimes carrying his house about with him; and we shall in better sort accept the afflictions which God sends vs in this life, if we remember that there is prepared for vs a place of ioy, which must be our resting place and perfect felicitie for euermore. This was the practise of the children of God, especially of Abraham: for when the Lord called him out of his owne country, he obeyed, and by faith abode in the promised land, as in a strange country, as one that dwelt in the tent: with Iaac and Isaac heires with him in the same promise: and the reason followeth, for he looked for a cite having a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. They beleened that these things which the Lord promised, were shadowes of better things: and hereon staied themselves, being well content with that estate whereto God had called them. So Paul was contented to beate the afflictions which God had layed vpon him, and his reason was, Because (saith he) we looke not on things which are seene, but on things which are not seene: for the things which are seene are temporall, but the things which are not seene are eternall. And in the next chapter: We know (saith he) that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be destroyed, we haue a dwelling giuen vs of God, that is, an house not made with hands, but eternall in the heauen. And for this cause his desire was rather to remooue out of this bodie, and to be with the Lord.

And thus much concerning heauen. Now followeth the second part of Gods creation in these words.

And eart Earth signifieth the huge masse or body standing of sea & land, on which we liue, and all things that be in or vpon the earth whatsoeuer: as Paul saith, For by him were created all things that are in heauen or in earth, &c. In other Creeds which were made since this of the Apostles, being explications of that; there is added, maker of all things visible and inuisible. Here wee haue occasion to speake of all creatures, but that were infinite: therefore I will make choice of these two, good angels, & men and verse 12.

Heb. 11. 2. 10.

2. Cor. 4. 18.

Col. 1. 10.

1. Thes.

I. That Angels had a beginning it is no question: for Paul saith, that by God all things were created in heaven and earth, things visible and invisible, whether thrones, principalities, or powers. And in respect of the creation, Angels are called the sonnes of God. But the time and day of their creation cannot be set downe further then this, that they were created in the compass of the five daies. For Moses saith, Thou, namely in the compass of the first five daies, the heavens and the earth were fashioned, and all the host of them: that is, all variety of creatures in heaven and earth, serving for the beauty and glorie thereof: whereof no doubt the Angels are the principall.

II. Touching the nature of Angels, some haue thought that they are nothing but qualities and motions in the minds of men, as the Sadducees and the Libertines of this time: but the truth is, that they are spirits, that is, spiritual and invisible substances created by God, and really subsisting: for the scripture ascribes vnto them such kind of actions which cannot be performed by the creatures, sue only such as be substances: as to stand before the throne of God, to behold the face of the father, to carry mens souls to heauen, yet we must not imagine that they are bodily substances consisting of flesh and bone. And though they tooke vpon them visible shapes and formes, and did eate and drinke in company of men, and thereupon are called (A) Men in scripture: yet they did this by diuine dispensatio for a time, that they might the better performe the actions & businesses amons men, to which they were by God appointed. And the bodies of men which they assumed, were no parts of their natures vnited to them, as our bodies are to vs; but rather they were as garments are to vs, which they might put off and on at their pleasure. If any shall aske, whence they had these bodies, the answer is, that either they were created of nothing by the power of God, or framed of some other matter subsisting before. If againe it be asked, what became of these bodies when they laied them downe, because they vsed them but for a time, the answer may be, that if they were made of nothing, they were againe resolu'd into nothing: if made of other creatures, that then they were resolu'd into the same bodies of which they were first made, though indeede wee can define nothing certainly in this point.

III. Angels are reasonable creatures, of excellent knowledge and understanding, farre surpassing all men saue Christ. Their knowledge is threefold: natural, reuealed, experimentall. Natural, which they receiued from God in the creation. Reuealed, which God makes manifest to them in process of time, whereas before they knew it not. Thus God reuealed to Gabriel the mystery of the 70. weekes, Dan. 8. and 9. And in the Apocalyps many things are reuealed to the angels that they might reueale them to vs. Experimentall knowledge, is that which they get by observing the dealing of God in the whole world, but especially in the Church. And thus Paul saith, that in principalities and powers in heavenly places, is knowne the manifold wisdom of God by the Church.

IV. And as the knowledge, so also the power of the good angels is exceeding great. They are able to doe more then all men can. Therefore Paul calls them mightie Angels. 2. Theff. 1. 7. Yea, their power is farre superiour to the power of the wicked angels, who since the fall are vnder them and cannot preuaile against them.

V. The place of the aboad of angels, is the highest heauen, vnlesse they be sent thence by the Lord, to doe some thing appointed by him. This our Saviour Christ teacheth when he saith, that the angels of little ones do alwaies behold the face of their Father in heauen. And the wicked angels before their fall were placed in heauen, because they were cast thence.

VI. That there be certaine distinctions & diuities of Angels, it is very likely, because they are called thrones, and principalities, and powers, Cherubim and Seraphim. But what bee the distinct degrees and orders of Angels, and whether they are to be distinguished by their natures, gifts, or offices, no man by Scripture can determine.

VII. The Ministry of Angels to which the Lord hath set them apart, is three-fold, and it respecteth either God himselfe, or his Church, or his enemies. The Ministry which they performe to God, is first of all, to adore, praise, and glorifie him continually. Thus the Cherubim in Esaias vision cry one to another, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of hosts: the world is full of his glory. And when they were to publish the birth of the Messias, they beginne on this manner, Glory to God in the highest heauens, peace on earth. And Iohn in his vision heard the Angels about the throne, crying with a loud voyce, Worthy is the lambe, &c. to receiue power, riches, and strength, wisdom, and honour, and glory, and praise. And indeede the highest end of the ministry of angels, is the manifestation of the glory of God. The second, is to stand in Gods presence, euermore ready to doe his commandements, as Dauid saith, Praise the Lord, ye his angels that excell in strength, thus doe his commandements in obeying the voice of his word. And here is a good lesson for vs. Wee pray daily, that we may doe the will of God, as the angels in heauen doe it: let vs therefore be followers of the holy Angels in praising God, and doing his commandements as they doe.

The ministrerie of Angels concerning the Church, stands in this, that they are ministering spirits for the good of them which shall be the heirs of saluatio. This good is threefold, in this life, in the end of this life, and in the last iudgement: againe, the good which they procure to the people of God in this life, is either in respect of body, or soule. In respect of the body, in that they doe most carefully performe all manner of duties which doe necessarily tend to preferre the temporall life of Gods children, euen from the beginning of their daies to the end. Dauid saith, that they pitch their tents about him that fears the Lord. When Ager was cast forth of Abrahams family, and wandered in the wilderness, an angel comes vnto her and giues her counsell to returne to her mistresse and humble herselfe. When Eliab fled from Isaiah, hee was both comforted, directed, and fedde by an Angell. And an angell bids the same Eliab bee of good courage and without feare to goe to king Achazias and reprove him. Angels bring Loe and his family out of Sodome & Gomorrah, before they burne the cities with fire and brimstone. When Iakob feared his brother Ejau, he saw angels coming vnto him: and he plainly acknowledgeth that they were sent to be his protectours & his guides in his journey. Abraham being perswaded of the assistance of Gods angels in all his waies, said to his seruant, The Lord God of heauen, who tooke me from my fathers house, &c. Will send his angell before thee. The wife men that came to see Christ, are admonished by Angels to returne another way: and Ioseph by the direction of an angell fled into Egypt, that he might preferre Christ from the hands of the cruell tyrant. The tents of the Israelites were garded by Angels. The three children are deliuered from the fiery furnace: and Daniel out of the Lyons den by angels. When Christ was in heauen, they ministered vnto him and comforted him: and they brought Peter out of prison, and set him at liberty.

Again, the Angels procure good vnto the soules of the godly, in that they are maintainers and furtherers of the true worshipp of God, and of all good meanes, whereby we attaine to saluation. The law was deliuered in Mount Sinay by angels; and a great part of the reuelation of Iohn. They expound to Daniel the 70. weekes. They instruct the Apostles touching the returne of Christ to the last iudgement. An angel forbid Iohn to worship him, but worship God the Creator of heauen and earth. They fetch the Apostles out of prison, and bid them teach in the temple. An Angell brings Philip to the Eunuch, that hee may expound the scriptures to him. Lastly, they reueale the mysteries & the will of God: as to Abraham that hee should not kill his sonne Isaac; to Mary & Elizabeth, the nativity of Iohn Baptist, and of Christ our Saviour; & all this they doe according vnto the will of God. Gal. 1. 8. Beside all this, angels reioyce at the conuersion of sinners by the ministry of the Gospel. And for the Churches sake, they protect not only particular men, but euen whole nations and kingdomes.

The ministrerie of angels in the end of this life, is to carrie the soules of the godly into Abrahams bosome, as they did the soule of La- zarus. And in the day of iudgement to gather all the elect that they may come before Christ, and enter into eternall fruition of glory both in body and soule.

The third and last part of the ministrerie of Angels, concernes Gods enemies; and it is to execute iudgements on all wicked persons & impenitent sinners. Thus all the first borne of Egypt are slaine by an angell. When Ioshua was about to sacke Ierico, an Angell appeared vnto him as a captain, with drawn sword to fight for Israel. When the host of Zenacharib came against Israel, the Angell of the Lord in one night slue an hundred, eightie and five thousand. Because Herod gaue not glorie vnto God, the angell of the Lord smote him, so as he was eaten vp of wormes and died.

And thus wee see what points wee are to marke touching the good Angels. Now followeth the vie which we are to make in regard of their creation. First, whereas they are Gods ministers to inflict punishments vnto the wicked, here is a special point to be learned of vs; that euery man in the feare of God take heed how he liueth and continueth in his sins; for the cafe is dangerous, considering that God hath armies of Angels, which stand ready euery where to execute Gods heavy iudgements vpon them that lue thus. When the people of Israel had sinned against the Lord, Moses saith, they were naked, that is open to all the iudgements of God; euen destitute of the guard of his good Angels. Wretched Balaam that wizzard went to Baal to curse the children of Israel: and as he went it is said, the Angell of the Lord stood in his way with a drawn sword: and if the said hee were no wizzard then his master, the angel had slaine him. Whereby it appeares, that when wee rush on into the practice of any sine, wee doe as much as in vs lyeth, to cause God to send downe his iudgements vpon vs for our sinnes; and that by the ministrerie of his Angels.

Secondly, we are taught another lesson by Christ himselfe: See (saith he) that you despise not one of these little ones: how marke his reason for I say vnto you that in heauens their angels do stand waite to behold the face of my father. By little ones he meaneth young infants which are within the covenant; or others which are like to young infants in simplicitie and innocence of life & humilitie. And Christ will not haue them to be despised. A duty very needfull to be stood vpon in these times. For now aduies, if a man carrie but a shew of humilitie, of good conscience, and of the feare of God, hee is accounted but a silly fellow, he is hated, mocked, and despised one euery hand. But this should not bee so. For him whome God honoureth with the protection of his good Angels, why should any mortall man despise? And it stands mockers and scorners in hand to take heede whom they mocke. For though men for their parts put vp many abuses and inuities, yet their angles may take iust reuenge, by smiting them with plagues and punishments as for their offences.

Thirdly, seeing Angels are about vs, and serue for the good of men, we must doe whatsoeuer we doe in reuerent and seemly manner, as Paul giues counsell to the Philippians, Brethren (saith hee) whatsoeuer things are true, whatsoeuer things are honest, just, pure, and pertaine to loue, of good report if there be any vertue, if there be any praise, thinke on these things: many men do all their affaires orderly for auoiding shame, but wee must doe the same vpon a further ground, namely, because Gods holy Angels waite on vs. And considering that men haue care to behaue themselves well when they are before men, wh it a shame is it for a man to behaue himselfe vnseemly either in open or in secret, he then being before the glorious Angels? Paul faith, that the woman ought to haue power on her head, because of the Angels; that is, not onely the ministers of the Church, but Gods heavenly angels, which daily wait vpon his children, and guard them in al their waies.

Fourthly, this must teach vs modestie, and humilitie for the angles of God, are very notable & excellent creatures, & therefore they are called in the Psalmes Elhim, Gods: yet how excellēt soeuer they be, they abase themselves, to become guardians and keepers vnto sinfull men. Now if the angels doe so abase themselves; then much more ought euery man to abase and humble himselfe in modestie and humilitie before God: and whatsoeuer our calling is, we must not be puffed vp, but be content. This is a necessarie dutie for all, but especially for those which are in the schooles of the Precepts; whatsoeuer their giftes or birth be, they must not thinke themselves too good for the calling of the ministerie. And if God haue called vs therunto, wee must be content to become seruants vnto all in the matter of saluation: though the men whom we teach be neuer so base or simple; for no man doth so farre excell the basest person in the world, as the glorious Angels of God doe exceede the most excellent man that is; therefore seeing they would haue to become seruants vnto vs, we must not thinke our selues too good to serue our poore brethren.

And thus much of the duties. Now follow the exhortations that arise from this, that God hath giuen his glorious angels to serue for the protection and safeguard of his Church & people. If mens spiritual eyes were opened, they should see the diuells and his angels, and all the wicked of this world to fight against them: & if there were no means of comfort in this case, then our estate were most miserable. But marke, as Gods seruant hath all these wicked onesto be his enemies: so he hath garrisons of angels that pitch their tents about him & defend him from them all. So Dauid faith, Hee shall see thy angels charge ouer thee, and they shall giue thee in all his wayes, that thou shalt not thy foot against a stone: where the angels of God are compared to nources, which carry little children in their armes, feed them, and are alwaies ready at hand, to saue them from fals & many other dangers. When the king of Syria sent his horses and chariots to take Elisba the Lords Prophet, because he reuealed his counsell to the King of Israel: his seruant saw them round about Dothan where he was. & he cried, Alas, master what shall we doe? then Elisba answered, Fear not, for they that be with us, are more then they that be with them: & he besought the Lord to open his seruants eyes, & he looked, and behold, the mountains were full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisba. So likewise not many yeeres agoe; our land was preferred from the inuasion of the Spaniards, whose huge Naue lay vpon our Sea coasts: but how were we deliuered from them? surely by no strength, nor power, nor cunning of man; but it was the Lord, no doubt, by his angels that did keepe our coasts, and did scatter our enemies, and drowne them. Let enemies rage, and let them doe that they will, if a man keepe himselfe in the wayes which God prescribeth, hee hath Gods Angels to guide and preserve him: which thing must moue men to loue and embrace the true religion, and to conforme them selues in all good conscience to the rule of Gods word. For when a man doth not so, all the Angels of God are his enemies: and at all times ready to execute Gods vengeance vpon him: but when men carry themselves as dutifull children to God, they haue this prerogative, that Gods holy Angels doe watch about them, & defend them day and night from the power of their enemies, euen in common calamities and miseries. Before God sends his iudgements on Hierusalem, an angell is sent to marke them in the foreheads that mourne for the abominations of the people. And this priuiledge none can haue, but hee whose heart is sprinkled with the blood of Christ, and that man shall haue it vnto the end.

And thus much of the creation of Angels. Now it followes to speake of the creation of Man: wherein we must consider two things: I. the points of doctrine. II. the vses. For the points of doctrine. First, Man was created and framed by the hand of God, and made after the image of God: For Moses brings in the Lord speaking thus, Let vs make man in our image, &c. in the image of God created hee them, which also must be vnderstood of Angels. The image of God, is nothing else but a conformitie of man vnto God, whereby man is holy as God is holy: for Paul faith, Put on the new man, which is after God, that is, in Gods image is created in righteousness and holiness. Now I reason thus: wherein the renewing of the image of God in man doth stand, therein was it at the first: but the renewing of Gods image in man doth stand in righteousness and holiness: therefore Gods image wherein man was created at the beginning, was a conformitie to God in righteousness & holines. Now whether Gods image doth further consist in the substance of mans body and soule, or in the faculties of both, the Scripture speaks not. This image of God hath 2. principal parts: I. Wisdom: II. holines. Concerning wisdom Paul faith, Put ye on the new man which is created in knowledge after the image of him which created him. This wisdom consisteth in three points: I. in that he knew God his Creator perfectly: for Adam in his innocencie knew God so farre forth as it was conuenient for a creature to know his Creator. II. He knew Gods will so far forth as it was conuenient for him, to shew his obedience thereunto. III. He knew the wisdom & will of his Creator touching the particular creatures: for after Adam was created, the Lord brought euery creature vnto him, presenting them vnto him, as being Lord and King over the, that he might giue names vnto them. Whereby it appeares that Adam in his innocency did know the nature of all creatures, and the wisdom of God in creating them, els he could not haue giuen them fit names: and when God brought Eue vnto Adam, he knew her at the first, and said, This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh, shee shall be called woman, &c. The second part of Gods image in man, is holines and righteousness; which is nothing els but a conformity of the will and affections, & of the whole disposition of man both in body & soul, to the wil of God his creator. Yet we must remember that Adam in his innocency had a changeable will, so as he could either wil good or evil: he was created with such liberty of will, as that he could indifferently wil either. And we must not think that the will of the creature was made vnchangeably good, for that is peculiar to the will of God, and hereby is the creator distinguished from the creature.

And here two things offer themselves to be considered. The first, why the man is called the image of God, and not the woman. Answ. He is so called, not because holinesse and righteousness is peculiar to him which is common to both: but because God hath placed more outward excellencie and dignitie in the person of a man then of a woman. The second, how Christ should be called the image of God. Answ. He is so called for 2. speciall causes. First, because he is of the same substance with the Father, and therefore is his most absolute image, and as the author of the Hebrewes faith, The brightness of his glorie, and the inglorious form of his person. Secondly, because God being invisible doth manifest himselfe in Christ, in whom as in a glasse wee may behold the wisdom, goodnesse, iustice, and mercy of God.

The second point to be considered in the creation of man, is the dignity of his person: for Dauid faith, Thou hast made him little inferior to the Angels, and crowned him with glory, and worship. This dignity stands in foure points. I. A blessed communion with the true God: for Paul speaking of the Gentiles which were not called, faith, they were strangers from the life of God. Whereby the contrary we may gather, that our first parents in their innocency liued the life of God, which is nothing els but to leade a life here on earth, as that the creature shall haue a blessed and immediate fellowship with God: which stands in this, that before the fall of man, God reuealed himselfe in a special manner vnto him, so as his very body & soule was a temple & dwelling place of the Creator. This fellowship between God and man in his innocency, was made manifest in the familiar conference which God vouchsafed to man: but since the fall, this communion is lost: for man cannot abide the presence of God. And therefore when Peter had fished all night, and caught nothing, our Saviour bad him cast downe his net to make a draught, who did so; but when he saw the great multitude of fishes that were taken, at this sight beholding but as it were some sparks of the glorious maiestie of God in Christ, hee fell downe at his feete, saying, Lord depart from me: for I am a sinner. The second point wherein mans dignitie consisteth, is that man was made Lord & King over all creatures, as Dauid faith, Thou hast made him to haue dominion in the workes of the hands: and therefore God hauing created him in his image, biddeth him, rule ouer the fishes of the sea, ouer the fowles of the heauen, and ouer every beast that mooueth vpon the earth: and after that he brought them all to him, as to a foueraine Lord and King to be named by him: and answerably euery creature in his kind gaue reuerence and subiection vnto man, before his fall, as vnto their Lord & King. Where by the way we must remember, that when we see any creature that is hurtfull and noisome vnto man, and would rather deuoure then obey him; it must put vs in mind of our sinne: for by creation we were made Lords and Kings ouer all creatures, and they durst not but reuerence & obey vs: but the rebellion of man vnto God, is the cause of the rebellion of the creatures vnto vs. The third part of mans dignity by creation, is that before his fall hee had a wonderful beauty and maiesty aboue all creatures in his body: whereupon Dauid faith, The Lord hath crowned him with glory and worship. And in the renewing of the Covenant with Noe; God faith, that the dread and feare of me shall be vpon all creatures: which now though it be but small, yet doth it plainly shew what was the glory and maiesty of mans person at the first. The fourth dignity of mans estate in innocency, is that his labour was without pain or weariness: if he had neuer fallen, he should haue laboured in the garden; but so, as he should neuer haue bin wearied therewith. For while Adam was fallen, God said, In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread. Now if the pain in labor come after as a curse vpon man for his transgression, then before his fall man felt no paine in his offitres. And in these foure things consisteth mans dignity which he had in the creation.

Now in the third followeth mans calling before his fall; which is twofold: I. particular. II. generall. Mans particular calling was to come into the garden of Eden, to keepe it, and to dreffe the trees & fruits thereof. This shewes vnto vs a good lesson, that euery man must haue a particular calling wherein hee ought to walke: and therefore such as spend their time idly in gaming & vaine delights, haue much to answer to God at the day of iudgment. This will not excuse a man to say then, that hee had land and liuing to maintain himselfe, & therefore was to liue as hee list: for euen Adam in his innocencie had all things at his will, and wanted nothing, yet euen the God employed him in a calling: therefore noie must be exempted, but euery man both high and low must walke in his p-poser calling. Adams generall calling was to worship his Creator: to which he was bound by the light of creation, considering the morall law was written in his heart by nature. Which is signified in the Decalogue, where the Lord requires worship & obedience of his people, becauſe he is Iehouah, th. t. is, one which hath being in himselfe, and giues being to all men by creation. For the better vnderstanding of this point, wee are to consider three things. I. The place where Adam did worship. II. The time. III. The sacraments. For the first, God euer ſince the beginning had a place where he would be worshipped, and it is called Gods Houſe, which then was the garden of Eden. For it was vnto Adam a place appointed by God for his worship: as Church assemblies are vnto vs: where also the Lord at ſometime did in a ſpeciall manner ſhew himſelfe vnto his creature. Touching the time of Gods worship, it was the ſeauenth day from the beginning of the creation, the Sabbath day. And here we muſt note, that the keeping of the Sabbath is morall. Some indeede doe pleade that it is but a ceremonie; yet faſly: for it was ordained before the fall of man, at which time Ceremonies ſignifying ſanctification had no place. Nay marke further: Adam in his innocencie was not clogged with ſinne as we are: yet then hee had a ſet Sabbath to worſhip God his Creator: and therefore much more neede hath euery one of vs of a Sabbath day, wherein we may ſeue our ſelues from the works of our callings, and the works of ſin, to the worſhip of God in the exerciſe of religion, and godly meditation of our creation. This point muſt be learned of vs, for when no occaſion is offered of buſines, then men will formally ſeeme to keepe the Sabbath: but if there come occaſion of breaking the Sabbath: as traffike, gaming, & vaine ſheues, then Sabbath faſtwell, men will haue their pleaſures, let them worſhip God that will. But let vs remember in the feare of God, that wh-ſoeuer continue in the breach of this law tyng morall, God will no leſſe poure forth his puniſhments vpon them, then for the breach of any other commandment: the confireuerent sanctifying of the Lords day.

Now for Adams sacraments they were two: the tree of life, and the tree of knowledge of good and euill: these did serue to exercise Adam in obedience vnto God. The tree of life, was to signify assurance of life for euer, if hee did keepe Gods commandements: the tree of knowledge of good and euill, was a sacrament to shew vnto him, that if hee did transgresse Gods commandements, hee should die: and it was so called, because it did signifie that if hee transgressed this law, hee should haue experience both of good and euill in himselfe.

Now in the fourth place followeth the end of the creation of man, which is twofold. First, that there might be a creature to whom God might make manifest himselfe, who in a speciall manner should set forth and acknowledge his wifedome, goodnesse, mercy, in the creation of heauen and earth, and of things that are in them, as also his providence, in gouerning the same. Secondly, God hauing decreed to glorifie his name in shewing his mercy, and iustice vpon his creature, thereupon in time createth men to shew his mercy in the saluation of some, and to shew his iustice in the iust and deferred damnation of other some. And therefore he hath appointed the creation specially of man, to be a meanes of manifestation and beginning of the execution of his eternall counsell.

C Thus much concerning mens creation in generall. The speciall parts of men are two :
body, and soule. And the reason why the Lord would have him stand on these 2. parts is this: Some creatures made before him were only body; as beasts, fishes, fowles some spiri-tuali, as Angels: now man is both: spirituall in regard of his soule, corporall and sensible in regard of his body, that nothing might be wanting to the perfection of nature. If it be alleged, that man consists of three parts, body, soule, and spirit, because Paul prayeth, 1.
Thel. 5. 23. that The besouled man may be sanctified in body, soule, and spirit: the answer is, that the spirit signifies the minde, whereby men conceive and vnderstand such things as may be vnderstood: and the soule is there taken for the will and affections: and therefore these two are not two parts, but only two distinct faculties of one and the same soule.

The body of man at the first was formed by God of clay, or of the dust of the earth, not to be the grave of the soule, as Plato said, but to be an excellent and most fit instrument to put in execution the powers and faculties of the soule. And howsoever in it selfe considered, it is mortal, because it is compounded of contrary natures called Elements: yet by the appointment and blessing of God in the creation it became immortal till the fall of man.

As for the soule, it is no accidentarie quality, but a spirital & inuisible essence or nature, subsisting by it selfe. Which plainly appears in that the soules of men haue being and continuance as well forth of the bodies of men as in the same; and are as well subiect to torments as the body is: And whereas we can and doe put in practice sundry actions of life, sense, motion, vnderstanding, we do it only by the power and vertue of the soule:

18 Hence ariseth the difference: betweene the footes of meir, and brasse: The footes of men are substanti³; but the footes of other creatures seeme not to be substanti³; becauſe they haue no being out of the bodies in which they are: but rather they are certain peculiar qualities acting of the matter of the body, and vanishing with it. And it maybe for this cause, that the foote of the brasse is said to be in the blood, wheras the like is not said of the foote of man.

And though mens soules be spirits as angels are, yet a difference must be made. For angels cannot be united with bodies, so as both shall make one whole and entire person, whereas mens soules may: yea the soule coupled with the bodie is not onely the mouer of the body, but the principall cause that makes man to be a man.

The beginning of the foule is not of the essence of God; ynnesse we will make every mans foule to be God; neither doth it spring from the foule of the parents, for the foule cannot more beget a foule, then an Angell can beget an Angell. And Adam is called a living foule, and not a quickening foule. And earthly fathers are called the fathers of our bodies, and not of our foules. It remaines therefore as being most agreeable to the Scriptures, that the foules of men are then created by God of nothing, when they are infused into the body.

And though the soules of men haue a beginning, yet they haue no end, but are eternall. And when they are said to dy, it is not because they cease at any time to subsist or haue being in nature, but because they cease to be righteous, or to haue fellowship with God.

Whereas our bodies are Gods workeman-ship, we must glorifie him in our bodies, and all the actions of body and soule, our eating and drinking, our lining and dying, must be referred to his glory : yea we must not hurt or abuse our body, but present them as holy and living sacrifices vnto God. And whereas God made vs of the dust of the earth, we are not to glorie and boast our felnes, but rather to take occasion to praise the great goodnes of God, that hath vouchsafed to honour vs being but dust and ashes. And after that man is created, what is his life? alas it is nothing, but a little breath : stoppe his mouth and his nostrills, and he is but a dead man. By this we are put in minde to consider of our fraile and vncertaine estate, and to lay aside all confidence in our felnes: and for this cause the Prophet Ezr teacheth vs to haue no confidence in man, because his breath is in his nostrills. Again, let vs marke the frame and shape of mans body.
All other creatures eoe with their bodies and

A eyes to the ground-ward; but man was made to goe vpright; and whereas all other creatures haue but foure muskles to turne their eyes round about, man hath a fifth to pulis his eyes vp to heauen-ward. Now what doth this teach vs? surely, that howe euer we seeke for other things, yet first of all, and about all, we should seeke for the kingdome of heauen; & the right-nessesse thereof: and that our whole desire should bee first to enioy the blessed estate of Gods children in heauen. Secondly, it teaches vs in receiving Gods creatures, to returne thankfulness vnto God, by lifting up the heart to heauen for the same. These are very needfull and profitable lessons in these dayes; for

B most men indeede goe vpright: but looke into their liues, and they might as well go on all foure: for in their conseruation they let their whole hearts upon the earth, as the beast doth, and their eyes vpon the things of this world: hereby they doe abate themselves, and deface their bodies, & being men, make themselves as beasts: we shall see great numbers of men that run and ride from place to place, to prouide for the bodie, but to seeke the kingdome of heauen; where their soules should dwell after this life in ioy for euer, they will not stirre one foote.

Thirdly, mans body by creation, was made a temple framed by Gods own hands for himselfe to dwell in: therefore our duty is to keepe our bodies pure and cleane, and not to suffer them to be instruments, whereby to practise the sinne of the heart. If a man had a faire house wherein he must entertaine a Prince, and should make thereof a swine-stye, or a stable, would not all men say, that he did greatly abuse both the house and the Prince? euen so mans body being at the first made a palace for the euergliuing God; if a man shall abuse it for drunkenness, swearing, lying, fornication, or any vncleaneiffe, he doth make it instead of a temple for the holy Ghost, to be a stye or stable for the diuell. For the more filthy a mans body is, the more fit it is to be a dwelling place for sinne and Satan.

Fourthly, man by creation was made a goodly creature in the blessed image of God: but by Adams fall men lost the same, and are now become the deformed children of wrath: our dutie therefore is, to labour to get againe our first image, and indeavour our felices to become new creatures. If a Noble man should stain his blood by treason, after his death the posteritie will never be at rest, till they have got away the spot: Man, by Adams fall, is become a limme of the duell, a rebell and a traitor against Gods maiesty: and this is the state of eury one of vs, by nature we are in enmity with God, and therefore we ought to labour about all things in the world, to be restored in Christ to our first estate and perfection, that so we may become bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh, being justified and sanctified by his obedience, death, and passion.

Fifthly, man was created, that there might be a way prepared, whereby God might show his grace and mercy in the saluation of some; and his iustice in the deferred damnation of others for their finnes: and in the creation of man Gods eternal counsell begins to come into execution. Hereupon it stands vs in hand to make confidence of euery euill way, being repentant for all our sins past, and having a constant purpose neuer to sinne more as we have done, that by our good conuerfation here in this life, we may haue assurance that we be eternally chosen to saluation by the Lord himself.

Lastly, whereas we haue learned, that the soule of man is immortall, wee are hereby taught to take more care for the soule than for the bodie. For it cannot bee extinguished: When it is condemned, euen then it is alwaies in dyings, and can neuer die. But alas, in this point the case is far contrary in the world: for men labour all their liues long to get for the body, but for the soule they care little or nothing at al, whether it sink or swim, go to heauen or hell, they respect not. This doth appeare to be true, by the practice and behavior of men on the Lords day: for if the number of those which come to heare Gods word, were compared with those which runne about their worldly wealth & pleasure, I feare me the better sort would be found to be but a litle handfull to a huge heape, or as a drop to the Ocean sea, in respect of the other. But wilt thou go an hundred miles for the increase of thy wealth, & delight of thy body? then think it not much to go ten thousand miles (if need were) to take any paines for the good of thy soule, and to get food for the same, it being euertlasting.

And thus much for the duties. Now follow the consolations. Although by reason of the fall of man wee can haue but litle comfort now: yet the Creation doth confirme the vnspokeable prouidence of God ouer his creatures, but especially ouer man, in that the Lord created him the sixth day: and so before he was made, prepared him a Paradise for his dwelling place, & all creatures for his vse and comfort. And if he were thus careful for vs when we were not, then no doubt he will be much more careful for vs at this present, in which we liue and haue being. Nay, marke further; since the fall man eates and drinks in quantitie a great deale which in common reason should rather kill him, than turn to the strength and nourishment of his body: yet herein doth the wonderfull power of the Creatour most notably appeare, who hath made mans stomacke as a lymbecke or still, to digest all meates that are besome for his nourishment and preferuation.

And thus much for the Creation. Now in these words, maker of heauen and earth is more to be vnderstood then the worke of creation, namely, Gods prouidence in governing all things created, as he appointeth in his eternal decree: and therefore Saint Peter saith, God is a faithfull Creatour, that is, God did not onely make heauen and earth, and so leaue them, as Masons & Carpenters leaue houses when they are built: for by his prouidence he doth most wisely gouerne the same. Now therefore let vs come to speake of Gods prouidence. And first of all the question offers it selfe to be considered, whether there be any prouidence or no? for the minds of men are troubled with many doubtings hereof. And to make the question out of all doubt, I will vse foure arguments to confirme the prouidence of God. The first, is the testimony of the Scripture, which ascribes the cuent of all particular actions, euen such as are in themselves casual, as the casting of lots, and such like, to the disposition of God: which very thing also teacheth, that euen men themselves, indued with reason & vnderstanding, haue need to be guided in all things, and governed by God: and it serues to confute those that deny Gods prouidence. Why sayest thou, O Iacob, and speakest, O Israel, my way is hidde from the Lord, and my iudgment is past ouer by my God?

The second argument may be taken from the order which appeareth in the whole course of nature. First, to begin with families, there is to be seene an Eutaxie or seemly order, in which some rule, and some obey: and the like is to be found in townes, cities, Countries, and Kingdomes: yea euen in the whole world, in which all things are so disposed, that one serueth for the good of another. Trees and hearbes, and graile of the field serue for beasts and cattell: beasts and cattell serue for men: the heauens aboue serue for them which are beneath: and all the creatures which are aboue and beneath serue for God. This argueth, that God is most wife and prouident in ordering and disposing all things whatsoever. The third argument is taken from the conscience specially of malefactors. Suppose a man that commits a murder so closely, that no man knowes thereof, and that the party himself is free from al the danger of the law: yet shall he haue his owne conscience to accuse, vpbraide, & condemne him, yea euen to fright him out of his wit, and to giue him no more rest then he can finde vpon the racke or gybbet. Now this accusation and terror of conscience, is nothing els but the fore-runner of another most terrible iudgement of God, who is Lord of all creatures, and iudge of all men. And this also proues the prouidence of God. For if the conscience can finde a man out, & lay his faults to his charge, how much more shall God himselfe the Creatour of the conscience see and consider all his doings? The fourth and last argument is this: The prophesies of things to come should be vncertaine or false, if God gouerned not the world. But now considering things many yeeres ago fore-told, come to passe in the same manner, as they were fore-told by the Prophets and Apostles: hereby we must certainly conclude, that there is a prouidence of God, whereby all and euery thing is gouerned.

Against

answered.

Against the prouidence of God sundry things bee alleged. The first, and specifall is that prouidence and disorder, confusion, and order cannot stand together. Now in the world there is nothing but disorder and confusion, in seditions, treasons, conspiracies and bickerings of kingdoms: where also sinne and wickednesse prevails. Ans. It is true indeede there hath beene confusion in the world euer since the fall of man and Angels: and it ariseth not from God, but from them alone; who as they did at the first transgress the wil of God, so they doe what they can to turne all vpside downe. Now then confusion and disorder is only in respect of the diuell & his instruments; but in regard of God, in the very midst of all confusion there is order to be found, because he can, and doth dispose to the glory of his owne name, and to the good and saluation of his chosen, as also to the confusion of his enemies.

Again, it may be objected, that with vngodly and wicked men all things go well, and contrariwise with the godly all things go hardly: For through the world, none are more afflicted and more vnder outward misery then they: but if there were any prouidence in God, then it should be otherwise: the godly should flourish, and the wicked perish. Ans. The consideration of the outward estate of men in the world, wasto David an occasiō of a fore temptation: For when he saw the wicked to prosper al way, and their riches to increase, he brake forth and said, Certainly I haue cleansed my heart in vniuersity, and I washed my hands in innocency. Now if wee would repell this temptation, as David after wards did, then wee must goe into the Book of Psalms with him: and learne to be rebuffed in these points: 1. Though the godly be laden with miseries, yet euen that, by the especiall prouidence of God, turnes to their great good. For euen man since the fall of Adam is afflicted with the lothsome contagion of sinne. Now the child of God that is truly regenerate, & must be fellow-life with Christ after this life in the Kingdom of glory, must in this life be cast into the Lords furnace, that in the fire of affliction he may more and more be skoured and purified from the corruption of his nature, and be estranged from the wickednesse of the world. 2. The prosperous state of the wicked, their spoiles, their riches, and all their honour turnes to their greater woe in the end: as doth appeare in the history, and in the examples of the Chaldeans of Babylon, and of Darius and Belshazzar.

Thirdly, it may be objected, that many things come to passe by chance, and therefore not by Gods prouidence: because chance and prouidence cannot stand together. Ans. We must distinguish between chance & mere chance. Chance is, when any thing comes to passe, the cause thereof being vnknewen not simply, but in respect of man: and therefore in regard of men which know not the reason of things, wee may say there is chance: and so the spirit of God speaks, I am and chance come to them at. And againe, By chance there comes down a Preist the same way. Now this kinde of chance is not against the prouidence of God, but is ordered by it. For things which in regard of men are casual, are certainly knowen and determined by God. Mere chance is, when things are said or thought to come to passe without any cause at all. But that must be abhorred of vs as an overturning the prouidence of God.

Thus seeing it is plaide that there is a prouidence, let vs in the next place see what it is. Prouidence is a most free and powerful action of God, whereby he hath care ouer all things that are.

Prouidence hath two parts, knowledge and gouernment. Gods knowledge, is whereby all things from the greatest to the least are manifested before him at all times. As David saith, His eyes will consider, his eye-lidde will try the Children of men. And againe, He abaseth himselfe to behold shewings that are in the heauen and the earth. And the Prophet Heman said to Asa, The eyes of the Lord behold all the earth. And S. James saith, From the beginning of the world God knoweth all his works. This point hath a double vse, as S. Peter saith, it must moue vs to glorie euill and doe good: Why, because, saith he, the eyes of the Lord are vpon the iust, and his countenance against euill doers. Secondly, it must comfort all those that labour to keepe a good conscience. For the eyes of God behold all the earth, to shew himselfe strong with them that are of perfect heart towards him.

Gouernment, is the second part of Gods prouidence, whereby he ordereth all things and directeth them to good ends. And it must be extended to the very least thing that is in heauen or earth, as to the sparrow, and to oxen, and the haire of our heads. And henc wee must consider two things, the manner of gouernment, and the meanes.

The manner of gouernment is diuerse, according as things are good or euill. A good thing is that which is approued of God. As first of all, the substance of all creatures, euen of the diuels themselves: in whom whatsoever is remaining since their creation is in it selfe good. Secondly, the quantities, qualities, motions, actions, & inclinations of the creatures in themselves considered with al their euents are good. Again, good is either natural or moral. Natural, which is created by God for the lawfull vse of man. Moral, which is agreeable to the eternall and vnchangeable wisdom of God; reuealed in the moral law.

Now God gouerneth all good things two waies. First, by sustaining and preferring them that they decay not: Secondly, by moving them that they may attaine to the particular ends for which they were severally ordained. For the quality and vertues which were placed in the Sunne, Moone, Starres, Trees, Plants, Seedes, &c. would lie dead in them and be vnprofitable, vnlesse they were not onely preferred, but also stirred vp and quickened by the power of God so oft as hee employes them to any vse.

Enail, is the destruction of nature, and it is taken for finne, or for the punishment of finne. Now fin is gouerned of God by two actions: the first, is an operative permission. I fo call it, because God partly permitteth finne, and partly worketh in it. For finne as it is commonly taken hath two parts; the subiect or matter, and the forme of finne: the subiect of finne, is a certaine quality or action; the forme, is the a-nomic or transgression of Gods law. The first is good in it selfe, and euerie quality or action, for far forth as it is a quality or action, is existing in nature, and hath God to be the author of it.

Therefore sinne, though it be sufficiently euill to eternall damnation, yet can it not be said to be absolutely euill as God is absolutely good, because the subiect of it is good, and therefore it hath in it respects and regards of goodnes.
In respect of the second, that is, the breach of the lawe it selfe, God neither willethe, nor ap-pointeth, nor commandeth, nor causeth, helpeh sinne, but forbiddeth, condemneth, and punisheth it: yet so, as withall he willingly permitteth it to be done by others, as men and wicked Angels, they being the sole authors & causes of it. And this permission by God is vpon a good end: because thereby hee manife-steth his iudiciall and meritt. Thus it appeareth

Iteth his iustice and mercy. Thus it appeares that in original sinne, the naturall inclination of the mind, will, and affections in it selfe considered is from God, & the ataxie or corruption of the inclination is no wise from him, but only permitted : againe, that in actual sinne the motion of the body or mind is from God, but the euilnesse and disorder of the motion is not from him, but freely permitted to be done by others. As for example; In the act of murder, the action of mouing the whole body, of stirring the feuerall loyns, and the fetching of the blow whereby the man is slaine, is from God; form him we haue, mooue, and haue our being; but the disposing and applying of all these actions to this end, that our neighbours life may be taken away, and we thereby take reuenge vpon him, is not from God, but from the wicked will of man and the diuill.

Gods second action in the government of sinne, is after the iust permission of it , partly to restrain it more or lesse, according to his good will and pleasure, and partly to dispose and turne it against the nature thereof to the glory of his owne name, to the punishment of his enemies, and to the correcting and chastisement of his elect.

As for the second kinde of euill, called the punishment of sinne, it is the execution of iustice, and hath God to be the author of it. And in this respect Esay saith, that God createth euill: and Amos, That there is no euill in the city which God hath not done. And God as a most iust iudge

Al may punish sin by sinne, himselfe in the meate season free from all sinne. And thus the places must be understood, in which it is said, that God giverh Kings in his wrath; hardeneth the heart, blindeth the eyes; minglet he spirit of errors; giueh up men to a reprocheful; sendeth strong illusions to beleue lyes; sendeth ouil spirits giuing them commandement to hurt, and leaue to deuillc &c.

Thus hauing scene in what manner God gouerneth all things, let vs now come to the means of gouernment. Sometimes God worketh without meanes, thus hee created all things in the beginning: and he made trees & plants to grow and flourish without the heat of the Sun or rain: sometimes hee gouernes according to the vsual course & order of nature, and when hee preferres our liues by meat and drinke: yet so, as he can and doth most freely order all things by meanes either aboue nature or against nature, as it shall seeme good vnto him. As when he caused the fume to stand in the firmament, and to goe backe in Akandil: when hee caused the fire not to burne the three children: when he kept backe dew and raine three yeeres in Israel, when he made waters to flow out of the rocke: when he caused Elisha cleaue to diuide the waters of Iordan: when hee caused yeen to swimme: when hee preferred Iouas alive three daies and three nights in the whales bellie: when he cured dyscales, by the strength of nature incurable, as the prophecie of Naaman: the blind of bala, and blindness of eyes.

Among all the means which God vseth, the special are the reasonable creatures, which are no passive instruments, as the tooles in the hand of the workman, but active; because as they are mooued by God, so againe being indued with will and reason, they moue themselves. And such instruments are either good or euill. Euill, as wicked men and Angels. And these vseth to doe his good will and pleasure, euen then when they do leaue of all obey him. And considering that the finning instrument which is mooued by God, doth also moue it self freely without any constraint on Gods part : God himselfe is free from all blame, when the instrument is blame-worthy.

D In directing the instrument, God fineth not the action indeede is of him, but the defect of the action from the instrument: which being corrupt, can it selfe doe nothing but that is corrupt: God in the meane season by it, bringeth that to passe which is very good. The whole cause of sinne in Satan and in vs, as for God, he puts no wickednes into vs, but the euill which hee findes in vs hee moues, tharis, orders and gouernes, and bends it by his infinite wisdome, when and in what manner it pleaseth him, to the glorie of his name, the euill instrument not knowing so much, say, intending a farre other end. As in the mill, the horle blindfolded goes forward, and perceiues nothing but that hee is in the ordinarie way, whereas the miller himselfe whips him and and stirs him for ward for an other end, namely for the grinding of corne. And this is that which we must hold touching Gods providence over wicked men and Angels : and it stands with the tenour of the whole Bible. Iosephs brethren sold him to Egypt very wickedly, even in the testimony of their own consciences : yet Ioseph having respect to the counsell and work of God which he performed in the death of Christ, but that which

Ad. 4. 28 the band and the counsel of God had determined to be done: because though they wickedly intended nothing but to fiew their malice & hatred in the death of Christ; yet God propounding a further matter by them then ever they dreamed of, shewed forth his endless mercy to man in the worke of redemption. On this manner must all the places of scripture be understood, in which it is said, that God gave the signes of David to Ahsalon; that God mooved David to number the people; that he commanded Shemei to raile on David; that the Advers and Persecu- sors are his sanctified ones; that the result of the ten tribes was done by God, &c. By all these examples it appeares, that wee must not feare Gods permission from his will or decree; and that we must put difference betweene the evil worke of man; and the good worke of God which he doth by man: and the whole matter may yet be more cleerely perceived by this comparision: A theefe at the day of aslife is condemned, and the magistrate appoints him to be executed; and the hangman owing a grudge to the malefactor, fiew him hardly, and prolongeth his punishment longer then he should:
Now the magistrate & the hangman do both one and the same worke, yet the hangman for his part is a murderer, the magistrate in the meane season no murderer: but a iust iudge putting iustice in execution by the hangman: so to God though he use evil instruments, yet is he free from the evil of the instruments,

And further we must here marke the difference which must bee made in Gods vsing of all kinds of instruments. When he vseth good creatures, as Angels, he worketh his will not only by them, but also in them: because he inspires them and guides them by his spirit, so as they shall will, & doe that which he willeth, and intendeth. As for euill instruments, he worketh by them only, and not in them: because hee holds backe his grace from them, and leaues them to themselves, to put in practise the corruption of their owne hearts.

Thus much of the parts of Gods providence: now follow the kinds thereof. Gods providence is either generall or speciall. Generall is that which extends it selfe to the whole world and all things indifferently, even to the devils themselves. By this providence God continueth and maintains the order which he set in nature in the creation, and he preserves

uery creature in his kinde.

The special providence is that, which God sheweth & exerciseth towards his Church & chosen people, in gathering and guiding them, and in preferring them by his mighty power against the gates of hell. And therefore Gods Church here vpon earth is called the kingdom of grace, in which he shewes not only a generall power ouer his creatures, but withall the special operation of his spirit in bowing and bending the hearts of men to his will.

Thus much concerning the doctrine of Gods providence. Now follows the duties. First, seeing there is a providence of God over every thing that is, we are hereby taught to take good heed of the transgression of the least of Gods commandments. If men were perswaded that the Prince had an eye every where, doubtlesse many sidiects in England would walke more obediently to the lawes of the land then they doe: and durst in no wise worke such villanies as are daily practised. Wel, howsoever it is with earthly Princes, yet this all-seeing presence is least wanting in God: he hath an eye every where; whosoever thou art, there God beholdeth thee, as Daniel sixth God hath an eye every where.

hath, Gods grace dwelleth from heaven upon the children of men; so that if they were any that would understand and seeke God. Therefore except thou be bruiſt and paſt flame, take heed of ſin. If men had but a ſpark of grace, the conſideration of this would make them loath the praſtice of any euill worke; Eliah ſaith to Ahab, As the Lord God of Iſrael lieth before me, ſay I, I ſwaine, there ſhall be neither dewe nor raine theſe three yeeres. Where the Prophet confirmeth his ſpeech with an oath, ſaying, As the Lord of hoſts lieth it ſhall be ſo. And left Ahab ſhould thinke he made up conſcience what he ſaid; ſubdeddeth this claufe, that he ſtood in the preference of God. As if he ſhould ſay: how ſouerely thou thinkeſt of me, yet as it ſtands me in hand, ſo do I make conſcience of my word; for I ſtand in the preference of God, and therefore know it. as the Lord iuſteth there ſhall be no raine now theſe three yeeres. So Corneilius hauing an eye to Gods providence, doth moue himſelfe and all his houſhold to a ſolemne hearing of the word of God deliuered by the mouth of Peter, ſaying, that they were all preſent before God, to heare all things commended of him. As theſe men had regard to Gods providence, ſo we likewiſe muſt becare our ſelues reuerently, making conſcience of our behaviour both in words and workes; becauſe whoeuer we be, we are in the preference of God.

Secondly, if there be a providence of God ouer every thing, then we must learne contentation of minde in every estate; yea, in aduersities vnder the crosse when all goes against vs we must be content, because Gods providence hath so appointed. So Dauid in the greatest of his griefes was dumbe and spake nothing his reason was, because thou Lord dost it.

And when Shemai cursed David, Abishai would have had the king to have given him leave to have slain him: but David would not suffer it, but said, His curse even because the Lord hath bidden him curse David: who dare I myself, Wherefore hast thou done so? In whose example we may see a patterne of quietnes of minde. When a crosse cometh; it is a hard thing to be patient; but wee must draw our felues thereunto by consideration of Gods especiall providence.

Thirdly, when outward meanes of preservation in this life doe abound, as health, honour, riches, peace, and pleasure, then we must remember to be thankfull; because these things alwaies come by the providence of God. Thus Job was thankfull both in prosperitie and adversity: The Lord said he, gone, and the Lord said, I will bring him againe, and thou shalt say, Blessed be the name of the Lord. Indeed to be patient in every estate and thankfull to God, is a very hard matter; yet will it be more ease, if we learne in all things that befall vs in this life, neuer to sever the consideration of the things that come to passe from Gods providence. For as the body and soule of man (though we see onely the body) are alwaies together, as long as a man liueth: so is Gods providence ioyned with the thing done: wherefore we see looke on the thing done, so wee must also in it, labour to see and acknowledge the good pleasure and appointment of God. As for example a mans house is set on fire, and all his goods consumed; this very sight would make him at his wits end: but now as he beholds this event with one eye, so with the other eye hee must at that very instant looke vpon Gods blessed providence. When a man beholdeth and feels the losse of his friends, he can not but grieve thereat, vntill hee bee more sensible then stone or stone: yet that he may not be overwhelmed with griefe, hee must culer with one eye looke at the pleasure of God herein. This will be an especiall means to stay the rage of any headstrong affection in all our afflictions. In the world the manner of men is, if health, wealth, and ease abound, to thinke all is well: but if crosses come; as losse of friends, and losse of goods, then men cry out, as being straitened by their wits; the reason is, because they looke onely at the outward meanes, and the Gods providence to them; not being able to see any goodnesse or providence of God out of ordinarie meanes. A gaine whereon a man is stored with riches, honour, wealth and prosperitie, hee must not barely looke on them, but behold withall Gods goodnesse, and blessing in them: for if that be wanting; all the riches in the world are nothings. Likewise in receiving thy meate and drinke, thou must looke further into the blessing of God vpon it, which if it be away, thy meate and thy drinke can no more nourish thee then the stone in the wall. And the same must we doe in every business of our calling; which if men would beare to practise, they would not so much trust to the meanes, as honour, wealth, fauour, &c. but rather to God himselfe. The Lord by the Prophet Habakkuk reprooves the Chaldeans for offering sacrifice vnto their nets; which sinne they committed because they looked only vpon outward things: and like moles had no power to see further into them, and to behold the worke of God in all their proceedings. And this is the very cause why we are vnthankfull for Gods benefits: for though we behold the bare creatures, yet are wee so poreblind, that wee cannot discern any blessing and providence of God in them. Therefore let vs learne to looke vpon both ioynly together, & so shall we be thankfull vnto God in prosperitie, and patient in adversity with Job and David. This lesson Paul learned; I can bee ashaied (saith he) and I can abound; every where in all things I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, and to abound, and to be want.

Fourthly, seeing Gods providence disposeth all things, we are taught to gather obseruations of the same, in things both past and present, that we may learne thereby to be armed against the time to come. Thus David when he was to encounter with Goliath, gathered hope and confidence to himselfe for the time to come, by the obseruation of Gods providence in the time past; for, saith he, when I kept my Fathers shepe, I slew a Lyon & a Bear: thus denoued the flocke; now the Lord will deliver me out of the paw of the Lyon, and out of the paw of the Bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine.

Fifthly, because Gods providence disposeth all things, when wee make lawfull promises to doe any thing, we must put in, or at the least conceiue this condition, [if the Lord will] for S. James saith; that we ought to say, If the Lord will, and if we live, we will doe this or that. This also was Dauids practise, for to all the congregation of Israel he said, If it seems good to you, and if it proceeds from the Lord our God, wee will send to and fro.

Sixthly, seeing Gods providence is manifest in ordinarie meanes, it behooveth every man in his calling to vse them carefully: and when ordinarie meanes be at hand, we must not looke for any helpe without them, though the Lord be able to doe what hee will without meanes. Job when many Achaniz came against him, he hartned his souldiers though they were but few in number, bidding them be strong & valiant for their people, and for the cities of their God; wherein the Lord doe that which is good in his eyes. And our Saviour Christ auoucheth it to be flat tempting of God for him to leape downe from the pinnacle of the Temple to the ground, whereas there was an ordinarie way at hand to descend by staires. Hence it appears, that such persons, as will vse no meanes whereby they may come to repent and beleeue, doe indeede no more repent and beleeue, then they can be able to liue which neither eate nor drinke.

And thus much of the duties. Now follow the Consolations. First, this very point of Gods speciall providence, is a great comfort to Gods church: for the Lord moderateth the rage of the diuell & wicked men, that they shall not hurt the people of God. David saith, The Lord is at my right hand, therefore I shall not slide. And, when Josephs brethren were afraid because they had sold him into Egypt, he comforted them saying, that it was GOD that sent him before them for their preservation. So King David when his souldiers were purposed to stone him to death, he was in great sorrow; but it is said, hee comforted himselfe in the Lord his God. Where we may see, that a man which hath grace to beleeue in God, and relye on his providence in all his afflictions and extremities shall haue wonderfull peace and consolation.

Before wee can proceede to the articles which follow, it is requisite that we should intreat of one of the greatest workes of Gods providence that can be, because the opening of it giueth light to all that inuestigate. And this worke is a Preparation of such meanes whereby God will manifest his iustice and mercie. It hath two parts, the first permission of the fall of man, and the giuing of the Covenant of grace. For S. Paul teacheth when he saith, That God shutt up all vnder vnbellefe, that hee might haue merrie vpon all. And againe, The Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the faith of Christ Iesus should bee giuen to them that beleeue.

Touching the first, that wee might rightly conceiue of mans fall, we are to search out the nature and parts of sinne. Sinne is any thing whatsoeuer is against the wil & word of God: as S. Iohn saith, Sin is the transgression of the law. And this definition Paul confirmeth when he saith, that by the law comes the knowledge of sinne: and, where no law is, there is no transgression: and, Sinne is not imputed, where there is no law.

In sinne we must consider three things: the fault, the guilt, the punishment. The fault, is the anomic or the inobedience it selfe, and it comprehends not onely huge and notorious offences, idolatrie, blasphemie, theft, treason, adulterie, and all other crimes that the world cries shame on: but every disordered thought, affection, inclination: yea, every defect of that which the law requireth.

The guilt of sinne, is whereby a man is guiltie before God, that is, bound and made subiect to punishment. And here two questions must be skanned: where man is bound? & by what? For the first, Man is bound in conscience. And hereupon the conscience of every sinner sits within his heart as a little iudge to tell him that hee is bound before God to punishment. For the second, it is the order of diuine iustice set down by God which binds the conscience of the sinner before God: for he is Creator and Lord, and man is a creature, and therefore must either obey his will and commandement, or suffer punishment. Now then by vertue of Gods law, conscience binds ouer the creature to beare a punishment for his offence done against God: yea it tells him, that hee is in danger to be iudged and condemned for it. And therefore the conscience is as it were the Lords Sergeant to informe the sinner of the bond and obligation whereby hee alwaies stands bound before God.

The third thing which followeth sinne, is punishment, and that is death. So Paul saith, The sting of sinne is death: whereby death, we must vnderstand a double death, both of body and soule. The death of the body is a separation of the body from the soule. The second death, is a separation of the whole man, but especially of the soule from the glorious presence of God, I say not simply from the presence of God, for God is euer where; but onely from the ioyfull presence of Gods glory. Now these two deaths are the sting or allowance of sinne: and the least fin which a man committeth, doth deserue these two punishments. For in every sinne the infinite iustice of God is violated: for which cause these must needs be inflicted an infinite punishment, that there may be a proportion betweene the punishment and the offence. And therefore that distinction of sinne which Papists make, namely, that some are in themselves veniall, & some mortall, is false, and hereby confuted: otherwise in respect of the diuers estate and condition of men, finnes are either veniall or mortall. Veniall they are to the elect, whose finnes are pardonable in Christ: but to the reprobate all finnes are mortall.

Neuertheless we hold not all finnes equal, but that they are greater or less according to the diueritie of objects and other circumstances.

Thus much of sinne in general: now wee come to the parts of it. The first sinne of all that euer was in man, is the sinne of Adam, which was his disobedience in eating the forbidden fruite: In handling whereof sundrie points are to be opened, but let vs begin with the causes thereof.

The outward efficient cause was the diuell. And though hee is not named by Moses in the history of the fall, yet that is not to trouble vs, for wee must not conceiue otherwise of the serpent, then of the instrument and mouth of the diuell. For it is not likely, that it being a brute creature should be able to reason and determine of good and euil, of truth & falsehood. Now in the temptation the diuell shewes his malice and his fraud. His malice, in that whereas hee can not ouerturne God himselfe, yet hee labours to disturbe the order which hee hath set downe in the creation, and especially the image of God in the most excellent creatures on earth, that they may bee in the same miserable condition with himselfe. His fraud, First, in that hee begins his temptation with the woman being the weaker person, and not with the man, which course he still continueth:

as may appear by this, that (a) more women are entangled with witchcraft and force than men. Secondly, he shewes his fraud, in that he proceeds very slyly and intangles Eve by certaine steppes and degrees: For first, by mouing a question, he drawes her to listen vnto him; and to reason with him of Gods commandement. Secondly hee brings her to looke vpon the tree, and wisely to view the beauty of the fruit. Thirdly, hee makes her to doubt of the absolute truth of Gods word and promise, & to beleue his contrarie lies. Fourthly, hauing blinded her minde with his false perswasion, he desires and lusts after the forbidden fruit, and thereupon takes it, eates it, and giues it to her husband.

Ecd. 7. 31

The inward cause, was the will of our first parents, enen in the testimonie of their owne consciences, as Salomon saith, Tibi hunc I found, that God made man righteous; but they have found many inventions. But it may be objected, that if Adam were created good, he could not bee the cause of his owne fall, because a good tree cannot bring forth euill fruit. Ans. Freedom of his will is four-fold. I. Freedom to euill alone, this is onely in wicked men and Angels, and is indeede a bondage; the second, is freedom to good alone, and that is in God & the good Angels by Gods grace; the third, is freedom to good in part, ioynd with some want of libertie, by reason of sinne; and this is in the regenerate in this life: the fourth, is freedom either to good or euill indifferently. And this was in Adam before his fall, who though he had no inclination to sin, but only to that which was acceptable to God: yet was he not bound by any necessity, but had his libertie freely to chuse or refuse either good or euill. And this is euident by the very tenor of Gods commandement, in which hee forbids Adam to eate the forbidden fruit: and thereby shewing that he being created righteous, & not prone to sin, had power to keepe or not to keepe the commandement: though since the fall, both hee and we after him cannot but sinne. Wherefore Adam being allured by Satan, of his owne free accord changed himselfe and fell from God. Now then as the good tree changed from good to euill, brings forth euill fruit: so Adam by his owne inward and free motion changing from good to euill, brings forth euill.

As for God, hee is not to bee reputed as an author or cause any way of this sinne, for hee created Adam & Eve, righteous, endued them with righteous wills: and he told them what he would exact at their hand, & what they could performe: yea hee added threatnings, that with the feare of danger hee might terrifie them from sinne. Some may say, whereas God foretold that Adam would abuse the libertie of his will, why would hee not preuent it? Ans. There is a double grace (b) the one to be able to will and do that which is good, the other to be able to perseuer in willing and doing

A the same. Now God gaue the first to Adam, and not the second: and he is not to be blamed of vs, though hee confirmed him not with new grace, for he is debert to no man to giue him so much as the least grace; whereas he had already giuen a plentifull measure thereof to him. And God did hold back to conferre any further grace vpon iust cause. I. It was his pleasure, that this fact should bee an occasion or way to exercise his mercie in the saving of the elect, and his iustice in the deserved condemnation of impenitent sinners. And yles Adam had fallen for himselfe and others, there should haue beene found no miserie in men, on whom God might take pite in his Sonne, nor wickednesse which he might condemne; and therefore neither manifestation of iustice, nor mercie. I. I. It was the will of God in part to forsake Adam to make manifest the weaknes that is in the most excellent creatures, without the speciall and continuall assistance of God. III. There is a double libertie of will, one is to will good or euill; this belongs to the creature in this world, & therefore Adam receiued it. The other, is to will good alone. This hee wated, because it is referred to the life to come: and though we know no cause of this dealing of God, yet is it one steppe to the feare of God for vs to hold that good and righteous which hee appointeth or willeth: and not to square the works & iudgements of God by our crooked reason. And yet to come to reason it selfe, Who can here complaine of God? can the diuell? but God did not cause him to tempt or deceive our first parents, an Adam and Eve? but they fell freely without any motion or intigation from God, and their owne conscience accused them for it. Can the posterity of Adam? but the Elect receiue more in Christ then they lost in Adam: and the reprobate, ouerwhelmed with the burden of their owne sinnes, and thereupon receiving nothing but due and deserved damnation, cannot find fault. But some may further reply and say, he that foreseeth an euill and doth not preuent it, is a cause of it: but God did foresee the fall of man, and did not preuent it. Ans. The rule is generally true in man, that the foreseer of an euill not preuenting it, is in some sort a doer of it: for it is the sentence of the law of God, to which man is bound from the first Creation. But God is above all his lawes, and not bound to them: he is an absolute Lord and Law-giuer, and therefore his actions are not within the compass of morall lawes, as mens are. Whereupon it folloves, that though hee did foresee mans defection, yet is hee free from all blame in not preuenting it. For with him there bee good causes of permitting euill.

And though God be no cause of mans fall, yet must we not imagine that it came to passe by chance or fortune, whereas the least things that are, come to passe with Gods providence. Neither was it by any bare permissio without his decree and will: for that is to make an idle pronouncement: neither did it happen against the will of God; hee vterly nilling it, for then it could not haue bin, vnles we denie God to be omnipotent. It remains therefore that this fall did so proceede of the voluntarie motion of Adam, as that God did in part ordaine and will the permitting of it, not as it was a sinne against his commandement, but as it was further in the counsell of God a way to execute his iustice and mercie. Against this which I say, diuers things are objected. First, that if Adam did that which God in any respect willed, then hee did not sinne at all. Ans. Hee that willeth, and doth that which God willeth, for all that sinne; vnles hee will it in the same manner with God, and for the same end. Now in the permitting of this fact, God intended the manifesting of his glorie: but our first parents intending no such thing, sought not onely to be like, but also to be equall with God. Secondly, it is alledged that Adam could not but fall necessarily, if God decreed it. Answer. Adam fall that came not to passe without Gods decree, and therefore in that respect was necessary: was neuertheless in respect of Adam free-will contingent and not necessary: Gods decree not taking away the freedom of will, but only ordering it. Lastly, it is alledged, that Gods will is the cause of Adams will, and Adam will the cause of his fall, and that therefore Gods will shall be the cause of the fall. Answer. It must needs be granted, that Gods will is a mouing cause of the wills of euill men; yet marke how: not as they are euill wills simply, but as they are wills: and therefore when God inclineth the euill will of his creature to his good purpose, hee is nothing at all intangled with defect or euill of his will.

Touching the time of the fall, the received opinion in former ages hath bin, that our first parents fell the same day in which they were created, and therefore Angustine writes that they stood but sixe houres. And though wee can not determine of the certaine time, yet in all likelihood was it very short. For Moses presently after that he had set down the creation of man, without the interpositio of any thing else, comes immediately to the fall. And considering the nature of the diuell is without ceasing to shew his malice, no doubt he tooke the first occasion that possibly might bee had to bring man to the same damnation with himselfe. And our Saviour Christ saith, that the diuell was a man-slayer from the beginning, namely, from the beginning not of the creation of the world, or of time, but of man. And Eue saith, See shall eate of the fruit of the trees of the garden, it may be, insinuating that as yet shee had not eaten when the diuell tempted her.

Touching the greatness of mans fall, some haue made a small matter of it, because it was the eating of an apple or some such fruit. But we must not measure the greatness or smallness of a sinne by the object or mat-er where

A bout it is occupied, but by the commandement of God, and by the disobedience or offence of his infinite Maiestie. And that this fact of Adam and Eve was no small fault, but a notorious crime and apostasie, in which they withdrew themselves from vnder the power of God, nay reiect and deny him, will euidently appeare, if we take a view of all the particular sinnes that be contained in it. The first, is unbeliefe, in that they doubted and distrustful of the truth of Gods word which he spake to them. The second, is contempt of God, in that they beleued the lies of the diuell rather then him. For when God saith, In the day that he shall eate thereof, yeshall die the death, it is as nothing with Eve: but when the diuell comes and saith, Thou shalt not die at all, that she takes hold on. The third, is pride and ambition. For they did eate the forbidden fruit, that they might be as gods, namely, as the Father, the Sonne, the holy Ghost. The fourth, is unthankfulness. God had made them, excellent creatures in his owne image, that is nothing with them to be like vnto him, vnlesse they may be equall with him. The fifth, is curiositie, whereby they affected greater wisdom then God had giuen them in creation, & a greater measure of knowledge then God had reuealed to them. The sixth is reproachfull blasphemie, in that they subscribed to the saying of the diuell, in which he charged God with lying and enuie. The seventh, is malice: for by this means they bereaued themselves and their posteritie of the fellowship & graces of Gods spirit, & bring vpon their own heads the eternal wrath of God. The eighth, is discontentation, in that they sought for an higher condition then that was, in which G O D had placed them. In a word, in this one single fact is comprised the breach of the whole law of God. And wee should often thinke vpon this, that we may learne to wonder at the iust iudgements of God in punishing this fall, and his vnspokeable goodness in receiuing men to mercy after the same.

And here wee must not omit to remember the largeness of Adams fall. Sines are either personall or generall. Personall are such as are peculiar to one or some few persons, and makethem alone guilty. Generall, that bee common to all men: and such is Adams fall. It is a sinne not onely of the person of one man, but of the whole nature of man. And Adam must be considered not as a priuate man, but as a roote or head bearing in it all mankind: or as a publike person representing all his posterity, and therefore when he sinned, all his posterity sinned with him; as in a Parliament whatsoever is done by the Burgesse of the shiere, is done by euery person in the shiere. As Paul saith, By one man sinne entered into the world, and so death went oner all for as much as all haue sinned. And here lyes the difference betweene Adams fall and the sinnes of men, as Cains murder, which makes not the posterity of Cain guilty, because he was neuer apointed pointed by God to bee the roote of his posterity, as Adam was: and therefore his sinne is personall, whereas Adams is not. Yet this which I say, must not be vnderstood of all the sins of Adam, but only of the first.

From the fall of Adam springeth original sinne, so commonly called not only as a fruit thereof, but also as a iust punishment of it. And after the forefayd fall, it is in Adam & his posterity, as the mother & roote of all other sin: yet with this distinction, that actual sinne was first in Adam, and then came original; but in vs first is original sinne, & then after follows actual.

Original sinne is termed diuerfly in scriptures, as the figh, the old man, because it is in vs before grace; concupiscence, sinne that is ready to compass vs about, the sinning sinne: & it is termed original, because it hath bin in mans nature euer since the fall, and because it is in euery man at the very instant of his conception and birth, as Dauid plainly saith, Behold, I was borne in iniquitie, & in sinne hath my mother conceived mee: not meaning properly his parents sinne (for he was borne in lawfull marriage) but his owne hereditarie sinne, whereof he was guiltie in his mothers wombe.

But let vs a litle search the nature of it, Considering it hath place in man, it must bee either the substance of body or soule, or the faculties of the substance, or the corruption of the faculties. Now it cannot bee the substance of man corrupted: for then our Saviour Christ in taking our nature vpon him, should also take vpon him our sinnes, and by that meanes should as well haue neede of a redeemer as other men: & againe the soules of men should not be immortal. Neither is it any one or all the faculties of men. For euery one of them, as namely, the vnderstanding, will, affections, and all other powers of body or soule were in man from the first creation; whereas sinne was not before the fall. Wherefore it remaines, that original sinne is nothing els, but a disorder or euill disposition in all the faculties and inclinations of man, whereby they are all carried in ordinarily against the law of God.

The subiect or place of this sinne, is not any part of man, but the whole body & soule. For first of all, the naturall appetite to meate and drinke, and the power of nourishing is greatly corrupted, as appeares by discaies, aches, sicknesses, and the power of the abuse of meate and drinke. Secondly, the outward senses, are as corrupt, and that made Dauid to pray, that God would turne his eyes from beholding of vanity; and Saint Iohn to say, What soeuer is in the world, is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, & the pride of life. Thirdly, touching the vnderstanding, the spirit of God saith, that the frame of the heart of man is only euill continually: so as we are not able of our selues to thinke a good thought. And therefore withall, the will of man and his affections are auersively corrupt; and hereupon the doctrine of Christ is, that wee must re-

A nounce our own wils. Lastly, all mens strength to good things is nothing out of Christ.

The propagation of this sinne, is the deriuing of it from Adam to all his posterity, whereby it runneth as a leprosie ouer all mankind. But in what manner this propagation is made, it is hard to define. The common opinion of Diuines is, that it may bee done two wayes. The first is this: God when he created Adam in the beginning, set downe this appointment and order touching the estate of man, that whatsoeuer Adam receiued of God, hee should receiue it not onely for himselfe, but for his posterity, and whatsoeuer grace of God he lost, hee should lose not onely to himselfe, but to all his posterity: And hereupon

B Adam when he sinned, hee deprived first of all himselfe, and then secondly all his posterity of the Image of God; because all mankind was in his loines when he sinned. Now then vpon the former appointment, when the soules of men are created and placed in the body, God forsakes them, not in respect of the substance of the soule or the faculties, but onely in respect of his owne image, whereof the soules are deprived; after which follows the defect or want of righteousness, which is original sin. And God in depriving man of that which Adam lost, is not therefore to be thought to be the author or maintainer of sinne, but a iudge. For this deprivation of the image of God, so farre forth as it is inflicted by him vpon mankind, it must be conceived as a deserved punishment for the sinne of Adam and all men in him, which punishment they pulled vpon themselves. The second way is, that the corruption of nature is deriued from the parents in generation by the body; for as a sweete oyle powred into a faulty vesselk, loseth his purenes, and is infected by the vesselk: so the soule created good, and put into the corrupt bodie, receiues contagion thence. And this conjunction of the pure soule with the corrupt body, is not against the goodness of God; because it is a iust punishment of the sinne of all men in Adam. It may be this which hath bene said will not satisfie the minds of all: yet if any will bee curious to search further into this point, let

D he know that there is another matter which more concerns them to looke vnto. When a mans house is on fire, there is no time then to inquire how, and which way, and whence the fire came, but our duty is with all speede & expedition to vse all good meanes to stay it. And so considering that our whole nature is really infected & poisoned with the loathsome contagion of original sinne, which is a weight sufficient to presse downe the soule to the gulf of hell, it stands vs in hand a thousand fold more to vse the meanes whereby it may be taken away, then to dispute how it came.

Some may alleadge against the propagation of sinne, that holy parents beget holy children, which are void of original sinne: because it stands not with reason, that parents should Propagation of original sinne.

R. 6. 5. 14.

conuey that to their childre which they themselves want, namely, the guilt & the punishment and the fault of sinne in part. Ans. 1. Men are not in this life perfectly holy. For sanctification is but in parts, & therefore they can not possibly beget children pure from all sin. Secondly, parents beget children as they are men, and not as they are holy men; and by generation they deriue vnto their children nature with the corruption therof, and not grace, which is about nature. Take any corne, yea the finest wheat that euer was, winow it as cleane as possibly may bee: after ward sowe it, weede it also when it is sowne, reape it in due time, and carrie it to the barn; when it is threshed, you shall finde as much chaffe in it as euer was before: and why? because God hath set this order in the creation, that it shall spring and grow, so oft as it is sowed, with the thalke, eare, blade, & all: so likewise though the parents be neuer so holy, the children as they come of them are conceived and borne wholly corrupt, because God tooke this order in the creation, that whatsoeuer euill Adam procured, he should bring it not only on himselfe, but vpon all his posterity: by vertue of which degree, the propagation of sin is continued without any interruption, though parents themselves bee borne anew by the spirit of God.

And here wee must not omit to speake of the quantitie or greatness of original sinne, for the opening whereof wee must consider three points. The first, that original sinne is not diuerse, but one and the same in kinde in euery man, as the generall and common nature of man is one and the same in all men. The second, that this sinne is not in some men more, in some me lesse, but in euery man equally, as all men doe equally from Adam participate the nature of man, & are equally the children of wrath. Some, it may be, will say, that this can not be true, because some men are of better natures then others are: some of disposition cruell and feneer, some againe gentle and milde: some very licentious and disordered, some very ciuill. Ans. The differences that bee in men wanting the feare of God, arise not of this that they haue more or lesse original corruption, but of the restraint and limitation of mans corruption. For in some God breedeth sin more then in others, and in them is found ciuilitie: and againe in some lesse, and in such the rebellion of nature breakes forth vnto all misdeameour. And indeede, if God should not keepe the vtmost disposition of men within compass, otherwise more, otherwise lesse, as shall seeme good vnto his maiesty: impiety, cruelty, iniustice, and all manner of sins would breake out into such a measure that there should bee no quiet liuing for men in the world, and no place for Gods Church. And thus it is manifest, that although all men be not equal in the practise of wickednes, yet that is no hinderance but they may be equal in the corruption of nature to selfe. The third

A point is, that original sin is so huge and large euery way, that it may truly bee termed the roote or feede, not of some few sins, but of all sinnes whatsoeuer, euen of the very finagist the holy Ghost. We must not imagine it to be an inclination or pronensse to one or two faults, but a pronensse to all euery sinne that is practised in the world; and that in all persons young and old, high & low, male and female. It is a most horrible villany for a man to kill his father or mother, or his child: yet some there be that do so: at the hearing whereof we vse to wonder, and to testifie our dislike by saying, that the doers thereof were wicked and diuellish persons, and it is truly said. Neuertheless we must vnderstand, that although we abstaine from such heinous practises, yet the very roote of such sinnes, that is, a disposition vnto them, is found in vs also. Iulian the Apostate both liuing and dying blasphemed Christ. Alerd, & Pontius Pilate, and the wicked Jewes crucified him, and Iudas betrayed him. Men vse to say that if Christ were now alive, they would not doe so for all the world. But let vs better consider of the matter. The same naturall corruption of heart that was in them, is also in vs, we being the childre of Adam as well as they: and by force of this corruption, if Christ were now liuing on earth, thou wouldest if like occasio were offered either doe as Iudas did in betraying him, or as Pilate did, deliuer him to bee crucified, or as the soldiers, thrust him through with their speares, or as Iulian, pierce him with all manner of blasphemies, if God withheld his graces from thee, and leaue thee to thy selfe. In a word, let men conceiue in mind the most notorious trespasse that can be, though they doe it not, intend to do it, and neuer doe it: yet the matter, beginning, and seed thereof is in themselves. This made Jeremy say, The heart of man is deceitfull and wicked above all things, who can know it? It is like a huge sea, the banks whereof cannot be seene, nor the bottome searched. In comon experience we see it come to passe, that men, Protestants, to day, to morrow Papists of Christians, hereticks, now friends, but presently after foes: this day honest & ciuill me, the next day cruel murderers. Now what is the cause of this difference? surely the hidden corruption of the heart, that will thrust a man forward to any sin where occasion is offered. This point must be remembred & oft thought vpon.

From Original sinne springeth actual sinne, which is nothing else but the fruit of the corrupt heart, either in thought, word or deede.

Thus much touching mans fall into sinne by Gods iust permission. Now follows the good vse which we must make thereof. First, by this we learne to acknowledge & beuallie our owne frailty. For Adam in his innocencie being created perfectly righteous, when hee was once tempted by the diuell to lay away from God: what shall wee doe then in like case which are by nature folde vnder sinne, and in our felues a thousand times weaker then Adam was? Many men there bee that mingle themselves with al companies; tell thee of the danger thereof, they will presently reply, that they haue such a strong faith that no badde company can hurt them. But alas, filly people. Satan bewitcheth them, & makes them to beleue falsehood to bee truth: they know not their miserable estate. If Adam, faith Bernard, had a downfall in Paradise, what shall wee doe that are cast forth to the dunghill? Let vs therefore often come to a serious consideration of our owne weaknesse, and follow withal the practise of David, who being priuie to himselfe touching his owne corruption, prayeth to God in this manner, Knit my heart to thee, O Lord, that I may feare thy name. Psal. 86. 11. Secondly, we learne hereby absolutely to submit our felues to the authoritie of God, and simply to refolue our felues, that whatsoever hee commandeth is right and iust, though the reason of it bee not knowne to vs. For we condescended to listen to the speech of the Serpent, and without any calling the reasoned with it of a most waighy matter, and that in the absence of Adam her head and husband, namely, of the truth and glory of God: and hereby was brought to doubt of Gods word, & so ouerturned. Thirdly, if all men by Adams fall bee shut vp vnder damnation, there is no cause why any of vs should stand vpon his birth, riches, wisdom, learning, or any other such gifts of God: there is nothing in vs that is more able to couer our vilenesse and nakednesse, then fig-tree leaues were able to couer the offence of Adam from Gods eyes. We are vnder the wrath of God by nature, and cannot attaine to euerslating life of our felues. Wherefore it doth stand euery one of vs in hand to abate our felues vnder the mightie hand of God, in that wee are become by our finnes the very basest of all the creatures vpo earth, yea vterly to despair in respect of our felues, and with bleeding hearts to bewaile our owne case. There is no danger in this: it is the very way to grace: none can be a liuely member of Christ till his conscience condemne him, and make him quite out of heart in respect of himselfe. And the want of this is the cause why so few perceiue any sweetness or comfort in the Gospel: and why it is so little loued and embraced now adaies. Lastly, if all mankind be shut vp vnder vnbeleife, the duty of euery man is, to labour in vning all good meanes whereby we may be deliuered from this bondage, and to pray to God with David, Create in mee a cleane heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. And cry out with Paul, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death? And we must neuer be at rest, till we haue some assurance in conscience, that in Christ wee haue freedoms giue thanks that we are deliuered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of Christ. This should be the affection of euery man, because the spirituall thraldome vnder sin is of all miseries most loathsome and burdenfome. And in this respect the day of death should be vnto vs most welcome, because it doth vnloose vs from this miserable estate, in which wee doe almost nothing but displease God. For this is the greatest griefe that can be to such as are indeed the children of God, by their finnes to offend their mercifull father. As for those which feele not the weight of their naturall guiltinesse and corruption, but lye slumbering in the security of their owne hearts, they are therefore the more miserable, in that being plunged in the gulfe of all misery, yet they feele no misery.

Thus much of the permission of the fall of man. Now we come to the Covenat of grace: Which is nothing else, but a compact made betweene God & man touching reconciliation and life euerslating by Christ. This covenat was first of all revealed & deliuered to our first parents in the garden of Eden, immediately after their fall by God himselfe, in these words, The seed of the woman shall bruis the serpents head, & afterward it was continued & renewed with a part of Adams posteritie, as with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, &c. but it was most fully revealed and accomplished at the coming of Christ.

In the Covenat I will consider two things; the parties recollid, betweene whom the covenat is made, and the foundation thereof. The parties are God & man. God is the principall, and he promisseth righteounesse & life eternal in Christ: Man againe binds himselfe by Gods grace to beleue and to rest vpon the promise. Here it may be demanded, why man is more in the covenat then Angels. Ans. The will of God in this point is not revealed, vlesse it be because angels fell of themselves, not moued by any other: but man did fall by them. Again, it may be asked, whether all mankind were euery in the covenat or no? Ans. Wee can not say that all and euery man hath bin and now is in the covenat, but onely that little part of mankind, which in all ages hath bin the Church of God, and hath by faith embraced the covenat: as Paul plainly auoucheth, Galat. 3. 22. The Scripture (saith he) hath concluded all vnder sin: that the promise of the faith of Iesus Christ (should be giuen) not vnto all men but to them that beleue. Without faith no man can please God; and therefore God makes no covenat of reconciliation without faith. Again, since the beginning of the world there hath beene alwaies a distinction betweene man & man. This appeares in the very tenour of the words of the covenat made with our first parents, where God saith he will put difference betweene the seed of the woman and the seed of the Serpent: meaning by the seede of the woman, Christ with all the Elect whom the Father hath giuen vnto him, who shall bruis the Serpents head, & tread Satan vnder their feet. Ro. 16. 20. And by the seede of the Serpent hee meane wicked men that liue & die in their finnes, as S. Iohn saith, 1. Iob. 3. 8. He that committeth sinne is of the diuill. And according to this distinction in times following was Abel receiued into the covenat, & Cain reiect: some were the sons of God in the daies of Nor, some the sonnes of men: In Abrahams family, Ismael is cast out, and the covenat established in Isaac: Isaac is loued, Elsay is hated. And this distinction in the families of Abraham, Isaac, & Jacob, Paul approueth, when he maketh some to be the children of the flesh, and some other the children of the promise, Rom. 9. 8. And againe, the Iewes a people of God in the covenat, the Gentiles no people. For Paul makes it a priuiledge of the Iewes to haue the adoption, and covenat, and the seruice of God, and the promises belonging vnto them, whereas he saith of the Ephesians, Eph. 1. 12. that they were alien from the common wealth of Israel, & were strangers from the covenants of promise, and had no hope, and were without Christ, and without God in the world. And the same may be said of the whole body of the Gentiles excepting here & there a man, who were conuered and became Profelytes. And this manifest in that they wanted the word and the Sacraments, and teachers. And this saying of the Prophet Osée, I will call them my people, which were not my people: and her beloved, which was not beloved, is alledged by Paul to prouoe the calling of the Gentiles.

Obiect. I. Some doe alleadge to the contrary, that when the covenat was made with our first parents, it was also in them made with all mankind, not one man excepted: and that the distinction and difference betweene man and man, a rithe of their vnbeleife and contempt of the covenat afterward.

Ans. Indeed in the estate of innocencie, Adam by creation receiued grace for himselfe and his posterity; & in his fall he transgressed not only for himselfe, but for all his posterity: but in receiuing the covenat of grace it cannot be proued that he receiued it for himselfe and for all mankind: nay the distinction betweene the seede of the woman and the seede of the Serpent, mentioned in the very first giuing of the covenat, shewes the contrary; for if, after the fall, all and euery part of mankind were receiued into the covenat, then all men without restraint should bee the seede of the woman, bruis the Serpents head, and the Serpent should haue no seed at all. And again, all men cannot be charged with vnbeleife and contempt in respect of the Euangelicall covenat, but only such persons as haue knowne it, or at the least heard of it. And therefore sundry heads of the nations may be charged with vnbeleife, as Cain, Cham, Iaphet, Ammon, Mobab, Ismael, Elsay, Median, for they being neere to the fathers, heard the promises concerning Christ, offered sacrifices, & observed external rites of the Church, but afterward fell away from the sincere worship of the true God to idolatry and all manner of wickednes, and became enemies of God and his people. But we plainly deny, that there was or could be the like vnbeleife and contempt of Gods grace in their posterity, which for the most part neuer so much as heard of any covenat; their ancestors indeauouring alwaies to bury & extinguish the memory of that which they hated.

Obiect. II. It is objected againe, that the Covenat was made with Abraham and with all mankind after him, because (saith the Lord) thou hast obeyed my voice, in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. Gen. 22. 18.

Ans. Paul giues a double answer, first, that the place must bee vnderstood of many nations: secondly, that it must be vnderstood not of all nations in all ages, but of all nations of the last age of the world. For saith he, Galat. 3. 8. The Scripture foreseeing that God would iustifie the Gentiles through faith, preached before the Gospel vnto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all the nations be blessed. Well, to conclude this point, in the making of the covenat, there must bee a mutual consent of the parties on both sides, & beside the promise on Gods part, there must be also a retipulation on mans part; otherwise the covenat is not made. Now then, it must needs follow that all vnbeleievers concerning grace offered in Christ, are out of the Covenat, as also such as neuer heard of it; for where there is no knowledg, there is no consent; and before the coming of Christ, the greatest part of the world neuer knew the Messiah, nor heard of the Covenat, as Paul saith to the learned Athenians, Act. 17. 30. The time of this ignorance God regarded not, but now he admonisheth all men euery where to repent.

The foundation and ground-work of the Covenat is Christ Iesus the Mediatour, in whom all the promises of God are yea and amen, and therefore he is called the angel of the covenat, & the covenat of the people to be made with all nations in the last age. Now then that we may proceede at large to open the substance of the Covenat, we are in the next place to come to that part of the Creede, which concerns the second person in Trinity set down in these words: And Iesus Christ his only Son, &c. from which words to the very end of the Creed, such points onely are laide downe, as do notably vnfold the benefits and the matter of the covenat. Now the second person is described to vs by three things: first his titles: secondly, his incarnation: thirdly, his two-fold estate. His titles are in number foure. I. Iesus. II. Christ. III. his only Son. IV. our Lord. His incarnation, and his two-fold estate are set downe afterward.

To come to his titles, the first is Iesus, to which if wee adde the claue, I beleue, on this manner, I beleue in Iesus, &c. the article which we now haue in hand will appeare to be most excellent: because it hath most notable promises annexed to it. When Peter confessed Christ to be the Sonne of the liuing God, he answered, upon this rocke will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it.

The foundation of the Covenat. Mat. 2. 1. Eph. 1. 9. 8.

1 Joh. 4. 15. And againe, He that confesseth that Christ is the Sonne of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. And againe, To him give all the Prophets witness, that through his name all that beleue in him shall receive remission of finnes. Paul saith, Beleue in the Lord Iesus, and thou shalt be saved, and all thy household. Thus then the confession in which wee acknowledge that wee beleue in Iesus Christ, hath a promise of fellowship with God, and of life everlasting. But it may be objected, that every spirit (as Saint Iohn saith) which confesseth, that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God. Now the diuell, and all his angels and vnbeleueers do thus much: therefore why may not they also haue the benefit of this confession? Answer. By spirit in that place is neither meant angels nor men, nor any creature, but the doctrine which teacheth that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh; and it is of God, because it is holy and diuine, and hath God to be the Author of it. As for the diuell and his angels, they can indeede confesse that Christ the Sonne of God was made man, and a wicked man may teach the same; but vnto the confession whereunto is annexed a promise of eternall life, is required true faith, whereby we doe not only know and acknowledge this or that to be true in Christ, but also rest vpon him: which neither Satan, nor wicked men can doe. And therefore by this confession, the Church of God is distinguished from all other companies of men in the world which beleue not; as Paynims, Hereticks, Atheists, Turkes, Iewes, and all other infidels.

This name Iesus, was given to the Sonne of God by the Father, and brought from heauen by an Angel vnto Ioseph and Mary; and on the day when he was to be circumcised as the manner was, this name was given vnto him by his parents, as they were commanded from the Lord by the Angel Gabriel. And therefore the name was not given by chance, or by the alone will of the Parents, but by the most wise appointment of God himselfe.

The name in Hebrew is Iehouana, and it is changed by the Grecians into Iesus, which significeth a Sauour. And it may be called the proper name of Christ, signifying his office and both his natures, because he is both a perfect & absolute Sauour, as also the alone Sauour of man, because the work of saluation is wholly and only wrought by him, & no part thereof is referred to any creature in heauen or in earth. As Peter saith, Act. 4. 12. For among men there is no other name given vnder heauen whereby we may be saved but by the name of Iesus. And the author to the Hebrewes saith, Hebr. 7. 25. That he is able perfectly to save them that come vnto God by him, seeing he neuer lieth to make intercession for them. If any shall object, that the promises of saluation are made to them which keep the commandments: the answer is, that the law of God doth exact most absolute and perfect obedience, which can be found in no man but in Christ, who neuer sinned; and therefore it is not given vnto vs now, that we might by our felues fulfill it, and worke out our own saluation, but that being condemned by it, we might wholly depend on Christ for eternall life. If any further alleadge, that such as walk according to the commandments of God, though their obedience be imperfect, yet they haue the promises of this life and of the life to come. The answer is, that they haue so indeed, yet not for their works, but according to their workes, which are the fruits of their faith, whereby they are ioyned to Christ, for whose merits onely they stand righteous, and are acceptable before God. And whereas it is said by Peter, that baptisme saith vs, his meaning is not to signifie that there is any vertue in the water to wash away our finnes and to sanctifie vs, but that it serueth visibly to represent and confirme vnto vs the inward washing of our soules by the blood of Christ. It may further be said, that others haue bene Sauours beside Christ, as Iesuah the sonne of Nam, who for that cause is called by the same name with Christ. Answer. Iesuah after the death of Adams was appointed by God to be a guide to the children of Israel, which might defend them from their enemies, & bring them to the land of Canaan: but this deliuerance was only temporal, and that onely of one people. Now the Sonne of God is called Iesus, not because hee deliuereth the people of the Iewes onely, or because hee saue the bodies of men only, but because hee saue both body and soule, not only of the Iewes, but also of the Gentiles, from hell, death, and damnation. And whereas prophets & ministers of the word, are called Sauours; it is because they are the instruments of God to publish the doctrine of saluation which is powerfull in mens hearts, not by any vertue of theirs, but onely by the operation of the spirit of Christ. Lastly, it may be objected, that the Father and the holy Ghost are Sauours, and therefore not onely the Sonne. Answer. True it is, that in the worke of saluation all the three persons must be ioyned together, and in no wise to be seuered: the Father saue, the Sonne saue, the holy Ghost saue; yet must we distinguish them in the manner of sauing: the Father saue, the Sonne, the Sonne fauing by paying the ranfome and price of our saluation; the holy Ghost saue, by a particular applying of the ranfome vnto men. Now therefore whereas the Sonne payes the price of our redemption, and not the Father or the holy Ghost, therefore in this speciall respect hee is called in Scriptures, and intituled by the name of Iesus, and none but he.

By this which hath bene said, the Papists are faulty two waies. First, that they giue too much to the name of Iesus: for they write in plaine termes, that the bare name is selfe being used hath great power, and doth drive away diuels, though the parties that use it be void of good affections; whereas indeede it hath no more vertue then other titles of God or Christ. Secondly, they are faulty that they giue too little to the thing signified. For Christ must either bee our alone and whole Sauour, or no Sauour. Now they make him but halfe a Sauour, and they ioynne others with him as partners in the work of saluation, when they teach, that with Christs merits must be ioyned our workes of grace in the matter of iustificatiō: and with Christs satisfactiō for the wrath of God, our satisfactiō for the temporal punishment; and when they adde to Christs intercession, the intercession & patronage of Saints, especially of the Virgin Mary, whom they call the Queene of heauen, the Mother of mercy, withall requesting her, that by the authority of a mother shee would command her sonne. If this doctrine of theirs may stand, Christ cannot be the onely Sauour of mankind; but every man in part shall be Iesus to himselfe.

But let vs goe on yet further to search the speciall reason of the name, which is notably set downe by the Angel. Mat. 1. 21. Thou shalt (saith he) call his name Iesus, for he shall sanctifie people from their sins. In which words we may consider three points: I. Whom the Sonne of God shall saue. II. By what? III. From what? For the first, he shall saue his people, that is, the elect of the Iewes and Gentiles; and therefore he is called the Sauour of his bodie. We must not here imagine, that Christ is a Sauour of all & every man, for if that were true, then Christ should make satisfactiō to Gods iustice for all and every mans sins: and Gods iustice being fully satisfied, hee could not in iustice condemne any man: nay, all men should be blessed, because satisfactiō for sin, and the pardon of sinne depend one vpon another inseparably. Again, if Christ bee an effectual Sauour of all and every particular man, why is any man condemned? It will be said, because they will not beleue; belike then mans will must ouer-rule Gods will; whereas the common rule of Diuines is, that the first cause ordereth the second.

The means of saluation by Christ are two; his merit, & his efficacie. His merit, in that by his obedience to the law and by his passion, he made a satisfactiō for our sins, freed vs from death, & reconciled vs vnto God. Some may object, that the obedience and passion of Christ being long agoe ended, cannot be able to saue vs now: because that which hee did 1600. yeares agoe, may seeme to be vanished and come to nothing at this day. Answer. If Christs obedience be considered as an action, & his passion as a bare suffering, they are both ended long agoe: yet the value and price of them before God is everlasting: as in Adams fall the action of eating the forbidden fruit is ended, but the guilt of his transgression goes all our mankind, and continues still euen to this houre, & shall do to the end of the world, in those which shall be borne hereafter. The efficacie of Christ, is in that hee giues his spirit to mortifie the corruption of our natures, that we may die vnto sinne, and line vnto righteousness, and haue true comfort in terrorors of conscience, and in the pangs of death.

The evils from which we are saved, are our owne finnes, in that Christ freeeth vs from the guilt and the punishment and fault of them all, when we beleue.

Thus much for the meaning of this title Iesus. Now follow the verses which arise of it. First of all, whereas we are taught to make confession that the Son of God is Iesus, that is a Sauour: hence it must needs follow that we are lost in our felues. And indeede before we can truly acknowledge that Christ is our Sauour, this confession must needs goe before, that we are in truth, and therewithall do feele our felues to be miserable sinners vnder the wrath of God, utterly lost in regard of our felues: for Christ came to saue that which was lost, Mat. 18. 11. And when hee talked with the woman of Canaan, hee checked her and said, hee was not sent, but to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. Mat. 15. 24. Christ Iesus came to poure oyle into our wounds: Christ came to set them at liberty which are in bondage, and to place them in freedom that are in bondage. Now a man cannot poure oyle into a wound before there be a wound, or before it be opened, & we feele the smart of it. And how can we be set at liberty by Christ, except we feele our felues to be in bondage, vnder hell, death, and damnation? When the Disciples of Christ were vpon the sea in a great tempest, they cried, Master, saue vs, we perish. So no man can heartily say, I beleue Iesus Christ to be my Sauour, before hee feele, that in himselfe he is vtrly lost and cast away, without his help. But after that we perceiue our felnes to be in danger, and to be ouerwhelmed in the sea of the wrath of God, then we cry out with the disciples, Lord Iesus saue vs, we perish. Many Protestants in these daies hold Christ to be their Sauour, but it is onely formally from the teeth outward and no further: for they were neuer touched with the sense of their spiritual miserie, that they might say with Daniel, Shame and confusion be longed vnto vs: and with the Publican, I am a sinner, Lord be mercifull to me. And therefore the conclusiō is this, that if we will haue Christ to be our Sauour, we must first beleue that in our felues we are vtrly lost; and so must that place be vnderstood where Christ saith, he is not sent, but to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel; that is, to those which in their owne sense and feeling are lost in themselves.

Secondly, if Christ be a Sauour, then we must acknowledge him to be so. But how shall we doe this? I answer. Thus: A man is taken to be a skillfull Physitian by this, that many patients come vnto him and seeke for help at his hands. And so should it be with Christ. But alas, the case is otherwise. Every man can talk of Christ, but few acknowledge him to be a Sauour, by seeking to himselfe for their saluation, because they iudge them felues righteous, and feeke not themselves to stand in neede of the helpe of Christ. Nay which is more, if a man be known that can cure strange diseases, men will seeke to him by sea and land, and sell both goods & lands to get helpe at his hands. Euen so, if men were perwaded that Christ were a perfect Sauour, & that they were sick and vterly vnable to bee faued without him, they would neuer rest nor be quiet, but seeke vnto him for his helpe, and cry with Dauid, Psal. 35. 3. O Lord, say vnto my soule, that thou art my saluation. The woman that was diseased with an issue of blood, came behind our Sauour Christ, & when she had but touched him, she was healed. In the same manner, if we shal seeke to come to Christ, and do but touch his pretious body and blood by the hand of faith, the issue and the bleeding wounds of our soules shall be dried vp. When a man that had beene sicke eight and thirty yeares was come to the poole of Bethesda, he was faine to lye there vncured; because when the Angel troubled the water, euermore some stept before him: but if we will seeke to Christ for the saluation of our soules, no man shall preuent vs, or stept before vs. And if we finde our selues to be so laden with the burden of our finnes, that we cannot draw neer vnto him, let vs then do as the palfie man did: he got foure men to carry him on their shoulders to the place where Christ was: & when they could not by reason of the presse of the people enter into the house they opened the rooffe, & let him down in his bed by cords to Christ, that he might be healed. And so let vs vse the helpe of such as be godly, char by their instructions & consolations, they may as it were put their shoulders, & by their praiers, as with cords, bring vs to Christ that we may receiue eternall saluation, being otherwise dead in sin & subiect to damnation.

Lastly, whereas Ioseph and Mary gave this name not at their owne pleasure, but at the appointment of God himselfe; this ministers a good instruction to all parents touching the naming of their children when they are baptized, that they are with care and deliberation to giue conuenient names vnto them, which may put them in minde of duties either to God or men. This is worthy of our obseruation, for many care not how they name their children, yea it is at this day, and euer hath bene, that some giue such names to them, as that at the very rehearsing thereof, laughter ensueth. But this ought not to be so; for the name is giuen vnto children at the time of their baptism in the presence of God, of his Church and angels, euen then when they are to be entred into the Church of God, & that in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: therefore though we do not place religion in titles or names, yet neuertheless a wife & godly choise in this matter is to be had that the names imposed may be in stead of instructions & admonitions to the parties named: and for this cause in the old testamēt names are giuen by the propheticall instinct, or according to the euent of things which came to passe about the time of the birth of children, or they were borrowed fro the holy ancessors, or put the posterity in mind to follow their steps.

And thus much of the duties: Now follow the consolations that Gods Church and people reape from this, that the Sonne of God is our Sauour. When as all mankind was included vnder sinne and condemnation, then the Lord had mercy vpon vs, and gaue vnto man the couenant of grace, in which he promised that his owne Sonne should be our redeemer. This is a great and vnspokeable comfort, as may appeare in that the Angels so greatly reioice herein when Christ was borne. *Luk. 2. 10. 11. Bold say they, I bring you tidings of great ioy that shalbe to al the people, that is, that vnto you is borne in the city of Dauid, a Sauour, which is Christ the Lord. Now if they reioice thus exceedingly at Christs birth, who was not their Sauour, because they stood not in need to be redeemed; then much more ought the Church of God to reioyce herein, whom it doth principally concerne and no maruell, for if we had wanted this blessed Sauour, it had bin better to haue bin a brut beast or any other creature then a man: for the death of a beast is the end of his woe, but the death of a man without a Sauour is the beginning of endless miserie. Satan & his angels are fallen & haue no Sauour, but when man was fallen, God of his mercy deale not so with him, but gaue his owne Son to restore him to a better estate, whereas he might as iustly haue damned all men for the fall of our first parents, as he did the wicked angels for theirs; for God is not bound to any creature: behold then a matter of vnspokeable ioy: let vs therefore receiue and embrace Christ our Sauour, flie to him for the pardon of all our sins, and praise his name therefore.*

Now wee come to the second title of the Sonne of God, whereby he is steamed Christ: which title is as it were the surname of the second person, as some do thinke: yet according to the opinion of some others, it is no name at all, but onely a meere appellation, as when in the like case a particular man is called a Duke or a King. It is al one with Messiah in Hebrew wherewith the redeemer was named in the old Testament, and both signifie anointed.

Among the Iewes before the coming of Christ, three estates or orders of men were anointed with oyle: First of all, Kings, as Saul, Dauid, and the rest of the Kings of Iuda. Secondly, the priests that serued in the Tabernacle and Temple before the Lord, when they were ordained, & as it were, installed into the priesthood, were anointed with oyle, as first of all, Aaron and his sonnes, but afterward the high Priests alone. Thirdly, Prophets were thus anointed, as Elisha.

Now this legall anointing was a type and figure of the anointing of Christ: which was not with bodily oyle, but by the spirit, and it was more excellent then all other anointings were. For Dauid faith, he was anointed with the oyle of gladnesse, aboue all his fellows, signifying, that neither King, Priest nor Prophet was euer anointed in the same manner as he was.

was

Christs anointing is according to both his natures; for in what nature he is a Mediator, in the same he is anointed; but according to both his natures ioynly he is a mediator: the Godhead is no mediator without the manhood, nor the manhood without the godhead: and therefore his anointing extends it selfe both to his godhead & to his manhood.

Christs anointing hath two parts, both of them figured by the anointing of the Iewes. The first is his consecration whereby he was set apart to doe the office of a Mediator betweene God and man: and therefore to bee a King, a Priest, a Prophet: a King, to gather and withall to gouerne his Church and people: a Priest, to make satisfaction & intercession for the finnes of the elect: a Prophet, to reueale & teach his people the will of God his Father. And though it be true that Christ is set apart to the worke of mediation, as he is a mediator, or as he is man, yet as he is God he doth designe & set himselfe apart to the same worke. For to designe the mediator is a common action of the three persons, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost; and yet considering the Father is first in order, and therefore hath the beginning of the actio: for this cause he is said especially to designe, as when Saint Iohn faith, John 14. 28. He hath God the Father sealed.

The second part of Christs anointing, is the pouring out of the fullnesse of the spirit or grace into the manhood of Christ: and it was particularly figured by the holy oyle. For first, that oyle had no man but God alone to bee the author of it: so the most excellent and vnspokeable graces of the manhood of Christ haue their beginning from the Godhead of Christ. Again, though the same oyle was most precious, yet was it compounded of earthly substances, as mirrhe, calamus, & Casia, and such like; to signifie, that the spirituall oyle of grace, whereof the manhood of Christ was as it were a vessell or storehouse, did not consist of the essentiall properties of the Godhead, as encheres and his followers in these daies imagine, but in certaine created gifts and qualities placed in his humane nature: otherwise we should not haue any participation of them. Thirdly, the sweete fauour of the holy oyle figured, that the riches of all graces with the effect thereof in the obedience of Christ, doth take away the noysome sent of our loathsome finnes from the nostrils of God, & withall doth make our persons, and all our actions acceptable to him as a sweete perfume, as Paul faith, We are vnto God the sweete fauour of Christ, &c. And Christs death is for this cause termed a sacrifice of sweete smelling fauour.

And we must further vnderstand, that the se gifts of Christs manhood are not conferred in small scantling or measure; for Iohn faith, God giueth him the spirit not by measure; because the graces which are in Christ are farre more both in number and degree, then all men or Angels haue or shall haue: though the good Angels and the Saints of God in heauen are very excellent creatures, stored with manifold graces and gifts of God. For this cause Christ is called the head of men: because hee is euery way the most principall & glorious man that euer was. Yet for all this are not the gifts of Christs manhood infinite any way; because it is a creature and finite in nature, and therefore not capable of that which is infinite.

By Christs anointing the people of God reape great benefite and comfort, because they are to be partakers thereof. For this cause the oyle wherwith he was anointed is called the oyle of gladnesse, because the sweete fauour of it gladdeth the hearts of all his members, and brings the peace of God which passeth all vnderstanding. The holy oyle powred vpon Aaron came downe to his beard, and to the very skirts of his garments: and it signified, that the spirituall oyle of grace was first of all powred vpon our head Christ Iesus, & from thence consequently deriued to all his members, that by this means he might be not onely anointed himselfe: but also our anointer.

Now the benefites which we receiue by his anointing are two; the first is, that all the elect when they are called to the profession of the Gospell of Christ, are in and by him set apart and made spirituall kings, priests, and prophets, as Saint Iohn faith: He hath made vs kings and priests vnto his Father. And Saint Peter out of Iosh. 1. 17 will poure (saith the Lord) my spirit vpon all flesh, and your sonnes and daughters shall prophesie.

The second benefite is, that all the faithfull receiue the same oyle, that is, the same spirit of God in some little and conuenient measure, which he receiued aboue measure, as S. Iohn faith, The anointing which ye receiued of him dwelleth in you, and teacheth you all things: where by anointing is meant the holy Ghost. And hence it is, that men are called Christians of the name of Christ, that is, anointed with the same oyle wherewith Christ was anointed. And the holy oyle might not bee giuen to a stranger, to signifie, that to haue the spirit of Christ, and to be guided by it, is peculiar to them that are Christs. Now then let vs all lay these things to our hearts, and extoll the vnspokeable goodness of God, that hath aduanced vs to the dignitie of kings, priests, prophets before him, and hath giuen his spirit vnto vs, to enable vs to be so indced.

Now follow the duties which are to bee learned hence. And first, whereas all Christians receiue anointing from the holy one Christ Iesus, to become prophets in a fort, we must doe our inuocations, that the word of God may dwell plentifully in vs, and for that cause wee must search the Scriptures, even as hunters seeke for the game, and as men seeke gold in the very mines of the earth. There is nothing more unseemly a man, then grosse ignorance a Christian. Therefore the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews reprooves them, that whereas for the time they ought to have bin teachers, they had need againe to be taught the first principles of the word of God.

Againe, that portion of knowledge which we have received of God, is further to be applied to the benefit and good of others: that is the most precious baume, that on our parts should never be wanting to the heads of men. And here every man that is set over others must remember, within the compasse of his calling and charge, to instruct those that be vnder him, so farre forth as possibly he can. Governours of families must teach their children, and servants, and their whole household, the doctrine of true religion, that they may know the true God, and walke in all his waies in doing righteousnesse and iudgement. If householders would make conscience of this their duty, and in some sort and measure prepare their families against they come to the publicke congregation, the Ministers of the Gospell with greater comfort and farre more ease should performe their dutie: and see farre more fruite of their ministry then now they doe. But whereas they neglect their duty, falsly perswading themselves, that it doth not belong to them at all to instruct others; it is the cause of ignorance both in wmes & families, in masters themselves, in servants and children, and all. Lastly, by this we are admonished to take all occasions that possibly can be offered, mutually to edifie each other in knowledge, saying among our selves: as it was foretold of these times) Come let vs goe up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach vs his waies, and we will walke in his paths: and withall, wee should confirme each others as Christ faith to Peter, When thou art converted, confirme thy brethren; and be ready at all times to render an account of our faith and religion euen before our enemies, when we are fully called so to doe.

Secondly, because we are set apart in Christ, to become spiritual priests vnto God, we must therefore offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable vnto him: and they be in number fuen. The first, is an affiance whereby we reit vpon God, as David faith, Offer the sacrifice of righteousness, and trust in the Lord. The second, is wholly to subiect our selues to the ministry of the Gospell, that wee may be changed and conuerted by it, as Paul faith, That hee ministrerh the Gospel to the Gentiles, that the offering up of them might be acceptable, being sanctified by the holy Ghost. The third, is all manner of prayers and supplications made vnto God. Let my prayer, faith David, be directed in thy sight as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice. The fourth, is praying and thanksgiving vnto

God. Let vs by him offer the sacrifice of praise alwaies to God, that is the fruit of the lipps which confesse his name. And in the Reuelation, the golden vials full of odours, are the prayers of the Saints. The fift, is the releef of our poore brethren according to our ability, as Paul faith, I was once filled, after that I had received of Epaphroditus that which came from you, an odour that smelled sweete, a sacrifice pleasant and acceptable to God. The sixt, is the denial of our selues with a contrite and broken heart. The seauenth, is to reigne our selues, bodies and soules wholly to the seruice of God: Set your selues (saith Paul) to God, as they that are alive from the dead: & your members as weapons of righteousnesse vnto God. In which words he alludes to the manner of the old Testament: when a man offered any sacrifice for himselfe, he brought the beast into the temple or tabernacle, and set it before the altar, in token that he did reigne it vnto God: and so we for our parts must not giue our bodies and soules to become the instruments of sin and Satan, but we must haue them alwaies in readinesse, freely presenting them vnto God, that hee may haue the whole disposition of them according to his good pleasure, to the honour and glory of his name. Againe, in the whole burnt-offering all was consumed and turned to smoke, no man hauing benefit of it, to signifye, that we must giue our selues not in part, but wholly to the seruice of God, euen to death if neede be. If this be so, miserable is the practise of such that giue vp their bodies and soules to liue in licentious wantonnesse, in the pleasures of their beastly finnes, in idleness. For they offer themselves a sacrifice, not to God, but to the diuell.

Thirdly, considering wee are annointed to be spirituall kings euen in this life, wee must walke worthy so great a calling. That this may bee so; first of all such as are gouernours set over others, must rule not according to their wills & pleasures, but in the Lord: withall, doing homage to their head & king Christ Iesus himselfe. Secondly, we must enery one of vs rule and beare sway euen as kings ouer our ouer thoughts, wils, affections, ouer-mastering them as much as wee possibly can by Gods word and spirit: withall, maintaining & proclaiming continual warre against our corrupt natures, the diuell and the world. And truly hee which can beare rule ouer his owne heart, is a right king indeede: and hauing received some measure of grace to reigne ouer himselfe in this life, hee shall reigne for euer with Christ in the life to come. As for such as are carried away with the swing of their corruptions, hauing blindness & ignorance to reigne in their minds, rebellion in their wills & affections, looseness in their whole liues, they may carry the outward form & shew of Christians as long as they will, but indeed they are no spiritual kings, but very bondmen: the strong man Satan keepes as yet the hold of their hearts, & as Lord and king holds vp his scepter there.

Lastly

Lastly, seeing Christ is annointed with the most precious balme that euer was, and that for our sakes, hee must be sweete and fauoriferous, and all other things must be as vnfauoriferous and dung in regard of him. Wee must in this case endeavour to lay as the spouse of Christ doth: Because of the fauour of the good oymment, thy name is an oymment poured out: therefore the virgins loue thee. O that we could fauour in the feare of God, that wee might seeke hym all his garments smell of myrrhe, aloes, and Cassia, comming forth of his luury, pallaces vnto vs. And because the holy oymment of Christ is poured forth vpon all his members to make them fauoriferous & sweete in the presence of God, let vs make conscience of all manner of sinne left by the poysen and stinke thereof we infect not onely our selues, but all the creatures of God which we vie, yea heauen and earth it selfe. It stands not with equitie, that after we haue bene embalmed and sweetened by the precious merits of Christ, wee should make our selues two-footed wine, to returne to the mire of our old finnes.

The coupling and combining of these two former titles together, contains the principall question of the whole Bible, which is, whether Iesus the Sonne of Mary bee Christ or no: as Saint Iohn faith, These things are written that ye might beleeue, that Iesus is the Christ: the Sonne of God, and that in beleeuing ye might haue life euerm-lasting. This conclusion was denied by the Iewes, but aouched and confirmed both by Christ and by his Apostles: and their principall argument was framed thus. Hee which hath the true notes of Christ, is the Messias or Christ indeed: but Iesus the Sonne of Mary hath the true notes of Christ: therefore Iesus is Christ. The proposition is opened at large in the propheties of the old Testament: the assumption is confirmed in the writings of the new Testament: and the principall reasons of the confirmation are touched in the Articles which concerne the second Person. The conclusion followes, and is it set downe, as I haue said, in the knitting together of the titles, Iesus and Christ.

Thus much of the second title, now followes the third, his onely Sonne: that is, the onely Sonne of the first Person the Father. In this title we must consider two things: the first, that he is the Sonne of God: the second, that hee is the onely Son of God. Touching the first, Christ is called the Sonne of God, because hee was begotten of the Father. Now for the opening of this eternall generation, wee must consider three points: the thing begotten, the manner of begetting, and the time. For the thing it selfe, it is Christ; who must be considered two waies, as he is a Sonne, and as hee is God. As he is a sonne, he is not of himselfe, but the sonne of the father begotten of him: neuertheless hee is God, hee is of himselfe: neither begotten, nor proceeding; for the essence or godhead of the Father is of it selfe without all beginning, but the godhead of the sonne is one and the same with the godhead of the Father: because by what godhead the Father is God, by the same and no other the sonne is God: therefore the sonne, as hee is God, hee is God of himselfe without beginning euen as the Father. Whereupon it followes, that the Son is begotten of the Father as hee is a Sonne, but not as hee is God.

The manner of this generation is this. The Sonne is begotten of the substance of the Father not by any fluxe, as when water is deriued from the head of the spring to the chanel, nor by decision as when a thing is cut in peeces: nor by propagation, as when a grift is transplanted into a new stocke: but by an vnspokeable communication of the whole essence or Godhead from the Father to the Sonne: in receiving whereof the Sonne doth no more diminish the maiestie or Godhead of the Father, then the light of one candle doth the light of the other from which it is taken. Whereupon the Council of Nice hath said well, that the sonne is of the fathers substance, of light, not proceeding but begotten.

The time of this generation hath neither beginning, middle, or end: and therefore it is eternall before all worlds: and it is a thing to be wondered at, that the father begetting and the sonne begotten are coeternall, and therefore equal in time. Wiseome in the Proverbes (which with one consent of all diuines is said to bee Christ) affirmeth that he was before the world was created, that is, from eternity: for before the world was made there was nothing but eternity. But it may be alledged to the contrary, that the saying of the father, This day haue I begotten thee, is expounded by Paul of the time of Christs resurrection. Ans. We must distinguish between generation it selfe, and the manifestation of it: and of the second must the place bee vnderstood, which was indeede accomplished at the time of Christs resurrection in which he was mightily declared to bee the Sonne of God; and though this be so, yet the generation it selfe may be eternall. If any man alledge further, that the person which begetteth must needs goe before the person begotten, the answer is; that there is a double priority: one of order, the other of time: now in the generation of creatures there is priority both of order and time: but in the generation of the second person in trinity there is priority of order alone: the father being first, the sonne second, without priority of time: because they both in that respect are equal, and neither is before or after other: because the beeing or subsisting of the persons is not measured by time.

Hence it followeth necessarily, that Iesus Christ is true God: and the whole tenour of the Scriptures confirme it sufficiently. I. he is made equal to God the Father, who being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God: againe, All things that the father hath are mine. The childre of Israel are said to have tempted Iehovah: & Paul saith: that he whom they tempted was Christ: Abraham founded the earth, and the same is said of Christ: II. Christ the Sonne of God is by name called God: Iesus Christ is very God & life eternal III. The properties of the Godhead are ascribed unto him. He is eternal: because he was then when there was no creature. In the beginning was the Word: and before Abraham was I am. He is omnipresent, where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them Lastly, he is omnipotent, whosoever things the Father doth, the same doth the Sonne also. IV. The workes of creation and preservation are as well ascribed to the Son as the Father. By him the father made the world, and he beareth vp all things by his mightie power: and miracles, which are workes either aboue or against the order of nature peculiar to God, were done by Christ. V. Diuine worship is giuen to him: for he is adored, invocated, and beleueed in, as God the Father. To him is giuen a name as which every knee doth bow, of things in heauen, and things in earth, and things vnder the earth.

As for the reasons which be alleadged to the contrary, they are of no moment. I. Obiect. The word of God cannot be God; the Sonne is the word of the Father: therefore he is not God. Ans. The word is taken two waies: First, for a sounding word, standing of letters and syllables vttered either by God or by the creatures: now on this manner Christ is not the word of God. Secondly, there is a substantiall word, which is of the substance of him whose word it is. And thus Christ is the word of God the Father. And he is so tearmed, I. in respect of the Father: for as reason and speech hath his beginning from the minde, without any passion in the minde, so hath hee beginning from the Father. And as the speech is in the mind, & the mind in the speech, so the Father is in the Sonne, & the Sonne in the Father. II. In respect of all creatures. The Father doth all things by the Sonne: by whose powerful word the world was made, is now preserved, & shall be abolished. III. In respect of the Church. For the Father by him speaks vnto vs both in the outward ministry of the word, & by the inward operation of the spirit: and againe, we by him speake to the Father.

II. It may be objected thus: God hath no beginning from any other; Christ hath beginning from the Father: therefore hee is not God. Ans. Christ must be considered both in regard of his Godhead, and in regard of his person: in regard of his Godhead, he came not of any but is of himselfe, as well as the Father is: yet in regard of his person hee is from the Father, who is a beginning to the rest of the persons, both in respect of order (for the Scripture saith not the holy Ghost, the Son, the Father: but the Father, the Sonne, the holy Ghost) as also in respect of the communication of the Godhead. And whereas it is said that God is of himselfe, if the name of God be taken for the Godhead it selfe absolutely considered, it is true: but if it be taken for any particular person in the Godhead; it is false. III. Obiect. None is greater then God: but the father is greater the Christ, for so he saith, The father is greater than I. Ans. Christ there speaks of himselfe as if he was a man abased in the forme of a seruant: in which respect he is lesse then the father, who was neuer incarnate and abased in our nature. And though Christ in respect of his nature assumed, be inferior to the Father, yet doth it not hinder but that he may be equal to him, as he is the second person in trinitie, or as he is God by one and the same Godhead with the Father. IV. Obiect. He that is made of God, this or that, is not God: but Christ is made of God, as Paul saith, Christ is made vnto vs wisdom, righteousness, &c. Ans. Christ is said to be made, not because there was any beginning of his Godhead, or any change or alteration in his person: but because in the eternal counsell of the Father, he was set apart before all times to execute the office of a Mediator, and was withall in time called, & as it were consecrated and ordained thereunto in his baptisme: hee is made therefore in respect of his office, but not in respect of his person, or nature. V. Obiect. God hath no head, Christ hath an head, as Paul saith: God is Christ's head. Ans. God, that is, the Father, is head of Christ, not as hee is God simply, but as he is God incarnate, or made manifest in the flesh, & in respect of the office to which he willingly abased himselfe. VI. Obiect. He which giues vp his kingdom is not God, Christ giues vp his kingdom. The first shall be the end, when he hath deliuered vp his kingdom to God euen the Father. Ans. Christ is King two waies, as he is God, and as he is Mediator: as he is God, he reignes eternally with the Father, & the holy Ghost: but as he is Mediator, in the end of the world, when all the company of the elect are gathered, his kingdom shall cease, not simply, but in respect of the outward manner of administration: for the execution of ciuill and Ecclesiasticall functions shall cease. And whereas in the same place, it is said that Christ shall be subiect vnto God eternally after the end, it must be vnderstood partly in regard of the assumed manhood, partly in respect of his mysticall bodie the Church most sweetly ioyned vnto him in heauen. VII. Obiect. The first-borne of every creature, and of many brethren, is a creature, and not God: but Christ is the first-borne of every creature, and of many brethren. Ans. Hee is called the first-borne by resemblance or allusion to the first-borne in the old testament: for as they were principall heires hauing double portions allowed them; and the chiefe or gouernours of the family: so Christ is made heire of the world; & the head of Gods family which is his Church, elected & adopted in him. And againe he is called the first-borne of every creature, because he was begotten of the substance of his Father before any creature was made, and therefore it is not here said that he was first created, but first begotten.

By these reasons which haue bin alleadged, as also by the sufficiency of the contrary arguments, it is more then manifest against all hereticks, that Christ is very God. Yet to stop the mouthes of all Atheists, and to satisfie all wavering and doubting mindes, I will adde one reason further. The Gospel of Saint Iohn was chiefly penned for this end, to prooue the Deitie of Christ: and among other arguments alleadged, this is one, that Christ gaue a resolute and constant testimony of himselfe, that he was the Son of God, and very God. Now if any man shall say, that sundry persons since the beginning of the world haue taken vpon them and that fallily, to be Gods: I answer, that neuer any creature tooke this title and honour vpon him to bee called God, but the fearefull iudgements of God were vpon him for it. In the estate of mans innocency, the diuell told our first parents, that by eating the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and euill: they should be as gods knowing good and euill: now, they beleueed him, and affected diuine honour: but what came of it? surely Adam with all his posteritie is shut vp for this very cause vnder eternal damnation. Herod likewise araied in royall apparell, and sitting on the iudgement seat, made an oration to the men of Tyre & Sidon, who gaue a shout, saying, The voyce of God, and not of man. Now because he tooke the glory of God to himselfe, and did not returne it to him to whom it was due, immediately the Angell of the Lord smote him. And so, if Christ had been but a meere man, & not very God, as he auouched, vnderdoubtedly the hand of God would haue bene vpon him likewise for his confusion: but when he suffered for vs, and bare the punishment due for our sins, he most triumphed. And the iudgements of God were vpon Herod, Pontius Pilate, Caiphas, and vpon all those that were enemies to him, and to his Church afterward, and that partly in life, partly in death. Wherefore considering God can not abide that his glory should be giuen to any creature, and seeing for that cause he takes reuenge on all those that exalt themselves to be gods, it remains that the testimony which Christ gaue of himselfe that he was God, is vnfalsly true, and without all question to be beleueed of vs. And to conclude, I would haue all the diuels in hell, with the cursed orders of Lucians, Porphyrians, and Atheists whatsoever to answer this one point, how it could come to passe, that Christ by publishing the doctrine of the Gospel, that is as contrary to mans reason, will, and affection, as water to fire, should winne almost the whole world to become his disciples, and to giue their liues for him, vnlesse he were God in deede, as he professed himselfe to be?

There be sundry speciall reasons wherefore it was necessary that Christ should bee God. I. There is none which can be a Saviour of body and soule but God. I then I am the Lord, and besides me there is no Saviour. And, I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt keep no God but me: for there is no Saviour beside me. II. There must bee a proportion betweene the sinne of man and the punishment of sinne: now the sinne of man in respect of the offence of the maiestie of God is infinite, in that he is infinitely displeased with man for the breach of his law: therefore the punishment of sinne must be infinite: and hence it followeth, that hee which suffereth the punishment being man, must withall be God, that the manhood by the power of the Godhead may be supported, that in suffering it may vanquish death, & make a sufficient satisfaction. III. He that must be a Saviour, must be able first to deliuer men from the bondage of their spiritual enemies, namely, sinne and Satan: secondly, to restore the image of God, lost by the fall of Adam, and to conferre righteousnesse and life everlasting: thirdly, to defend them from hell, death, damnation, the flesh, the diuell, the world: fourthly, to giue them full redemption from all their miseries both in body and soule: and to place them in eternall happines; all which none can doe, but he which is very God. IV. It was the pleasure of God to shew his incomprehensible goodnesse in this, that his grace should not only be equal to our sin, but also by many degrees goe beyond it. And therefore the first Adam being but a meere man the second Adam must be both God & man: that as the second was more excellent then the first, so our comfort might be greater in our redemption by the second, then our misery and discomfort was by the fall of the first.

Hitherto we haue shewed, that Christ is the Sonne of God: now let vs come to the second point, namely, that he is the only Sonne of God. And he is so tearmed, because he is the Sonne of the Father, in a speciall manner, so as nothing can be the Son of God as he is. Angels indeede are tearmed the sonnes of God, but that is only in respect of their creation: & all that beleuee in Christ are sonnes of God by adoption, being receiued into the family of God, which is his Church, by the merite of Christ, whereas by nature they were the children of wrath. Christ also as he is man (I say not his manhood which is a nature and not person) is the Sonne of God by the grace of personall vnion, and not by nature or adoption. Lastly, Christ as he is the second person in Trinity, the eternal word of the Father coeternal and consubstantiall with him, is also the Sonne of God. But how? neither by creation, nor adoption, nor by the vertue of personall vnion, but by nature: as he was begotten of the very substance of the Father before all worlds: and therefore he is called the proper and only begotten Sonne of God. It may be objected on this manner: If the Father beget the Sonne, he doth it either willingly, or against his will; if willingly, then the son is begotten by the free-will of the Father, and no son by nature. Ans. The Father did communicate to the Son his whole god-head willingly without constraint, yet not by his will, and therefore he is the Son of the Father by nature, not by will. It may be further said, that if Christ be the Sonne of God by nature, as he is the essential word of the Father, and by personal union as he is man, then he is not one but two sonnes. Ans. As he is but one person, so is he but one sonne: yet not in one, but in two respects: two respects make not two things, whereas one and the same thing not altered, but still remaining one, may admit sundry respects.

Thus much of the meaning of the third title: now follow the comforts which may be gathered hence. Whereas Christ Iesus is the Son of God, it serves as a means to make miserable and wretched sinners, that are by nature the children of wrath and damnation, to be the sonnes of God by adoption: as S. John testifieth. Now what a benefit this is to be the child of God, no tongue can expresse. Christ faith, Blessed are the peace-makers: but why are they blessed? for (saith he) they shall be called the sonnes of God. Whereby he testifieth, that the right of adoption is a most excellent privilege; and not without cause. For he which is the child of God, is spiritually allied to Christ and to all the Saints and servants of God, both in heaven and earth, having his owne Redeemer for his elder brother, and all his members as his brethren and sisters; yea, if we be Gods adopted children, we are also heires, even heires of God, & heires annexed with Christ.

Mat. 5. 9.
Rō. 8. 17.

Well, how great foever this prerogative is, yet few there be that rightly weigh it, & consider of it. Children of Noble men and Princes heires are had in account & reputation of all men, they are the very speech and wonder of the world. But it is a matter of no account to be the sonne of God, and fellow-heire with Christ. The dearest servants of God have bin esteemed, but as the off-scouring of the world. And no marvell, for they which are after the flesh, favour the things of the flesh. Few men have their understandings enlightened to discern of such spirituall things as these are, and therefore they are little or nothing regarded. A blind man never seeing the Sonne, is not brought to wonder at it; and earthly minded men neither seeing nor feeling what an excellent thing it is to be the child of God, cannot be brought to seeke after it. But let all such as feare God, enter into a serious consideration of the unspeakable goodness of God, comforting themselves in this, that God the Father hath vouchsafed by his owne Sonne to make them of the vassals of Satan, to be his owne deare children.

Now follow the duties which are two: first

A we beleene that Iesus Christ who was to be the Saviour of mankind, must needs be God: what is the reason hereof? surely because no creature, no not all the creatures in heaven & earth were able to save one man so vile, wretched, & miserable is our estate by Adams fall. And therefore the Son of God himselfe pitied our estate, & being king of heave & earth, was faine to come from heaven, and lay downe his crowne and become a servant, and taking vpon him our nature, was also faine to take vpon him our case and condition, and suffer death for our sins, which otherwise every one of vs should have suffered both in body and soule world without end. To make this more plain, let vs suppose some one that hath committed an offence against a Prince; and the trespass to be so grievous, that no man can appeale the kings wrath, save onely the kings onely son; and which is more, the kings sonne himselfe cannot release him, vnlesse hee suffer the punishment for him in his own person, which is due vnto the malefactor. Now what is to be thought of this mans estate? surely all men will say, that he is in a most miserable taking, and that his trespass is notorious, and so it is with every one of vs by nature, whatsoever we are. No man could save our soules, no not all the Angels of heaven, vnlesse the king of heave & earth, the onely Son of God, had come downe from heaven and suffered for vs, bearing our punishment. Now the consideration of this must humble vs, & make vs to cast downe our selves vnder the hand of God, for our sins, and pray continually, that the Lord would send some Moses or other, which might smite the rocks of our hearts, that some teares of sorrow and repentance might gush out for this our woeful misery.

Secondly, whereas God the Father of Christ gave his onely Son to be our Saviour, as we must be thankful to God for all things, so especially for his great and unspeakable benefit. Common blessings of God, as meate, drinke, health, wealth, and libertie, must at all times move vs to be thankful, but this that Christ Iesus the onely Son of God, redeemed vs being vterly lost, this I say, must be the maine point of our thankfulness: but alas, mens hearts are so frozen in the dregs of their sins, that this duty comes little in practise now a daies. When our Saviour Christ cleansed ten lepers, there was but one of them that returned to give him thanks: & this is as true in the leprosie of the soule, for though saluation by Christ be offered vnto vs daily by Gods Ministers, yet not one of ten, nay scarce one of a thousand gives praise & thanks to God for it, because men take no delight in things which concerne the kingdom of heaven, they thinke not that they have need of saluation, neither do they feele any want of a Saviour. But we for our parts must learne to say with David, What shall I render vnto the Lord for all his benefits? yea we are to practise that which Salomon faith, My Sonne give me thy heart: for we should give vnto God both body and soule in token of our thankfulness for this wofull blessing, that he hath given his onely Sonne to be our Saviour; and we are to hold this for truth, that they which are not thankfull for it, let them say what they will, they have no foundation of grace or power of religion at the heart. And thus much of the third title: The fourth & last title is in these words, Our Lord: Christ Iesus the onely Son of God is our Lord three waies: first, by creation, in that hee made vs of nothing when we were not. Secondly, he is our Lord in the right of redemption, in former times the custome hath bin, when one is taken prisoner in the field, he that payes his ransom shall become alwaies after his Lord: so Christ when we were bound in vnder hel, death, & condemnation, payeth the ransom of our redemption, & freed vs from the bondage of sinne and Satan, and therefore in that respect he is our Lord: Thirdly, he is the head of the Church (as the husband is the viues head) to rule and gouerne the same by his word and spirit. And therefore in that respect also Christ is our Lord.

And thus much for the meaning. Now follow the duties and first of all, if Christ be our Soueraigne Lord, we must performe absolute obedience vnto him, that is, whatsoever hee commands vs, that must we do. And I say absolute obedience, because Magistrates, Masters, Rulers, and Fathers may command, and must be obeyed, yet not simply, but so far forth as that they command doth agree with the word and commandment of God: but Christs will and word is righteousnesse it selfe, and therefore it is a rule and direction of all our actions whatsoever: and for this cause hee must be absolutely obeyed. Thus he requires the obedience of the morall law: but why? because he is the Lord our God. And in Malachie he faith, If I be your Lord, where is my feare? And againe, we must resigne both body and soule, heart, mind, will, affections; & the course of our whole liues to be ruled by the will of Christ. He is Lord not onely of the body, but of the spirit and soule of man: he must therefore haue homage of both. As we adore him by the knee of the body, so must the thoughts and the affections of our hearts haue their knees also to worship him, and to shew their subiection to his commandments. As for such as doe hold him for their Lord in word, but in the meane season will not endeavour to shew their loyalty in all manner of obedience, they are indeede no better then sturke rebels. Secondly, when by the hand of Christ strange iudgements shall come to passe, as it is vsuall in all places continually, we must lay our selves without murmuring or finding fault, because he is an absolute Lord ouer all his creatures: all things are in his hands, and he may do with his owne whatsoever hee will; and therefore we must rather feare and tremble whensoever we see or heare of them: so David faith, Psal. 39. 9. I was dumb and opened not my mouth, because thou dost it. And againe, Psal. 119. 120. My feet sh tremble, for I feare of thee; and I am afraid of thy indignities. Thirdly, before we vse any of Gods creatures or ordinances; we must sanctifie them by the direction of his word and by prayer: the reason is this, because he is Lord ouer all, & therefore from his word we must fetch direction to teach vs, whether we may vse them or not, & when & how they are to be vsed: and secondly, we must pray to him, that hee would giue vs liberty and grace to vse them aright in holy manner. Also we are to vs the creatures & ordinances of God, as being alwaies ready to giue an account of our doings at the day of iudgment: for we vse that which is the Lords, not our owne; we are but stewards ouer them, and we must come to a reckoning for the stewardship. Hast thou learning? the employ it to the glory of God, & the good of the Church: boast not of it as though it were thine owne. Hast thou any other gift or blessing of God, be it wisdom, strength, riches, honor, fauor, or whatsoever? then looke thou vnto it so; as thou must be alwaies ready to make a good account thereof vnto Christ. Lastly, every one must in such manner lead his life in this world, that at the day of death, he may with cheerefull heart surrender & giue vp his soule into the hands of his Lord, and say with Steuens, Lord I giue thee my soule. For consider this with thy selfe, that thy soule is none of thine owne, but his who hath bought it with a price, and therefore thou must lo order and keepe it as that thou must in good manner restore it into the hands of God at the end of thy life. If a man should borrow a thing of his neighbour, and afterward hurt it, and make a spoile of it, he would be ashamed to bring it againe to the owner in that manner, and if he do the owner himselfe will not receive it. Vngodly men in this life doe so stain their soules with sinne, that they can neuer be able willingly to giue them vp into the hands of God at the day of death: and if they would, yet God accepts them not, but casts them quite away. We must therefore labour so to liue in the world, that with a ioyfull heart at the day of death, we may commend our soules into the hands of our Lord Christ Iesus, who gaue them vnto vs. This is a hard thing to be done, & he that will doe it truly, must first be assured of the pardon of his owne sins, which a man can neuer haue without true & vnfeined faith & repentance: wherefore while we haue time, let vs purge & cleanse our soules and bodies that they may come home againe to God in good plight.

And here all gouernours must be put in minde that they haue an higher Lord, that they may not oppresse or deale hardly with their inferiours. This is Isaies word, Eph. 6. 9. Ye masters, faith he, doe the same things vnto your seruants, putting away threatening: and know that euen your master is also in heauen, neither is there respect of persons with him. Inferiours againe must remember to submit themselves to the authoritie of their gouernours, especially of magistrates. For they are seruour vs by our foueraigne Lord and King Christ Iesus: as Paul faith, Rom. 13. 1. Let every soule be subiect to the higher powers: for there is no power but of God, & the powers that be ordained of God. And againe, Ephes. 6. 5. Servants be obedient to your masters according to the flesh, with feare and trembling, in singleness of your hearts, as unto Christ.

The comfort which Gods Church may reape hence, is very great: for if Christ be the Lord of lords, and our Lord especially whome he hath created and redeemed; we neede not to feare what the diuell or wicked men can doe vnto vs. If Christ be on our side, who can be against vs? we neede not feare them that can destroy the body and doe no more; but we must cast our feare on him that is Lord of body & soule, & can cast both to hel, Mat. 10. 28.

Thus much of the fourth title. Now follows Christs Incarnation, in these words, Concerned by the holy Ghost, borne of the Virgin Mary. And they containe in them one of the most principall points of the doctrine of godlines, as Paul faith, 1 Tim. 3. 16. Without controversie great is the myserie of godlines, which is, God is made manifest in the flesh, inhabited in the spirit, &c. And that wee may proceede in order in handling them, I will first speake of the Incarnation generally, and then after come to the parts thereof. In generall we are to propound three questions, the answering whereof will be very needfull to the better vnderstanding of the doctrine following.

The first question is, Who was incarnate, or, made man? Answe. The second person in Trinity, the Sonne of God alone, as it is set down in this article according to the Scripture. S. Iohn faith, Iohn 1. 14. The Word was made flesh: and the Angel faith, Luk. 1. 35. The holy one which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the Son of the most high. And Paul faith, Rom. 1. 3. That Christ Iesus our Lord was made of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh. And there be sundry reasons, why the second person should rather be incarnate than any other. I. By whom the Father created all things, and man especially; by him, man being fallen is to be redeemed, & as I may say re-created: now man was at the first created of the Father by the Son; and therefore to be redeemed by him. I. I. It was most convenient, that that which is the essentiall image of the Father, should take mans nature that hee might restore the image of God lost & defaced in man; but the second person is the essentiall image of the Father, & therefore hee alone must take mans nature.

II. It was requisite that that person which was by nature the Son of God, should be made the sonne of man, that we which are the Sons of man, yea the sonnes of wrath, should againe by grace be made the Sons of God: now the second person alone is the Sonne of God by nature, not the Father, nor the holy Ghost. As for the Father, hee could not be incarnate. For to take flesh is to be fent of an other, but the Father cannot be fent of any person; because he is from none. Again, if the Father were incarnate, hee should be father to him which is by nature God; and the sonne of a creature, namely the Virgin Mary: which things cannot well stand.

And the holy Ghost could not be incarnate: for then there should be more Sons then one in the Trinity, namely, the second person the Sonne of the Father, and the third person the holy Ghost, the sonne of the Virgin Mary.

It may be objected to the contrary on this manner: The whole diuine essence is incarnate, every person in Trinity is the whole diuine essence, therefore every person is incarnate. Ans. The whole Godhead indeede is incarnate, yet not as it is absolutely considered, but so far forth as it is restrained & limited to the person of the Sonne; and to speake properly, the Godhead it self is not incarnate, but the very person of the Sonne subsisting in the Godhead. And though all the persons be one and the same essence, yet do they really differ each from other in regard of the peculiar manner of subsisting: and therefore mans nature may be assumed of the second person, and be not assumed either of the Father or of the holy Ghost; as in the like case the soule of man is wholly in the head and wholly in the feete, yea wholly in every part: and yet the soule cannot be said to vse reason in the feete or in any other part, but only in the head.

Again, it may be alledged, that the incarnation being an outward action of God to the creature is not proper to the Son. For the rule is, that all outward actions of God are common to all the persons in Trinity equally. Ans. (1.) The incarnation stands off two actions, the first, is the framing and creating of that manhood which was to be assumed by the Sonne, or Word of the Father; and this action is common to all the three persons equally: the second, is the limiting or the receiving of it into the vinity of any person, and in respect of this action, the worke of incarnation is peculiar to the Son. To this purpose August. speaks, This creature (saith he) which the Virgin conceived and brought forth, though it appertaine to the person of the Son alone, yet was it made by the whole Trinity: as when three men weaue one and the same garment, and the second onely weaues it.

The second question is, What manner of man the Sonne of God was made? Answe. He was made a proper or particular man, and a perfect or a very man. I say that he was a particular man, to shew that hee tooke not vnto him the general forme or idea of mans nature conceived only in mind, nor the common nature of man as it is existing in euery man: but the whole nature of man, that is, both a body and a reasonable soule, existing in one (b) particular subiect. I say further that he was & is a true and perfect man, being in euery thing that concerns mans nature like to Adam, Abraham, David, and all other men, sauing only in sinne. For first of all, he had the substance of a true body, and of a reasonable soule: Secondly, the properties of body and soule: in the body, length, breadth, thickenesse, circumscription, &c. in the soule, the faculties of vnderstanding both simple and compound: will, affections, as loue, hatred, desire, joy, feare, &c. the powers also of hearing, feeling, seeing, smelling, tasting, mouing, growing, eating, digesting, sleeping, &c. Thirdly, hee tooke vnto him the infirmities of mans nature, which are certaine naturall defects or passions in body or mind, as to be hungry, thirstie, wearie, sadde and sorrowfull, (c) ignorant of some things, angry, to increase in stature, and wisdom, and knowledge, &c. yet this which I say must be vnderstood with two cautes. The first is, that infirmities be either certaine vblameable passions, or else such defects as are finnes in themselves: now Christ taketh the first onely, and not the second. Secondly, infirmities be either generally, or personall; generally, which appertaine to the whole nature of man, and are to be found in euery man that cometh of Adam: as to be borne vnlearned, and subiect to naturall affections, as sorrow, anger, &c. Personall, are such as appertain to some particular men, and not to all, and arise of some priuate causes & particular iudgments of God, as to be borne a foole, to be sicke of an age, consumption, dropsie, pluresie, and such like diseases. Now the first sort be in Christ, and not the second: for as hee tooke not the person of any man, but only mans nature, so was it sufficient for him to take vnto him the infirmities of mans nature, though hee tooke not the priuate infirmities of any mans person. And the reason why Christ would put on not onely the substance and faculties of a true man, but also his infirmities, was; that he might thew himselfe to be very man indeed, also that he might suffer for vs both in body and soule, and that hee might giue vs an example of patience in bearing all manner of euill for Gods glory, and the good of our neighbour.

Now the things which may be alledged to the contrary for the infringing of the truth of Christs manhood, are of no moment. As first, because Christ appeared in the forme of a man in the old testament, being no man: therefore hee did fo at his comming in the new testament: but the reason is not like. For Christ in the old testament, Gen. 18. 9. 13. as the angel of his Father in some speciall affaires, tooke vnto him the body of a man for some space of time; but hee did not receiue it into the vinity of his person, but laid it down when the businesse which hee enterprised with men was ended. Now in the fullnesse of time hee came from heauen as the angel of the covenant, and for that cause hee was to vnite into his owne person the nature of man, which thing was neuer done before. And when as Paul faith, Rom. 8. 3. that Christ came in the similitude of sinful flesh, his meaning is not to signify, that he was a man onely in resemblance and shew; but to rellieue, that being a true man which was indeede void of sinne, he was content to abase himselfe to that condition in which he became like to a miserable sinner in bearing the punishment for our sinne: For Paul doth not say that hee tooke vpon him the similitude of flesh simply as it is flesh, but of the flesh of sinne or sinfull.

The third question is, why the Sonne of God must become man? Answe. There be sundry reasons of this point, and the most principall are these: First of all, it is a thing that greatly stands with the iustice of God, that in that nature in which God was offended, in the same should a satisfaction be made to God for sinne: now sinne was committed in mans nature: Adam sinned first, and in him all his posterity: therefore it was necessary that in mans nature there should be a satisfaction made to Gods iustice, and for this cause the Sonne of God must needs abase himselfe and become man for our sakes. Secondly by the right of creation euery man is bound in conscience to fulfill euen the very rigour & extremities of the morall law. But considering man is now fallen from his first estate and condition, therefore it was requisite, that the Sonne of God should become man, that in mans nature hee might fulfill all righteousness which the law doth exact at our hands. Thirdly, hee that is our redeemer must dye for our sins; for there is no remission of sinnes without shedding of blood: but Christ as hee is God cannot die: for no passion can befall the godhead. Therefore it was needfull, that he should become man, that in mans nature hee might die and fully satisfie Gods iustice for mans offence. Lastly, hee that must make reconciliation betweene God and man, must be such an one as may make request or speake both to God and man. For a Mediatour is as it were a middle person making intercession betweene two other persons, the one offended, the other offending. Therefore it is necessary that Christ should not onely be God, to speake vnto the Father for vs, and to present our prayers vnto him; but also man, that God might speake to vs, & we to God by Christ. For howe neuer before the fall, man could speake to God euen face to face, yet since the fall, such feare posseseth mans corrupt nature, that he cannot abide the presence of GOD, but flyeth from it.

Now whereas I say, that it was necessary that the Sonne of God for the causes before alledged must become man: the necessitie must be vnderstood in respect of Gods will, and not in respect of his absolute power. For if it had to pleased God, hee was able to haue laide downe another kinde of way of mans redemption, then by the incarnation of the Sonne of God: and hee appointed no other way, because he would not.

Thus much of the incarnation in generall. Now follow the duties which arise of it. And first, we are taught hereby to come to Christ by faith, and with all our hearts to cleave vnto him. Great is the deadnesse and sluggishnesse of mans nature: for scarce one of a thousand care for him, or seeke to him for righteousnesse and life everlasting. But we should excite our selues euery way to draw neere to him as much as possible we may: for when he was incarnate, he came neere vnto vs by taking our nature vpon him, that we againe whateuer we are, might come neere vnto him by taking vnto vs his Diuine nature. Again, when Christ was incarnate, he was made bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, and therefore proportionally we must labour to become bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh: which we shall be, when wee are mytically vnited vnto him by faith, and borne anew by his spirit. Moreover, Christ by his incarnation came downe from heauen to vs, that we being partakers of his grace, might ascend vp to heauen by him. And thus we see how the meditation of Christs incarnation should be a spur to prick vs forward still more and more to come to Christ.

Secondly, Christs incarnation must be a patterne vnto vs of a most wonderful and strange humilitie. For as Paul faith, Phil. 2.6, 7. Being in the forme of God, and thinking it no robbery to be equal with God, he made himselfe of no reputation: and took on him the forme of a seruant: and humbled himselfe, and became obedient to death, euen to the death of the crosse. Yea so farre forth he abased himselfe, that as David faith, Psal. 22.6. he was a worme, and no man. And this teacheth vs to lay aside all self-loue & pride of heart, & to practise the duties of humilitie, as the Apostle exhorts the Philippians in the same place, and that that we do, when we begin to cast off that high opinion which euery man by nature conceiues of himselfe, and become vile & base in our own eyes. Secure & drowfie Protestants think themselves blessed, & say in their hearts as the angel of the Church of Laodicea faith, Reu. 3.17. I am rich and increased with goods, and haue neede of nothing; whereas indeed they are most miserable and wretched, and poore, and naked, and blinde. And the same fond opinion possideth the mindes of our ignorant people, who chant it in the very same tune, saying, that God loues them, and that they loue God with all their hearts, and their neighbors as themselves; that they haue perfect faith in Christ and euerglad, not once so much as doubting of their saluation; that all is well with them, and that they are past all danger whateuer, in the matter of their saluation, and therefore neede not take so much care for it. Thus ye may see how men are commonly carried away with vaine and fond conceits of their own excellencie. And truly so long as this ouerwening of our owne righteousnesse reignes in our hearts, let Preachers speake and say what they will, we can neuer become followers of Christ in the practise of humilitie. Some will say, peradventure, that they neuer had any such opinion of their owne righteousnesse; but I answer againe, that there was neuer yet any man defended of Adam, saue Christ, but he had this proud phantasie ruling and reigning in him, till such time as God gaue grace to change & alter his heart: and this inward pride the lesse we discern it, the more it is; & the more we discern it, the lesse it is. Therefore though as yet thou see it not in thy selfe, yet labour both to see and to feele it, and to stricke against it. casting downe thy selfe for thy own misery after Christs owne example, who being God, abased himselfe to the condition of a miserable man. For thou shalt neuer be filled with the good things of God, till thou be emptied of self-loue & self-liking. For this cause let vs purge and empty our selues of all conceit of our own righteousnesse, that God may fill our hearts with his grace.

Furthermore the Incarnation of Christ is the ground and foundation of al our comfort, as the names of Christ seruing to expresse the same doe testifie. Iacob in his last Testament faith, that the scepter shall not depart from Iudah, till Shilo come; that is, the Messiah come. Now the name Shilo signifieth the tunicle or skinner that lapeth the infant in the mothers wombe, called by the Phisitians the foundaine: and by a kind of figure it is put for the Sonne of God in the wombe of the Virgin, made man. And Iob to comfort himselfe in his affliction faith, I know that my redeemer liueth. Now the word which hee useth to signify his redeemer by, is very emphaticall, for it signifieth a kinsman neere allied vnto him of his owne flesh that will restore him to life. And the Lord by the Prophet Esaie calleth Christ Immanuel, that is, God with vs: which name importeth very much, namely, that whereas by nature we haue lost our fellowship with God, because our finnes are a wall of partition between vs from him: yet neuertheless the same is restored to all that beleene by the Mediatour Christ Iesus: because his diuine nature is coupled to mans nature, so the word is made flesh. And this strait coniunctio of two natures into one person, ioynes God to men, and men to God: yea by Christ wee are brought to God, and haue free access vnto him and again in him we apprehend God, and are made one with him.

And further, whereas Christ beside our nature tooke our infirmities also, it is a wonderful comfort to Gods Church, for it shewes that he is not onely a Saviour, but also a very compassionate and pitifull Saviour. As the holy Ghost faith, In all things it became Christ to be like vnto his brethren, that he might be mercifull and a faithful high Priest in things concerning God. Let a man be sicke of a grievous disease, and let a friend come that hath bene troubled with the very famedisease, he will presently shew more compassion then twenty others: and so Christ hating felt in his owne soule and body the anguish and the manifold perplexities that we feele in our temptations & afflictions, hath his bowels as it were yearning towards vs, euen more being preit and ready to releue vs in all our miseries. In the daies of his flesh, he wept ouer Hierusalem when he saw it farre off, because she continued in her old finnes, and did not know the time of her visitation: and no doubt, though now he be exalted in glory in heauen, yet his compassion to his poore members vpon earth is no whit diminished.

Now we come to speake of the incarnation more particularly: and the Creed yet further expreth it by two parts; the first, is the conception of Christ in these words; Conceitaby the holy Ghost: the second, is his birth; in the words following, Borne of the Virgin Mary.

The conception of Christ is set down with his efficient cause, the holy Ghost, as the angel said to Isaeph, Fear not to take Mary for thy wife, for that which is conceived in her, is of the holy Ghost. Here it may be demanded, why the conception of Christ should be ascribed to the holy Ghost alone, which is common to all the persons in Trinity, as all other such actions are? Ans. It is not done to exclude the Father or the Son himselfe from this worke; but to signifye that it comes of the free gift & grace of God (which commonly is termed by the Holy Ghost) that the manhood of Christ being but a creature, should be advanced to this dignity, that it should become a part of the Sonne of God. And againe, the holy Ghost is the author of his conception in a speciall manner: for the Father and the Sonne did cause it by the holy Ghost from them both immediately.

In the conception of Christ wee must observe and consider three things: The framing of the manhood, the sanctifying of it, and the personall vnion of the manhood with the Godhead. And howsoever I distinguish these three for orders sake, yet must wee know and remember, that they are all wrought at one and the same instant of time. For when the holy Ghost frames and sanctifies the manhood in the wombe of the Virgin; at the very same moment, it is receiued into the vnity of the second person.

In the framing of Christs manhood two things must be considered, the matter, and the manner. The matter of his body was the very flesh and blood of the Virgin Mary, otherwise hee could not haue bene the sonne of David, of Abraham, and Adam according to the flesh. As for his soule, it was not deriued from the soule of the Virgin Mary as a part thereof, but it was made as the soules of all other men be; that is, of nothing by the very power of God, and placed in the body: both of them from the first moment of their being, huiung their substance in the person of the Son. And here we must take heed of two opinions: the first, is of the Anabaptists which hold that the flesh of Christ came down from heauen, and passed through the Virgin Mary as through a pipe, without taking any substance from her: the places which they alledge for the purpose, are manifestly false. For whereas Christ faith of himselfe, Ioh. 3. 13. that he descended from heauen, his speech must be vnderstood in respect of his godhead, which may be said in some sort to descend, in that it was made manifest in the manhood here vpon earth. And whereas Paul calleth him heauenly, and the Lord from heauen, it is not in respect of the substance of his body, but in respect of his glorious qualities which he receiued after his resurrection. The other opinion is of the Papists, that hold the bread in the Sacrament to be turned substantially into the body of Christ: which thing if it be true, then the body of Christ is made of bread kneaded and tempered by the hand of the baker, and not of the substance of the Virgin Mary.

As for the manner of the making and framing of the humane nature of Christ, it was miraculous: not by generation according to the ordinary course of nature; but by an extraordinary operation of the holy Ghost above nature: and for this cause, it is not within the compass of mans reason, either to conceive or to expresse the manner and order of this conception. The Angel ascribes two actions to the holy Ghost in this great worke; the one to come vpon the Virgin Mary, the other to overshadow her: by the first is signified the extraordinary work of the holy Ghost, in fashioning the humane nature of Christ, for so much the phrase (as) elsewhere importeth. The second signifieth, that the holy Ghost did as it were (as) cast a cloud ouer her, to teach vs, that we should not search ouer much into the mystery of the Incarnation.

It may be objected against this which hath bin said, that if Christ be in this manner conceived by the holy Ghost, then the H. Ghost shall be Father to Christ, and Christ his Son. Ans. The reason is not good: for he that is a father, is not a bare efficient cause, but one which in the effecting of any thing confers the matter vnto it from himselfe, whereof it shall be made. Now the holy Ghost did not minister any matter vnto Christ from his own substance, but did onely as it were, take the masse and lump of mans nature from the body of the Virgin Mary, and without ordinary generation made it the body of Christ: as Basil faith, Christ was conceived not of the substance but of the power, not by any generation, but by the appointment and benediction of the holy Ghost.

The second point in the conception, is the sanctifying of that masse or lump which was to be the manhood of Christ. And that was done vpon speciall cause: first, that it might be ioyned to the person of the Son, which could not haue bene, if it had bin defiled with sin.

de sancti-
tate.

Secondly, Christ was a Saviour as he is both God and man: now then being man, if hee had bene sinfull himselfe, he could not haue saved others, but should haue stood in need of a Saviour himselfe.

This sanctification hath two parts: the first, is the stay and stoppage of the propagation of original sinne, and of the guilt of Adams sinne; which was on this manner: God in the beginning set down this order touching man, that what euill or defect sooner hee brought vpon himselfe, hee should deriue the same to euery one of his posterity begotten of him: and hereupon when any father begets his childe, he is in the roome of Adam, and conueys vnto it beside the nature of man, the very guilt and corruption of nature. Now for the preuenting of this euill in Christ, God in great wisdom appointed, that he should be conceived by the holy Ghost without any manner of generation by man. And by this meanes hee takes substance from the Virgin without the guilt and corruption of the substance. But it may further be objected thus: Al that bee in Adam haue sinned in him; but Christ was in Adam as he is man therefore he sinned in him. Ans. The proposition is false, vnto it is expounded on this manner: All that were in Adam haue sinned in him, so be it they come of him by generation. Paul saith not, out of one man, but, by one man sinne entered into the world, to shew, that man propagates his corruption to no more then he begets. Again, Christ is in Adam not simply as other men are, but in some part: namely, in respect of substance which hee tooke from him, and not in respect of the propagation of the substance by ordinary generation: other men are both from Adam & by Adam. But Christ is from him alone and not by him as a begetter or procreant cause. The second part of sanctification is the infusion of all purenesse and holinesse into the manhood of Christ, so far forth as was meete for the nature of a redeemer.

The duties to bee learned hence are these: First, whereas Christ was sanctified in the womb of the Virgin Mary, we likewise must labour to be sanctified in our selues, following the commandement of God, 1. Pet. 1. 16. Be ye holy as I am holy. S. Iohn saith, that he which hath hope to be with Christ in glory in heauen, pursueth himselfe euen as he is pure: no doubt setting before himselfe the example of Christ as a pattern to follow in all his waies. And because our hearts are as it were seas of corruptions, we must daily cleanse our selues of them by little and little, following the practise of the poore begger that is alwaies piecing and mending, and day by day puls away some rags and puts better cloath in the roome. And if wee shall continually endeavour our selues to cast off the remnants of corruption that hang so fast on, & make a supply thereof by some new portions of Gods heauenly grace; we shall be vessels of honor sanctified & meet for the Lord, and prepared vnto euery good worke. Christ could not haue bene a fit Saviour for vs; vnto it hee had first of all bin sanctified, neither can we bee fit members vnto him, vnto it wee be purged of our finnes, and in some measure truly sanctified.

The comfort which Gods people may reape of the sanctification of Christs manhood is great: For why was he sanctified? surely if we marke it well, we shall find it was for the good and benefit of his elect. For Adam and Christ be two rootes, as hath been shewed. Adam by creation first received Gods image, and after lost the same for himselfe and his posterity. Now Christ to renouee the image of man is made the second Adam, and the roote and very head of all the elect. His manhood was filled with holines as measure: that from thence as from a store-house it might be deriued to all his members. And therefore by his most holy conception, our sinfull birth and conception is sanctified, and his holinesse serues as a couer to hide our manifold corruptions from the eyes of God. Yea it serues as a buckler to ward the temptations of the diuell: for when hee shall say to our hearts on this manner; no vncleane thing can enter into the kingdome of heauen; but thou by reason of the remnants of original sin art vncleane, therefore thou canst not enter into the kingdome of heauen: we returne our answer, saying, that Christs righteousnesse is our righteousness, seruing to make vs stand without blame or spot before God. And as Iacob put on Esau garments that hee might get his fathers blessing: so if by faith we do put on the white garment of righteousness of our elder brother Christ Iesus, and present our selues in it vnto our heavenly Father, we shall obtaine his blessing which is eternall happinesse.

Now remains the third and last part of the conception, which is the Vnion of the Godhead & the manhood: concerning which, many points are particularly to be handled. The first is, what kinde of Vnion this is. Ans. In the Trinity there be two sorts of vnions: vnion in nature, and vnion in person. Vnion in nature, is when two or more things are ioined and vntoed into one nature, as the Father, the Sonne, the holy Ghost, being and remaining three distinct persons, are one & the same in nature or Godhead. Vnion in person, is when two things are in that maner vntoed that they make but one person or substance: as a body created by God, and a reasonable soule ioined both together make one particular man, as Peter, Paul, Iohn, &c. And this second, is the vnion wherof we intreat in this place: by which the second person in Trinity the Son of God did vnto himselfe the humane nature, that is, the body and soule of man: so as the Godhead of the Son and the manhood concurring together, made but one person.

The second point is, in what thing this vnion doth consist? Ans. It consists in this, that the second person the Sonne of God doth assume vnto it a manhood in such order, that it being wholly of all personall being in it selfe, doth wholly and onely subsist in the same person. As the plant called Mistle or Mistletoe hauing no roote of his owne, both growes and liues in the stocke or body of the Oke or some other tree: so the humane nature hauing no proper subsistence, is, as it were, ingrafted into the person of the Sonne, and is wholly supported and sustained by it so, as it should not bee at all, if it were not sustained in that manner. And for the better vnderstanding of this point, we must consider, that there be foure degrees of the presence of God in his creatures. The first, is his general presence, and it may be called the presence of his providence, whereby hee preferueth the substances of all creatures, and giueth vnto them to liue, moue, and haue being; and this extendeth it selfe to all creatures good and bad. The second degree, is the presence of grace, whereby hee doth not onely preserve the substances of all his creatures, but also giueth grace vnto it: and this agreeth to the Church and people of God vpon earth. The third degree, is the presence of glory, peculiar to the Saints and Angels in heauen; and this stands in three things: for God not onely preserves their substances, and giues them plentie of his grace, but also admits them into his glorious presence, so as they may behold his maiesty face to face. The fourth and last, is that, whereby the Godhead of the Son is present, & dwells with and in the manhood, giuing vnto it in some part his own subsistence. Whereby it comes to passe, that this manhood assumed is proper to the Son, & cannot be the manhood of the Father, or of the H. Ghost, or of any creature whatsoever. And this is a thing so admirable and so vnspokeable, that among all the workes of God there cannot be found another example hereof in all the world.

Hence it followes necessarily, that the manhood of Christ consisting of body and reasonable soule, is a nature onely and not a person; because it doth not subsist alone, as other men, Peter, Paul, Iohn doe: but wholly depends on the person of the word, into the vinity wherof it is received.

The third point, is in what order the diuine and humane nature of Christ are vntoed together. Ans. The common consent of Diuines is, that, albeit all the parts of the manhood & the godhead of Christ bee vntoed at one instant; yet in respect of order hee vnites vnto himselfe first and immediately the soule, & by the soule the body. And it seemes vnto it, that God being a most simple essence, should immediately be ioined to a compound body: and therefore it may well bee said that hee is vntoed vnto it by the more simple part of man, which is the soule. Again, the manhood of Christ is first & immediately ioined to the person of the sonne himselfe; and by the person to the Godhead of the sonne.

The fourth point is, whether there remain any difference or diuerty of the two natures after that the vnion is made. Ans. The two natures concurring make not the person of the sonne to be compounded properly, but only by analogie, for as bodie and soule make one man, so God and man make one Christ: neither are they turned one into another, the godhead into the manhood, or the manhood into the Godhead, as water was turned into wine at Cana in Galilee: neither are they confused and mingled together as meates in the stomacke: but they now are, and so remaine without composition, conuersion, or confusion, really distinct, and that in three respects. First, in regard of essence. For the godhead of Christ is the godhead, and cannot be the manhood: and againe, the manhood of Christ is the manhood, and not the godhead. Secondly, they are distinguished in properties: the godhead is most wise, iust, mercifull, omnipotent: yea wisdom, iustice, mercy, and power it selfe and so is not the manhood, neither can it be. Again, Christ as he is God hath his will eternall, and vncreated, which is all one with the will of the Father and the holy Ghost. And as he is man he hath another will created in time, and placed in his reasonable soule, & this Christ signifieth when hee saith, Not my will, but thy will be done. Thirdly, they are distinct in their actions or operations; which though they goe together inseparably in the worke of redemption, yet they must in no wise be confounded, but distinguished as the natures themselves are, Christ saith of himselfe, I haue power to lay downe my life, and I haue power to take it vp againe: & hereby he shewes the distinctions of operation in his two natures. For to lay downe his life is an action of the manhood, because the Godhead cannot die: and to take it vp againe is the worke of the Godhead alone, which reuiveth the soule to the bodie after death.

The fifth and last point is, What ariseth of this vnion? Ans. By reason of this hypostatic vnion, though the Godhead receiue nothing from the manhood, yet the manhood it selfe, which is assumed, is thereby perfected & enriched with vnspokeable dignity. For first of all, it is exalted above all creatures whatsoever, euen Angels themselves, in that it hath subsistence in the second person in Trinity. Secondly, together with the godhead of the sonne, it is adored & worshipped with diuine honour, as in like case the honour done to the King himselfe, redounds to the crowne on his head. Thirdly, by reason of this vnion, the godhead of Christ workes all things in the matter of our redemption, in and by the manhood. And hereupon the flesh of Christ though it profit nothing of it selfe, yet by the vertue which it receiueeth from that perso to which it is ioined it is quickning flesh, & the bread of life. A gaine, from this vnion of two natures into one person, ariseth a kind of speech or phrase peculiar peculiar to the Scripture, called the communion of properties, when the property of one nature is attributed to the whole person; or to the other nature; as when Paul saith, that God shed his blood, that the Lord of glory was crucified. And whē Christ saith, that he talketh with Nichodemus was then in heauen.

The vñe of the personall vnion is threefold. First, it serueth to shew the hainoutnesse of our finnes, and the greatnes of our miserie. For it had not bin possible to make a satisfaction to Gods iustice in mans nature for the least offence, vnles the same nature had first of all bin nearly ioyned to the Godhead of the Sonne: that thereby it might be so farre forth supported and sustained, that it might overcome the wrath of God. Secondly, it lets forth vnto vs the endless loue of God to man. For whereas by reason of Adams fall wee became the vilest of all creatures except the diuell and his angels: by this mysticall coniunction, our nature is exalted to such an estate & condition, as is farre aboue all creatures, euen the Angels themselves. Thirdly, it is as it were the key of all our comfort: for all sound comfort stands in happines, all happines is in fellowship with God, all fellowship with God is by Christ, who for this cause being very God, became very man, that hee might reconcile man to God, and God to man.

Thus much of the conception of Christ: now follows his birth: wherby in the ordinary time of trauaile, according to the course of nature, he was brought forth into the world by the virgin Mary. And it was the will of God, that Christ should not only be conceived; but also borne, and that after the manner of men, that he might be known to be very man indeed. In the birth we may consider foure things: the time, the place, the manner, the manifestation of it.

The time, was in the last daies, toward the end of the 70. weekes of Daniel, which are to be accounted from the end of the captivity of Babylon, and make in all 490. yeares or more plainly 3900. yeares and more from the beginning of the world, and as Paul saith, in the fulnes of time, and the Euangelists haue noted of purpose the time to haue bene when Augustus Cesar taxed the Iewes and all nations vnder his dominion; to signifye that Christ was borne at the very time foretold by Isaiah, when the crowne and scepter was taken from Judas: & withal to shew that his kingdom was not of this world. And it was the good pleasure of God that Christ should not be borne either later or sooner, but so many ages from the beginning of the world. And this consideration of the very time it selfe, serueth greatly for the confirmation of our faith. For thus may we reason with our selues: If G O D who in the beginning made a promise to our first parents concerning the seede of the woman, deferred it almost 4000. yeares, & yet at length accomplished the same to the very full: then no doubt: God hauing promised the resurrection of the dead and life eueralting, wil in his good time bring them to passe, though as yet we see them not. And thus by the accomplishment of all things past, should wee confirm our hopes concerning things to come.

The place was not at Hierusalem, nor Nazareth, nor any other citie, but only a village of Jude called Bethlehem, that the prophetic of Michea might be fulfilled, Thou Bethlehem Ephrata art little to be among the thousands of Iuda, yet out of thee shall be come forth vnto me, that shall be ruler in Israel. And here we may obserue a memorable example of Gods prouidence which ouerruleth the proceedings of cruell tyrants, to the accomplishing of his own will, they themselves for their parts intending nothing lesse. Augustus not so much as dreaming of the birth of the Messias, gaue commandement that euery man should goe to his owne citie to bee taxed: and hereupon Ioseph and Mary take their iourney from Nazareth to Bethlehem: which iourney God himselfe appointed & disposed to this end, that the Messias might bee borne in the place which hee preordained and foretold by his Prophets.

The manner of Christs birth was very base and poore: for the place where he was borne was a stable, and the cradle where he lay was a cratch. And he willingly tooke vpon him this poverty for sundry causes. I. That the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, that he should be the shame and contempt of the people: and that he shall grow vp as a rose out of a dry ground, as haue neither forme nor beauty. II. That he might after ward from this base condition be exalted euen in his malhood to that rich & glorious estate in which hee should manifest himselfe to bee Lord of heauen & earth. III. He was borne in exceeding poverty, that he might shame the wife men of this world, who exceedingly esteeme of their riches, power & glory, perswading themselves that without such means nothing can be done. And yet for all this they cannot so much as reconcile one man to God by all their might and wealth; whereas Christ himselfe hath done the same both in poverty and weakness; and can enlarge and preserve his kingdom without earthly helps. When hee hung vpon the crosse the souldiers stript him of his garments; and being naked hee brought that to passe, which all the Monarches of the earth in all their royalties could neuer haue performed. And whether Christ lie in the manger betweene the Ox and the Ass, or in the pallece of the kingd matters not in regard of our situation. I V. He came in this manner, that there might be a difference betweene his first coming in the flesh, and his last coming to iudgement. In the first he came only for this end, not to make any outward alterations in the world; but to change the conscience, & to put in execution the worke of our spiritual redemption: and therefore he hath referred the ouerturning of all earthly estates, with the manifestation of his owne glory, to the latter. V. Lastly, he was borne in a poore estate, that hee might procure true riches for vs in heauen; and all that might sanctifie vnto vs our poverty vpon earth. As Paul saith, Ye know the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ; that he being rich, for your sakes became poore, that yee through his povertie might be made rich. He was content to lie in the manger, that he might rest in heauen.

This serueth to teach vs to bee content to beare any meane condition that the Lord shall send vpon vs: for this is the very estate of the Sonne of God himselfe. And if for our cause he did not refuse the basest condition that euer was, why should we murmure at the same? for what are the best of vs but miserable sinners, and therefore vterly vnworthy either to goe or lie vpon the bare earth; and though we fare & lie better then our Lord himselfe, yet such is our daintines, we are not pleased therewith: whereas he for his part disdained not the manger of the Ox. And if the Lord of heauen and earth coming into the world, finde so little entertainment or fauour, wee for our parts beeing his members, should willingly prepare our selues to take as hard measure at the hands of men.

The last point is the manifestiō of Christs birth, that it may bee knowne to the world. Where consider two circumstances, the first, to whom? namely, to poore shepheards tending their flockes by night, and not to great or mightie men, louers of this world, not to the Priests at Ierusalem, contemners of Gods grace; and that for two causes: one, because the shepheards were the fittest persons to publish the same at Bethlehem; the other, it was Gods pleasure to manifest that in the birth of Christ which Paul saith, Not many wise men after the flesh, nor many mighty, nor many noble are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise. The second is, by whom? by the Angels of the Lord appearing in great glory vnto the shepheards. For the Priests of Ierusalem, & the rules of the Synagogues, to whom this office did belong, held their peace: being blinded in their manifold errors and wicked waies.

The duties to bee learned of the birth of Christ, are these. First, wee are admonished hereby to magnifie and praise the name of God, saying with Mary, My soule doth magnifie the Lord, and my spirit reioyceth in God my Saviour. And with Zacharie, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people. And with the Angels of heauen, Glory to God in the highest heauens. For in this birth is made manifest the wisdome, the truth, the iustice and mercy, and goodnes of God towards vs, more then euer it was before: yea as Christ God and man, is more excellent then the first Adam created according to Gods own image: and as the spiritual life is better then the naturall life, and as the eternall and most holy

A marriage of Christ the husband & his spouse the Church, arising as it were out of the blood that trickled out of his side, is more wonderful then the creation of Eue of the ribbe of Adam: lastly, as it is a farre greater matter by death to overcome death, and to turne it vnto eternall life, then to command that to exist and be which was not before: so is the worke of redemption begonne in the birth of Christ more vnspokeable and admirable then the first creation of man. Hereupon not 6. Cherubims, as in the vision of Isaiah, nor 24. elders as in the Apocalyp, but a great multitude of angels like armies were heard to praise G O D at the birth of Christ; and no doubt the like sight was not seene since the beginning of the world. And the angels by their example put vs in minde to consider aright of this benefite and to praise God for it. But alas, this practise is very rare in this fruitlesse and barren age of the world: where sinne & iniquitie abounds, as may be seene by experience; for by an olde custome we remaine still in the Church the feast of the natiuite of Christ, so commonly called; which neuertheless is not spent in praising the name of God who hath sent his Sonne from his own bosome to be our redeemer, but contrariwise in rising, dicing, carding, masking, mummings, and all licentious liberty for the most part, as though it were some heathen feast of Corus or Bacchus.

Secondly, Christ was conceived and borne in bodily manner, that there might be a spiritual conception and birth of him in our hearts, as Paul saith: My little children of whom I trouble till Christ be formed in you: and that is, when we are made new creatures by Christ, & performe obedience to our Creator. When the people said to Christ, that his mother and his brethren sought him, he answered, Ete that dothe the will of God, is my brother, my sister, and mother. Therefore let vs goe with the shepheards to Bethlehem, and finding our blessed Saviour swaddled and lying in the cratch, let vs bring him thence, and make our owne hearts to be his cradle: that we may be able to say, that wee lue not, but Christ liues in vs: and let vs present vnto him our selues, our bodies, and soules, as the best gold, mirth, & frankincense that may be: and thus conceiuing him by faith, he remaining without change, we shall be changed into him, and made bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. The world, I know, neuer so much as dreameth of this kind of conception and birth. For as David saith, Men trauell with wickednesse, conceive mischiesse, and bring forth a lie. And S. Iames saith, Men are drawne away by their owne concupiscence, which when it hath conceived bringeth forth sinne. And these are the ougly and monstrous births of these daies. But let vs, I pray you, contrariwise waile and mourne for the barrennes of our hearts, that doe so little conceiue the grace of Christ in heart, and bring it forth in action. The mother of Christ vndoubtedly was a bleſed woman: but if ſhe had not as well conceived Chriſt in her heart, as ſhe did in her wombe, ſhe had not bin ſaued, and no more can we vleiſe we doe the ſame.

The birth of Chriſt to them that haue touched hearts, is the comfort of comforts, & the ſweeteſt baume of confection that euer was. Behold, ſay the Angels to the ſhepherds, we bring tidings of great ioy that ſhall bee to all people; but wherein ſtands the ioy? they adde further, vnto you this day is borne in the city of David a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord. And no maruelli for in that birth is maniſeſt the good will of God to man, and by it we haue peace, firſt, with God; ſecondly, with our ſelues in conſcience: thirdly, with the good Angels of God: fourthly, with our enemies laſtly, with all the Creatures. For this cauſe the Angels ſang, Peace on earth, good will towards men.

In the laſt phraſe the Creede notes vnto vs the parent or mother of Chriſt, the virgin Mary. And here at the very firſt it may be demanded, how he could haue either father or mother; becauſe he was figured by Melchizedech who had neither father nor mother. Anſw. Melchizedech is ſaid to be without father and mother, not becauſe hee had none at all: for according to the auncient and received opinion, it is very likely that he was Sem the ſonne of Noah; but becauſe where he is mentioned vnder this name of Melchizedech in the 14. chapter of Geniſis there is no mention made of father or mother: and ſo Chriſt in ſome fort is without father or mother: as he is man, he hath no father; as he is God, hee hath no mother. And whereas Chriſt is called the ſonne of Iſeeph, it was not becauſe he was begotten of him, but becauſe Iſeeph was his reputed father; or which is more, becauſe he was a legal father, namely according to the Iewes: in that (as ſundry diuines thinke) hee was the next of his kinne, and therefore to ſucceed him as his lawfull heire.

Mary became the mother of Chriſt by a kind of calling therto, which was by an extraordinary meſſage of an Angel concerning the conception and birth of Chriſt in and by her: to which calling and meſſage ſhee conſeconded, ſaying, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; ſhe is vnto me according to thy word. And hereupon ſhee conceived by the holy Ghoſt. This being ſo, it is more then ſenſeleſſe folly to turne the ſalutation of the angel, Hailſt freely beloued, &c. into a prayer. For it is as much as if we ſhould ſtill call her to become a mother of Chriſt.

And the muſt be held to bee the mother of whole Chriſt God and man: and therefore the auncient Church hath called her the mother of God; yet not the mother of the godhead.

Furthermore, the mother of Chriſt is deſcribed by her qualities, a virgin, and by her name, Mary. She was a virgin firſt, that Chriſt might bee conceived without ſinne and be a perfect Saviour: ſecondly, that the ſaying of the prophet Eſay might be fulfilled, Behold a virgin ſhall conceive and beare a ſonne: according as it was foretold by God in the firſt giuing of the promiſe, The ſeede of the woman, not the ſeede of the man, ſhall bruiſe the ſerpents head. Now the Iewes to elude the moſt pregnant teſtimony of the Prophet, ſay, that Alma ſignifies not a virgin, but a young woman which hath knowne a man. But this is indeed a forgery. For Eſay there ſpeakes of an extraordinary worke of God about nature, whereas for a woman hauing knowne man to conceive, is no wonder. And the word Alma, through the whole Bible is taken for a virgin, as by a particular ſearch will appeare.

As Mary conceived a virgin, ſo it may be well thought that ſhee continued a virgin to the end, though wee make it no article of our faith. When Chriſt was vpon the croſſe, he commended his mother to the cuſtodie of Iohn; which probably argueth that ſhe had no child to whole care and keeping the might be commended. And though Chriſt be called her firſt borne, yet doth it not follow that ſhe had any children after him: for as that is called laſt after which there is none, ſo that is called the firſt before which there were none. And as for Iſeeph, when he was eſpouſed to Mary, he was a man of eighty yeares old.

And here we haue an occaſion to praiſe the wiſedome of God, in the forming of man. The firſt man Adam was borne of no man; but immediately created of God: the ſecond, that is Eue, is formed not of a woman, but of a man alone: the third and all after, begotten both of woman and man: the fourth, that is Chriſt, God and man, not of no man as Adam, not of no woman as Eue; not of man and woman as we: but after a new manner, of a woman without a man he is conceived and borne.

And hereupon our duty is not to deſpiſe, but highly to reuerence the virgin Mary, as being the mother of the ſonne of God, (a) a propheteſſe vpon earth, a Saint in heauen. And we doe willingly conſecond to giue her honour three waies; firſt, by thankſgiuing to God for her, ſecondly, by a reuerent eſtimation of her, thirdly, by imitation of her excellent vertues, yet farre bee it from vs to adore her with diuine honour, by prayer to call vpon her, as though he knew our hearts, and heard our requeſts, and to place her in heauen as a Queene about the ſonne of God.

The name of the mother of Chriſt is added, to ſhew that he came of the lineage of Dauid, and that therefore he was the true Meſias before ſpoken of. It may be objected, that both Matthew and Luke ſet downe the genealogy of Iſeeph, of whom Chriſt was not. Anſw. Matthew ſets downe indeed in Chriſts genealogy, the naturall deſcent of Iſeeph the husband of Mary, hauing Iacob for his naturall father: but Luke taking another courſe, propounds the naturall deſcent of Mary the mother of Chriſt: and when he ſaith that Iſeeph was the ſonne of Elu, hee meaneſ of a legal ſonne.

ſonne. For ſonnes and daughters in law are called ſonnes and daughters to their fathers and mothers in law: Mary her ſelfe and not Iſeeph being the naturall daughter of Elu. And whereas Luke doth plainly ſay, that Mary was the daughter of Elu; but puts Iſeeph the ſon in law in her roome, the reaſon hereof may bee, becauſe it was the manner of the Iewes to account and continue their genealogies in the title and not in the ſubſtance, ſhe man being the head of the family, and not the woman. And though Kurth and Rabab, and other women be mentioned by Matthew; yet that is only by the way: for they make no degrees herein. Again, it may be further demanded, how Chriſt could come of Dauid by Salomon as Matthew ſaith, and by Nathan, as Luke ſaith: they twaine being two diſtinct ſonnes of Dauid. Anſw. By vertue of the law, whereby the brother was bound to riſe vpon ſecond to his brother, there was a double deſcent in vie among the Iewes, the one was naturall, the other legal. Naturall, when one man deſcended of another by generation; as the child from the naturall father: Legal, when a man not begotten of another, yet did ſucceed him in his inheritance: and thus Salomons is the naturall ſonne of Neri, and the legal ſonne of Iſebaias. Now Saint Luke ſets downe a naturall deſcent of Chriſt from Dauid by Nathan, and Saint Matthew the other deſcent which is legal, by Salomon: whom Chriſt ſucceeded in the right of the kingdom, being borne the king of the Iewes: none that could poſſibly be named, hauing more right to it then he.

By this deſcent of Chriſt we haue occaſion to conſider, that Chriſt was euen in his birth the moſt excellent and notable man that euer was deſcending of the eternall Father as he is the Son of God, and as he is man, deſcending of the Patriarkes, and of the renowned Kings of Iuda. And this his nobility he conueyes in part to his members; in that hee makes them the ſonnes of God, a royall prieſthood, and a peculiar people to himſelfe: enriching them alſo with the reuenues of the whole world, and with title and right to the Kingdom of glory in heauen, as their inheritance.

And withall, Chriſt being the lively pattern of true nobility, by his example men of blood are taught not to ſtand ſo much on their pedigree, and their anceſtours, as though Nobility ſtood in this; that man deſcends of man; but to labour withall that they may bee the ſonnes and daughters of God by regeneration in Chriſt. This indeede is the ornament of the blood, the beſt part in the Noble mans ſkutecheon, & the ſweeteſt flower in his garland. And though a man be neuer ſo noble or great in eſtate, yet if he be not a repentant ſinner, he is baſe and vile, and his nobility thinkes in the noſtrils of God. Chriſt in his genealogy doth not ſo much as vouchſafe to name thoſe his anceſtours that ruled wickedly; and hereupon on Saint Matthew omitteth three kings of Iuda; Abelazab, Ioi, and Amelazab: whereas neceſſarieleſſe famous offenders that repented are mentioned, as Kuth and Thamar, and Rephabab.

This much of the Incarnation of Chriſt; now followeth the third & laſt point which is to be conſidered in the deſcription of Chriſt; namely, the eſtate of Chriſt after his birth, which was ſo-fold, the eſtate of humiliation, and the eſtate of exaltation.

The eſtate of humiliation, is the condition of Chriſt the Mediatour, in which hee abaſed himſelfe euen to the death of the croſſe, that by that meane he might performe the office of a Priſt in making ſatisfaction to the iuſtice of his Father.

This eſtate agrees to the whole perſon of Chriſt according to both natures. For firſt of all his manhood was abaſed and humbled, in that it was made ſubiect to the infirmities of mans nature; as alſo to the miſeries and puniſhmentes which were due vnto man for ſin. Secondly, his Godhead was abaſed, not as it is conſidered in it ſelfe: for ſo it admits no alteration of change; but in reſpect of the fleſh or manhood aſſumed; vnder the which, as vnder a vaille, the godhead lay hid from the firſt moment of the Incarnation to the time of his reſurrection, without any great manifeſtation of his power and maiesty therein.

The order of theſe two eſtates muſt be marked. The firſt is the eſtate of humiliatio, & the in the ſecond place follows the eſtate of exaltation. As Chriſt faith of himſelfe, O foole, and ſlow of tears to beleeue, &c. ought not Chriſt to haue ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory? And here we for our parts muſt learne a leſſon. The ſame which was true in Chriſt the head, muſt be verified in all his members; they muſt all haue their two-fold eſtate: firſt in this life the eſtate of humiliatio: ſecondly, after this life the eſtate of glory. And as Chriſt firſt entered into the ſtate of his humiliation, and then into glory: ſo it is with his members, firſt they muſt be abaſed in this life, and ſecondly exalted in the world to come. Hee that will raigne with Chriſt and be exalted, muſt firſt ſuffer with him, and be humbled: hee that will wear the crowne of glory, muſt wear firſt a crowne of thorns, they that will haue all teares wiped from their eyes, muſt here firſt in this life ſhed them. And the children of God before they can ſing the ſong of Moſes, and of the ſeruants of God, and of the lambe, muſt firſt ſwim through the ſea of burning glaſſe: whereby is ſignified, that thoſe which after this life would ſing ſongs of praifes to Chriſt, muſt in this life becaſt into a ſea of miſery. And if this be true, then we may here learne, that is a wretched caſe for a man in this life to haue perpetual eaſe, reſt, and quietneſſe both in body & ſoule, goods, and good name: for wee fee by Chriſts example, that thorough aduerſitie wee muſt come to happineſſe: and if a man would haue rest and peace in the life to come, then in this life he must looke for trouble, persecution, and sorrow. Indeede in the iudgement of the world, they are blessed that alwaies live at rest; but before God they are most miserable, and (as oxen which are made fat in the best pasture) ready for the slaughter-house every day. Secondly, here is an excellent consolation for those which profess the Gospel of Christ; in the time of trouble and persecution they must reioyce; because the state of humiliation in this life is a signe that they are in the plaine and right way to saluation and glory. A man is to take his journey into a farre countrey, and inquiring for the way it is told him that there are many plaine waies, but the straight and right way is by woods, and hills, and mountains; and great dangers: now when hee is travelling, and comes into those places, he gathereth certainly that he is in the right way: so the child of God that is going to the kingdom of heauen, though there be many waies to walke in, yet he knows that there is but one right way; which is very strait and narrow, full of trouble, sorrow and persecution: full of all manner of crosse, and afflictions: and when in this life he is persecuted and afflicted for good causes, whether in body or in mind, if he be content to beare his crosse, it argueth plainly that hee is in the right way to saluation: for through many afflictions we must enter into the Kingdom of heauen.

The humiliation of Christ is first of all set downe in the Creede generally, and secondly by his parts or degrees. Generally, in these words: suffered vnder Pontius Pilate. Where we must consider two things; the Passion it selfe, and vnder whom it was. For the first, that we may the better conceiue the passion in his owne nature, seauen speciall points must be opened. I. The cause efficient. The principall cause of the passion, as it is the price of our redemption, was the decree and providence of God; as Peter saith expressely, that Christ was deliuered by the determinate counsell & foreknowledge of God. The impulsive cause that moued God to worke our saluation by this meanes was nothing in man (for all mankind was shut vp vnder vniuerselle, & therefore vnable to procure the least fauour at Gods hands) but the will and good pleasure of God within himselfe. The instrument which the Lord vsed in his businesse, were the wicked Iewes and Gentiles, and the diuell himselfe, by whom he brought to passe the most admirable worke of redemption, even then when they according to their kind did nothing else but practise wickednesse and malice against Christ. II. The matter of the passion, is the whole malediction or curse of the Law, containing in it all manner of aduersities and miseries both of body and minde. All which may be reduced to three heads: the temptations of Christ, his ignominies and launders, his manifold sorrowes and griefes, especially those which stand in the apprehension of the vnspottable wrath of God. III. The forme of the passion, is that excellent and meritorious satisfaction which in suffering, Christ made vnto his Father for mans sinne. We doe not rightly consider of the passion, if we conceiue it to be a bare and naked suffering of punishment, but withall we must conceiue it as a propitiatorie for a meane, satisfaction to Gods iustice. The passion considered as a passion, ministers no comfort; but all our joy and reioicing stands in this, that by faith wee apprehend it as it is a satisfaction or a meane of reconciliation for our offences. In this very point stands the dignity of the passion, whereby it differs from all other sufferings of men whatsoever. Therefore most damnable & wicked is the opinion of the Papists; who besides the alone passio of Christ, maintaine workes of satisfaction, partly of their owne, & partly of the Saints departed: which they adde to the passion as an appendage thereof. I. V. The end of the passion, is that God might bring to passe a worke in which he might more fully manifest his iustice and mercy, then he did in the creation, and that is, the reconciliation betweene God and man. And here remember with the passion, to ioyne the actiue obedience of Christ in fulfilling the law; for Christ in suffering obeyed, and in obeying suffered. And they must bee ioyntly conceiued together for this cause. In reconciliation with God, two things are required: the removing of sinne in regard of the guilt, of the fault, and the punishment, and the conferring or giuing of righteousness. Now the passion of Christ considered apart from his legall obedience, only takes away the guilt and punishment, frees man from death, & makes him of a sinner to be no sinner: and that hee may be fully reconciled to God, and accepted as righteous to life euermlasting, the legall obedience of Christ must also be imputed. And therefore in the Scriptures, where all our redemption is ascribed to the death and passion of Christ, this very obedience which stands in the perfect loue of God and man must be included and not excluded. V. The time of the passion was from the very birth of Christ to his resurrection; yet so, as the beginning onely of his sufferings were in the course of his life, and the accomplishment thereof to the very full vpon the crosse. VI. The person that suffered was the Sonne of God himselfe: concerning whome in this case two questions must be resolued. The first, how can it stand with Gods iustice to lay punishment vpon the most righteous man that euer was, and that for grieuous sinners: considering that tyrants themselves will not doe so. Answer. In the passion, Christ must not be considered as a priuate person: for then it could not stand with equite that hee should be plagued and punished for our offences, but as one in the

eternall counsell of God set apart to be a public jury or pledge for vs, to suffer and performe those things which we in our own persons should haue suffered and performed. For this cause God the Father is said to giue his Sonne vnto vs, and the Sonne againe to giue his life for his friends, Ioh. 3. 16. & 15. 13. The second question is, how by the short & temporary death of the Sonne of God, any man can possibly bee freed from eternall death and damnation which is due vnto him for the least sinne. Answer. When we say that the Sonne of God suffered, it must be vnderstood with distinction of the natures of Christ, not in respect of the Godhead, but in respect of the assumed manhood: yet neuertheless the passion is to be ascribed to the whole person of Christ God and man: and from the dignity of the person which suffered, ariseth the dignity and excellency of the passion, whereby it is made in value and price, to counterbalance euermlasting damnation. For when as the Son of God suffered the curse for a short time, it is more then if all men and angels had suffered the same for euer. VII. The difference of the passion of Christ, and the sufferings of Martyrs: & that stands in two things. First, Christs passio was a cursed punishment; the sufferings of the Martyrs are no curses, but either chastisements or trials. Secondly, the passion of Christ is meritorious for vs even before God, because he became our Mediator & surety in the covenat of grace; but the sufferings of Martyrs are not of value to merit for vs at Gods hand; because in suffering they were but priuate men, and therefore they nothing appertaine to vs. By this it appears, that the Treasure of the Church of Rome, which is as it were a common chest containing the ouerplus of the merits of Saints, mingled with the merits of Christ, kept & disposed by the Pope himselfe, is nothing else but a senselesse dotage of mans braine. And whereas they say, that Christ by his death did merit, that Saints might merit both for themselves and others, it is as much as if they should say, the Son of God became Iesus, to make euery one Iesus. And it is a manifest vntruth which they say. For the very manhood of Christ considered apart from the godhead, cannot merit properly: considering whatsoever it is, hath, or doth; it is, hath, & doth the same, wholly & only by grace: whereas therefore Christ merits for vs, it is by reason he is both God and man in one person. For this cause it is not possible, that one meere man should merit for another.

The vse of the passion followeth. It is the maner of Friars and Iesuits in the Church of Rome, to vse the consideration of the passion of Christ, as a meane to stirre vp compassion in themselves, partly towards Christ, who suffered grieuous toiments, and partly towards the Virgin Mary, who for the tormetments of her deere Son was exceedingly troubled; & withall to kindle in their hearts an indignatio towards the Iewes that put Christ to death. But indeede this kinde of vse is meere humane, & may in like manner be made by reading of any humane history. But the proper and speciall vse of the passion indeed is this: first of all, wee must let it before our eyes as a looking-glasse, in which we may cleerely behold the horribleness of our sins, that could not be pardoned without the passio of the Son of God; and the vnspokeable loue of Christ that died for vs, and therefore loued his owne enemies more then his owne life; and lastly, our endlesse peace with God and happinesse: in that, considering the person of our redeemer, who suffered the pangs of hell, we may after a sort finde our paradise euen in the midst of hell.

Secondly, the meditation of Christs passion serues as a most worthy meane to begin and to confirme grace, specially whe it is mingled with faith; & that a waies. For first, it serues to breed in our hearts a godly sorrow for our sins past, whe we do seriously with our selues consider, that our owne sinnes were the cause of all the paines and sorrowes and calamities which he suffered in life and death, Len. 4. 4. 29. When any man had sinned vnder the law, he brought vnto the temple or tabernacle some kind of beast for an offering, according as he was prescribed, laying his hand vpon the head of it, and afterward slaying it before the Lord. Now by the ceremony of laying on the hand, he testified that he for his part had deserved death, and not the beast; and that it being slain & sacrificed, was a signe vnto him of the sacrifice of Christ offered vpon the crosse for his sins. And hereby we are taught, that so oft as wee remember the passion of Christ, we should lay our hands as it were vpon our own heads, vtterly accusing and condemning our selues, euermore keeping this in our hearts: that Christ suffered not for himselfe, but for our offences, which were the proper cause of all his woe and misery. And as Christs passion was grieuous & bitter vnto him, so should our sins likewise be grieuous and bitter vnto vs: let vs alwaies remember this; otherwise we shall neuer reap any found benefit by the passion of Christ.

Again, the passion of Christ is a notable meane to stirre vp in our hearts a purpose & a care to reforme our selues, and liue in holiness and newnes of life, on this manner. Hath the Sonne of God so mercifully dealt with me, as to suffer the curse of the whole law for my manifold iniquities, and to deliuer mee from iust and deserved damnation? yea, no doubt, he hath, I am resolued of it: if I should go on in mine old course, I should be the most ingratefull of all creatures to this my loving Saviour: I will therefore by his grace returne and reforme my life. And in this very point of reformation, the passion of Christ is fit before vs as a most liuely pattern & example to follow. For as much (saith S. Pet. 1. Pet. 4. 1. 1. 1.) Christ hath suffered for vs in the flesh, arme your felnes likewise with the same minde, which is, that he which hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin. Where he teacheth, that there must be in vs a spiritual passion answerable to the passion of Christs. For as his enemies did lade him with miseries euen to the death of the crosse; so should we lade our owne flesh, that is, the corruption of our natures, with all such means as may subdue and weaken, crucifie and kill it. To the doing of this, three things especially are required. First, we must consider that the corruption of our rebellious natures is like the great and mightie Goliath, and the grace of God, which we receive like yong and little Dauid; and therefore if we desire that grace should preuaile against corruption, we must disarme the strong man, and strip him of all his weapons: which is done, by giuing all the members of our bodies to be instruments of the seruice of God in righteousnesse and holinesse. Secondly, we must endeavour to keepe in the corruption of nature as it were cloking and smothering it in the heart; that by it neither the world nor the diuell preuaile against vs. And this must be done by hauing a narrow regard vnto all the powers and faculties of body and soule, setting a watch before our eyes, eares, lips, and all other parts of the body, that are in any action the instruments of the soule; and aboute all, as Salomon saith, By countergarding the heart with all diligence. By the outward senses of the body, as through open windowes the diuell creepes into the heart; and therefore our duty is, to stop all such waies of entrance. Thirdly, when original corruption begins to rebell either in the minde, will, or any of the affectiōs, then must we draw out the sword of the spirit which is the word of God, & encounter with that hideous giant, laying head vpon him by the iudgements & threatnings of the law, and as it were beating him downe with clubs, as Paul speaketh. And if it fall out, that concupiscence begin to conceiue and bring forth any sin, we must bruite it in the head, & dash it against the ground, as a bird in the shell, lest it grow vp to our vicer confusion. These are the duties which we should learne by the passion of Christs. But lamentable are our daies, in which all for the most part goes contrarie: for commonly men are so farre from killing and slaying the rebellion of the naturall concupiscence, that all their studie and care is, how they may feede & cherish it, and make it stronger then the mighty Goliath. But let vs for our parts be conformable to Christs in his passion, suffering in our flesh as he suffered in body & soule for vs. And let vs daily more and more by the hand of faith, apprehend and apply to our hearts & consciences the passion of Christs, that it may as a fretting coralline eate out the poison of our fittill natures and consume it.

Now folloves the second point concerning the passion of Christs, which is, vnder whom he suffered, namely vnder Pontius Pilate. And Christs may be said to suffer vnder him in two respects. First, because he was then the president of Iurie. For a litle before the birth of Christs, the Kingdome of the Iewes was taken away by the Romane Emperour, and reduced into a Prouince, and Pontius Pilate was placed ouer the Iewes, not as king, but as the Romane Emperours deputy. And this circumstance is noted in the history of the Gospel, and here specified in the Creede, to shew that the Messias was exhibited in the time fore-tolde by the Prophets. Jacob fore-tolde that Shilo must bee borne after the scepter is remoued from Judah: Isaiah saith, that the family of Ishai shall be worne as it were to the roote, before Christs as a branch shall spring out of it. Again, Christs suffered vnder Pontius Pilate as he was a iudge: whereby we are giuen to vnderstand of a wonder; namely, that Christs the Sonne of God, King of heauen and earth, was arraigned at the barre of an earthly iudge, and there condemned. For thus much the words in meaning import, that Pontius Pilate late as a iudge vpo Christs to examine him, to arraigne him, & giue sentence against him. Wherefore before we come to speake of the degrees of the Passiō of Christs, we must needs intreat of his arraignement vpon earth. In handling whereof we must generally consider these points: First, that when he was arraigned before Pilate, he was not as a priuate man, but as a pledge and surety that stood in the place and stead of vs miserable sinners, as the Prophet Isaiah saith, He bare our infirmities, and carried our sorrowes; and whichall in him was mankind arraigned before God. Secondly, this arraignement was made not priuately in a corner, but openly in the publicke court, & that in a great feast of the Iewes, as it were in the hearing of the whole world. Thirdly, though Pilate in citing, examining, and condemning Christs, intended not to work any part of mans redemption, yet was this wholly set down in the counsell & good pleasure of God, in whose roome Pilate saith, and whose iudgement he exercised.

The generall vse of Christs arraignement, is two-fold. First, it is a terrou to all impenitent sinners: for there is no freedome or protection from the iudgement of God, but by the arraignement of Christs: and therefore such as in this life receiue not him by faith, must at the end of this world be brought out to the most terrible barre of the last iudgement, there to be arraigned before the King of heauen and earth. And marke the equitie hereof. Christs himselfe could not haue bin our Saviour and Redeemer, vnlesse he had bin brought out to the barre of an earthly iudge, & arraigned as a guilty malefactor: and there is no man vpon earth that liues and dies out of Christs, but hee must whether he wil or no, hold vp his hand at the bar of the great Iudge of all mankind, where he shall see hell vnderneath him burning red hot, & opening it selfe wide to swallow him vp: and on the right hand of God standing all the Prophets, Apostles, and Saints of Gods giuing iudgement iudgement against him: on the left hand, the diuell and all his angels accusing him; and within him a guilty conscience condemning him. And thus one day shall the arraignement of those persons be, that with full purpose of heart cleaue not to Christs; and yet alas, huge & infinite is the number of those which make more account of transitorie and earthly matters, euen of their pigges with the Gadrenes, then of him and his benefits: & such persons should rather be pitied then despised of vs al, considering their estate is such, that every day they are going as traitours pinioned to their owne iudgement, that they may goe thence to eternal execution.

2 Chron. 19. 6.

Secondly, Christs arraignement is a comfort to the godly. For he was arraigned before Pilate, that all such as truly beleue in him, might not bee arraigned before God at the day of the last iudgement: he was accused before an earthly iudge, that they might be cleared and excused before the heavenly Iudge: lastly, he was here condemned on earth, that we might receiue the sentence of absolution, and be eternally saved in heauen.

The arraignement of Christs hath three parts: his apprehension, his accusation, his condemnation. In the apprehension we must consider two things: the dealing of Christs: & the dealing of Judas and the Iewes. The dealing and proceeding of Christs was this: when he saw that the time of his apprehension and death was neere, he solemnely prepared himselfe thereto. And his example must teach every one of vs who know not the shortnesse of our daies, every houre to prepare our selues against the day of death, that then wee may be found ready of the Lord. What? shall the Sonne of God himselfe make preparation to his owne death, & shall not we most miserable sinners doe the same, who stand in need of a thousand preparations more then hee? wherefore let vs continually thinke with our selues that every present day is the last day of our life, that so we may addresse our selues to death against the next day.

The first thing which Christs doth in this preparation, is to make choice of the place, in which he was to be apprehended, as will appeare by conferring the Euangelists together. S. Matthew saith, Math. 26. 26. He went to the place called Gethsemane: S. Luke saith, Luke 22. 39. he went to the mount of Olives as he was accustomed. And that wee might not imagine that Christs did this that he might escape and hide himselfe from the Iewes, Saint Iohn saith, That Judas which betrayed him knew the place, because oftentimes he resorted thither with his Disciples: whereas if he had feared apprehension, he would haue rather gon aside to some other secret & vnwonted place. This then is the first point to be considered, that Christs knowing the time of his owne death to be at hand, doth willingly of his owne accord referre to such a place, in which his enemies in all likelihood might easily finde him, & haue fit oportunitie to attack him. For if he should haue still remained in Hierusalem, the Scribes & Pharisees durst not haue enterprised his apprehensiō, because of the people whom they feared: but out of the city in the garde all occasiō of feare is cut off. By this it is manifest, that Christs yeelded himselfe to death willingly, & not of constraint: vnlesse his sufferings had bin voluntarie on his part, they could neuer haue bin a satisfaction to Gods iustice for our sins. Here a question offers it selfe to be considered, whether a man may lawfully flie in danger & persecutiō, seeing Christs himselfe doth not. Ans. When good meanes of flying & iust occasion is offered, it is lawfull to flie. When the Iewes sought to kill Paul at Damascus, the Disciples tooke him by night, and put him through the wal, & let him down in a basket to escape their hands. When Moses was called by God to deliver the Israelites, after he had slaine the Egyptian, & the fact was knowne, and Pharaoh sought to kill him for it, he fled to the land of Madiā. And our Saniour Christs sundry times whē he was to be stoned, & otherwise hurt by the Iewes, withdrew himself from among thē. It is lawfull thē to flie in persecutiō, these caueats obserued: I. If a man find not himself sufficiently strengthened to beare the crosse. II. his departure must be agreeable to the generall calling of a christian, seruing to the glorie of God, & the good of his brethre, & the hurt of none. III. There must be freedome at the least for a time from the bond of a mans particular calling. If he be a Magistrate, he must be freed from ruling: if a Minister, from preaching & teaching, otherwise he may not flie. And in this respect Christs, who withdrew him selfe at other times, would not flie at this time; because the houre of his suffering was come, wherein he intended most willingly to submit himself to the good pleasure & wil of his father.

The second part of the preparation, is the praier which Christs made vnto his Father in the garden. And herein his example doth teach vs earnestly to pray vnto God against the danger of imminent death, and the temptations which are to come. And if Christs who was without sin, & had the spirit above measure, had need to pray, then much more haue we need to be watchfull in all kind of praiers, who are laden with the burthen of sinne, and compassed about with manifold impediments and dangerous enemies.

In this prayer sundry points worthy our marking are to be considered. The first, who prayed? Ans. Christs the Sonne of God: but still we must remember the distinction of natures and of their operations in one and the same Christs: he praies not in his godhead, but according to his manhood. The second, is for whom he prayeth. Ans. Some haue thought that this and all other his praies were made for his mytticall body the Church: but the truth is, he now praies for himself, yet not as he was God, for the godhead feels no want; but as he was a man abased in the forme of a servant; and that for two causes. First, in that he was a man, he was a creature, and in that respect was to performe homage to God the Creator. Secondly, as he was man, he put on the infirmities of our nature, and thereupon prayed that he might haue strength, and power in his manhood to support him in bearing the whole brunt of the passion to come.

The third point, is to whom he prayed? Ans. To the Father: neither must this trouble vs, as though Christ in praying to the Father, should pray to himselfe, because he is one & the same God with him. For though in essence they admit no distinction, yet in person or in the proper manner of subsisting they doe. The Father is one person, the Sonne another: therefore as the Father saying from heauen, This is my well beloued Sonne spake not to himselfe, but to the Sonne: so againe the Sonne when he praeth, he praies not to himselfe, but to the Father.

The fourth point, what was the particular cause of his prayer. Ans. His agony in which his soule was heavy vnto death: nor because he feared bodily death, but because the malediction of the law, euen the very heate of the furie & indignation of God was poured forth vpon him, wherewith he was affected & troubled, as if he had bin defiled with the finnes of the whole world. And this appeares, first, by the words whereby the Euangelists expresse the agony of Christ, which signifie exceeding great sorrow and griefe: secondly, his dolefull complaint to his Disciples in the garden: My soule is heauie vnto death: thirdly, by his feruent prayer thrice repeated, full of dolefull passions: fourthly, by the coming of an angell to comfort him: fifthly, by his bloody sweat, the like whereof was neuer heard. And herein lies the difference betweene Christs agony, & the death of Martyrs: he put on the guilt of all our finnes, they in death are freed from the same: he was left to himselfe void of comfort, they in the midst of their afflictions feele the vnspokeable comfort of the holy Ghost: and therefore wee neede not maruell why Christ should pray against death, which neuertheless his members haue receiued and borne most ioyfully. Again, this most bitter agony of Christ is the ground of all our reioicing, and the cause why Paul bids all the faithfull in the person of the Phillipians, to reioyce alwaies in the Lord, & againe to reioyce. And here we are further taught, that when we are plunged into a sea of most grievous afflictions, & overwhelmed with the gulfes of most dreadfull temptations, euen then, then I say, we should not be discouraged, but lift vp our hearts by feruent prayer to God. Thus did Christ when in the garden he was about to drinke the cup of the wrath of God, & to suck vp the very dregs of it: and David saith, that one of the deepest hee called on the name of the Lord, & was heard.

The fifth point, what is the matter and forme of this prayer? Ans. Christ praies to be deliuered from the death & passion which was to come, saying on this manner, Mark. 14. 35, 36. Father, let this cup passe from me: yet with two clauses added thereto, If it be possible, and, Not my will, but thy will be done. But it may be demanded, how it could be, that Christ knowing that it was his fathers will and counsell that hee should suffer death for man, & also comming into the world for that end, should make such a request to his father without sinne. Ans. The request proceeds onely of a weakenes or infirmity in Christs manhood without sin, which appeares thus: We must still consider, that when he made his prayer to his Father, the whole wrath of God, and the very dolorous & pangs of hell seazed vpon him: whereby the senses & powers of his minde were attonied, and wholly bent to releue nature in his agony. For as when the heart is smitten with griefe, all the blood in the body flows thither to comfort it: so when Christ was in this astonishment, the vnderstanding and memory, and all the parts of his humane nature, (as it were for a time suspending their owne proper actions) concurred to sustaine & support the spirit and life of Christ, as much as possibly might be. Now Christ being in the midst of this perplexed estate, praies on this manner, Father, if it be possible, let this cup passe. And these words proceede not from any sin or disobedience to his Fathers will, but only from a meere perturbation of minde, caused onely by an outward means, namely, the apprehension of Gods anger, which neither blinded his vnderstanding nor tooke away his memory, so as he forgot his Fathers will, but only stopped & stayed the act of reasoning and remembering for a little time: euen as in the most perfect clock that is, the motion may be stayed by the ayre, or by mans hand, or by some outward cause without any defect or breach, made in any part of it. It may be objected, that Christs will is flat contrary to the will of his father. Ans. Christs will as he is man, and the will of his father in this agony, were not contrary, but only diuerse, and that without any contradiction or contrariety. Now a man may will a diuerse thing from that which God willeth, and that without sin. Paul desired to preach the word of God in Asia & Bithynia, but he was hindered by the spirit. For all this, there is no contrariety between Paul, and the spirit of God; but in shew of discord great content. For that which Paul willeth well, the spirit of God willeth not, by a better will: though the reason hereof be secret, and the reason of Pauls will manifest. Again, the minister in charity reputed the whole congregation to be elect, in holy manner seeks & wills the saluation of euery one, which neuertheless the Lord in his eternall counsell wills not. Now betweene both these wills there may beand is a difference without contrariety. For one good thing as it is good, may differ fro another, but it cannot be contrary vnto it. It may further further be alleadged, that in this prayer there seemes to be a combat & fight in the mind, will, and affections of Christ, and therefore sin. Ans. There be three kinds of combats: the one between reason & appetite, and this fight is alwaies sinfull, and was not in Christ: the second, is between the flesh and the spirit, and this may be in Gods child who is but in part regenerate; but it did not befall Christ who was perfectly holy: the third, is the combat of diuers desires, vpon sundry respects drawing a man to and fro. This may be in mans nature without fault: & was in Christ, in whom the desire of doing his fathers will, struing & struggling with another desire, whereby nature seeks to preserve it selfe, caused him to pray in this manner.

Ioh. 11.

The sixth point, is in what manner Christ prayed. Ans. He prayed to his Father partly kneeling, partly lying on his face, & that with strong cries & tears, sweating water & blood, and all this hee did for our finnes. Here then behold the agony of Christ, as a cleere cristall, in which we may fully see the exceeding greatness of our finnes, as also the hardnes of our hearts. We goe vaunting with our heads to heauen as though it were nothing to sinne against God, whereas the horror of the wrath of God for our rebellions, brought downe euen the Sonne of God himselfe, and laid him groveling vpon the earth. And we cannot so much almost as shed one teare for our iniquities, whereas he sweates blood for vs. Oh let vs therefore learne to abate our selues, & to carry about vs contrite and bleeding hearts, and be confounded in our selues for our finnes past.

Ioh. 5.

The last point, is the euent of the prayer, which isto be heard, as the author to the Hebrewes saith, Hebr. 5. 7. Christ Iesus in the daies of his flesh, did offer up vnto his Father prayers and supplications, with strong crying and teares, vnto him, that was able to saue him: and was also heard in that thing which he feared. But some will say, how was Christ heard, seeing he suffered death and bare the pangs of hell, and the full wrath of God? if hee had been heard, he should haue beene deliuered from all this. Answer. We must know that God heares our prayers two waies: 1. When he directly grants our request. 2. When knowing what is good for vs, hee giues not vs our requests directly, but a thing answerable thereunto. And thus was Christ heard: for he was not deliuered from suffering; but yet hee had strength and power giuen him, whereby his manhood was made able to beare the brunt of Gods wrath. And in the same manner God heareth the prayers of his seruants vpon earth. Paul prayed to be deliuered from the angell of Satan that buffeted him: but the Lord answered that it should not so be, because his grace whereby he was enabled to resist his temptatio, was sufficient: & Paul finding the fruite of his prayers on this manner, protesteth hereupon that hee will reioyce in his infirmities. Others pray for temporall blesings, as health, life, liberty, &c. which not withstanding God holds backe, and giues in stead thereof spiritual graces, patience, faith, contentation of minde. Augustine saith, God heares not our prayers alwaies according to our wils, and desires, but according as the things asked, shall be for our saluation. Hee is like the Physician, who goes on to lance the wound, and heares not the patient though hee cry neuer so, till the cure be ended.

Now followeth the second thing to be considered in Christs apprehension, namely, the dealing of the Iewes: wherein we must consider foure things: 1. How they consule together concerning Christs apprehension. 2. How they came to the place & met him. 3. How they laid hands on him. 4. How they bound him and tooke him away. For the first, before they enterprised this matter, they did wisely and warily lay their heads together, to consule of the time and place: and also of the manner of apprehending him. So S. Matthew saith, Math. 26. 3, 4, 5. There assembled together the chiefe Priests & the Scribes, and the Elders of the people into the Hall of the chiefe Priest called Caiaphas: and consulted how they might take Iesus by subtiltie. Whence wee learne two good instructions: first, the Iewes hauing a quarrell against Christ, could not be at rest till they had his blood: and therefore they consule how they might take him; but God did so order the matter, & dispose of their purposes and consultations, that euen thereby hee did confound them, and their whole nation. For by reason of this hainous finne against Christ, came the iust wrath of God vpon them, and so remaineth vnto this day. Whereby wee see, that the Lord will overthrow such in their own wisdom, that will be wise without the direction of Gods word, and against Christ. And thus it was with Achitophel, who for wisdom was the Oracle of God: yet because hee rebelled against the Lords anointed, God confounded him in his owne wisdom. For when his counsell which he gaue against David was not followed, he thought himselfe despised, as the text saith, 2. Sam. 17. 23. and Iaded his Ass, and rose and went home into his city, and put his bonnell in order, and hanged himselfe: and in this action he shewed himselfe more senseless then a brute beast. And in our daies the Leaguers that haue bound themselves by oath to root out the church of God; by his most wonderful prouidence turne their swords against themselves, and destroy each other. Therefore if we would be wise, we must learne to be wise in Christ: for else our counsell will be our own confusion. Secondly, hence wee learne, that if any shall lue in stubbornnes and rebellion against Christ, the Lord will so carry and order those men, & that people, that in the end they shall be the very causes of their own perdition. This wee see most plainly in the example of these Iewes: for they euermore enuied Christ, & now they goon to take counsell against him; but God so disposed thereof, that euen by this meanes they brought destruction vpon themselves & their country. This must teach thee to take heede how thou liuest in thy sins: for if thou doe so, the Lord hath many waies to worke thy confusion: as, thy conscience to condemne thee; thy friends to forsake thee; the diuell and his angels to torment & molest thee; & his creatures to annoy thee: Yea, the Lord can leaue all these, and make thine owne selfe to be the direct meanes of working thine own confusion both in body and soule eternally: and that euen then when thou art most warie and wise in thine own behalf: and this is the reward of all those that walke on in their euill wayes without any true consercion.

Having consulted, in the next place they come to the garden, where Christ was to be apprehended. And here wee are to consider who they were that came, namely, the Scribes and Pharisees, the high Priests and their seruants, a band of souldiers, and the seruants of Pontius Pilate, and the Elders of the Iewes: all which came with one consent to the place where Christ was, that they might attach him. Where we learn a good lesson, that all sorts of wicked men disagreeing among themselves, can agree against Christ. The Scribes & Pharisees were two contrary sects, and at discord one with another in matters of religion: and Indas was one of Christs disciples: the Elders differed from them all: the souldiers were Gentiles: all these were at variance among themselves, & could not one brooke another. So also wee read that Herod and Pontius Pilate were not friends: but at the same time when Christ was apprehended, Pilate sent him to Herod, and they were made friends. Now as these wicked men did conspire against Christ; so doe the wicked ones of this world in all countries and kingdomes band themselves against the Church of Christ at this day. And howeouer such be at discord among themselves, yet they do all ioinc hand in hand to persecute Christ in his members. And the reason is plain: because Christ and his religion is as flat opposite to the corrupt disposition of all men, as light is to darkness.

Again, whereas we see so many sorts of men so amiably consenting to take Christ; we may note how all men naturally doe hate and abhorre him, and his religion. And looke as then it was with Christ, so hath it been with all his members, and will be to the end of the world. They are accounted as the off-scouring of the world, men not worthy to liue on the face of the earth: as Christ told his Disciples, saying: Ye shall be hated of all nations for my names sake.

Let vs also marke how all these came furnished to apprehend Christ: the text saith, They came with clubs and staves as unto a thief. All the whole nation of the Iewes knew right well, that Christ was no man of violence, but meek and lowly: and yet they came armed to apprehend him; as though he had beene some mighty potentate that would not haue beene apprehended, but haue resisted them. Where wee see the propertie of an euill conscience, which is to feare where there is no cause at all. This causeth some to be afraid of their owne shadowes: and if they see but a worme peepe out of the ground, they are at their wits end; and as Salomon saith, Prou. 28. 1. The wicked flee when none pursueth them.

After that they are now come to Christ, we are to consider two things in their meetings: I. Christs communication with them. II. The treason of Indas. Concerning their conference, it is said: Iesus knowing all things: that should come vnto him, went forth, and said vnto them, Whom seek ye? They answered him, Iesus of Nazareth: Iesus answered, I am he. Now to looke as he had said, I am he, the stoutest of them fel to the ground, as being astonished at the maiestie of his word. Where note, that the word of God is a word of power. The same power was in his word when he raised vp Lazarus: for when he had lien in the graue, & had entred into some degrees of corruption, hee did no more, but said, Lazarus come forth. And hence we may also marke what a wonderfull might & power is in the word preached: for it is the very word of Christ, and therefore being preached by his Ministers lawfully called by him thereunto, hath the same power and force in it, which Christ himselfe shewed when he spake on earth. It is the faueur of life vnto life, so faue those that heare it: or the faueur of death vnto death. It is like to a vapour or perfume in the ayre, which in some mens nostrils is fauour and pleasant: & doth reuiue them; and others againe it striketh dead. And therefore euery one that either now, or heretofore hath heard this word preached, shal find it to be vnto the either a word of power to saue their soules, or through their corruptio the ministry of death and condemnation. Again, if a word spoken by Christ, being in a bafe or low estate, be able to ouerthrow his enemies, then at the last day when he shall come in glory and power, and maiestie to iudge both the quicke & the dead, what power shall his words haue, Go ye cursed of my Father into euerslasting fire, which was prepared for the diuell & his angels. The consideration of this, that the word of Christ shall euen be as powerfull at that day, must be a motive to euery one of vs to cause vs to come vnto him: and while we haue time in these daies of grace and mercy to seeke to be reconciled vnto him for all our finnes, lest at the day wee heare that dreadfull voice of Christ sounding against vs, Go ye cursed into euerslasting fire, &c.

And thus much for the communication. Now followeth Indas his treason: wherein we are to obserue these things: I. The qualities and conditions of the man that did the treason. He was by calling a disciple chosen to be an Apostle, which is the chiefe in Ecclesiastical callings: and among the disciples he was in some account; because he was as it were a steward in Christs family, and bare the bag: but yet he was a traytor, and did more against Christ then all the Iewes did. For he brought them to the place where they might apprehend him: and when they were come, did point him out vnto them, and deliuered him into their hands: nay, he gaue them a signe and token, saying, Whom I kisse, he is it: take him and leade him away warily. Here wee see the cause why Christ called Indas a diuell: for he said: Haue I not chosen you swelue, and one of you is a diuell? He became to be a diuell and a traitour by nourishing a wicked and couctous heart. And here we are taught, that the Ministers of the word, if they make no conscience of sin, by the iust iudgement of God doe prooue diuels incarnate: this example of Indas doth manifest the same: and the reason is plaine, for the more knowledge a man hath, the more wicked he is, if he want grace. They are like in this case vnto a man that hath meate and drinke enough, but no stomacke to digest meate: whereby the more he eateth, the more it turneth to his hurt. This I spake not to deface the callings of ministers, but that those which preach Gods word, should not doe it with impenitent hearts, liuing in their owne finnes. For it is a fearful thing for a man to speake vnto the people, of the pardon of their sinne, and yet himselfe not to apprehend the same by faith. A lump of waxe if you keep it from heate, or from the fire, it keeps his owne forme still, but if it be held to the fire, it melts and runnes abroad: so ministers who by reason of their callings come neere God, if they be lumps of iniquity and liue in their finnes, they shall finde that the corruptions of their hearts will melt abroad as waxe at the fire. And therefore euery one that is designed to this calling, must first purge himselfe of his owne sinne, or els Gods iudgements shall fall vpon him, as they did on Indas that betrayed Christ.

Secondly, let vs consider what moued Indas to betray his master: namely, the desire of wealth: and gain: and this conetousnes, which is an insatiable desire of money, is the root of all sinne: not that all finnes came of it, but because where it is, there all other sins are preferred, and do get strength. The desire of thirty peeces of silver caused Indas to make an agreement with the Iewes to betray his master. Some man will haply say, that this practise of Indas was very strange, and that no man now liuing would doe the like for any money. Answer. Indas is dead indeed, but his practise is yet alive: for in the high and weighty calling of the ministry, he that hath charge of soules, and either can not teach, and leede his flocke, or els will not, though he betray not Christ in his owne person, yet he betraies the members of Christ vnto the diuell. If a nounce should take a mans child to bring vp, & yet feldome or neuer giue it milke; in so much that the childe pineth away for very hunger; is not he the very cause of the death of it? yes verily. And so it is with him that taketh vpon him the charge of Gods people, and neuer feedes them with the milke of Gods word, or els so feldome that their soules doe famish: he is the murderer of them, and hath betrayed them into the hands of their enemies: and shall be condemned for them as a traitour vnto God vnlesse he repent. Besides those that liue by traffique in buying and selling, make gaine by lying, swearing, and breaking the Lords Sabbath: and they also are very Indasses: for they chop away their soules with the diuell for a little gain. And more lamentable is their case, because it is hard to finde one of a hundred in the world that makes conscience of a lie, or of any bad dealing; if any giue attall may come thereby. Men vnto cry out on Indas for betraying Christ: and they doe well; yet let themelues for a little worldly pelfe betray their owne soules. If such would not be counted Indasses, they must leaue off sinne, and keep a good conscience in Gods worship, and the works of their callings.

Thirdly, let vs consider what course Indas tooke in betraying Christ, he was very subtile, saying, Hailie, Master, and kessed him. Why did he for herein he plaied the most palpable hypocrite: for hauing gotten a peece of money, he thought that neither Christ, nor any of his fellow disciples should haue known of it, (though Christ knew it well enough) & therefore hee comes in this manner to him thinking that Christ would haue conieced himself from amongst them at the very pinch as he had done sometimes before. And tis practise also of Indas is common in the world: Indas an enemy vnto Christ speaks him faire, and salutes him: and so do most of our secure and drowfie protestants in England: they salute Christ, both by hearing his word and receiving his Sacraments: and as the Prophet saith, They honour God with their lips, but their hearts are farre from him. We may see daily experience of this: euery man will say, Lord, Lord, but in their liues and conseruations, few there be that deny him not, both in their duties which they owe vnto God, as also in their duties towards their brethren. Many come to heare Gods word because they are compelled by the Magistrates lawes: but when they are come, they worship not God in their hearts, which is plainly seen by the breach of Gods holy Sabbath in euery place: and that they make more account of a messe of portage with Esau, then of their birth-right: and of thirty peeces of silver, then of Christ himselfe.

The third point to be handled in Christs apprehension, is that they lay hold on him: wherein we must consider two things: I. the resistance made by Christs disciples. II. their flight. For the first, Christs disciples resisted, & specially Peter drawing his sword, strooke one of the high Priests seruantes, & cut off his eare. This

This fact our Saviour Christ reprooves: and that for these causes: I. because his disciples were private men; and they that came to apprehend him were magistrates. Secondly, he was to work the work of mans redemption: now Peter by this fact did what hee could to hinder him. And from this practise of Peter we may learne, that nothing in the world is so hard to a man, as to take vp his crosse and follow Christ. One would thinke it should be a hard matter for him to encounter with his enemies, especially they being stronger then he: but Peter stoutly resisting makes nothing of it: whereas a litle before when Christ told him and the rest concerning his passion, they were so heavy with griefe that they could not hold vp their heads: so hard a thing it is to beare the crosse; and for this very cause afterward when Christ reprooved him for striking, both he and all the rest of the disciples fled away. Secondly, Peter in all mans reason was to be commended, because he strake in the defence of his master; but Christ reprooves him for it. Whence we learne, that if a man be zealous for Christ, he must be zealous within the compasse of his calling: and not be zealous first, and then looke for a calling, but first looke for a calling, and then be zealous. Which thing if Peter had marked, he had not dealt so rashly; for being without the compasse of his calling hee could not but doe amisse. Here it may be demanded, whether Christ and his religion may not be maintained by the sword? I answer, that the Magistrate, which is the vicegerent of the Lord, is the keeper of both tables: and therefore is to maintaine religion with the sword: and so may put to death Atheists, which hold there is no God, of which fort there are many in these daies; and heretikes, which maliciously maintaine, and hold any thing that overthrowes the foundation of religion in the Churches whereof they are members. But some object, that in the parable of the field, the seruants are commanded not to plucke vp the tares from the wheat, but to suffer both to grow till harvest: and that therefore there must be no separation of heretikes and true Christians before the last day of iudgement. Answer. The scope of that place is not to forbid the execution of heretikes; but it speakes onely of the final separation which must be in the end of the world. For there the master of the family doth signifie God himselfe, and the field, the Church militant spread over the face of the whole earth: and by tares is meant not onely heretikes: but also those that are forth of the Church: the seruants are Gods holy Angels, and the harvest is the last iudgement. Here further it may be demanded, who may vse the sword? Answer. All men may vse the sword to strike and to kill, into whose hands God putteth the sword. Now God putteth it into the hand, first & principally of the publike Magistrate, who when illi occasion

A ferues, may draw it out. And againe, it is put into a private mans hand sometime. A private man when he is assailed of his enemy, may take the sword in way of his owne defence, and may kill his enemy therewith (if there be no other helpe) not doing it vpon malice, but because he can no otherwise escape, and save his owne life: and so for want of a Magistrate, he is a Magistrate vnto himselfe.

In the flight of the Disciples we may consider two things: the time, and the quality of the persons. The time, was at the apprehension of our Lord and Saviour. And this came to passe not without the speciall providence of God: that it might be knowne that Christ had no helper or fellow in the accomplishment of the worke of our redemption: and that, whereas we for our sinnes deferred to be forsaken of all creatures, he being our pledge and surety might bee forsaken for vs. As for the quality of the persons that fled, they were the chosen disciples of Christ, such as had beleueed in him, confessed him, and preached in his name. And this serueth to teach vs, that GOD will otherwhiles forsake his own children and seruants, and leaue them to themselves in some part, that they may feeble their wants and miseries, and their weaknesse in themselves, and by that meanes be humbled thoroughly, and be touched with an hungering desire after Christ. As a mother sets downe her child and hides her selfe, suffering it to cry, fall, and breake the face, not because the heart is, but that shee may teach it to depend vpon her, and loue her; so God giueth grace to his children, and yet againe sometime he doth in part withdraw it from them, and then they faile in their duties sundry wayes: and this he doth to make them ashamed of themselves, and to cause them to put all their confidence out of themselves in the merits of Christ.

The fourth thing to be considered in Christs apprehension, is his binding of him. In which action of theirs wee are to obserue first of all the circumstance of time, when this binding was. When our Saviour Christ had said vnto them, I am he, they being astonished fell to the ground: and withall, when Peter had smitten off Malchus care with the sword, Christ healed the same miraculously. Yet for all this, though they had seene his wonderfull power both in word and deed, they proceeded in malice against him; and lay hands on him, and bind him as a malefactor. In this we note what a fearfull sinne hardnesse of heart is: the danger whereof appeareth in this, that if a man be ouertake with it, there is nothing that can stay or daunt him in his wicked proceedings: no not the powerful words and deeds of Christ himselfe. And indeede among Gods iudgements there is none more fearfull then this: and yet (how fearfull soeuer it be) it is a rite sinne amongst vs in these our daies. For it is very euident by common experience, that the more men are taught the doctrine of the law, and of the Gospell, the more hard and senseless are their hearts: like vnto the stithy; which, the more it is beaten vpon with the yron hammer, the harder it is. And againe, it is hard to finde men that forrow for their sins, and feeble the want of Christ: which argueth the exceeding deadnes of spirit. And let vs be resolute that it is a most terrible iudgement of God, the rather to bee feared, because it is like a pleasant sleepe, into which when a man is fallen, hee feels neither paine nor griefe. And therefore wee for our parts must looke vnto it with feare and trembling, least it take such hold of vs that we be past all hope of recovery.

Furthermore, this binding of Christ was prefigured vnto vs in the sacrifices of the old Testament: for the beast that was to be sacrificed, was tyed with cords and bound, and so brought to the altar. And whereas Christ was bound, wee must not consider him in his owne person; but as he standing in our roome and stead, beeing the person of all sinners: and therefore whereas he is thus taken captiue by his enemies, to be brought before a mortall iudge, there to be arraigned for vs: hence wee learne two good instructions. First, here is a comfort to all the people of God: Christ was bound by his enemies, that they might be vnloosed from the bondage of Satan, sinne, and their owne corruptions (vnder which they lie bound by nature) and might haue free liberty in and by him. Secondly, all impenitent sinners are taught hereby to reforme and amend their hearts and liues. For what exceeding madnes is this, that they by Christs bonds being set at liberty, will yet liue and die in their sinnes, and take pleasure to lie bound hand & foote vnder the power of sinne and Satan. And indeede this shewes vnto vs the fearefull and dangerous estate of all those that goe on still in their sinnes. For what can they say for themselves at the day of iudgement, when as now they haue freedome offered, and will not accept of it?

This much of Christs apprehension: now followeth the inditement. For they proceeded against him iudicially, after the custome of the Iewes. Christs inditement was two-fold. One before Caiaphas the high priest in the great Councell at Ierusalem; the second before the ciuill iudge Pontius Pilate, as is plainly set forth by all the Euangelists. And Christs arraignment before Caiaphas was a preparation to the second before Pontius Pilate, that the Iewes might thoroughly proceede against him. In the first we are to consider these points: I. The time in which Christ was indicted. II. The end of his inditement. III. The whole tenour & proceeding thereof. For the first: Christ was indicted early in the morning at the breake of the day: for he was apprehended in the night, and withall haft brought into Caiaphas hall, where they kept him all night: and at the breake of the day Caiaphas the high priest and the elders with the Scribes and Pharisees, held a solemne councell against him: and there they receiued accusations and condemned him before morning, at which time they sent him to the common hall, as Saint Matthew saith, When the morning was come, all the chiefe Priests, and Elders of the people rose counsell against Iesus to put him to death; and led him away bound, and deliuered him to Pontius Pilate. In which action of theirs we are to marke two points. First, the diligence of vngodly men, and the quicknesse of their nature to practise sin and wickednesse: as it was said of the old Iewes, their feete runne to euill, and they make haste to shed blood. When the Israelites would sacrifice to the golden calfe which they had made, it is said they rose early in the morning. Here it appeares, that if God leaue vs to our felues, we are as ready to practise any mischiefe as the fire is to burne without delay, and that with much violence. Now the consideration of this must moue euery one of vs to take heede of all occasions and provocations to sin whatsoever they be, that the corruption of our nature breake not forth any way. Secondly, in the circumstance of the time of this Councell, we may mark the rashnes of this solemne assembly in iudicial proceedings: whereas they examine him both of his doctrine, & also of his Disciples, omitting such circumstances as should haue bene viewed as the serious examining of witnesses, & the weighing of his contrary answers: for he is taken and brought before the Iudge and condemned on the sudden. Now as this was the practise of the Councell, so on the contrary the common complaint of these times is of the slow dispatch of matters in law, and of the long delay: in so much that some bee almost vndone before their suites bee ended, whereas iudicial proceedings were ordained by God, not for mens vndoing, but for the maintaining of the common peace, and libertie, and wealth. And therefore iustice ought to bee dispatched with such speed, as men thereby might be furthered and not hindered.

The end of Christs inditement was directly to kill him, and to put him to death. Here is no indifferent proceeding, to be looked for, but plotting on euery hand for the very blood of Christ. Where note, that in the hearts of all wicked men, there is an ingrafted hatred of Christ, and as it were bred in the bone: and the same affection the world carrieth to the members of Christ. This hatred is manifest in the first giuing the promise, I will put enmitie betweene thee and the woman, betweene thy seede and her seede. It appeares in the hatred that Cain bare to his brother Abel: Isaiah towards Isaiah, Eliab towards Isaiah: and the Gentiles that were without the covenant, towards the Church of God at all times. And so come neere to our felues, this ingrafted hatred that is in the heart of the wicked against Christ & his members, is as plentifull and as euident as ever it was, euen in these our daies. For among all men none are more maligne and hated then those that professe Christ: and for none other cause, but because they professe Christ. And hereupon the very profession of religion is laden with nick-names and reprochfull termes by all sorts of men.

And thus much of the end and intent of their Councell. The proceeding in iudgement stands in these points. I. They examine Christ II. They bring witnesses against him. III. They aduise him to tell them who hee is: of these in order. First, they examine our Sauour Christ of his doctrine, suspecting him to be a false prophet: secondarily, of his disciples, as suspecting him feditiously to raise up a new sect vnto himselfe, to make a faction amongst the Iewes. Now to this examination let vs marke Christs answer, in which he faith nothing at all concerning his disciples: whereas notwithstanding he might haue said, that one of them betrayed him, another denied him, & the rest fled away: wherby we note that it is not our duty at all times, and in all places, to speake of the faults & wants that we know by others. Secondly, the answer which he makes is only concerning his doctrine: wherby the Ministers of God and all men els are taught, that being called before their enemies, to giue a reason of their doctrine: they are (as Saint Peter faith) to be alwayes ready to giue an account of the hope that is in them. And further we are to consider the wisdom that Christ vseth in answering, for he faith nothing of his doctrine in particular, but said, I speake openly in the world, I neuer taught in the Synagogue, & in the Temple whether the Iewes reformed, in secret haue I taught nothing: aske them therefore what I said which heard me: behold they can tell you what I said. Now the reason why he answered thus sparingly in general termes; is because their examination serued onely to intangle him, & out of his words to gather matter of accusation. After whose example we may learne, that being called to make answer of our faith and doctrine before our enemies, we are to doe it so, as thereby we doe not intangle our selues, nor giue any advantage vnto our enemies: & hereof wee haue a notable example in the Apostoll Paul, Act. 23. 6. Again, in the words of Christs answer we must obserue two things. First, that the place where Christ taught was publicke. Now hence it may be demanded, whether ministers may handle the word of God priuately or no? Ans. The state of Gods Church is two-fold: peaceable, or troublesome. In the time of peace, Ministers must preach the word publicly: but in time of persecution, for the safetie and preservation of the Church of God, they may with good warrant preach priuately: and indeede at such times the assemblies of the Church make priuate places publicke. And hence we learne, that in time of peace all those that are called to the office of the ministerie, must (if it be possible)

spend their labours publicly, so as they may doe most good. Secondly, whereas Christ faith, hee preached in their Synagogues and temple, which at that time were places full of disorder; inasmuch as he called the temple a den of theues: and the Scribes and Pharisees had corrupted the doctrine of the law, transgressing the commandments of God by their own traditions: and they taught iustification by the workes of the law as Paul faith, They being ignorant of the righteousness of God, and going about to establish their own righteousness, which is by workes, had not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God. Besides all this, they were loofe and wicked men in their liues and conuersations: and therefore Christ commanded the people that they should obserue, and do whatsoever the Scribes and Pharisees bid them, sitting in Moses chaire: but after their workes they must not doe; because they say and doe not. Now although these corruptions and deformities were in the Iewish Church, yet our Sauour Christ made no separation from it, but came and preached both in their temple and synagogues, where these seducers & false teachers were. And hence wee gather, that the practise of all those men in our Church, which separate themselves from all assemblies for the wants therof, holding that our Church is no Church; that the grace which is wrought by the preaching of the word among vs, is nothing els but a sacramental illusion; that Sacraments are no sacraments; I say, that their practise is condemned by our Sauour Christs conuersing among the Iewes. For if Christ should haue followed their opinion, he ought to haue fled from amongst the Iewes, and not so much as once to haue come into the temple, or taught in their Synagogues; but contrariwise he ioynd himselfe with them: and therefore we cannot in good conscience disioyne our selues from the Church of England. The second thing to be obserued in Christs answer, is that hee referres Caiphas to the iudgement of his hearers, being resolved of the truth of his owne doctrine: though sundry of them were his vtter enemies. Behold then a good example for all the ministers of Gods word to follow; teaching them to deliuer Gods word so purely and sincerely, that if they be called into question about the same, they may be bold to appeale to the consciences of their hearers although they be wicked men.

Now after this answer, one of the serants of Caiphas smites Christ with a rod; in whom the saying is verified, Like master like seruants: that is, if the masters be wicked, seruants commonly will be wicked also: if the master be an enemy to Christ, his seruant will be Christs enemy also. And this is the cause why there are so many lewd apprentices and seruants, because there are so many lewd masters. Many masters complain of seruants now adates; but there is more cause why they should complaine of themselves: for vially seruants will not become obedient to their masters, til their masters first become obedient vnto Christ: therefore let masters learne to obey God, and then their seruants will obey them also.

Further, Christ being smitten, makes this answer: If I haue euill spoken, beare witness of the euill: but if I haue not spoken, why smitest thou me? making complaint of an iniurie done vnto him. Now hereupon scoffing Iulian the Apostata faith, Christ keeps not his owne lawes, but goes against his owne precept; when as he said, If one strike thee on the one cheeke, turne to him the other also. But wee must know, that in these wordes Christs meaning is, that a man must rather suffer a double wrong, then seeke a priuate reuenge. And before Christ spake in his owne defence, which a man may lawfully doe, and not seeke any reuenge: for it is one thing to defend his own cause, and another to seeke reuenge.

Now folloves the second point in their proceeding, which is, the producing of false witnesses against him; as Saint Matthew faith, The whole Councell sought false witness against him, and though many came, yet found they none: for they could not agree together, because they all charged false things against him; which they could not proue. And thus the members of Christ haue often such enemies as make no bones shamefully to avouch that against them, which they cannot be able to iustifie. The ten persecutions which were in the first 300. yeares after Christ arose oftentimes of such like reports that men gaue out, which said that Christians liued on mans flesh: and therefore slue their own children: 2. that they liued on raw flesh: 3. that they committed incest one with another in their assemblies: 4. that they worshipped the head of an asse: 5. that they worshipped the Sunne and Moone: 6. that they were traytours, and sought to vndermine the Romane Empire: and lastly, whereof was thunder or earth-quakes, seditions or tumults, or any disquietmes or trouble, Christians were accused as the authors thereof. Such enemies haue they had in all ages: and in these our daies the same is practised, and will be to the worlds end. Now when the first witnesses could not agree among themselves, then two other false witnesses came forth, which anouched that Christ said, I will destroy this Temple made with hands, and within three daies will build it up againe. But hee spake this of the temple of his body: whereas they maliciously did interpret him to haue spoken of the temple in Ierusalem. And againe, they charge the words, for Christ said, Destroy this temple, &c. but these witnesses affirme he said, I will destroy this temple made with hands, &c. And thus they charge both words & meaning: & therefore the holy Ghost called them false witnesses. By this we must beaduertised to take heede how we report mens wordes: for if we change the meaning, though in part we reaine the words, wee may soone become slanderers and false witnesses: & as this duty must be performed towards all men, & especially towards the ministers of the Gospel: and the neglect of this duty procureth many slanders to them in this our Church; whereof indeede the reporters are the cause, and not the ministers themselves.

Now at this false accusation Christ was silent, so as Caiphas asked him, why hee answered nothing. Herein wee are to consider many things: 1. Why Christ was silent. The causes be to: first, he was to shew himselfe a patterne of true humilitie and patience; therefore euen then when hee was silent, when hee was most falsely accused of his aduersaries. Secondly, he is silent, that standing before the iudge to be condemned, the sentence might proceede against him, and he might suffer the death appointed, which was due vnto vs, & so become our redeemer. And in Christs example wee must note, that it is a speciall duty to know when to speake, and when to be silent. The ordering of the tongue is a rare gift, and few attaine vnto it. Some will peraduerture aske, what rule wee haue to direct vs herein? Ans. The general rule for the ordering of the tongue, is the law of God. Wee are commanded to seeke the glorie of God in the first table; and in the second the good of our neighbour: when thy speech therefore will serue either for Gods glorie, or the good of thy neighbour, then thou must speake: if it serue for neither, then be silent. Again, if thy silence be either for Gods glorie, or the good of thy neighbour, then be silent; it will not, then speake. And because it is hard for a man to know when his speech or silence will serue for these two ends: therefore we must pray vnto God that he will teach and direct vs herein: as David doth, Set a watch, faith he, O Lord, before my mouth, and keepe the doore of my lippes: and againe, Open thou my lippes, O Lord, and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

Thus much for the false witnesses produced. Now followeth the third point, which is, the aduising of Christ: for Caiphas the high priest charged him to tell him whether he were the Christ the sonne of God or no. To aduise a man, is to charge and command him in the name of God, to declare a truth, not onely because God is witness thereof, but also because he is a iudge to reuenge, if he speake not the truth. Thus Paul aduised the Thessalonians, charging them in the Lord, that his epistle should be read vnto all the brethren the Saints. And the like doth Caiphas to Christ. And here is a thing to be wondered at, Caiphas the high priest aduised him in the name of God, who is very God, euen the Son of God. And this shewes what a small account he made of the name of God; for he did it onely to get aduantage on Christs words: and so doe many now adays, who for a little profit or gaine make a matter of nothing to abuse the name of God a thousand waies.

Christ being thus adured, though silent before, yet now in reuerence to Gods maiestie, answered and said: first Thou hast said it; and in Saint Marke, I am he. In this answer, appeares the wonderfull prouidence of God. For though Caiphas take hence the occasion of condemning Christ, yet hath he wical drawn from him a most excellent confession, that hee is the Son of God, & our alone Sauour. And by this meanes he proceeds to shut heauen against himselfe, and to open the same for vs.

Thus wee haue ended the first inditement of Christ before Caiphas. Now followeth the second, which was before Pontius Pilate, in the common hall at Ierusalem. The historie of it is set downe at large in all the Euangelists. In the second inditement of Christ that wee may referre euery matter to his place, we are to obserue foure things: I. The accusation of Christ before Pilate. II. His examination III. Pilates policie to saue Christ. IV. Pilates absolving of him; and then the condemnation of Christ in both courts, Ecclesiasticall and Ciuill of these in order.

In Christs accusation, we must consider many points. The first is, who were his accusers, namely, the high Priests, the Scribes, and Pharisees, and Elders of the people, and the common people: all these conspired together to accuse him. The cause that moued the Pharisees, and Elders of the people hereunto, is noted by S. Matthew, who faith of enue they deliuered him. Enue is nothing but a fadnes in a mans heart, at the prosperitie of his better. And it reigned in the Scribes and Pharisees, and the occasion was this. Christ had taught most heavenly doctrine, and confirmed the same by most wonderfull miracles, and did greatly exceede them all, and was in more account among the people: and for this cause the Scribes and Pharisees and high Priests, repined and grudged at him. Now their example serueth to admonish vs to take heede of this sinne, as being the mother of many mischiefs. And wee must rather follow the example of Moses, who when Iosias desired him to forbid Eldad and Medad to prophesie, answered, Enuist thou for my sake? yea I would to God all the Lords people were Prophets. And we must be of the same minde with Iohn Baptist, who hearing by his disciples, that the people left him and followed Christ, said, his ioy was fulfilled, for Christ must increase, and he must decrease. And so wee must be glad & content when wee see the prosperitie of our neighbours any way. Now the cause why the common people ioyne with them, was because the chiefe Priests & the Scribes & elders had perauised them to a bad conceit of Christ. Hence it appeares, that it is most requisite for any people, bee they neuer so good, to haue good Magistrates, and godly rulers to gouerne them by wife & godly counsell. The necessitie hereof was well known to Ierobo Moses father in law, though hee was a heathen man: for hee biddeth Moses to provide among all the people men of courage, fearing God, men dealing truly, having conseruance, and appoint them to bee rulers over the people. Tea, hing vs, that if courteous, malicious, and vngodly men, not fearing God, goe before the people, they also shall in all likelihood bee carried into the like finnes by their example.

The next point concerns the place where they accuse him, which was at the doore of the common Hall: for hauing brought him before the Councill at Hierusalem, & there condemned him of blasphemie, afterward they bring him into the common hall where Pilate saie Iudge. Yet did they not enter in, but stayed without at the doore, lest they should be defiled, and be made vnfit to eate the Passouer. In which practise of theirs, wee are to marke an example of most notable both superstition, & most grosse hypocrisie. For they make no bones to accuse and arraigne a man most iust and innocent, and yet are very strict and curious in an outward ceremonie. And in like manner they make no conscience to giue thirtie peeces of siluer to betray Christ: but to cast the same into the treasury, they make it a great and heinous offence. And for this cause Christ pronounceth a wee unto the Scribes and Pharisees calling them hypocrites: for faith he, ye tithe mint, anise, and commin, and leaue the weightie matters of the law, as iudgement, and mercie. And the very same thing wee see practised of the Church of Rome at this day, and of sundry Papists that liue amongst vs: they will not eate flesh in Lent, or vpon any of the Popes fasting daies for any thing; and yet the same men make no conscience of seeking the blood of the Lords anointed, and their dread Soueraigne. And in this wee see the most palpable, and most grosse hypocrisie of those that be of that Church. But shall we think that our own Church is free from such men? no assuredly: for take a view of the profession that is vied among the people of England, and it will appeare, that they place their whole religion for the most part in the obseruation of certaine ceremonies. The manner of most men is to come to the place of assemblies, where God is worshipped, and their mumble vp the Lords prayer, the Commandments, and the Beleeefe in stead of prayers, which being done, God is wel seruethinke they: whereas in the meane season they neglect to learne and practise such things as are taught them for their saluation by the Ministers of Gods word. At the Feast of Easter, euery man will be full of deuotion and charitie, & come to receiue the Lords supper, as though he were the holiest man in the world; but when the time is past, generally turne to their old ways againe: and all the yeare after liue as they list, making no conscience of lying, flandering, fraude, and deceit in their traffaires among men. But wee must know, that there is no soundnesse of religion, but grosse hypocrisie in all such men: they worship God with their lippes, but there is no power of godlinesse in their hearts.

The third point is concerning the partie to whom they make this accusation against Christ, namely, not to a few but to a Gentile: for hauing condemned him in their Ecclesiasticall court before Caiphas the high priest, they bring him to Pontius Pilate the Deputie of Tiberius Caesar in Iudea: Where wee must obserue the wonderfull prouidence of God, in that not onely the Iewes, but the Gentiles also had a stroke in the arraignment of Christ, that their might bee true which the Apostle faith, Rom. 11. 32. God shut up all vnder sinne, that he might haue mercy vpon all.

The fourth point is, the matter of their accusation: they accuse our Sauour Christ of three things. I. that hee seduced the people. II. That hee forbade to pay tribute to Caesar. III. That hee said he was a King. Let vs well consider these accusations, especially the two last, because they are flat contrary both to Christs preaching, & to his practise. For when the people would haue made him a King, after hee had wrought the miracle of the fige loaves and two fishes, the text faith, hee departed from among them, vnto a mountaine himselfe alone. Secondly, when tribute was demanded of him for Caesar, though hee were the Kings sonne, and therefore was freed, yet faith he to Peter, Math. 17. 27. Lett we should offend the, go to the sea, & cast in an angle, & take the first fish: it commeth vpon, and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt finde a piece of twenty pence, that take, and giue it vnto them for thee and mee. And when he was called to be a Iudge to deuide the inheritance between two brethren, he refused to doe it, saying, Luke. 12. 14. Who made me a Iudge between you? Therefore in these two things they did most fallie accuse him. Whereby wee learne, that nothing is so false and vntrue, but the slanderers dare lay it to the charge of the innocent: the tongues of the slanderers are sharpe swords, and venomous arrows, to wound their enemies: their throates are open sepulchres, the person of asps is vnder their lippes. If a man speake gracious words, his tongue is touched with the fire of Gods spirit: but as Saint James faith, Jam. 3. 6. the tongue of the wicked is fire, yea a world of wickednesse, and it is set on fire with the fire of hell: therefore let this example bee a caueat to vs all, to teach vs to take heed of flandering, for the diuell then speaks by vs, and kindles our tongues with the fire of hell.

The fifth point, is the manner of their accusation, which is diligently to be marked: for they doe not only charge him with a manifest vntruth, but they beseech Pilate to put him to death, crying,  Crucifie him, crucifie him:* in so much that Pontius Pilate was afraid of them: where wee see how these shameles Iewes go beyond their compasse, and the bounds of all accusers: whose duty isto testifie only what they know. Now in the matter of this their accusation, appeares their wonderfull inconsistency. For a little before when Christ came to Ierusalem riding vpon an asse, shewing some signes of his kingly authority, they cut downe branches from the trees, and strewed them in the waies, crying, Hosanna, Blessed is he that comes in the name of the Lord: but now they sing another song, and instead of Hosanna, they cry, Crucifie him, crucifie him. And the like inconsistency is to be found in the people of these our times. They vie to receiue any religion that is offered vnto them: for in the daies of King Edward the sixth, the people of England receiued the Gospel of Christ: but shortly after in Queene Maries time, the same people receiued the wretched & abominable doctrine of the Church of Rome. And not many yeares after, when it pleased God to bring againe the light of his glorious Gospell by our gracious Prince, the same people turned from Poperie, and embraced the true religion againe. And thus with the Iewes one while they cry Hosanna to Christ, and receiue his Gospell: and shortly after they cry, Crucifie him, crucifie him, by embracing idolatrous Poperie. Let vs therefore learne in the feare of God, by the sickenesse of the Iewes, that sing two contrary songs in so short a space, to acknowledge our inconsistency and weaknesse in the matter of religion: whereby if God leaue vs but a little to our selues, wee shall straight way forsake Christ, his Gospel, and all.

Thus much of the accusation. Now follows Christs examination before Pontius Pilate for when the Iewes had thus fallie accused him, then Pontius Pilate tooke him & brought him into the common hall, and asked him this question, Art thou the king of the Iewes? Luke. 23. 3. Now Christ being thus examined, made as Paul also testifieth a good confession. The summe thereof stands in foure heads. The first is, that hee confesseth himselfe to be a King; not such an one as they accused him to be, yet a true King. Whence wee may learne diuers instructions: first, that euery Christian man in the midst of his miserie and affliction, hath one that is most sufficient euery way to defend him against all his enemies, the world, the flesh, and the diuell. For this King can do whatsoever he will: and therefore when the legion of diuels would enter into a heard of swine, they could not without his leaue. And when the Centurions daughter was dead, he but spake the word & the arofe. And when Lazarus was dead, & had liuen in the graue to ree daies, hee but said, Lazarus come forth, & he came forth bound hand and foote. Yea euen hell & death giue place to his word, and nothing can resist his power. And therefore hee that is a true member of Christ, needes not to feare any enemies be they neuer so great or many. And againe, as Christ is able, so is he ready & willing to saue & defend all that beleeue in him.

For

For he it is that gaue his life for his subiects, which nothing would doe, and shed his blood for their redemption: which he would neuer haue done, if he had not desired their saluation. Secondly, whereas Christ is a mighty King, which can do whatsoever he will, let all such among vs that haue hitherto liued in ignorance, and by reason of ignorance liue in their sins, at length begin to come vnto him, and do him homage, and with penitent hearts fall downe before him otherwise if they continue in their old rebellious, let them know whatsoever they be, high or low, that he hath a rod of yron in his hand to bruite them in peices; their soules shal smart for it: as both Pilate, Caiphas, and the rest of the Iewes were with a full cup rewarded for crucifying the Lord of life. And if Christ can not draw thee in this life from thy crooked waies, be sure at the houre of death he will break thee in peices like a potters vessel. This must we learne in regard of the first point, that he said plainly; He was a King.

Now folloves the second part of his confession, namely, that His kingdom was not of this world. Where he sets downe what kind of King he is; he is not earthly king, his kingdom stands not in the power of men, nor in earthly and outward government; but his kingdom is spiritual, and his government is in the verie hearts & consciences of men. His kingdom is not outward to be seene of men, but inward in the heart and soule; and therefore it is only begun in this life, and is continued & accomplished in the world to come in the kingdom of glorie: where Christ shall be all in all in the hearts and consciences of all the Elect. Now then, if this be so, howsoever Satan haue heretofore reigned in vs, and made our hearts as it were his palaces, yet now let vs prepare a roome for Christ that he may come and dwell in vs; let him rule our hearts, wils, and affections, that they may become conformable to his will: let vs resigne our selues wholly to be ruled by him, that his spirituall kingdom may be in vs. This kingdom in the heart and conscience is the pearle and hidde treasure, which when a man findeth, he selleth all he hath, and buyeth it. Let vs therefore in the feare of God, esteeme it as the most precious thing that may be, and so liue in this world, as that Christ may rule inwardly in vs, by his word and spirit. And againe, seeing this regiment of Christ is heavenly, and the full manifestation of it is reserved till the life to come: we must therefore vse this world, and all things in it, as honour, wealth, ease, and libertie, as though wee vied them not. As a traveller vseth his staffe in his journey; as long as it doth further him, so long he will carry it with him; but when it hinders him, then he casts it away: so must we vse the things of this life, namely, as long as they are helpe to further and make vs fit for the kingdom of heauen, but if they be any hindrance to this spirituall regiment of Christ, wee must renounce them and cast them away, & they neuer so precious to vs.

The third part of Christs confession is, concerning the meanes whereby he gouerneth his kingdom: I came (saith he, Ioh. 18. 37) into this world to beare witness of the truth, that is, to preach the Gospel and doctrine of saluation: and hereby he teacheth that the outward administration of his kingdom, stands specially in the preaching of the word; which is a principall ordinance of his, serving to gather his Church from the beginning of the world to the end thereof. And for this cause hee hath in all ages set apart chosen ministers for the publishing of the doctrine of the Gospel. And hence it is manifest, that the gift of prophecy, is the greatest gift that God bestowes on his Church for the building thereof. And therefore it ought to be most highly esteemed, as a most precious iewell. And for this cause also the schooles of learning are to be reuerenced and maintained, and all other meanes vied for the furthering of them; because they are vnder God the fountaines and wel-springs of this gift of prophesie.

The last point, is concerning the subiects of Christs kingdom, expressed in these words, They which are of the truth, heare my voice. In which he sets downe the true mark of his seruants & subiects, that they are hearers of that heavenly and lauing word which he revealed from the bosome of his Father. It may be alleged, the most wicked men vpon earth, yea the diuels themselves may be hearers of the word of Christ. Ans. There be two kinds of hearers one, which heareth only the outward sound of the word with his bodily cares, and he having cares to heare doth not heare: the second, is he that doth not onely receive the doctrine that is taught with his cares, but also hath his heart opened to feele the power of it, and to obey the same in the course of his life. This distinction is notably set forth by David, saying, Sacrifice and burnt offerings thou wouldest not haue: but my eares hast thou pierced; whereby he insinuates as it were two kinds of cares: one that is deafe and cannot heare; and thus are the eares of all men by nature in hearing the doctrine of saluation: the other is a new eare pierced & bored by the haid of God, which causes a mans heart to heare the sound & operation of the word, & the life to expresse the truth of it. Now the subiects of Christs kingdom are such, as with the outward hearing of the word, haue an inward hearing of the soule, and grace also to obey: and therefore all those that make no conscience of obedience to the word of God preached vnto them, are no lesse then rebels to Christ. We may persuade our selues that we are good subiects, because we heare the word & receive the Sacraments, but if our liues abound with sinne, and if our hearts be not pierced thorow by the sword of Gods spirit, whether wee be high or low, rich or poore, let vs be what wee will be, wee are no right subiects iudee, but rebels and traytors vnto the euerglasting God. It may be hereafter God will giue further grace; but as yet all impenitent persons, though liuing in the midst of Gods Church, are no obedient & faithfull subiects: and therefore while we haue time, let vs labour to performe indeed that which we do in word profess.

Thus much of the examination & confession of Christ. Now followeth the third point, concerning the policies which Pilate vied to save Christ: and they are three. First, when he heard that Christ was of Galilee, he tooke occasion to send him to Herod, thinking thereby to shift his hands of him, and not to shedde his blood. In which policy, though he seeme vnwilling to put Christ to death, yet herein he is a most vniust iudge: for hauing giuen testimonie of Christ, that he is innocent, he ought to haue acquitted him, and not haue sent him to Herod for further iudgement. In Herods dealing with Christ, we may obserue these points: The first, that hee is wonderfully glad of his coming. Why so? the text saith, because hee was desirous to see him of a long season, because hee had heard many things of him, and trusted to haue seenne some signe done by him, Luk. 23. 8. Here marke how he reioyced, not in Christ because he was Christ, that is, his Messias & redeemer, but because he wrought miracles, signes, and wonders. And so it is among vs at this day: it is a rare thing to finde a man that loues Christ, because he is Christ: some loue Christ for honour, some for wealth, and others for praise: that is, because they get honour, wealth, and praise by confessing his name. Again, many professe Christ, onely because it is the law and custome of their nation. But we must learne to be of this minde, to loue Christ, because he is Christ, euen for himselfe; not for any other sinister respect: and we must reioyce in Christ, euen for himselfe, though we neuer haue profit nor pleasure, neither honour, nor wealth by him. And if we loue him for wealth or pleasure, or for any other end but for himselfe alone, when these things are taken away, then we shall vterly forsake Christ in like manner. The second point is, that Herod desires Christ to worke a miracle. He can be content to see the workes of Christ: but he cannot abide to heare his word, & to beare his yoke. Like to him are many in these daies, which gladly desire to heare the Gospel of Christ preached, onely because they would heare speech of some strange things, laying aside all care and conscience to obey that which they heare. Yea many in England delight to reade the strange histories of the Bible: and therefore can rehearse the most part of it, (and it were to be wished that all could doe the like:) yet come to the practise of it, the same persons are commonly found as bad in life & conuerfation, yea rather worse then others. Let vs therefore labour, that with our knowledg we may ioyne obedience, & practise with our learning, and as well to be affected with the word of Christ, as with his workes. The third point is, that Herod derides Christ, and sends him away clothed in a white garment. This is that Herod whom Christ called a foxe; who also when he heard John Baptis preach, did many things, and heard him gladly, Luk. 13. 32. How then comes Herod to this outrage of wickednesse, thus to abuse Christ? Ans. Wee must know, that although Herod at the first heard John preach, yet withall he followed his owne affections, and sought how to fulfill the lusts of his flesh. For when John tolde him that it was not lawfull for him to haue his brother Philips wife, he cast him in prison, and afterward cut off his head for it: after which offence hee is growne to this height of impiety, that he now despiseth Christ, & cannot abide to heare him. Where we learne, that as wee are willing to heare Gods word preached, so withal we must take heede, that we practise no manner of sin; but make conscience of euery thing that may displease God. Thou maiest, I grant, be one that feareth and fauoureth John Baptis for a time, wallowing in thy old sinnes; but after a while, yielding to the (wing of thy corrupt heart, thou wilt neither heare John, nor Christ himselfe, but hate and despise them both. This is the cause why some which haue bene professors of religion heretofore, and haue had great measure of knowledge, are now become very loose persons, and cannot abide to heare the word preached vnto them; the reason is, because they could not abide to leaue their sins. Therefore that we may begin in the spirit & not end in the flesh, let euery one that calls on the name of the Lord depart fro iniquitie.

Now followeth the second policie of Pilate. For when he saw the first would not preuaile, then he tooke a new course: for he tooke Iesus into the common hall, and scourged him, and the fouldiers platted a crowne of thornes, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple garment, and said, Haile King of the Iewes, and smote him with their rods. And thus he brought him forth before the Iewes, persuading himselfe that when they saw him so abused, and so ignominiously abused, they would be content therewith, & exact no greater punishment at his hands thinking thus to haue pacified the rage of the Iewes, and so to haue deliuered Christ from death, by insinuating vpon him some lesser punishment. This policie is as it were a looking-glasse, in which we may behold of what nature and condition al plots and policies of men are, which are deuised and practised without the direction of Gods word. In it we may obserue two things: the first is the ground thereof which is a most silly, simple, or rather senseless argument. For he reasoneth thus, I finde no fault in this man, therefore I will chastise him, & let him goe. A man would hardly haue thought, that one hauing but common sense, would haue made such a reason, most lesse a great Iudge sitting in the roome of God. But in him we may behold and see the ground of all humane policy, which is beside the word of God, namely, the foolish and blinde reason of men. The second thing to be considered, is the proceeding and issue of this policie. Pilate mult either whippe Christ being innocent; or put him to death: which are both finnes and great offences. Now he maketh choice of the lesse, which is to whip him, and is perswaded that he ought to do so: whereas of two finnes or euils, a man ought to do neither. And in doing this, Pilate begins to make a breach in his conscience: and that is the fruit that all politicks reape of their deuises, which procede by the light of their owne reason, without the word of God. By this example we are admonished of two things: first, that before we enterprise any businesse, we must rectifie our iudgements by Gods word. Dauid was a most wise king, and no doubt had with all a graue & wise counsell, but yet he preferred the word of God before all, saying, Psal. 119.24. Thy testimonies are my counsellours. Secondly, in our proceedings we must keepe an vpright, pure, and vnblemable conscience, as Paul exhorteth Timothie to haue the mystery of faith in a pure conscience; giving vs thereby to vnderstand, that a good conscience is as it were a cheff or cupboard in which we are to keepe and locke vp our religion, and all other graces of God, as the most pretious iewels that can be: and that if we suffer this cheff to be broken vp, vnto all our riches and iewels are gone.

But let vs yet view the dealing of Pilate more particularly: he whippes Christ, puts on him a purple garment, puts a reed in his hand, sets a crowne of thornes vpon his head, and causes the fouldiers to mocke him, and spit in his face. Now in this that Christ standing in our roome, was thus shamefully abused, we must consider what was due vnto euery one of vs for our finnes, namely, shame and reproch in this life, and in the life to come endles confusion. And we see the confession of Christ to be true which he made to Pilate, that his kingdom was not of this world; for if it had bin so, they would haue put a crowne of golde vpon his head, and not a crowne of thornes, which nothing at all befecmed an earthly king: and in stead of a reed they would haue put a scepter into his hand; and in stead of buffeting and spitting on him, they would haue adored him, and fallen downe before him. Again, whereas Christ our head in this world, wore no other crowne but one made of thornes, it serueth to teach all those that are the members of Christ, that they must not look for a crown of glory in this life, because that is reserved for the life to come. And if we would then wear the crowne of glory with Christ, we must here in this life wear a crowne of thornes, as he did for as Paul saith, If we suffer with Christ, we shall also reigne with him: and that which was fully verified in Christ the head, must in some sort be verified in euery true member of Christ.

Pilates third policie was this; when he saw that neither of the two former wold preuaile, he comes forth vnto the Iewes and makes an oration to this effect; that now was the feast of the passe-ouer, & that they had a custome that the Gouverneur should then deliuer vnto the people a prisoner whom they would: therefore hee asked them whether he should let loose vnto them Barabbas, or Iesus which is called Christ: this Barabbas was a notable malefactor, that with insurrection had committed murder. And thus Pilate cunningly matches Christ with Barabbas, thinking that the Iewes would rather choofe him then Barabbas being a notorious malefactor, not worthy to liue on the face of the earth: and by this means hee thought to haue deliuered Christ from death, though otherwise he accounted him as a malefactor. The ground of this policie (as we see) is an old custome of the Iewes that a prisoner should bee let loose at Easter. And it may be the end of this custome was, to increase the solemnity of the feast. But whatsoever in truth the end was, the fact it selfe was but prophanation of the time, and an abomination before the Lord: for Salomon saith, Prov. 17.15. Hee that iustifieth the wicked, and condemnes the iust, euen they both are abomination before the Lord. The like practise takes place with many in these daies, who think the Lords day neuer well spent vlesse they may add solemnities thereunto, by reuell and riot, by frequenting of tauerne and ale-houses. And furthermore, Mat. 27.21. where Pilate matcheth Christ being innocent with Barabbas, and the people preferre him before Christ, hauing libertie to choofe either; it shewes that God in his providence had appointed that Christ should not stand in his owne roome before Pilate, but in our roome and stead, as a Mediatour between God and vs. And in this fact of the people, we see how sin by degrees takes hold of men, and that speedily. Who would haue thought that these Iewes, who a little before cried Hosanna, and spread their garments before Christ in the way, would euer haue preferred a murderer before him? But it was the doing of the high priests, the Scribes, and Pharisees, who did animate and stirre them vp to this wickednes: and hereupon when they had yielded first to attach him, and then to accuse him, they are carried to an higher degree of impiety, namely, to seeke his blood: and then left he should escape their hands, they plunge themselves deeper yet, preferring a wretched murderer, euen seditious Barabbas before him. This must teach euery one of vs to take heed of the beginnings euen of the least finnes; for the diuell is cunning, he will not plunge a man into the greatest finnes at the first: but his manner is, by little and little to creepe into the heart: and hauing once possession thereof, by steps to bring men to the height of sinne, and that with speed. We must therefore in the feare of God prevent sin betimes, and at the first motion cut off all occasions hereof: that which Paul saith of heresie, comparing it to a canker or gangren, may be said of all sinne. The nature of the gangren is to run from one ioynt to another, from the toe to the foote, from the foote to the legge, and from the legge to the thigh, till it haue waisted and destroyed the life of the body: so giue any sinne but an entrance, and it will soone ouerspread the whole man: and if the diuell may be suffered but to put one talon into thy heart, he will presently winde himselfe into thee, his head, his body and all. The Psalmist saith, that he is blessed that takes the children of the Babylonians, & dasheth them against the stones; and as truly it may be said, blessed is the man that dasheth the head of his finnes against the ground while they are young, before they get strength to ouermaster him.

Thus haue we seene the policies of Pilate: now followeth the absolution of Christ: for when Pilate had vsed many means to deliuer him, & none would preuaile, then he absolues him, by giuing diuers testimonies of his innocencie: for he came forth three times and bare witness; and last of all he testified the same by washing of his hands: which rite signifieth properly the desiring of the hands before, but as yet Pilate had not desiled his hands, and therefore he vsed it as a token to shew that Christ was innocent, & that he would not desile his owne hands with innocent blood. There were three causes that moued Pilate to absolve Christ. First, hee saw that he was a iust man, as S. Matthew noteth, Mat. 27.19.20. and that the high Priests and people had deliuered him vp for ennie, as S. Marke saith, Mar. 15.10. By this it is plaine, that a very pagan or infidel may in some things goe beyond such as be in Gods Church, hauing better conscience, and dealing more iustly then they. Pontius Pilate was a heathen man, and a Gentile, the Iewes were the Church & people of the liuing God: yet he sees plainly, that Christ was a iust man, & thereupon is moued to absolve him; whereas the Iewes which should bee men of conscience & religio seek his death. And thus a very pagan may otherwhiles see more into a matter then they that be reputed of the Church. And this must admonish all such as profess the Gospell, to looke vnto their proceedings, that they doe all things with vpright conscience: for if we deale vnjustly in our proceedings, we may haue neighbours, men of no religion, that will looke through vs, and see the grosse hypocrisie of our profession, which also would be loth to doe those things which wee do. The second cause that moued Pilate to absolve Christ, was his wiues dreame: for when he was set downe vpon the iudgement seate, shee sent vnto him, saying, Mat. 27.19. Haue thou nothing to doe with that iust man: for I haue dreamed many things in a dreame by reason of him. Differed many things in a dreame by reason of him. Differed are of three sorts: naturall, rising from the constitution of the body: diabolicall, such as come by the suggestion of the diuelli-uine, which are from God. Some haue thought that this dreame was of the diuell: as though hee had laboured thereby to hinder the death of Christ, and consequently our saluation; but I rather think it was occasioned by the things which he had heard before of Christ, or that it was immediately from God, as the dreames of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar, and serued for a further manifestation of Christs innocency. Here it may be asked, whether we may regard our dreames now, as Pilates wife did, or no? Ans. We haue the bookes of the old and new Testament to be our direction, as Ezra saith, to the law and to the testimony, they must be our rule and guide. In these daies we must not looke to be taught by visions & dreames: yet shall it not bee amisse to obserue this caueat concerning dreames, that by them we may guesse at the constitution of our bodies, & oftentimes at the sins wherunto we are inclined. The last motiue which caused Pilate to absolve Christ was a speech of the Iewes; for they said, that Christ ought to die by their law, because he said he was the Sonne of God. And the text saith, when Pilate heard that, he was afraid. Marke how a poore Paynim that knew not Gods word, at the hearing of the name of the Son of God is stricken with feare. No doubt hee shall rise in iudgment against many amongst vs, that without all feare rend the name of God in pieces by swearing, blaspheming, cursed speaking. But let all those that feare the Lord learn to tremble and be afraid at his blessed name.

Thus much for the causes that moued Pilate to absolve Christ: as also for the second part of Christs arraignment, namely, his accusation. Now followeth the third part, which is his condemnation: and that is two-folde. The first, by the Ecclesiasticall assembly & councill of the Iewes at Ierusalem, in the high priests hall before Caiphas. The tenour of his condemnation was this, He hath blasphemed, what haue we any more need of witnesses? he is worthy to die. The cause why they say not he shall die, but he is worthy to die, is this: The Iewes had two iurisdiccions, the one ecclesiasticall, the other ciuill, both prescribed and distinctly exorcured by the commandement of God, till the time of the Machabees, in which both ioyntly together came into the hands of the priests: but afterward about the daies of Herod the Great the Romane Emperour tooke away both iurisdiccions from the Iewes, and made their Kingdome a prouince, so as they could doe no more but apprehend, accuse, and imprison: as doth appeare by the example of Saul, who gat letters from the high priests to Damascus, that if he found any either man or woman that beleeued in Christ, he might bring them bound to Ierusalem, and imprison them: but kill or condemne they could not.

By the fact of this Councell we learne sundry points: first, that generall Councells, and the Pope himselfe sitting iudicially in his consistorie may erre. If there were any vniuers

Church of God at the time of Christs arraignment vpon the face of the whole world; it was no doubt the Church of the Iewes. For Caiph the high priest was a figure of Christ, the Scribes, & Pharisees sat in Moses chaire, & Ierusalem is called by Christ the holy cite, Mat. 4. 5. & 27. 53. Yet for all this, that which was fore-told is now verified, namely, that the chiefe corner stone should be reiected of master builders. For by the generall consent of the Councell at Ierusalem, Christ the head of the Catholike Church, and the redeemer of mankind, is accused of blasphemy, & condemned as worthy of death. Wherefore it is amere dotage of mans braine to aouuch that the Pope cannot possibly erre in giuing a definitiue sentence in matters either of faith or manners. Neither can the Church of Rome plead priuiledge, for Ierusalem had as many prerogatives as any people in the world could haue.

Againe, by this we see, there is no reason why we should ascribe to any man or to cumenical Councells themselves, absolute and soueraigne power to determine & giue iudgement in matters of religion, considering they are in danger to be ouertaken with notable slips and errors. And therefore the souerainety of iudgement is peculiar to the Sonne of God, who is the only Doctour and Law-giuer of the Church; and he puts the same in execution in and by the written word. As for the speech of the Papists, calling the Scriptures a dumbe Iudge, it is little to be regarded; for the Scriptures are, as it were, a letter of the liuing God, sent from heauen to his Church vpon earth; and therefore they speake as plainly and as sufficiently vnto vs of all matters of faith, as a man can speake vnto his friend by letter, so be it, we haue the gift of discerning. Yet do wee not barre the Church of God from all iudgement. For the ministeriall power of giuing iudgement both publicly and priuately is granted vnto it of God: and that is to determine and giue sentence of matters in question according to the word, as the lawyer giues iudgement, not according as he will, but according to the tenour of the law.

Thirdly, we learne, that personall succession is no infallible marke of the true faith, and of true Pastours; vlesse withall be ioyned succession in the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles. For Caiph held his office by succession from Aaron; and yet in publicke assembly condemned the Messias spoken of by Moses and the Prophets. Therefore the succession of Bishops of Rome from Peter is of no moment, vlesse they can proue that their religion is the religion of Peter, which they can neuer doe.

And thus much of Christs first condemnation. The second was by Pontius Pilate, who sat in another court as a ciuill iudge, and the tenor of his sentence was, that the Iews should take him and crucifie him. Here we must consider the reasons that moued Pilate to determine thus: the first, was the impatience of the Iewes: he for his part was loath to defile his hands with innocent blood, but the Iewes cried his blood be vpon vs, and our children: which according to their with came vnto them within few yeeres after, and so remaneth still vnto this day. By which we are taught, to take heed of imprecations against our selues, our children, our seruants, or any other creatures: for God heareth mens praies two waies; either in mercy, or in his wrath and anger. If thou curse thy selfe or any other, except thou turne vnto the Lord by speedy repentance, he may heare thy prayer in his wrath, and verifie thy curse vpon thee to thy vtter confusion. The second reason that moued Pilate to condemne Christ was, because he feared men more then God; for being deputy vnder Tiberius Caesar over the Prouince of Iudea, for feare of losing his office, and of displeasing the Iewes, he condemned Christ after hee had absolved him: whereby we see, that it is a grieuous sinne to feare deth & ashes more then the liuing God. And therefore S. Iohn saith, Reuel. 21. 8. The fearfulfull shall haue their portion in the burning lake: that is, such as are more afraid of man then God. And this sinne in Pilate wanted not his iust reward: for not long after hee lost his deputiship, and Cesars fauour, and fled to Vienna: where liuing in banishment, he killed himselfe. And thus God meetes with them that feare the creature more then the Creator. That we may therefore auoid the heauie hand of God; let vs learne to feare God above all: else wee shall dishonour God, and shame the religion which we profess.

The proper end of Christs condemnation set downe though not in Pilates will, yet in Gods eternall counsell was, that he might bee the cause of absolution at the barre of Gods iustice vnto all those whatsoever they are which shall come to life eternall. For we must stil remember, that when Christ was condemned by mortall iudges hee stood in our place, and in him were all our finnes condemned before God. Therefore to conclude this point, if this were the end of the counsell of God, to haue his owne Sonne condemned by Pontius Pilate a mortall iudge, that we might not be condemned, but absolved before Gods iudgement seat: let vs all labour to haue this absolution sealed vp in our hearts by the testimony of Gods spirit. For one day wee must come to the barre of Gods iudgement: and if wee haue not an absolution by Christs condemnation at Pilates earthly barre, let vs looke for nothing else but the fearfulfull sentence of condemnation at the celestiall barre of Gods iustice, to be vttered at the day of the last iudgement. If a man should commit such an heinous offence, as that he could no other way escape death but by the Princes pardon, hee neither would, nor could be at rest, til by one meanes or other he had obtained the same, and had gotten it written and sealed: which done,

Ioh. 19. 12, 13.

Euseb. hist. lib. 6. c. 7.

he would carry it home, Locke it vp safe and sound, and many times looke vpon it with great ioy and gladnesse. Well, this is the case of euery one of vs: by nature we are rebels & traytours against God, & haue by our sins defaced ten thousand deaths. Now our onely stay & refuge is, that Christ the sonne of God was condemned for vs: and therefore in Christ wee must sue for pardon at Gods hands, and neuer rest till wee haue the assurance thereof sealed vp in our hearts and consciences: alwaies remembre, that euer after we leade a new life, and neuer commit the like finnes against God any more. It were a blessed thing if this would enter into our hearts: but alas, we are as dead in our finnes as a dead carcase is in the graue. The Ministers of God may teach this often vnto vs, & we may also heare the same: but Satan doth so possesse mens hearts, that they seldom or neuer beginne to beleue or receiue it till it be too late. Euery one can say, God is mercifull, but that is not enough: for Christ being most righteous was condemned, that thou being a wretched sinner mightst bee saued: and therefore thou must labour for thy selfe to haue some testimony of thine absolution by Christs condemnation, sealed vp in thine owne conscience, that thou maiest more assuredly say, God is and will be mercifull vnto thee.

Hauing spoken of the whole arraignment of Christ, & of his passion in generall, now let vs proceed to the parts of the passion, which are three: Christs Execution, his Bariall, and his Descending into hell. This being withall remembred, that these three parts are likewise three degrees of Christs humiliation.

Christs execution is that part of his passion, which he bate vpon the crosse, expressed in the words of the Creede, he was crucified, & died. In handling of it, wee must obserue three things: I. the person that suffered: II. the place where he suffered: III. the time when he suffered: IV. the manner how he suffered. V. the excellency of his passion. For the first, the person that suffered was Christ the iust, as Peter saith, Christ also hath once suffered for sinners: the iust for the vniust; and againe, Christ Iesus the iust (saith Saint Iohn) is the reconciliation for our finnes. And in his execution, wee shall haue manifest declarations of his righteousness and iustice, consisting in two most worthy points. First, when he was vpon the crosse, and the soldiers were nailing his hands and feete there vnto, and racking his body most cruelly, hee prayed, Father forgive them, they know not what they doe. These soldiers were by all likelihood the very same that apprehended him, and brought him before Caiph, and from thence to Pontius Pilate, and there platted a crowne of thornes, and set it on his head, and buffeted him, and spitefully intreated him as we haue heard: and yet Christ speaks no word of reuenge vnto them, but with all patience in the very extremity of their malice and iniury,

1. Pet. 3. 18. Ioh. 1. 9.

he prayeth vnto his Father to forgive them. Hence wee are taught, that when iniuries are done vnto vs, wee ought to abstaine from all affections of reuenge, and not so much as manifest the same either in word or deede. It is indeede a hard lesion to learne and practise: but it is our parts to endeauour to doe it: and not onely so, but to be ready for euill to doe good: yea, euen at that instant, when other men are doing vs wrong: euen then (I say) we must bee ready, if it be possible, to doe them good. When as Christs enemies were practising against him all the treacherie they could, euen then he performed the worke of a Mediatour, and prayeth for them vnto his Father, and seeketh their saluation. Againe, whereas Christ praeth thus, Father, forgive them, we gather, that the most principal thing of all that man ought to seeke after in this life, is the forgiveness of his finnes. Some thinke that happinesse consisteth in honour, some in wealth, some in pleasure, some in this, some in that: but indeede the thing which wee should most labour for, is reconciliation with God in Christ; that we may haue the free remission of all our finnes. Yea this is blessednesse it selfe, as David saith, Blessed is hee whose iniquitie is forgiven, and whose sinne is couered. Here then behold the madnesse of the men of this world, that either seeke for this blessing in the last place, or not at all.

Psal. 32. 1.

The second testimony of Christs righteousness is in the midst of his passion was, that he beheld his mother standing by, and commended her to the custody of Iohn his disciple: whereby he gaue an example of most holy obedience vnto the fifth commandment, which prescribeth honour vnto father & mother. And this his fact sheweth that the obseruing of this commandment standeth not in outward shew and reuerence onely; but in a godly recompence, in prouing vnto parents all the good we can, both concerning this and a better life. It often falls out that children be as it were Charmes to father & mother: some raile on them, some fight with them; others seee them pine away and starue, and not releue them. But all dutifull children must here learne, that as their parents haue done many duties vnto them, and brought them vp: so they againe must in all reuerence performe obedience vnto them both in word and deede: and when occasion is offered releue them, yea in all they can, doe good vnto them. Againe, in this we may see what a wretched state is that which the Church of Rome calleth the state of perfection; namely, to lie apart from the company of men, in fasting & praying all the daies of a mans life: for hereby the bond of nature is broken, and a man can not do the duty vnto his parents which Gods law requieth, and Christ here himselfe practiseth; not the duties of a member of Christ which are to be done to the whole Church, and to the rest of the members thereof.

Ioh. 19. 26, 27.

Luk. 23. 24.

The place where Christ suffered is called Calvary or Golgotha, that is, the place of dead mens skulls, without the wals of Hierusalem. Concerning the reason of this name, men be of diuers opinions. Some say it was so called, because Adam was buried there, and that his skull being there found, gaue the name to the place. And this is the very opinion of some auncient diuines, that Christ was there crucified where Adam was buried; but because it hath no certaine ground * I leaue it as vncertaine. Others thinke it was called Caluarie, because the Iewes were wont to carrie out the bones of the dead men, and there to heape them together, as in times past the manner was in the vaults of sundry Churches in this land. And some others thinke it was called Golgotha or Caluarie, because theeuers and murderers, and malefactours were there executed, stoned, burned: whereby it came to passe that many skulls and bones of dead men were found there.

The time when Christ was executd, was at the Iewes Passouer, when not onely the Iewes, but also many Profelytes of many countries and nations were assembled: & therefore this execution was not in a private corner, but openly in the view of the world. For as he was a Saviour not to the Iewes onely, but also to the Gentiles: so it was very requisite that his death should be publike before all men both Iewes and Gentiles. As for the houre of the day, in which hee suffered, there is some difficulty in the Enangelists: for Saint Iohn saith, that he was condemned about the first houre of the day: and Saint Marke saith, he was crucified the third houre. Hence it may be demanded, how both these can stand together.

Answ. Howsoeuer the Iewes naturall day began at euening, yet the artificiall day began at sunne rising, and ended at sunne setting: and it was diuided two waies. First, into twelve parts called twelve houres, whether the daies were longer or shorter. Secondly, into four parts or quarters, and every part contained three houres: as from the first houre to the third, was one part called morning: from the third houre to the sixth, another part called the first houre: from the sixth houre to the ninth, the third part called the third houre: and from the ninth houre to the twelfth, the fourth part called euening. Now when Saint Iohn saith, Christ was condemned about the first houre, it must be vnderstood of the second quarter of the day called the first houre: and whereas Saint Marke saith, he was crucified the third houre of the day, hee speaks of the lesser houres, twelve whereof made the whole day: and thus they both agree, for the third houre of the day, and the beginning of the second quarter follow each other immediately. Again, it may be answered, that Christ was condemned at sixe of the clocke after the Romane account, which begins the day at mid-night; and crucified at three (which is nine of the clock in the

A morning with vs) after the Iewes account who begin their artificiall day, as I said, at the sunne-rising.

The fourth and last point, is the order and whole proceeding of Christs executio; which may be reduced to four heads: the I. his going to execution, the II. his crucifying, the III. his death, the IV. the consequents of his death. Again, in his going to execution we may consider many points.

The first, that he is brought out of Ierusalem as a malefactor. For the old and ancient custome of the Iewes was to put those whom they iudged to be notorious offenders to death without their tents when they wandered in the wilderness, & without the wals of Ierusalem, lest they should any way be defiled with their blood. And this fell out by the speciall prouidence of God, that that might be fulfilled in Christ which was prefigured in the sacrifices of the old Testament, when the bodies of beasts were not eaten of the priests, but burnt without the campe: therefore (saith the holy Ghost) Iesus Iesus that he might sanctifie the people with his owne blood suffered without the gates.

Hence may all Christians learne to know their owne estate and condition: first, in this world they must looke to be accounted the off-scouring of the earth, & the slab of the world, as the Apollite saith, and we must all prepare our selues to beare this estate. They that will be Gods children must not looke to be better accepted of in the world then Christ was. Secondly, by this euery one of vs must learne to be content to yfe this world, as strangers and pilgrims: being euery day and houre ready to leaue the same. For if Christ the Sonne of God himselfe was brought out of Ierusalem, as not being worthy to haue his abode there, then must euery Christian man looke much more for the like extremitie. And therefore it is not for vs to haue our hearts tyed to the world, and to seeke alwaies to be approued of the same: for that argueth that we are not like to Christ: but we must rather do as poore pilgrims in strange countries; & that is, only to looke for safe conduct thorow the miseries in this world, hauing in the meane season our hearts, wils, and affections set on the kingdom which is in heauen. The second thing is, that Christ was made to beare his own crosse, for so it seemes the manner of the Romanes was to deale with malefactours. And this must put vs in minde of that notable lesson which Christ himselfe taught his disciples; namely: that if any man will be his disciple, he must denie himselfe, take up his owne crosse daily, and follow him: where by the crosse we must vnderstand, that portion of affliction, which God hath allotted to euery one of his children: for there is no child of God, to whom he hath not measured out as it were some bitter cup of misery in this life. And therefore Paul saith: Now reioyce I in my sufferings for you, & fulfill the rest of the sufferings of Christ in my flesh. By Christs sufferings hee meaneth not the pashion of Christ, but the sufferings of the body of Christ, that is, the Church whereof Christ is the head. Moreover we must suffer as hee did, and that daily: because as one day followeth another, so one crosse comes in the necke of another. And whereas Christ beares the crosse that was laid on him by the hands of the soldiours, it must teach vs not to pull crosses vpon our selues, but waite till God lay them on vs; when that time comes we must willingly bend our shoulders, stoop down, and take them vp; whether they be in body or in soule: and that euery day, if it be Gods will, so long as we liue: and by this shall we most notably resemble our Saviour Christ.

Thirdly, when Christ had carried his crosse so long till he could carry it no longer, by reason of the faintnesse of his body, which came by buffets, whippings, and manifold other injuries, then the soldiours meeting with one Simon of Cyrene a stranger, made him to beare the crosse: where we are put in minde, that if we faint in the way, and be wearied with the burden of our afflictions, God will giue good issue, and send as it were some Simon of Cyrene to helpe vs, and to be our comforter.

The fourth point is, that when Christ was carrying his owne crosse, and was now passing on towards Golgotha, a certaine woman met him, and pitying his case wept for him: but Christ answered them, and said, Daughters of Ierusalem, weepe not for mee, but weepe for your selues, and your children, &c. By this we are first of all caught: to pities the state of those that be the children of God: as the Apollite exhorteth vs, saying, Remember them that are in bonds as though you were bound with them: and them that are in affliction, as though you were afflicted with them. In this land by Gods especiall blessing we haue enjoyed the Gospell of Christ with peace a long time, where is other countries & Churches are in great distresse: some wallow in palpable ignorance and superstition: others haue libertie to injury the Gospell, and want teachers: and some haue both the word and teachers, and yet want peace, and are in continual persecution. Now when we that haue the Gospell with peace doe heare of these miseries in our neighbour Churches, we ought to be moued with compassion towards them, as though we our selues were in the same afflictions. Secondly, where Christ saith, Weepe not for mee, but for your selues, he doth teach vs to take occasion by other mens miseries to be waile our owne estate: to trespasse our worldly griefes into godly sorrow for our sinnes, which causeth vs rather to weep for our offences, then for our friends, although euen this may also be done in godly manner. When a man bleeding at the nose is brought in danger of his life, the Physician lets him blood in another place, as in the arme, and turns the course of the blood another way to saue his life: and so must we turne our worldly sorrowes for losse

A of goods or friends, to a godly sorrow for our offences against God: for so S. Paul saith, Godly sorrow causeth repentance vnto saluation, not to be repented of: but worldly sorrow causeth death.

The fifth point is, that when Christ was brought to the place of execution, they gaue him vinegar to drinke, mingled with mirthe and gall: some say, it was to intoxicate his braine, and to take away his senses and memorie. If this be true, we may heere behold in the Iewes a most wicked part, that at the point of death, when they were to take away the life of Christ, they for their parts had no care of his soule. For this is a dutie to be obserued of all Magistrates, that when they are to execute malefactours, they must haue a speciall regard to the good and saluation of their soules. But some thinke rather that this portion was to shorten and end his torments quickly. Some of vs may peraduenture thinke hardly of the Iewes, for giuing so bitter a potion to Christ at the time of his death: but the same doth euery sinner that repenteth not. For whensoever we sinne, we doas much as temper a cup of gall, or the poison of asps, and as it were giue it God to drinke: for so God himselfe compareth the sinne of the wicked Iewes to poison, saying, Their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the vines of Gomorrah, their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters be bitter: their wine is the poison of dragons, & the cruel gall of Aspes. And for this cause wee ought to thinke as hardly of our selues as of the Iewes, because so oft as we commit any offence against God, we doe as much as mingle ranke poison, and bring it to Christ to drinke. Now afterward, when this cup was giuen him, hee tasted of it; but dranke not, because he was willing to suffer all things that his Father had appointed him to suffer on the crosse, without any shortning or lessening of his paine.

Thus wee see in what manner Christ was brought forth to the place of execution: now followeth his crucifying. Christ in the prouidence of God was to be crucified for two causes: one, that the figures of the old testament might be accomplished and verified. For the heaue-offering lifted vp and shaken from the right hand to the left, and the brazen serpent erected vpon a pole in the wilderness, prefigured the exalting of Christ vpon the crosse. The second, that we might in conscience be relesed, that Christ became vnder the law, & suffered the curse thereof for vs, & bare in his owne body and soule the extremitie of the wrath of God for our offences. And though other kinds of punishments were notes of the curse of God, as stoning, and suchlike; yet was the death of the crosse in speciall manner about the rest ascribed, not by the nature of the punishment, not by the opinions of men, not by the ciuill lawes of countries and kingdoms, but by the vertue of a particular commandment of God, foreseing what manner of death Christ our Redeemer should die. And here, upon among the Iewes in all ages this kinde of punishment hath bene branded with speciall ignominie, as Paul signifieth when hee saith, He abused himselfe to the death, even to the death of the crosse: and it hath bin allotted as a most grievous punishment to most notorious malefactors. If it bee said, that the repentant thesee vpon the crosse dyed the same death with Christ, and yet was not accursed: the answer is, that in regard of his offences he deferved the curse, and was actually accursed; & the signe of this was the death which he suffered, and that in his owne confession: but because he repented, his finnes were pardoned, and the curse remoued. It may further be said, that crucifying was not knowne in Moses daies, & therefore not accursed by any speciall commandment of God in Deuteronomie. Ans. Moses indeed speaks nothing in particular of crucifying, yet neuertheless hee doth include the same vnder the generall. For if euery one which hangs vpon a tree be accursed, then he also which is crucified; for crucifying is a particular kind of hanging on a tree. Lastly, it may be alledged, that Christ in his death could not be accursed by the law of Moses, because he was no malefactor. Ans. Though in regard of himselfe he was no sinner, yet as he was our surety he became fin for vs, and consequently the curse of the law for vs, in that the curse euery way due vnto vs, by imputation and application was made his.

Furthermore, Christ was crucified not after the manner of the Iewes, who vsed to hang malefactors vpon a tree, binding them thereto with cords, & that when they were dead, but after the vsual manner of the Romans; his body being partly nailed to the crosse, and partly in the nailing extreemly racked, otherwise I see not but that a man might remaine many daies together aline vpon the crosse. And here we haue occasion to remember, that the Papists who are so deuout and zealous towards crucifixes, are furie deceived in the making of them. For first of all, the crosse was made of three peeces of wood, one fastened vpright in the ground, to which the body and backe leaned; the second fastened towards the toppe of the first ouerthwart, to which the hands were nailed; the third fastened towards the bottome of the first, on which the feet were set & nailed: whereas contrariwise popish caruers and painters fasten both the feet of Christ to the first: secondly, the feet of Christ were nailed asunder with two distinct nailes, and not nailed one vpon another with one naile alone, as Papists imagine, and that to the very body of the crosse: for then the souldiers could not haue broken both the legges of the theues, but only the outmolt, because one of them lay vpon the other.

Let vs now come to the vse which may be made of the crucifying of Christ. First of all here we learne with bitterness to beuaile our finnes: for Christ was thus cruelly nailed on the crosse, and there suffered the whole wrath of GOD, not for any offence that euer hee committed, but being our pledge and suretie vnto GOD, he suffered all for vs: and therefore iust cause haue wee to mourne for our offences, which brought our sauour Christ to this low estate. If a man should be so farre in debt that he could not be freed, vnlesse the suretie should be cast into prison for his sake; nay, which is more, be cruelly put to death for his debt, it would make him at his wits end, and his very heart to bleede. And so is the case with vs by reason of our finnes; we are Gods debtors, yea bankrupts before him, yet haue we gotten a good surety, even the sonne of God himselfe, who to recouer vs to our former liberty, was crucified for the discharge of our debt. And therefore good cause haue we to beuaile our estate euery day, as by the Prophet it is said, They shall looke on him whom they haue pierced, they shall lament for him as one mourner for his owne sonne: they shall be sorrie for him as one is sorrie for his first borne. Look as the blood followed the nailes that were stricken through the blessed hands & feete of Christ, so should the meditation of the crosse and passion of our Redeemer be as it were nailes and speares to pierce vs, that our hearts might bleed for our finnes: & we are not to thinke more hardly of the Iewes for crucifying him then of our selues, because euery one of our finnes we also crucifie him. These are the very nayles which pierce his hands and feete, and these are the speares which pierce through his side. For the losse of a little worldly pelfe, oh how are we grieved! but seeing our transgressions are the weapons whereby the sonne of God was crucified, let vs (I say it againe and againe) learne to be grieved for them about all things, and with bleeding and melting hearts bow and buckle vnder them, as vnder the crosse.

Secondly, Christ saith of himselfe, as Moses lift up the Serpent in the wilderness, so must the sonne of man be lifted up: the comparison is excellent and worthy the marking. In the wilderness of Arabia the people of Israel rebelled against God, and thereupon he sent fierie serpents among them, which stung many of them to death: now when they repented, Moses was commanded to make a brazen serpent, and to set it vpon a pole, that as many as were stung might looke vnto it and recouer: and if they could but cast a glance of the eye on the brazen serpent, when they were stung euery one to death, they were restored to health and life. Now euery man that liueth in the same case with the Israelites; Satan hath stung at the heart, and giuen vs many a deadly wound, if we could feele it; and Christ who was prefigured by the brazen serpent, was likewise exalted on the crosse, to conferre righteousness and life eternal to euery one of vs: therefore if we will escape eternal death, we must renounce our selues, and lift vp the eyes of our faith to Christ crucified, and pray for the pardon of our finnes: and then shall our hearts and consciences be healed of the wounds & gripes of the diuell: and vnill such time as wee haue grace to doe this, we shall neuer be cured, but still lie wounded with the stings of Satan, and bleeding to death euery at the very heart, although we feele no paine, or griefe at all. But some may aske how any man can see him crucified now after his death? Ans. Wherefore the word of God is preached, there Christ is crucified, as Paul saith, O foolish Galatians, who haue bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, to whom before Iesus Christ was described in your sight, & among you crucified: meaning, that hee was liuely preached among them. We neede not go to wooden croses, or to golden crucifixes to seeke for him; but where the Gospell is preached, thither must we goe, and there lift vp our eyes of faith to Christ, as he is revealed vnto vs in the word; resting on him and his merits with all our hearts, and with a godly sorrow confesse and beuaile our finnes, craving at his hands mercy and pardon for the same. For till such time as we doe this, we are grievously stung by Satan, and are euery moment euery at deaths doore. And if we can thus behold Christ by faith, the benefits which come hereby shall be great: for as Paul saith, the old man, that is, the corruption of our nature, and the body of sin that reigneth in vs, shall be crucified with him: for when Christ was nailed on the crosse, all our finnes were layed vpon him; therefore if thou dost vnfaignedly beleue, all thy finnes are crucified with him, and the corruption of thy nature languisheth and dyeth, as hee languished and dyed vpon the crosse.

Ioh. 3. 14.

Thirdly, we must learne to imitate Christ as he suffered himselfe to be nailed to the crosse for our sins, so answerably must euery one of vs learne to crucifie our flesh, and the corruption of our nature, and the wickednesse of our own hearts, as Paul saith, They that are Christs, haue crucified the flesh with lusts and affections thereof. And this we shall doe, if for our sins past we waile and mourne with bitterness, and preuent the sins to come, into which we may fall by reason of the corruption of our natures, by vying all good meanes, as prayer, fasting, and the word of God preached, and by flying all occasions of offence. We are not to destroy our bodies, or to kill our selues, but to kill and crucifie sinne that liueth in vs, and to mortifie the corruption of our nature that rebels against the spirit. Christianitie stands not in this, to heare the word of God, and outwardly to profess the same, and in the meane season still to liue in our finnes, and to pamper our owne rebellious flesh; but it teacheth vs alwaies to haue in readinesse some speare or other to wound sinne, and the sword of the spirit to cut downe corruption in vs, that thereby we may shew our selues to be liuely followers of Christ indeede.

Fourthly, by this we may learne, that the wrath of God against sin is wonderfull great, because his owne Sonne bearing our person, and being in our place, was not only crucified, and racked most cruelly, but also bare the whole wrath of God in his soule: and therefore wee must leaue off to make so little account of sinne as commonly we doe.

Fifthly, whereas the person crucified was the Sonne of God, it sheweth that the loue of God which he bare vnto vs, in our redemption is endlesse; like a sea without a banke or bottome, it cannot be searched into, and if we shall not acknowledge it to bee so, our condemnation will be the greater.

Sixty, in this that Christ bare the curse of the law vpon the crosse; we learne that those that be the children of God, when they suffer any iudgement, crosse, or calamity, either in body, or in mind, or both, doe not beare them as the curses of God, but as the chastisements of a louing father. For it doth not stand with the iustice of God to punish one fault twice: and therefore when any man that putteth his whole confidence in God, shall either in his owne person, in his good name, or in his goods feelee the heavy hand of God, God doth not as a iudge curse him, but as a father correct him. Here then is condemned the opinion of the Church of Rome, which hold, that we by our sufferings doe in some part satisfie the iustice of God; but this cannot stand, because Christ did make a perfect satisfaction to the iustice of his Father for all punishment. And therefore satisfaction to God made by man for temporal punishment is needlesse, and much derogates from Christs passion.

In the crucifying of Christ, two things specially must be considered: The manner of the doing of it, & his continuance aline vpon the crosse. Touching the manner, the spirit of God hath noted two things. The first, that Christ was crucified betweene two theues, the one vpon his left hand, the other vpon his right: in which action is verified the saying of the Prophet Esaie; He was numbred among the wicked: and the Iewes for their parts doe hereby testifie, that they esteemed him to bee, not some common wicked man, but euery the captain and ringleader of all theues and malefactors whatsoever. Now whereas Christ standing vpon the crosse in our room and stead, is reputed the head and prince of all finnes, it serueth to teach euery one of vs that beleue in him, to iudge our selues most vile and miserable finnes, and to say of our selues with Paul, that we are the chiefe of all finnes. The second thing is, that Christ was crucified naked; because he was stripped of his garments by the souldiers when he was to be crucified. The causes why he suffered naked are these. First, Adam by his fall brought vpon all mankind death both of body and soule: and also the curses of God which befall man in this life: among which this was one, that the nakednesse of the bodie should bee ignominious; and hereupon when

Adam had sinned, and saw himself naked, he fledde from the presence of God, and hidde himselfe euen for very shame. Christ therefore was stripped of his garments: and suffered naked, that he might beare all the punishment and ignominy that was due vnto man for sin. Secondly, this came to passe by the goodnesse of God, that we might haue remedie for our spirituall nakednes; which is when a man hath his sinnes lying open before Gods eyes; and by reason thereof hee himselfe lyeth open to all Gods iudgements. Hereof Christ speaketh to the angel of Laodicea, saying, I know thee, I am rich, and increased with goods, and haue neede of nothing, and knowest not how thou art wretched, miserable, blinde, and naked. So when the Israelites had committed idolatry by the golden calfe, Moses telleth them that they were naked, not onely because they had spoyled themselves of their earrings, but especially because they were destitute of Gods fauour, and lay open and naked to all his iudgements for that sinne. And Salomon saith, Where there is no vision, there the people are made naked; that is, their sinnes lye open before God; and by reason thereof they themselves are subiect to his wrath and indignation. Now Christ was crucified naked, that he might take away from vs this spirituall nakednesse; and also giue vnto vs meete garments to cloath vs withall in the presence of God, called white rayment, as Christ saith, I confesse thee O my white rayment, that thou makest be clothed, and that thy filthy nakednesse doe not appeare; and long white robes dipped in the blood of the Lamb, which serue to hide the nakednesse of our soules. What these garments are, the Apostle sheweth whē he saith, All that are baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ. And, Put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness, and true holinesse. Our nakednesse maketh vs more vile in the sight of God, then the most loathsome creature that is, can bee vnto vs; yntill we haue put on the righteousness of Christ to ouer the deformity of our soules, that we may appeare holy, and without spotte before God. Thirdly, Paul saith, Wee know if our earthly house of this tabernacle be destroyed, wee haue a building giuen of God, &c. For therefore we sigh, desiring to bee clothed with our house which is from heauen, because if we be clothed we shall not be found naked. Where it is like that the Apostle alludeth to the nakednesse of Adam after his fall; and therefore giueth vs another reason why Christ was crucified naked, namely, that after this life he might cloath all his members with eternal glory.

If this bee so, that a part of our reioycing stands in the glorious nakednesse of Christ crucified, there is no reason why we should be puffed vp with the vanitie of our apparell. It should rather bee an occasion to make vs ashamed, then to make vs proud. The theefe may as well bragge of the brand in his hand, or of the fetters on his heels, as we may of our attire; because it is but the couering of our

A shame; and therefore should put vs in mind of our sinne and shameful nakednesse.

The aboad of Christ vpon the crosse, was about the space of sixe houres. For the death of the crosse was no suddaine, but a (a) lingering death. And in this space of time there fel out sixe notable euents. The first, that the souldiers hauing stripped Christ of his garments, diuided them into foure parts, and cast lottes for his coate, because it was wouen without seame. And by this appeares the great loue of Christ to man, who was not onely content to suffer, but also to lose all that euer hee had, euen to the garments on his backe to redeeme vs; teaching vs answerably, that if it please God to call vs any trial hereafter, we must bee content to part with all for his sake, that we may winne him. Again, in these souldiers we may behold a picture of this world: whē they had nailed Christ to the crosse, they will not lose so much as his garments, but they came and deuide them, and cast lots for them: as for Christ himselfe, the Saviour and redeemer of mankind, they regard him not. And thus saith the world: it is a hard thing to find a man to accept of Christ, because hee is Christ his redeemer: but when gaine comes by Christ, then he is welcome. Elsas that esteemed nothing of his Fathers blessing, made great account of his brothers portage. The Gadarenes made more account of their swine, then of Christ, for when they heard that they were drowned, they beseech him to depart out of their coasts. Nay so bad is this age, that such as will be taken to bee the speciall members of Christ, doe not onely with the souldiers stripe Christ of his garments, but more then this, they beaue him of his natures and offices. The Church of Rome by their transubstantiation stripe him of his manhood: and by making other priests after the same order with him, which doe properly forgiue sinnes, stripe him of his priesthood: and of his kingly office, by ioyning with him a Vicar on earth, and head of the Catholike Church, and that in his presence: whereas all deputships and commissions cease in the presence of the principall. And when they haue done all this, then they further load him with a number of beggarly ceremonies; and so doe nothing else but make a (b) fained Christ, in stead of the true and alone Messias.

The second euent was, that Christ was mocked of all sorts of men. First they set vp the cause written why he was crucified, namely, This is the king of the Iewes: then the people that passed by reuiled him, wagging their heads at him, and said, Thou that destroyest the temple and buidest it in three dayes, saue thy selfe, &c. Likewise the high Priests mocking him, with the Scribes and Pharisees and the Elders, said, He saved others, let him saue himselfe. The same also did one of the theecus that was crucified with him, cast in his teeth. Behold here the wonderfull strange dealing of the Iewes: they they see an innocent man thus pitifully and grievously racked, and nailed on the crosse, and his blood distilling downe from hands & feete: and yet are they without all pittie, and compassion, and doe make but a mocke and a scoffe at him. And in this wee may plainly see how dangerous and fearefull their case is, who are wholly giuen vp to the hardnessse of their own hearts: and we are further aduised, to take heede how we giue our selues to jesting or mocking of others. And if any think it to be a light sinne, let them consider what befel the Iewes for mocking Christ. The hand of God was vpon them within a while after, and for remaينه to this day. Little children wickedly brought vp, when they saw Elsas the man of God comming, they mocked him, and said, King, 2. 23, 24. Come up thou balde pate, come up thou balde pate: but Elsas looked backe on them, and curst them in the name of the Lord, and two wilde Beares came out of the Forrest, and did teare in pieces two and fortie of them. Julian, once a Christian Emperour, but after an Apostata, did nothing else but mocke Christ & his doctrine, and made icells of sundry places of Scripture: but being in fight against the Persians, was wounded with a dart (no man knowing how) & died scoffing and blaspheming. And such like are the iudgements of God, which befall mockers and scorners. Let vs therefore in the feare of God learne to eschew and auoide this sinne.

Furthermore, if we shal indifferently consider all the mockes and scornings of the Iewes, we shall finde that they cannot truly conuince him of the least sinne; which serueth to cleare Christ, and to proue that he was a most innocent man, in whose waies was no wickednes, and in whose mouth was found no guile: and therefore he was fittest to stand in our roomme, and suffer for vs which were more vile and sinfull. And here by the way a question offereth it selfe to be skanned. S. Matthew saith, Math. 27. 44. The theecus which were crucified with him cast the same in his teeth, which the Scribes and Pharisees did. S. Luke saith, Luk. 21. 39. that one of the theecus mocked him. Now it may be demanded, how both these can bee true?

Ans. Some reconcile the places thus: that the scripture speaking generally of any thing, by a figure doth attribute that to the whole, which is proper to some part onely; and so here doth ascribe that to both the theecus which agreeeth but to one. Others answer it thus: that at the first both of the cuill doers did mocke Christ, and of that time speakes Matthew: but afterward one of them was miraculously conuerted, then the other alone mocked him, and of that time spake S. Luke. And this I rather take to be the truth. But what was the behaviour of Christ, when he is thus laden with reproche? In wonderfull patience he replies not, but puts vp all in silence. Where we are taught, that when a man shall raile on vs wrongfully, we must not returne rebuke for rebuke, nor taunt for taunt: but we must either be silent, or els speake no more then shal serue for our iust defence. This was the practise of the Israelites, by the appointment of Hzechias, when Rab-shank reuiled the Iewes, and blasphemed the name of God: the people held their peace, and answered him not a word, for the kings commandement was, Answer him not, 2. Kin. 18. 36. So Hamab being troubled in minde prayed vnto the Lord, and Hely marked her mouth, for shee spake in her heart, and her lippes did moue onely, but her voice was not heard, therefore Hely thought shee had bin drunken, and said, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy drunkennesse from thee. Such a speech would haue moued many a one to very hard words: but shee said, 1 Sam. 1. 14. Nay my Lord, but I am a woman troubled in spirit: I haue drunke neither wine nor strong drinke: but I haue poured out my soule before the Lord. This is a hard lesson for men to learne; but wee must endeavour our selues to practise it, if we will be followers of Christ, and overcome euill with good.

The third thing that fell out in the time of Christs crucifying, was the pitifull complaint, in which he cried with a loud voice, Math. 27. 46. Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani, that is, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? In the opening of this complaint many points must bee skanned. The first is, what was the cause that moued Christ to complain? Ans. It was not any impaire, or discontentation of minde, or any despaire, or any dissembling, as some would haue it: but it was an apprehension and a feeling of the whole wrath of God, which fell vpon him both in body & soule. The second, what was the thing whereof hee doth complain? Ans. That hee is forsaken of God the Father. And from this point ariseth another question. How Christ being God, can be forsaken of God? for the Father, the Sonne & the holy Ghost are all three but one and the same God. Ans. By God we must vnderstand God the Father the first person. According to the common rule, when God is compared with the Sonne or the holy Ghost, then the Father is meant by this title, God; as in this place: not that the Father is more God then the Sonne, for in dignity all the three persons are equal: but they are distinguished in order onely, and the Father is first. And againe, whereas Christ complaineth that he was forsaken, it must be vnderstood in regard of his humane nature, not of his Godhead. And Christs manhood was forsaken, not that his Godhead and manhood were seuered, for they were euer ioyned together from the first moment of the incarnation: but the Godhead of Christ, and so the Godhead of the Father did not shew forth his power in the manhood, but did as it were lye asleepe for a time, that the manhood might suffer: When a man sleepeeth, the soule is not seuered from the body, but lieth as it were dead, & exerciseth not it selfe: euen so the Godhead lay still, and did not manifest his power in the manhood, and thus the manhood seemed to be forsaken. The third point is, the manner of this complaint, My God, my God, faith he: these words are words of faith, I say not of justifying faith whereof Christ stood not in need; but he had such a faith or hope, whereby he did put his confidence in God. The last words, why hast thou forsaken me? seeme at the first to be words of distrust. How then (will some say) can these words stand with the former? for faith and distrust are flat contraries.

Ans. Christ did not utter any speech of distrust, but only make his mone and complaint by reason of the greatnesse of his punishment; & yet still relied himselfe on the assistance of his Father. Hence we learne first, that religion doth not stand in feeling but in faith, which faith we must have in Christ, though we have no feeling at all: for God oftentimes doth withdraw his grace and fauour from his children, that he may teach them to beleue in his mercie in Christ; then, when they feele nothing lesse then his mercie. And faith and feeling cannot alwaies stand together, because faith is a subsisting of things which are not seene, and the ground of things hoped for, and we must liue by faith, & not by feeling. Though feeling of Gods mercy be a good thing, yet God doth not alwaies vouchsafe to giue it vnto his children: and therefore in the extremity of afflictions & temptations, we must alwaies trust and relie on God by faith in Christ; as Christ himselfe doth when he is as it were plunged into the sea of the wrath of God. Secondly, here we may see how God deales with his children: for Christ in the sense & feeling of his humane nature was forsaken, yet had he sure trust and confidence in God, that caused him to say, My God, my God. God will oftentimes cast his deere children into huge gulfs of woe & misery, where they shall see neither banke nor bottom, nor any way to get out: yet men in this case must not despaire, but remember still that that which befall Christ the head, doth also befall his members. Though Christ himselfe at his death did beare the wrath of God in such measure, as that in the sense and feeling of his humane nature he was forsaken: yet for all this he was the Sonne of God, and had the spirit of his Father, crying, My God, my God. And therefore though we be wonderfully afflicted either in body or in minde, so as we have no sense or feeling of Gods mercy at all, yet must we not despaire & thinke that we are cast awaies, but still labour to trust and relie on God in Christ, and build vpon him that we are his children, though we feele nothing but his wrath vpon vs; against mercie cleauing to his mercie. This was Dauid's practise: In day of trouble (saith he) I sought the Lord; my sore ranne and ceased not in the night; my soule refused comfort. I did thinke vpon God, and was troubled; my soule was full of anguish, Psal. 77.2, 3. and so he continueth on saying, vers. 10, 11, 2. &c. Will the Lord absent himselfe for ever, and will he shew no more fauour? hath God forgotten to be mercifull? but in the end he recovered himselfe out of this gulf of temptation, saying, Yet I remember the years of the right hand of the most high: I remember the works of the Lord, certainly I remember the wonders of old. Wherefore this practise of Christ in his passion, must then bee remembered of vs all, when God shall humble vs either in body or soule, or both.

The fourth thing which fell out when Christ was on the crosse was this: after Christ knew that all things were performed, and that the scriptures were fulfilled, he said, Ioh. 19.28, 29, 30. I thirst; and then there standing a vessel full of vineger, one ran and filled a sponge therewith and put it about an hyssope stalk, and put it to his mouth: which when he had received, he said, It is finished. The points here to be considered, are foure. The first, that Christ thirsteth. And we must know that this thirst was a part of his passion; and indeede it was no small paine, as we may see by this: when Syera was overcome by Israel, and had fled from his enemies to Iael's tent, Iudg. 4.19, he called for a little water to drinke, becoming more troubled with thirst, then with the feare of death at the hand of his enemies. And indeede thirst was grieuous to men in the East countrey, as any torment else. And hereupon Samson was more grieved with thirst, then with feare of many thousand Philistines, Iudg. 15.18.

Againe, whereas Christ complaineth that he thirsteth, it was not for his own sake, but for our offences: and therefore answerably we must thirst after Christ and his benefits, as the dry and thirstie land where no water is, doth after raine: and as the Israhelites brayeth after the rivers of water, so must we say with Dauid, My soule panteth after thee, O Lord, and the benefits of thy death.

The second, that a sponge full of vineger tied vpon an hyssope stalk, was reached to Christ vpon the crosse. Now it may be demanded, how this could be, considering the stalke of the hyssope is not past a foot long. Ans. As the tree of Mulderd-seed with the Iewes is far greater & taller then with vs, in so much that the birds of heauen build their nests in it; so it may be that Hyssope groweth much longer in those countries then with vs. Or as I take it rather, the Hyssop stalk was put vpon a reed, and by that means the sponge was put to the mouth of Christ.

The third point is, that Christ drinke the vineger offered: but when? Not before all things were finished that were to be done on the crosse. And by this he sheweth his exceeding care for our saluation. He laid aside all things that would turne to his owne ease, that he might fully worke our redemption, and fulfill the will of his Father who sent him into the world for that end. The like care must euerie one of vs haue to walke dutifully, and as it were

were to goe through-sitch in our particular callings, that God might be glorified by vs. When Abrahams seruant came to Bethuel to get a wife for Isaac, meate was set before him, but he said, Gen. 24.33. I will not eat before I haue said my message: so likewise we must first see Gods glory procured in our affaires, and then in the second place, if comodity or praise redound to vs, we must afterward take it.

The last point is, that when Christ had drunk the vineger, he said, It is finished. Which words may haue a double sense: one, that such things as were figured by the sacrifices of the old Testament are accomplished; the other, that now vpon the crosse he had finished his satisfaction to the iustice of his Father for mans sinne. And this of the twaine I rather thinke to be his meaning. If it be said, that the buriall & resurrection, & ascension of Christ, &c. which are necessary to mans redemption, were not yet begun, the answer is, that the workes of Christs priesthood which follow his death, serue not to make any satisfaction to Gods iustice for sinne, but only to confirme or apply it, after it is made and accomplished on the crosse. And if this be so, that Christ in his owne person accomplished the worke of redemption, and made a full and perfect satisfaction for vs, as these words import, It is finished, then humane satisfactions to Gods iustice for sinne are altogether superfluous.

The fifth euent that fell out when Christ was vpon the crosse was, that he cried with a loud voice, & said, Luk. 23.49. Father, into thy hand I lay downe my spirit, that is, I commend my soule, as beeing the most precious thing which I haue in this world, into thy custodie, who art a most faithful keeper thereof. These words are taken by Christ out of the Psalms: for when Dauid was in danger of his life by reason of Saul, and had no friend to trust, hee makes choice of God to be his keeper, and said, Psal. 31.5. Into thy hands, O Lord, do I commend my spirit. Now our Saviour Christ being in the like distress, both by reason of the Iewes, who euer way fought his finall destruction and confusion, & especially because hee felt the full wrath of God seazing vpon him, doth make choice of Dauid's words, and apply them to himselfe in his distress. And by his example we are taught, not only to read the generall history of the Bible, but also to obserue the things commanded and forbidden, and to apply the same vnto our selues, and to our particular estates & dealings whatsoeuer: thus the Prophet Dauid saith, Psal. 40.7. In the roll of the booke it is written of me, that I should doe thy will, O my God. How can this be? for no part of Scripture penned before the daies of Dauid saith thus of him. True indeed; but as I take it, Dauid's meaning is, that he read the booke of the Law, & found generall precepts & commandements giuen to Kings and Princes, that they should keepe all the ordinances & commandements of God: which he being a King applies particularly to his owne person, and thereupon saith: In the volume of the booke it is written of mee &c. And this duty is well practised by the people of God at this day. For the Psalmes of Dauid were penned according to the estate of the church in his time: & in these daies the Church of God doth sing the same with the same spirit that Dauid did, and doth apply their severall estates and conditions.

Now in that Christ commendeth his soule into the hands of his Father, he doth it to testifie that he died not by constraint, but willingly: and by his owne practise he doth teach vs to do the like, namely, to giue vp our own soules into the hands of God: and because this dutie is of some difficultie, wee must obserue three motives or preparatives which may induce vs to the better doing of it. The first is, to consider that God the Father of Christ, is the creator of our soules, and therefore he is called the father of spirits. And if he be a creator of them, then is he also a faithful preserver of the. For sure it is, that God will preserve his own workmanship. Who is or can be so careful for the ornament & preservation of any worke as the crafts-matter? and shall not God be more careful then man? Wherefore S. Peter exhorteth vs to commit our soules vnto God, as vnto a faithful Creator. The second motive is this: we must looke to be resolu'd in our consciences, that God the Father of Christ is our Father: euerie man for himselfe must labour to haue the assurance of the pardon of his owne sinnes, & that the corruption of his soule be washed away in the blood of Christ, that he may say, I am iustified, sanctified, & adopted by Christ. And when any man can say thus, he shall bee most desirous and willing to commit his soule into the hands of God. This was the reason which moued Christ to lay downe his soule into the hands of God, because he is his father.

The third motive or preparative is, a continuall experience & obseruation of Gods loue and fauour towards vs, in keeping and preserving him as appears by Dauid's example, Into thy hands (saith he) I commend my soule: for thou hast redeemed me, O thou God of truth.

The time when wee are specially to commend our soules into the hands of God, is first of all the time of any affliction or danger. This was the time when Dauid commended his soule into the hands of God in the Psalm before named. We know that in any common danger or perill, as the sacking of a Citie, or burning of an house, if a man haue any precious Iewell therein, he will first fetch that out, & make choice of a faithful friend, to whose custodie he will commit the same: euen so, in common perils and dangers we must alwaies remember to commit our soules as a most precious Iewell into the hands of God, who is a faithful Creator. Another more special and necessary time of practising this dutie, is the houre of death, as here Christ doth, and Stephen, who when the Iewes stoned him to death

called on God, and said, Act. 7. 59. Lord Iesu receive my spirit. And as this duty is very requisite and necessary at all times, so most especially in the hour of death; because the danger is great, by reason that Satan will then chiefly assault vs, and the guilt of sinne will especially then wound the conscience. Lastly, at all times we must commit our soules into Gods hands: for though we be not alwaies in affliction, yet we are alwaies in great danger: and when a man lieth downe to rest, he knoweth not whether he shall rise againe or no: and when he ariseth, he knoweth not whether hee shall lye downe againe: yea at this very houre we know not what will befall the next.

And great are the comforts which arise by the practise of this duty. When David was in great danger of his life, and his owne people would have stoned him, because their hearts were vexed for their sons & daughters which the Amalekites had taken: it is said, 1 Sam. 30. 6. he comforted himselfe in the Lord his God. And the practise of Paul in this case is most excellent: For the which cause (saith hee) I suffer those things, but I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have beleueed, and am persuaded that hee is able to keepe that which I have committed vnto him against that day. 2 Tim. 1. 12. This worthy servant of God had committed his life and soule into Gods hands: and therefore he saith, In all my sufferings I am not ashamed: where we see, that if a man haue grace in his life time to commit his soule into Gods hand, it will make him bold euen at the point of death. And this might be a motive to cause euery man daily & hourly to lay downe his soule into the hands of God, although by the course of nature he may lye twentie or forty years longer. But howsoever this dutie be both necessarie and comfortable, yet few there be that practise the same. Men that haue children are very careful and diligent to bring them vp vnder some mans tuition; and if they haue cattell, sheepe, or oxen, they provide keepers to tend them: but in the meane season for their owne soules they haue no care; they may sinke or swimme or doe what they will. This shewes the wonderfull blindness or rather madness of men in the world, that haue more care for their cattell, then for their owne soules: but as Christ hath taught vs by his example, so let euery one of vs in the feare of God, learne to commit our soules into the hand of God.

Again, in that Christ laies downe his owne soule, and withall the soules of all the faithfull into the hands of the Father, we further learne three things. The first, that the soule of man doth not vanish away as the soules of beasts and other creatures: there is great difference betweene them: for when the beast dyeth, his soule dyeth also: but the soule of man is immortal. The consideration whereof moue euery man about all things in this world to be careful for his soule: if it were to vanish away at the day of death as the soules of beasts do, the neglect thereof were no great matter: but seeing it must lye for euer either in eternall ioy, or else in endless paines & torments, it stands vs vpon euery man for himselfe, so to provide for his soule in this life, that at the day of death when it shall depart from his body, it may lye in eternall ioy and happiness. The second, that there is an especial & particular providence of God, because the particular soule of Christ is committed into the hands of his Father, and so answerably the soules of euery one of the faithfull are. The third, that euery one which beleuees himselfe to be a member of Christ, must be willing to die when God shall call him thereunto. For when we die in Christ, the body is but laid asleepe, & the soule is receiued into the hands of a most louing God and mercifull father, as the soule of Christ was. Lastly, whereas Christ surrendering his soule into his Fathers hands, calste it a spirit, we note, that the soule of man is a spirit, that is, a spirituall, inuisible, simple essence without composition, created as the angels of God are. The question whether the soule of a childe come from the soule of the parents, as the body doth come from their bodies, may easily be resolved. For the soule of man being a spirit, cannot beget another spirit: as the angels being spirituall doe not beget angels: for one spirit begetteth not another. Nay which is more, one simple element begetteth not another, as the water begetteth not water, nor aire begetteth aire: and therefore much lesse can one soule beget another. Again, if the soule of the childe come from the soule of the parents, then there is a propagation of the whole soule of the parent or of some part thereof. If it be said, that the whole soule of the parents is propagated, then the parents should want their owne soules & could not lye. If it be said, that a part of the parents soule is propagated: answer, that the soule being a spirit or a simple substance, cannot be parted: & therefore it is the safest to conclude, that the body indeed is of the body of the parents, & that the soule of man while the body is in making, is created of nothing: and for this very cause God is called the father of spirits.

Thus much of the crucifying of Christ: now followeth his death. For huius laid downe his soule into the hands of his Father, the holy Ghost saith, Luk. 23. 46. He gave vp the ghost: to giue vs to vnderstand, that his death was no fantasticall, but a reall death, in that his bodie and soule were seuered as truly as when any of vs die. In treating of Christs death wee must consider many points. The first, that it was needfull that he should die, & that for two causes. First, to satisfie Gods iustice: for sin is so odious a thing in Gods sight, that he will punish it with an extreame punishment: therefore Christ standing in our roome must not onely suffer the miseries of this life but also die on the crosse, that the very extremity of punishment which wee should haue borne, might be be laid on him: and so we in Christ, might fully satisfie Gods iustice: for the wages of sinne is death. Secondly, Christ died that he might fulfill the truth of Gods word, which had said, that man for eating the forbidden fruite should die the death. The properties of Christs death are two: the first, that it was a voluntary & willing death: the second, that it was a cursed death. For the first, whereas I say Christs death was voluntary, I meane that Christ died willingly, & of his owne free accord gaue vp himselfe to suffer vpon the crosse. Howsoever the Iewes did arraigne, & condemne, and crucifie him, yet if he had not willed his owne death, & of his free accord giuen himselfe to die: not the Iewes, nor all the whole world could euer haue taken away his life from him. He died not by constraint or compulsion, but most willingly: and therefore he saith, Job. 10. 18. No man taketh my life from me, but I (saith he) lay it down of my selfe: I haue power to lay it downe, & haue power to take it againe. And our Saviour Christ gaue euident tokens hereof in his death, for then Jesus cryed with a loud voice, and gaue vp the Ghost.

Ordinarily men that dy on the Crosse, languish away by little and little, and before they come to yeeld vp their liues they lose their speech, & only rattle or make a noise in the throat: but Christ at that very instant wher he was to giue vp the Ghost, cried with a loud voice: which sheweth plainly, that he in his death was more then a conquerour ouer death. And therefore to giue all men a token of his power, and to shew that he died voluntarily, it pleased him to crye with a loud voice. And this made the Centurion to say that he was the Son of God. Again, Christ dyed not as other men do; because they first giue vp the Ghost, and then lay their heads aside: but hee in token that his death was voluntary, first laies his head aside after the manner of a dead man, & then afterward giues vp the Ghost. Lastly, Christ dyed sooner then men are wont to doe vpon the crosse, and this was the cause that made Pilate wonder that he was so soone dead. Now this came to passe, not because he was loath to suffer the extremity of death: but because hee would make it manifest to all men, that he had power to die, or not to die. And indeed this is our comfort, that Christ died not for vs by constraint, but willingly of his owne accord.

And as Christs death was voluntary, so was it also an accursed death, and therefore it is called the death of the crosse. And it containeth the first and the second death: the first, is the separation of the body from the soule: the second is the separation of body and soule from God: and both were in Christ: for beside the bodily death, he did in soule apprehend the wrath of God due to mans sin: and that made him crye, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

And here wee must not omit a necessarie point, namely, how farre forth Christ suffered death. Answer. Some thinke that hee suffered onely a bodily death, and such paines as follow the dissolution of nature: but they no doubt, cometo short: for why should Christ haue feared death so greatly, if it had bin nothing but the dissolution of nature? Some againe thinke that he died, not only the first, but also the second death: but it may be they goe too farre: for if to die the first death, be to suffer a total separation of bodie and soule, then also to die the second death, is wholly and euery way to be seuered from all fauour of God, and at the least for a time to be oppressed of the same death as the damned are. Now this neuer befell Christ, no not in the midst of his sufferings, considering that euen then he was able to call God his God. Therefore the safest is to follow the meane, namely, that Christ died the first death, in that his body and soule were really and wholly seuered, yet without suffering any corruption in his body, which is the effect and fruit of the same: and that withall he further suffered the extreame horrors and pangs of the second death, not dying the same death, nor being forsaken of God, more then in his own apprehension or feeling. For in the very midst of his sufferings the Father was well pleased with him. And this which I say doth not any whit lessen the sufficiency of the merit of Christ: for whereas hee suffered truly the very wrath of God, and the very torments of the damned in his soule, it is as much as if all the men in the world had dyed the second death, and had bin wholly cut off from God for euer and euer. And no doubt Christ died the first death, only suffering the pangs of the second: that the first death might bee an entrance not to the second death, which is eternal damnation, but a passage to life eternal.

The benefites and comforts which arise by the death of Christ, are especially foure. The first, is the change of our naturall death, I say not the taking of it away, for we all must die: but whereas by nature death is a curse of God vpon man for eating the forbidden fruite, by the death of Christ it is changed from a curse into a blessing, and is made as it were a middle way and entrance to conuey men out of this world into the kingdom of glory in heauen: and therefore it is said, Christ by his death hath delivered them from the feare of death, which all the daies of their liues were subiect to bondage Heb. 2. 15. A man that is to encounter with a scorpion, if he know that he hath a sting, he may be dismayed; but being assured that the sting is taken away, he neede not feare to encounter therewith. Now death in his owne nature considered, is this scorpion armed with a sting: but Christ our Saviour by his death hath pulled out the sting of our death, and on the crosse triumphantly saith, 1 Corin. 15. 55. O death where is thy sting! O graue where is thy victorie! and therefore euen then when we feele the pangs of death approach, we should not feare but conceiue hope, considering that our death is altered and changed by the vertue of the death of Christ. Secondly, the death of Christ hath quite taken away the second death from those that are in Christ: as Paul faith, Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, which walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. Thirdly, the death of Christ is a means to ratifie his last will and testament. For this cause was Christ the Mediator of the new Testament; that through death (which was for the redemption of the transgressions which were in the former Testament) they which were called might receive the promise of the eternal inheritance. For where a Testament is, there must be the death of him that made the Testament: for the Testament is confirmed when men are dead: for it is yet of no force so long as hee is alive that made it. And therefore the death of Christ doth make his last will and testament which is the covenant of grace, authentical vnto vs. Fourthly, the death of Christ doth serue to abolish the original corruption of our sinfull hearts. As a strong corrosion laid to a fore, eats out all the rotten & dead flesh: even so Christs death being applied to the heart of a penitent sinner by faith, weakens & consumes the sin that cleaves to fast vnto our natures and dwells within vs. Some will say, how can Christs death which now is not, because it is long ago past & ended, kill sinne in vs now? Ans. Indeed if we regard the act of Christs death, it is past, but the vertue and power thereof endereth for ever. And the power of Christs death is nothing else, but the power of this Godhead, which enabled him in his death to overcome hel, the grave, death, and condemnation, and to disburden himselfe of our sins. Now when we haue grace to deny our selues, and to put our trust in Christ, and by faith are ioyned to him, then as Christ himselfe by the power of his Godhead overcame death, hell, and damnation in himselfe; so shall we by the same power of his Godhead kill and crucifie sinne and corruption in our selues. Therefore seeing we reape such benefit by the death of Christ, if we will shew our selues to be Christians, let vs reioyce in the death of Christ: and if the question bee, what is the chiefest thing wherein we reioyce in this world? we may answer, the very crosse of Christ, yea the very least droppe of his blood.

The duties to bee learned by the death of Christ are two: the first concerns all ignorant and impenitent sinners. Such men whatsoever they be, by the death of Christ vpon the crosse, must bee moued to turne from their sins: and if the consideration herof will not moue them, nothing in the world wil. By nature every man is a vassall of sin, and a bond-slave of Satan: the diuell reignes & rules in all men by nature, and we our selues can doe nothing but serue and obey him. Nay, which is more, we lue vnder the fearful curse of God for the least sin. Well now, see the loue of the Sonne of God, that gaue himselfe willingly to death vpon the crosse for thee, that hee might free thee from this most fearful bondage.

Wherefore let all those that lue in sinne and ignorance reason thus with themselves: Hith Christ the Sonne of God done this for vs; and shall we yet lue in our sins? hath hee set open as it were the very gates of hell, & shall we yet lue weltring in our damnable waies and in the shadow of death? In the feare of God let the death of Christ bee a meane to turne vs to Christ: if it cannot moue vs, let vs be resolute that our case is dangerous. To goe further in this point, every one of vs is by nature a sicke man, wounded at the very heart by Satan: though we feele it not, yet we are deadly sick; and behold, Christ is the good Physician of the soule & none in heauen or earth, neither Satin, Angell, nor man can heale this our spiritual wound, but he alone: who though he were equal with the Father, yet he came down from his bosome and became man; and liued here many yeeres in misery and contempt: and when no herbe, nor plaister could cure this our deadly wound or desperate sicknesse, he was content to make a plaister with his own blood: the paine hee tooke in making it, caused him to sweate water and blood: nay the making of it for vs cost him his life, in that hee was content by his owne death to free vs from death: which if it bee true, as it is most true, then wofull and wretched is our case, if we will still lue in sinne, and will not vse meane to lay this plaister to our hearts. And after this plaister is applied to the soule, we should doe as a man that hath bene grievously sicke, who whē he is on the mending hand, gets strength by little and little. And so should we become new creatures, going on from grace to grace, & shew the fame by liuing godly, righteously, and soberly: that the world may see that we are cured of our spiritual disease. O happy, yea thrice happy are they that haue grace from God to doe this. The second duty concerns them which are repentant sinners. Hath Christ giuen himselfe for thee, and is thy conscience fettered in this? Then thou must answerably beare this minde, that if thy life would serue for the glory of God and the good of the Church, thou wouldest then giue it most willingly if thou be called thereto. Secondly, if Christ for thy good hath giuen his life, then thou must in like manner bee content to dye for thy brethren in Christ, if need be. He (saith S. Iohn) laid downe his life for vs, therefore we ought to lay downe our liues for our brethren. 1. Ioh. 3. 16. Thirdly, if Christ was content to shed his own heart-blood not for himselfe, but for the sins of euery one of vs, then we must be thus affected, that rather then by sinning we would willingly offend God, we should be content to haue our owne blood shed: yea if these two things were put to our choise, either to doe that which might displease God, or else to suffer death, we must rather die then do the same. Of this mind haue bin all the Martyrs of God, who rather they would yeeld to Idolatry, were content to suffer most bitter torments &

cruell death. Yea, every good Christian is so affected, that hee had rather chooseth to die then to lue, not moued by impatience in respect of the miseries of this life: but because he would cease to offend to louing a Father. To sinne is meate & drinke to the world, but to a touched and repentant heart there is no torment so grievous as this, to sin against God, if once he be perwaded that Christ died for him.

Thus much for Christs death: now follow those things which befell Christ when he was newly dead; and they are two especially: The first, that his legges were not broken as the legges of the two theues were. Of the first, S. Iohn rendreth a reason, namely, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, Nor a bone of him shall be broken; which words were spoken by Moses of the paschall lambe; and are here applied to Christ, as being typically figured thereby. And hence wee observe these two things. First, that Christ crucified is the true paschall Lamb, as S. Paul faith, Christ our pascheuer is sacrificed: and S. Iohn faith, Behold the Lambe of God, distinguishing him thereby from the typical lambe. In this that Christ crucified is the true paschall lambe, the child of God hath wonderful matter of comfort. The Israelites did eate the Pascheuer in Egypt, and sprinkled the blood of the lambe on the posts of their doores, that when the Angell of God came to destroy the first borne of man and beast, and taw the blood vpon their houses, he might passe ouer them, that the plague should not be vpon them to destruction. So likewise if thou dost feede on the Lambe of God, and by a liuely faith sprinkle the doore of thine heart with his blood, the iudgement of God in this life, & the terrible curse of death, with the fearful sentence of condemnation at the day of iudgement, and all punishments due vnto thy sins shall passe ouer thee, and not so much as touch thee. And whereas the legges of our Saviour Christ were not broken by theoulders, who fought by all meane possible to worke against him the mischief they could: we may note, that the enemies of Christ and his Church, let them intend to shew neuer so much malice against him, they can not go beyond that libertie which God giueth them, they can doe no more for their liues then that which God will. The Medes and Persians are called the Lords sanctified ones: Cyrus is called the Man of Gods counsell, because whatsoever they intended against the people of God, yet in all their proceedings they did nothing but that which God had determined before to be done. And when Sennacherib came against the Iewes as a wild beast out of his denne, the Lord telleth Hazekiah concerning Assur, that he will put his hook in his nostrils, & his bridle in his lips, and bring him backe againe the same way that he came, that is, he will so rule him, that he shall not doe the least hurt vnto the Iewes, more then God will. This is a matter of great comfort to Gods Church oppressed with ma-nyfold enemies, Papists, Iewes, Turkes, and all infidels, maliciously bent against it for Christs sake. For though they intend and practise mischief, yet more then Gods will and counsell is, they cannot doe: because he hath his ring in their nostrils and his bridle in their lippes to rule them as he listeth.

The second thing which fell out immediately vpon the death of Christ, is that theoulders pierced his side with a spear, & thence issued water and blood. The vie which ariseth of this point is two-fold: first it serueth to proue that Christ died truly, & not in shew, or a fained death: for there is about the hart a fine or skin like vnto a purse, wherein is contained cleare water to coole the heat of the hart; and therefore when water & blood issued out after piercing of the side, it is very likely that a true very skin was pierced: for else in case that we can not coniecture whence this water should come. S. Iohn aneye-witnesse of this thing, being about to proue that Iesus the sonne of Mary was the true Messias, bringeth in sixe witness: three in heauen, The Father, the Word, and the holy Ghost; and three in earth, the water, the Spirit, and the blood; where no doubt he alludeth to the water and blood that issued out of the side of Christ by spirit, we may understand the efficacy and operation of Gods spirit, making men to bring forth the fruits of the fame, as loue, peace, joy, &c. And the second witness, namely water, hath relation to the water that came forth of Christs side, which signifieth the inward washing away of sin, and the purging of the heart by Christs blood: which also is, & was signified by the outward washing of the body with water and baptisme. The third witness hee calls blood, alluding to the blood that issued out of Christs side: whereby is signified the expiation or satisfaction made to Gods iustice for mans sin. The same vie had the ceremoniall sprinkling, in the old Testament, typically signifying the sprinkling of Christs blood. Now these three witnessess are not to be sought for in heauen, but every Christian man must search for them in his own heart & conscience, & there shall he find them in some measure. And this water and blood flowing out of the side of Christ being now dead, signifieth that he is our iustification and sanctification, euen after his death; & that out of his death springs our liues: & therefore as Eue was made of a rib taken out of the side of Adam: so springs the Church out of the blood that flows out of the side of the second Adam.

Hauiug thus intreated of Christs execution, let vs now come to the last point, namely, the excellency of Christs passion, consisting in these two points: 1. a Sacrifice. 11. a Triumph. For the first, when Christ died hee offered a propitiatory and reall sacrifice to his Father; and herein his death & passion differeth from the sufferings and deaths of all men whatsoever. In this sacrifice we must consider foure things. 1. who was the priest. 11. what was the sacrifice. III. what was the altar. IV. the time wherein this sacrifice was offered. The priest was Christ himselfe, as the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews proves at large from the third chap. to the 9. and of him wee are to consider these four points. The first, what is the office of Christs priesthood? Ans. The office of Christs priesthood stands in three things: I. To teach doctrine, and therefore he is called the high priest of our profession, that is, of the Gospell which we profess, because hee is the Author and Doctor of the same. II. To offer vp himselfe vnto his Father in the behalfe of man, for the appeasing of his wrath for sinne. III. To make request or intercession to God the Father, that hee would accept the sacrifice which hee offered on the crosse for vs. The second point is, According to which nature hee was a priest: whether in his manhood, or in his godhead, or both together? Ans. The office of his priesthood is performed by him according to both his natures: and therefore he is a priest not as the Papists would haue him, according to his manhood only, but as hee is both God and man: for as he is a Mediatour, so is he a priest: but Christ is a Mediatour according to both natures; each nature doing that which is peculiar to it, and conferring something to the worke of redemption: and therefore hee is a priest as he is both God and man. The third point, After what order he is a priest? Ans. The Scripture mentioneth two orders of priests: the order of Leui, and the order of Melchisedech. Christ was not a priest after the order of Aaron: and yet notwithstanding in that priesthood were many notable rites whereby the priesthood of our Saviour Christ was resembled, and we may note five especially. First, in the anointing of the high Priest; as of Aaron, and his sonnes after him, oyle was poured on his head, and it ranne downe to the very edge of his garments, whereby was signified that Christ the true high Priest was anointed with the oyle of gladdest about his followers; that is, that his manhood was filled with the gifts and graces of God, both in measure, number, and degree about all men and angels. Secondly, the sumptuous and glorious apparell which the high Priest put on, when he came into the Sanctuary, was a signe of the rich and glorious Robe of Christs righteousness, which is the puritie & integritie of his humane nature, and of his life. Thirdly, the speciall parts of the high Priests attire were first the Ephod, the two shoulders whereof had two onyx stones, wherein were engrauen the names of the twelve tribes of Israel: six names on the one stone, and six on the other, as stones of remembrance of the children of Israel to Godward: Secondly, the breast-plate of iudgement like the worke of the Ephod, wherein were set twelve stones according to the names of the children of Israel, grauen as signets euery one after his name. Now by these two ornaments

A. Were figured two things in Christ: by the first that he carries all the Elect on his shoulders, and supports them by his spirit so long as they are in the world, against the world, the flesh & the diuell. By the second, that Christ our high Priest being now in his sanctuary in heauen, hath in memory all the Elect, and their very names are written as it were in tables of gold before his face: and he hath an especial loue vnto them and care ouer them. Vpon this ground the Church in the Canticles prays on this manner: Set me as a scale on thy heart, & as a signet upon thy arme. And indeede this is a matter of comfort vnto vs al, that Christ hath ouer all names written in precious stones before his face: though hee be now in heauen and we on earth: and that the particular estate of euery one of vs is both known and regarded of him. Again, God gaue to Moses the Vrim and Thummim, which was put on the breast-plate of the high Priest, when he was to aske counsell from GOD of things vnkown, before the mercie-seat, whence God gaue answer. What the Vrim and Thummim was, it is not knowne: and it is like it was not made by any art of man, but giuen by God; and how it was used we cannot tell: but yet the signification of the words affordeth matter of meditation. Vrim signifies lights, and Thummim signifies perfections. And by this a further matter was prefigured in Christ, who hath the perfit Vrim and Thummim in his breast: first, because in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge: secondly, because he reueales to his Church out of his word such things as none can know but the children of God: as Dauid saith, The secret of the Lord is reuealed to them that feare him. And for this cause the spirit of Christ is called the spirit of wisdom and reuelation: and the spirit of God, whereby wee know the things that are giuen vnto vs of God: as namely, our election, vocation, iustification, & sanctification in this life, and our eternall glorification after this life: yea to euery member of Christ within his Church he giues a special spirit of reuelation out of the word, whereby he may know that God the Father is his father; the Sonne the redeemer, his redeemer; and the holy Ghost his sanctifier and comforter. Lastly, the high Priest had a plate on his forehead, and therein was engrauen the holiness of Iehouah: this signified the holiness of Christ: for as he is God, he is holiness itselfe; and as he is man, he is most holy, being sanctified by the holy Ghost for this end, that hee might couer our sinnes and vnrighteousnesse, with his righteousness and vniuersall obedience.

The second order of priesthood is the order of Melchisedech of which order Christ was, as Dauid saith, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech: and that in two special respects. I. Melchisedech was both a Priest and a King: so was Christ. II. Melchisedech had neither father, nor mother, because his historie is set downe with mention of neither: so likewise Christ as he is God, had no mother; and as he is man, he had no father. The Papists auouch Christ to be a priest of this order in a new respect, in that as Melchisedech offered bread & wine, when Abraham came from the slaughter of the Kings: so (say they) Christ in his last supper did offer his owne body and blood vnder the formes of bread and wine. But this is a frivolous denice of theirs: for if we reade Heb. 7. where this point is handled, there is no comparison at all made of their two sacrifices; but the resemblances before named are set down, in which, person is compared with person. Again, it is not said in Genesis that Melchisedech offered sacrifice; but that hee brought forth bread & wine, & made a feast to Abraham and his company. And if Christ should bee of the order of Melchisedech, in regard of the offering of bread and wine, yet would this make much against the Papists. For Melchisedech brought forth true bread and true wine; but in the sacrifice of the masse there is no true bread nor true wine: but (as they say) the real body and blood of Christ, vnder the forme of bread and wine.

The fourth point is, whether there be any more real priests of the new testament beside Christ or no? Ans. In the old Testament there were many Priests one following another in continual succession, but of the new Testament there is one only real priest, Christ Iesus God and man, and no more: as the author of the Hebrews saith, because he endureth for ever, hee hath an everlasting priesthood: and the word translated everlasting significeth such a priesthood, which cannot passe from him to any other, as the priesthood of Aaron did. And therefore the priesthood of Christ is fo tied to his owne person, that none can haue the same but he; neither man, nor angel, nor any other creature, no not the Father, nor the holy Ghost. But the factours of the Church of Rome will say, that Christ may haue men to be his deputies in his stead to offer sacrifice. Ans. We must consider Christ two waies: I. as he is God: II. as he is Mediatour. As he is God with the Father & with the holy Ghost, hee hath Kings and Magistrates to be his deputies on earth: and therefore they are called Elahim, that is, gods. But as he is Mediatour, and so consequently a priest and a King, he hath neither depute nor vicegerent: neither King to rule in his stead ouer his Church, nor priests to offer sacrifice for him: nay he hath no Prophet to be his deputy, as hee is the doctor of the Church. And therefore he saith to his disciples: be not called doctors, for one is your doctor. Indeed he hath his ministers to teach men his wil: but a deputy to offer sacrifice in his stead he hath not. And therefore we may with good conscience abhorre the massing priesthood of the Church of Rome, as a thing fetched from the bottom of hell: and their massing priests as instruments of Satan; holding this for a very truth, that we haue but

A. one onely priest euen Christ himselfe God & man. Indeed all Christians are priests to offer vp spiritual sacrifice: but it is the property of Christ alone to offer an outward and real sacrifice vnto God now in the new testament.

Thus much of the first point, who is the priest. The second followeth: what is the sacrifice. Ans. The sacrifice is Christ, as he is man, or the manhood of Christ crucified. As the priest is both God and man: so the sacrifice is man (d) not God. So it is said, we are sanctified by the offering of the body of Iesus Christ. Touching this sacrifice, sundry questions are to be skanned. The first, what kind of sacrifice it was? Ans. In the old Testament there were 2. kinds of sacrifices: one, propitiatory which served to satisfy for sin: the other, eucharistical for praise and thanksgiving. Now the sacrifice of Christ was a sacrifice propitiatory especially prefigured by the typical sacrifice called the whole burnt offering: for it was all consumed to ashes vpon the altar, and turned into smok, so the fire of Gods wrath did feast vpon Christ on the crosse: and did consume him as it were to nothing, to make vs something. Secondly, when Noe offered an whole burnt offering after the flood, it is said, God smelled a savour of rest: not because hee was delighted with the smell of the sacrifice, but because hee approoved his faith in Christ. And hereby was figured, that Christ vpon the crosse was an offering, and a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savour vnto God: because God was well pleased therewith. Now whereas Christ was content wholly to offer vp himselfe to appease the wrath of his Father for vs: it must teach vs to giue our bodies and soules, as holy, liuing, and acceptable sacrifices, wholly dedicating them to the seruice of God.

The second question is, how oft Christ offered himselfe? Ans. Once onely and no more. This must be held as a principle of diuinitie: Which once offering hath bee consecrated for ever, them that are sanctified: and againe, Christ was once offered to take away the sins of many. And it serueth to overthrow the abominable sacrifice of the Masse, in which the true bodie and blood of Christ is offered vnder the formes of bread and wine, really and substantially (as they say) for the remission of the sinnes of the quick and the dead, and that continually: but if this vnblody sacrifice of Christ be good, then is it either the continuing of that which was begun on the crosse by Christ himselfe, or the iteration of it by the masse priest. Now let Papists chuse whether of these two they wil, if they say it is the continuing of the sacrifice of Christ, then they speake outrageous blasphemy: for it is in effect to say that Christs sacrifice was not perfect, but onely begun on the crosse, & must be accomplished by the masse priest to the end of the world. If they affirme the second, that it is an iteration of Christs sacrifice, then also they speake blasphemy: for hereby they make it also an imperfect sacrifice, because it is repeated and iterated: for upon this ground doth the author to the Hebrews prove, that the sacrifices of the old testament were imperfect, because they were daily offered. And whereas they say there be two kinds of sacrifices, one bloody once only offered upon the crosse: the other vnbloody, which is daily offered: I answer, that this distinction hath no ground out of Gods words: neither was it known to the holy Ghost who saith, that without blood there is no remission of finnes.

The third question is, what is the fruit of this sacrifice. Ans. The whole effect thereof is contained in these four things: I. the oblation of Christ purgeth the beleuer from all his finnes, whether they be originall or actual: so it is said, If we walk in the light, we haue fellowship one with another: and the blood of Iesus Christ his some purgeth vs from all sinne: whether they be finnes of omission in regard of our duties: or of commission in doing euill. II. the oblation serueth for the iustifying of a sinner before God, as Paul saith, We are iustified by his blood, and are reconciled to God by his death.

This being here remembred, that in the passion of Christ we include his legal obedience, whereby he fulfilled the law for vs. III. the oblation of Christ serueth to purge mens consciences from dead works; How much more then shall the blood of Christ, which through the eternal spirit offered himselfe without spot to God, purge your consciences from dead works to serue the liuing God? IV. the oblation of Christ procures vs liberty to enter into heaven, By the blood of Christ Iesus we may bold to enter into the holy place, by the new & liuing way which he hath prepared for vs through the veile, that is, his flesh. By our finnes there is a partition wall made betweene God and vs: but Christ by offering himselfe vpon the crosse, hath beaten downe this wall, opened heauen, & as it were, trained the way with his own blood, whereby we may enter into the kingdome of God, & without the which we cannot enter in at all.

The last question is, how this sacrifice may be applied to vs. Ans. The meanes of applying this sacrifice betwo. I. the hand of God which offereth. II. the hand of the beleuer that receiueth the sacrifice offered. The hand of God whereby he offereth vnto vs his benefit, is the preaching of the word, & the administration of the sacraments, baptisme, & the Lords supper: and whereof these his ordinances are rightly administered & put in practice, there the Lord puts forth his hand vnto vs, and offereth most freely the vertue and benefit of the death of Christ. And then in the next place cometh the hand of the beleuer which is faith in the heart; which, when God offereth, doth apprehend and receive the thing offered, and make it ours.

The third thing to be spoken of is, the altar whereon Christ offered himselfe. The altar was not the crosse, but rather the godhead

A of Christ. He was both the priest, the sacrifice, and the altar: the sacrifice, as he is man; the priest, as he is both God and man; the altar as he is God. The propertie of an altar is to sanctifie the sacrifices as Christ faith, Tesuios et blande whether is greater the offering, or the altar that sanctifieth the offering? Now Christ as he is God, sanctifieth himselfe as he was man: and therefore (saith he) for their sakes sanctifie I my selfe, by doing two things: I. by letting apart the manhood to be a sacrifice vnto his Father for our finnes. II. by giuing to this sacrifice merit or efficacy to deserue at Gods hands remission of our finnes: the manhood of Christ without the godhead hath no vertue nor efficacy in it selfe to be a meritorious sacrifice: & therefore the dignitie and excellencie which it hath is deriued thence. As for the chalice & stonie altars of the Church of Rome, they are nothing else but the toys of mans braine. Christ himselfe is the onely real altar of the new testament. And in stead of altars which were vnder the law, we haue now the Lords table whereon we celebrate the sacrament of his body and blood, so shew forth his death till he come.

The fourth point, is concerning the time of Christs oblation, which he himselfe calleth the acceptable yeare of the Lord: alluding vnto another yeare vnder the law called the yeare of Iubile, which was euery fiftie yeare among the Iewes, in which at the founde of a trumpet all that had ser or sold their possessions receiued them againe: all that were bondmen were then set at libertie. This Iubile was but a figure of that perfect deliuerance which wasto be obtained by Christs passion, which was not tēporarie deliuerance for euery fiftie yeare, but an eternal freedome from the bondage of sinne, hell, death, and condemnation. And the preaching of the word is the trumpet founded which proclaimeth vnto vs freedome from the kingdome of darkenesse, and inuities vs to come and dwell in perfect peace with Christ himselfe. Well, if the yeare of perpetual Iubile be now come, in what a wretched estate are all our loose and blind people that esteeme nothing of that liberty which is offered to them, but chooseth rather to lue in their finnes, and in bondage vnder Satan and condemnation, then to be at freedome in Christ?

Now follow the viſes which are to be made of the sacrifice of Christ. The prophet Aggai saith, that the second temple built by Zorubabel was nothing in beauty vnto the first which was built by Salomon: & the reason is plaine, (for as the Iewes write) it wanted few things which the first temple had: I. the appearing of the presence of God at the mercy seat betweene the two Cherubins. II. the Vrim & Thummim on the breast-plate of the high Priest. III. the inspiration of the holy Ghost vpon extraordinary Prophets. I. I. I. the Arke of the Couenant: for that was lost in the captivity. V. fire from heauen to burne the sacrifices.

crifices. Yet for all this, the Prophet afterward saith; The glorie of the last house shall be greater then the first. Now it may be demanded, how both these sayings can stand together. Ans. We are to know, that the second temple was standing in the time when Christ was crucified for our finnes; and it was the sacrifice of Christ, which gave glorie and dignitie to the second temple, though otherwise for building and outward ornaments it was farre inferior to the first. And by this wee are taught, that if we would bring glorie vnto our owne selues, vnto our houses and kindred, either before God or before men, we must labour to be partakers of the sacrifice of Christ, and the sprinkling of his blood to purge our hearts. This is the thing that brings renowne both to place and person, how base soeuer we be in the eyes of the world. Secondly, all oblations & meate offerings were sprinkled with salt, & euery sacrifice of propitiation which was to be burned to alhes, was first salted: & hereby two things are signified. The first, that euery one of vs our selues are loathsome or vile in the sight of God; like vnto stinking carion or raw flesh kept long vnpowdered. A dead & rotten carkeis is loathsome vnto vs: but we our selues are a thousand times more loathsome vnto God. The second, that we are as it were salted and made sauior and acceptable to God by the vertue of the sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse. Our duty then is to labour that we may feelee in our selues the biting and sharpenes of the oblation of Christ, to wait and consume the superfluities of sinne and the corruptions of our nature. And we must with all indeauour, that the whole course of our liues, and our speech it selfe be gracious and powdered with salt, least God at length spue vs out of his mouth. To this end hath God appointed his ministers to be the salt of the earth, that by their ministerie they might apply the death of Christ, and season the people. And it hath pleased God to besprinkle this land with more plentie of this salt then hath bin heretofore. But, alas, small is the number of them that giue any relish of their good seasoning. The more lamentable is their case. For as flesh that cannot be seasoned with salt, putrifies: so men, that cannot be sweetened and changed by the sacrifice of Christ, doe rotte and perish in their sins. The waters that issued from vnder the threshold of the Sanctuary, when they came into the dead sea, the waters thereof were holtsome, but myrry places and marishes, which could not be seasoned, were made salt-pits. Now these waters are the preaching of the Gospell of Christ, which flowing through all the parts of this fleshy life doe not season and change our nature, it shal make it as places of nettles and salt-pits, and at length be an occasion of the eternal curſe of God. Thirdly, Christs priesthoode serueth to make euery one of vs also to be priests. And being priests, wee mult likewise haue our sacrifice and our altar:

A our sacrifices, is the cleane offering which is the lifting vp of pure hands to God without wrath or doubting in our prayers: also our bodie, & soules, our hearts and affections, the works of our liues, and the workes of our callings: all which must be dedicated to the seruice of God for his glorie and the good of his Church. The altar whereon we must offer our sacrifice, is Christ our Redeemer, both God and man, because by the vertue of his death, as with sweete odours, hee perfumes all our obedience, and makes it acceptable to God. The ministers of the Gospell are also in this manner priests, as Paul innumbrath when he calleth the Gentiles his offering vnto God. And the preaching of the word is as it were a sacrificiing knife, whereby the old Adam must be killed in vs; and wee made an holy and acceptable sweet smelling oblation vnto God, sanctified by the holy Ghost. Therefore euery one that heareth Gods word preached and taught, must indeauour that by the profitable hearing thereof, his finnes and whole nature may be subdued and killed: as the beast was slaine and sacrificed vpon the altar by the hand of the Leuite. Lastly, the exhortation of the holy Ghost must here be considered: Seeing (saith he) wee haue an high Priest, which is ouer the house of God, let vs draw neere with a true heart in assurance of faith, sprinkled in our hearts from an euill conscience, & washed in our bodies with pure water. The meaning of this is this, that if Christ haue offered such a sacrifice of such value and price, which procureth pardon of sinne, iustification, sanctification, and redemption, then we must labour to be partakers of it; to haue our bodies and soules purified and cleansed by his blood, and sanctified throughout by the holy Ghost, that thereby we may be made fit to doe sacrifice acceptable to God in Christ. This is the vie which the Apostle maketh of the doctrine of Christs priesthoode in that place, which also euery man should apply vnto himselfe: for why should we lue in our finnes and wicked waies, euery hour incurring the danger of Gods iudgements, seeing Christ hath offered such a sacrifice whereby wee may be purged and cleansed, and at length freed from all woe and miserie?

Thus much of Christs sacrifice: now follows his triumph vpon the Crosse. That Christ did triumph when hee was vpon the crosse, it is plainly set downe by the Apostle Paul, where he saith, Col. 2. 14. 15. That putting out the hand writing of ordinances that was against vs, which was conuincie to us, hee euen took it out of the way, and fastened it vpon the crosse, and hath spoiled the principalities and powers, & hath made shew of them openly, & hath triumphed ouer them in the same crosse. This triumph is set forth by Iges & relictionies of two forts. I. By signes of his glorie and maiestie. II. By signes of his victorie on the Crosse. The signes of his glorie and maiestie are principally feauen. The first, is the title set ouer his head vpon the crosse.

croffe, Ioh. 19. 18. Iesus of Nazareth king of the Iewes. The end why titles were set over the heads of malefactors was, that the beholders might know the cause of the punishment, and be admonished to take heed of like offences, and be stirred vp to a dislike of the parties executed for their offences. And therefore no doubt, Pilate wrote the title of Christ for the aggravating of his cause, & that with his owne hand. Yet marke the strange event that followed: for when Pilate was about to write the superscription, God did so governe and overrule both his heart and hand, that in stead of noting some crime, he sets downe a most glorious and worthy title, calling him, Iesus of Nazareth king of the Iewes: which words containe the very summe and pith of the whole Gospell of Christ, delivered by the Patriarkes and Prophets from age to age. We must not think that Pilate did this of any good mind, or vpon any loue or fauour that he bare to Christ; but onely as he was guided and ouer-ruled by the power of God for the aduancement of the honour and glory of Christ. The like did Caiphas who though a sworn enemy to Christ, yet he vttered a prophetic of him, saying, Ioh. 11. 50 That it was necessary that one should die for the people: not that he had any intent to prophesie: but because the Lord vsed him as an instrument to publish his truth. And when Balaam for the wages of vnrighteousnesse would haue cursed the Lords people, for his life he could not say, all his curings were turned into blessings. By this then it appears, that it is not possible for any man, doe what he can, to stop the course of the Gospell of Christ; nay, (as we see) God can raise vp the wicked sometime to spread abroad & to publish the truth, though they themselves intend the contrarie. Furthermore let vs marke that when the Iewes did most of all intend to bring disgrace & ignominie vpon our Saviour Christ; then did they most of all extoll and magnifie his name; they could not for their liues haue giuen him a more renowned title then this, that he was king of the Iewes. And the same is the case of all the members of Christ: for let a man walke in a good conscience before God and man, he shall finde this to be true, that when he is most disgraced in the world, then commonly he is most honoured with God and men.

Further, Pilate wrote this superscription in three languages, Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine. And no doubt the end thereof in the prouidence of God was, that the passion of Christ, as also the publishing of his kingdom and Gospell might be spread ouer the whole world. This shewes the malice of the Church of Rome, which will not suffer the word of God to be published but in the Latine tongue, least the people should be entangled in errors.

Again, when Pilate had thus written the superscription, the high Priests and Pharisees offended thereat, came to Pilate, willing him to change the title, saying, Write not the king of the Iewes, but that he said, I am the king of the Iewes: but Pilate answered them againe, That which I haue written, I haue written. Though Pilate had bin ouer-ruled before to condemne Christ to death, against his owne conscience, yet will he not in any wise cōdescend to change the superscription. How comes this to passe? Surely, as he was ruled by the hand of God in penning it, so by the same hand of God was he confirmed in not changing it. Hence wee learne sundry instructions. First, that no man in the world, let him indeuour himselfe to the vttermost of his power, is able to stop the course of the kingdom of God: it stands firme and sure, and all the world is not able to preuaile against it. Secondly, whereas Pilate being but a heathen man was thus constant, that he will not haue his writing changed; we may note, how permanent and vnchangeable the writings of the holy word of God are. They are not the words of heathen men, but were spoken by the mouth of the prophets & Apostles, as God gaue them vtterance. The booke of Scripture therefore is much more immutable, so as no creature shall be able to change the least part of it till it be fulfilled. Thirdly, by Pilates constancie, we learne to be constant in the practise and professions of the religion of Christ: this is a necessary lesson for these daies, wherein mens professions do fleete like water, and go & come with the tide. Many zealous professors to day, but to morrow as cold as water. And the complaint of the Lord touching times past, agrees to our daies: Os. 6. 4. O Ephraim, What shall I say to thee? thy righteousnesse is like the morning dew.

The second is, the conuersion of the theefe: a most worthy argument of the God-head of Christ. For by it when he was vpon the croffe and in the very middelt of his passion he giues vnto all the world a lively and notable experience of the vertue and power of his death, so as his very enemies might not onely behold the passion it selfe, but also at the same time acknowledge the admirable efficacy thereof. And therefore with the passion of Christ, we must ioyne the conuersion of the theefe: which is as it were a christall glasse wherein we may sensibly behold the endless merit and vertue of the obedience of Christ to his Father, euen to the death of the croffe. And therefore I will briefly touch the speciall instructions which are to be learned by it. First, let vs marke that both the theues in euery respect were equal, both wicked and lewd liuers: & for their notorious faults both attached, cōdemned, & executed both on the croffe at the same time with Christ: yet for all this, the one repenting was saved, the other was not. And in their two examples we see the state of the whole world, whereof one part is chosen to life eternall and thereupon attaines to faith and repentance in this life: the rest are reiected in the eternall counsell of God for iust causes known to him-

selfe, and such being left to themselves neuer repent at all. Secondly, we are taught hereby, that the whole worke of our conuersion and saluation must be ascribed wholly to the meere mercy of God: of these two theemes the one was as deeply plunged in wickednes as the other, & yet the one is saved, the other condemned. The like was in Isaac & Esaus; both borne at one time, & of the same parents, and neither of them had done good, nor euill, when they were borne: yet one was then loued, the other was hated: yea if we regard outward prerogatiues, Esaus was the first borne, & yet was refused.

Furthermore, the thiefe on the croffe declareth his conuersion, by manifest signes & fruits of repentance, as appears by the words which he spake to his fellow, Fearst thou not God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? Though hands and feete were fast nailed to the croffe, yet heart & tongue are at liberty to giue some tokens of his true repentance. The people of this our land heare the word, but for the most part are without either profit in knowledge, or amendment of life: yet for all this, they perswade themselves that they haue good hearts, & good meanings, though they cannot beare it away, & vtter it so well as others. But alas, poore soules, they are deluded by Satan: for a man that is conuerted cannot but expresse his conuersion, & bring forth the fruit thereof. And therefore our Saviour Christ saith, If a man beleeue in me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of water of life. The grace (as Elisus saith) of God, is like new wine in a vessel which must haue a vent; & therefore he that sheweth no tokens of Gods grace in this life, is not as yet conuerted: let him thinke & say of himselfe what he wil. Can a man haue life, & neuer moue, nor take breath? and can hee that brings forth no fruit of conuersion liue vnto God? wel, let vs now see what were the fruits of the thieues repentance.

They may be reduced to foure heads. First, he rebukes his fellow for mocking Christ, in deuouring thereby to bring him to the same condition with himselfe, if it were possible: whereby he discouers vnto vs the property of a true repentant sinner, which is to labour & strine, so much as in him lyeth, to bring all men to the same state that hee is in. Thus Dauid hauing tried the great love and fauour of God toward himselfe, breaketh forth & saith, Come children, hearken vnto me, & I will teach you the feare of the Lord: shewing his desire that the same benefits which it had pleased God to bestow on him, might also in like manner be couied to others. Therefore it is a great shame to see men professing religion, carried away with enery company, and with the vanities & fashions of the world; whereas they should rather draw euen the worst men that be to the fellowship of those graces of God which they haue receiued. That which the Lord spake to the Prophet Jeremy, must be applied to all men: Let them returne vnto thee, but returne not thou vnto them. In instruments of musike the fixing out of tune must bee set vp to the rest that be in tune, and not the rest to it.

Again, in that hee checkes his fellow, it shewes that those which be touched for their own sins, are also grieved when they see other men sin and offend God. But to goe further in this point, let vs diligently & carefully marke the manner of his reproofe, Fearst thou not God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? In which words hee rippes vp his lewdnesse euen to the quicke, and gines him a worthy item, telling him that the cause of all their former wickednes, had bin the want of the feare of God. And this point must euery one of vs marke with great diligence. For if we enter into our hearts and make a thorough search, we shall finde that this is the roote & foundation of all our offences. We miserable men for the most part haue not grace to consider that we are alwaies before God; and to quake & tremble at the consideration of his presence: & this makes vs so often to offend God in our liues as we doe Abraham coming before Abimelech, shifting for himselfe said, that Sara was his sister: & being demanded why he did so, answered, Because he thought the feare of God was not in that place: insinuating that hee which wants the feare of God, will not make conscience of any sinne whatsoever. Would wee then ouen from the bottom of our hearts turne to God, & become new creatures? the let vs learne to feare God: which is nothing else but this, when a man is perswaded in his own heart & conscience that whether hee be, he is in the presence & sight of God, and by reason thereof is afraide to sin. This wee must haue fully settled in our hearts, if we desire to learne but the first lesson of true wisdom. But what reason vseth the thiefe to draw his fellow to the feare of God? Thou art (saith he) in the same condemnation; that is, by thy sins & manifold transgressions, thou hast deserued death, and it is now most iustly inflicted vpon thee, wilt thou not yet feare God? Where we are taught, that temporal punishments and crosses, ought to be a meanes to worke in vs the feare of God: for that is one end why they are sent of God. It is good for me (saith Dauid) that I haue been chastised, that I may learne by statutes. And Paul saith, When we are chastised, we are mistured of the Lord. And the Iewes are taught by the Prophet Micah to say, I will beare the wrath of the Lord, because I haue sinned against him.

The second fruit of this conuersion is, that hee condemneth himselfe and his fellow for their sinnes, saying, Indeede we are righteously here, for wee receiue things worthy for that we haue done: that is, wee haue wonderfully sinned against Gods maiesty, and against our brethren: and therefore this grievous punishment which we beare, is most iust & due vnto vs. This fruit of repentance springs & grows very thin among vs, for few there be which doe truly conuict and condemne themselves for their own sins, the manner of men is to condemne others, and to cry out that the world was neuer so bad; but bring them home to themselves, and you shall finde that they haue many excuses and defences as plaister-work to calt ouer their soules and filthy finnes: and if they bee vrged to speake against themselves, the world will be thus, God helpe vs, we are all sinners, euen the best of vs. But certaine it is, that he which is thoroughly touched in conscience for his finnes, both can and will speake more against himselfe for his manifold offences, then all the world besides. Thus Paul when hee was conuerted cald himselfe the chiefe of all sinners. And the prodigall childe confessed that hee had sinned against heauen and against his father, and was not worthy to be called his childe.

Pal. 119. 71. 1 Cor. 11. 32. Mich. 7. 9.

The third fruit of his conuersion is, that he excuseth our Sauour Christ, and giveth testimony of his innocency, saying, But this man hath done nothing amiss. Marke here: Pilate condemned Christ, Herod mocked him, all the learned Scribes and Pharisees condemned him, and the people crye, Away with him, let him be crucified: and among his own disciples Peter denied him, and the rest ran away; there remains onely this poore silly wretch vpon the crosse to giue testimony of Christs innocency; whereby we learne, that God chooseth the simpleones of this world, to overthrow the wisdom of the wise: and therefore we must take heed that we be not offended at the Gospel of Christ, by reason that for the most part simple and meane men in the world embrace it. Nay marke further, that this one theefe being conuerted had a better iudgement in matters concerning Gods kingdom, than the whole body of the Iewes. And by this also students may learne, that if they desire to have in themselves vpright iudgement in matters of religion, first of all they must become repentant sinners: and though a man haue neuer so much learning, yet if he be carried away with his own blind affections & lusts, they will corrupt and darken his iudgement. Men which work in mines & cole-pits vnder the earth, are troubled with nothing so much as with dampes, which make their candle burne darke, and sometimes put it quite out. Now every mans finnes are the dampes of his heart, which when they take place, doe dimme the light of his iudgement and cast a mist ouer the minde, and darken the vnderstanding & reason: and therefore a needfull thing it is, that men in the first place should provide for their own conuersion.

The fourth fruit of his repentance is, that he prayeth for mercy at Christs hands, Lord (saith he) remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom: in which prayer we may see what is the property of faith. This theefe at this instant heard nothing of Christ but the scorninges & mockings of the people, and he saw nothing but a bale estate full of ignominy and shame, and the cursed death of the crosse, yet neuertheless he now beleues in Christ, and therefore intreats for saluation at his hand.

Hence wee learne, that it is one thing to beleue in Christ, and another to haue feeling and experience: and that euen then when we haue no sense nor experience we must beleue: for faith is the subsisting of things which are not seen: and Abraham about hope did beleue under hope: and Iob saith, though I know I shall beleeue in thee. In Philosophy a man begins by experience, after which comes knowledge and beleife; as when a man hath put his hand to the fire, and feels it to be hot, he comes to know thereby that fire burnes: but in diuinitie we must beleue though wee haue no feeling: first comes faith, and after comes sense and feeling. And the ground of our religion stands in this, to beleue things neither seene nor felt, to hope about all hope, and without hope: in extremity of affliction to beleue that God loueth vs, when hee seemeth to be our enemy, and to perseuere in the same to the end.

The answer which Christ made to his prayer was, This day shalt thou be with mee in Paradise. Whereby he testifies in the midst of his sufferings the power which hee had ouer the soules of men: and verifies that gracious promise, Aske and ye shall receiue, seeke and ye shall finde, knocke, & it shall be opened to you: and withall confutes the Popish purgatorie. For if any man should haue gone to that forged place of torment, then the theefe vpon the crosse, who repenting at the last gaspe wanted time to make satisfaction for the temporall punishment of his finnes. And by this conuersion of the theefe wee may learne, that if any of vs would turne to God and repent, we must haue three things. 1. The knowledge of our owne finnes. 11. From the bottom of our hearts wee must confesse and condemne our selues for them, and speake the worst that can be of our selues, in regard of our sins. 111. We must earnestly craue pardon for them, and call for mercie at Gods hands in Christ, withall reforming our liues for the time to come: if we do, we giue tokens of repentance; if not, we may thinke what we wil, but we deceiue our selues and are not truly conuerted. And here wee must be warned to take heed lest wee abuse, as many do, the example of the theefe, to conclude thereby that wee may repent when we wil, because the theefe on the crosse was conuerted at the last gaspe. For there is not a second example like to this in all the whole Bible: it was also extraordinary. Indeede fildy men are called at the eleuenth houre, but it is a most rare thing to finde the conuersion of a sinner after the eleuenth houre, & at the point of the twelfth. This mercy God vouchsafed this one theefe, that he might be a glasse in which wee might beholde the efficacy of Christs death, but the like is not done to many men; nor not to one of a 1000. Let vs rather consider the estate of the other theefe, who neither by the dealing of his fellow, nor by any speech of Christ could be brought to repentance. Let vs not therefore deferre our repentance to the houre of death:

for then we shall haue fore enemies against vs: the world, the flesh, the diuell, & a guiltie conscience; & the best way is before-hand to preuent them. And experience shewes, that if a man deferre repentance to the last gaspe, often when he would repent he cannot. Let vs take Salomons counsell, Remember thy Creator in the daies of thy youth, before the euill daies come. Eccle. 12.1. If we will not heare the Lord when he cald vs, he will not heare vs when we call him.

The third signe was, the eclipsing or darkening of the Sunne from the sixth houre to the ninth. And this eclipse was miraculous. For by the course of nature the Sunne is neuer eclipsed, but in the new Moone: whereas contrariwise this eclipse was about the time of the Pasche, which was alwaies kept at the full Moone. Question is made touching the largeness of it: some moued by the words of Luke, who saith that darkenes was vpon the whole earth, haue thought that the eclipse was vniuersal ouer the whole world: but I rather thinke that Saint Luke meaning is, that it was ouer the whole Region or countrey of Iury. For if such a wonder had happened ouer the whole world, all historiographers Greeke & Latine, and Astronomers, diligent obseruers of all eclipses, would haue made speciall mention thereof. And though some writers say that it was ouer the whole earth, and that it was set downe in Record both by the Romanes, and Grecians; yet all their writings proue no more but this, that it was ouer Iury & Galilee, and the countries bordering neere vnto.

The vices of this miracle are manifold. I. This darkening of the Sunne giues a checke to the Iewes for their crucifying of Christ: they were not ashamed to apprehend, accuse, and condemne him, yet this glorious creature the Sunne pulleth in his beames, being as it were ashamed to behold that, which they were not ashamed to do. II. It serueth to signifie the great iudgement of God to come vpon the Iewes. For as when Christ suffered, darknes was ouer all the land of Iury, and all the world besides had the light of the Sunne, so shortly after blindness of mind was ouer the whole nation of the Iewes and all the world besides saw the Sun of righteousness shining vnto them in preaching of the Gospel. III. It serueth to aduertise vs, that such as carry themselves towards Christ as the Iewes did, haue nothing els in them but darknes, and that they fit in the darknes and shadow of death; and therefore not able any whit better to see the way that leadeth vnto life, then he which is cast into a darke dungeon can; who if they thus remaine, shall at length be cast into utter darkenesse. This being the estate of all them that be forth of Christ, we must labour to be freed from this darknesse, that the day-starre may rise in our hearts, and shine vpon vs and put life into vs. IV. This miraculous and wonderfull darkening of the Sunne doth conuince the Iewes, that Christ whom they crucified was the Lord of glory, and the Sauour of the world: and it is very like, that this was the principall end of this miracle. For whereas neither his doctrine, nor his former miracles could moue them to acknowledge him for that Messias, yet this one worke of God doth as it were strike the nayle to the head, and stop all their mouthes. V. Besides this, whereas at the very instant when Christ was about to make satisfaction to the iustice of his Father for our finnes, the Sunne was thus darkened: it teacheth vs first, to thinke of the passion of Christ, not as of a light matter, but as one of the greatest wondrous of the world, at the sight whereof the very frame of nature was changed: secondly, to thinke of our owne finnes, as the vilest things in the world, and that they deserue the intolerable wrath of God: considering that at the time when they were to be abolished, the course of nature euen in the very heauens is turned vpside downe.

The fourth signe, is the rending of the vail of the temple from the top to the bottom. The temple was diuided into two parts; the more inward, into which no man might come but the high priest; and that once a yeere; and it was called the holy of holies; the other was that where the people came, and offered sacrifices vnto the Lord. Now that which parted the temple into these two parts was called the vail; and at the time of Christs passion it was rent from the top to the very bottom. This hath diuers respects. I. The holy of holies signified the third heauen, where God dwelt himself in glory and maiesty vnto his Saints: and the rending of the vail figureth vnto vs, that by the death of Christ, heauen which was otherwise shut by our sins, is now let open, & a way made to enter thereto. II. It signifieth, that by the death of Christ we haue with our impediment, free access to come vnto God the Father by earnest prayer in the name of Christ: which is a most vnspokeable benefit. III. It signifieth, that by Christs death an end is put to all ceremonies, to ceremoniall worship, and the sacrifices of the old Testament: and that therefore in the new Testament there remaineth onely real & outward sacrifice, that is, Christ crucified on the crosse: and the whole seruice and worship of God for outward ceremonies most simple & plaine. IV. The temple was the chiefe and one of the most principall prerogatives that the Iewes had; it was their glory that they had such a place wherein they might worship and doe seruice to the true God: & for the temples sake God often spared them, & therefore Daniel praises: O Lord, heare the prayer of thy seruants, and his supplication, and cause thy face to shine vpon the Sanctuary, that lyes waste for the Lords sake. Yet for all this, when they began to crucifie the Lord of life, their prerogatives helpe them not, nay they are deprived thereof; & God euen with his own hand rends the vail of the temple in sunder, signifying vnto them, that if they forsake him he will also forsake them. And so we may say of the Church of England, no doubt for the Gospels sake we have outward peace and safetie, and many other blessings, and are in account with other nations yet if we make no conscience to obey the word of God, and if wee have no loue of Christ and his members, God will at length remove his candlestick from vs, and utterly deprime vs of this ornament of the Gospel, and make our land as odious vnto all the world, as the land of the Iewes is at this day. Let vs therefore with all care & diligence shew forth our loue both to Christ himselfe, and to his members, and adorne the Gospell which wee profess, by bringing forth fruits worthy of it.

The fifth signe, is the earth-quake, whereby hard rocks were clouen asunder. And it serues very fitly to signifie further vnto vs, that the sin of the Iewes in putting Christ to death was so heauy a burden, that the earth could not beare it but tremble thereat, though the Iewes themselves made no bones of it. And it is a thing to be wondered at, that the earth doth not often in these daies tremble & quake at the monstrous blasphemies and fearefull oathes by the wounds, & blood, and heart of Christ, whereby his members are rent asunder, & he traitorously crucified againe. Secondly, the earth-quake shewes vnto vs the exceeding & wonderful hardnes of the hearts of the Iewes, and ours also: they crucified Christ, and were not touched with any remorse; & we can talk and heare of his death: yea, we can say he was crucified for our sins: and yet we are nothing affected therewith, our hearts will not rend, whē as hard rocks cleaue asunder. Thirdly, the mouing of the earth, and the rending of the rocks asunder, may be a signe vnto vs of the vertue of the doctrine of the gospel of Christ, which is nothing else but the publishing of the passion of his death: which being preached, shall shake heauen & earth, sea and land. It shall moue the earthen, hard, and rocky hearts of men; & raise vp of meere stones & rocks children vnto Abraham. But the maine vſe & end of this point is, to proue that he that was crucified, was the true Messias the Sonne of God, and therefore had the power of heauen and earth, & could moue all things at his pleasure.

The sixt signe of the power of Christ, is that graves did open & many bodies of the Saints which sleepe arose, and came out of their graues after his resurrection, and went into the holy cite, & appeared vnto many. The vſe of this signe is this: it signifies vnto vs, that Christ by his death vpon the crosse did vanquish death in the graue, and opened it, and thereby testified that he was the resurrection and the life: so that it shall not haue euertlasting dominion ouer vs: but that he will raise vs vp from death to life, and to euertlasting glory.

The seauenth signe, is the testimony of the Centurion with his soldiours which stood by to see Christ executed. S. Marke saith, when hee saw that Christ thus crying gaue vp the ghost, he said, Truly this was the Sonne of God.

A Thus we see it is an easie matter for Christ to defend his owne cause: let Iudas betray him, Peter deny him, and all the rest forsake him, yet he can if it so please him, make the Centurion that standeth by to see him executed, to testifie his innocency. But what was the occasion that moued him to give so worthy a testimony? S. Matthew saith, Mat. 27. 54. it was feare, and that feare was caused by hearing the loud crie of Christ, and by seeing the earthquake and things which were done. And this must put vs in minde, not to passe by Gods iudgements, which daily fall out in the world, but take knowledge of them, and as it were, to fixe both our eyes on them. For they are notable meanes to strike & attonish the rebellious heart of man, & to bring it in awe & subiection to God. After that the two first capitaines with their fifties, commanding the Prophet Elisha to come downe to king Achazias, were consumed with fire from heauen, the king sent his third captaine ouer fiftie with his fiftie to fetch him downe: but what doth hee it is said, he fell on his knees before Elisha, and besought him, saying: O man of God, I pray thee, let my life and the liues of these fiftie seruants bee precious in thine eyes. But what was the cause why he prayed thus? surely he obserued what iudgements of God fell vpon his two former fellow capitaines, Behold, saith he, there came downe fire from heauen, & deuoured the two former capitaines with their fifties: therefore let my life bee precious now in thy sight. Thus laying to his owne heart & making vſe of Gods iudgements, hee humbled himselfe, and was spared with his fiftie. And Habacuk saith, When I heard thy voice, namely, of Gods iudgements, rottennesse entred into my bones, and I trembled in myselfe, that I might bee safe in the day of the Lord. Now what this feare of the Centurio was, there is a further question, and it is very like, that it was but a sudden motion, or a certaine preparatiue to better things. For he was but an heathen man, & had as yet no knowledge of Christ, & whether he repented or not, it is vncertaine: and we must not marvel at this: for there are many sudden motions in few very good, that vpon like occasions rise in the hearts of naturall men. When God plagued the land of Egypt, then Pharaoh sent for Moses, and confessed that the Lord was righteous, but hee and his people were wicked, and desired Moses to pray to God to take away the plague, who did so, Exo. 9. 27. & 34. but so soone as the hand of God was layed, he returned to his old rebellion againe. And as a dogge that commeth out of the water shaketh his eares, and yet returneth into it againe: so is the manner of the world: when crosses and calamities befall men, as sickness, losse of friends or goods, then with Abah they outwardly humble themselves, and go softly: they vie to frequent that place where the word is preached, and Gods name called vpon: but alas, common experience shewes, that those things are but fits arising of vncertaine and flittering motions in the heart. For so soone as the crosse is remoued, they returne to their old ways againe, and become as bad and as backward as euer they were: being like to the tree that lies in the water, which for a while is greene, but afterward withereth. And therefore we for our parts, when any good motions come into our hearts as the beginnings of further grace, wee must not quench them, but cherishe and preserve them, remembering that the kingdom of heauen, is like a graine of mustard seed, which when it is sowne, is the least of all seedes: but afterward it groweth vp into a tree, that the fowles of heauen may build their nests in it: and like to this are the first motions of Gods spirit, and therefore they must be cherishe and maintained.

And thus much for the seauen signes of the power of Christs Godhead. Now followeth the second part of the triumph of Christ, which consisteth in his victorie vpon the crosse, notably expressed by Paul, when hee 1 Tim. 2. 14. 15. And putting out the hand writing of ordinances which was against vs, which was contrary to vs, hee enuoyed it out of vs: way, and fast: made it vpon the crosse, & hath spoiled the principalities & powers, and hath made a shew of them openly, and hath triumphed openly in the sight: In which words he alludes to the manner of heathen triumphs: for it was the custome of the heathen princes, when they had gotten the victory ouer their enemies, first to cause a pillar of stone, or some great oake to be cut downe, and set vp in the place of victory, vpon which either the names of the chiefe enemies were set, or their heads were hanged, or words were written in the pillar to testifie the victory. This being done, there followed an open shew, in which first the conquerour prepares for himselfe a chariot of victory, wherein he was himselfe a rider, and then the chiefe of his enemies bound and pinioned, were led openly after him: Now on the same manner vpon the crosse there was a pitched field, the conquerour on the one side was Christ; his enemies on the other side were the world, the flesh, hel, death, damnation, the diuell, and all his angels: all which, barding themselves against him, were all subdued by him vpon the same crosse: and he himselfe gaue two signes of his Triumph, one was a monument of the victory, the other open shew of his conquest. Now the monument of Christs victory was the crosse it selfe, whereon hee layed the obligation or bill which was against vs; whereby Satan might haue accused and condemned vs before God. For we must consider, that God the Father is a creditor and wee all debtors vnto him: he hath a bill of our hands which is the law, in that it giueth testimony against vs; first, by the legal washing, which did shew and signify, that we were altogether defiled and vnclean: secondly, by the sacrifices that were daily offered for the propitiation of our sins. Now Christ was our suretie, & paid euery one

A of the debt which we should haue payed, and requiring the acquittance, tooketh the ceremonial law, and the curse of the morall law, and nailed them to the crosse.

Furthermore, in the shew of conquest, the chariot is the crosse likewise: for it was not only a monument of victorie, but also a chariot of triumph. And the captiues bound and pinioned which followed Christ, are the principalities and powers, that is, the diuell and his angels, hell, death, and condemnation: all which are as it were taken prisoners, their armour and weapons are taken from them, and they chained and bound each to other.

The meditation of this point serueth to admonish vs to abandon all manner of sinne, and to make conscience of euery good duty, if we will aright professe the Gospell of Christ: for when we sinne, we doe as it were pull Christ out of his chariot of triumph, and vnite Satans bonds, and gae him weapons, and (as much as we can) make him valiant and strong againe. Now for any man to make Satan and sin valiant and strong against himselfe, whereas as Christ hath weakened him; as if hee bruised his head, is no better then to become an enemy to the crosse of Christ. Again, hereby we are taught to pray vnto God, that our blade eyes may be opened, that we may discern aright of the passion of Christ. It is a wonder to see how men are carried away with a liking of vaine shewes, games, & entertaines: how they spend euery whole daies in beholding them, & their money also that they may come to the places where they are: oh then how exceedingly ought our hearts to be terrified with this most admirable shew, in which the Son of God himselfe rides most gloriously in his chariot of triumph, and leads his & cur most cursed enemies captiue, yea treads them vnder his foot! This triumph is set forth vnto vs in the preaching of the Gospell, and may be scene of vs all freely without money, or moneyworth. What wretches then shall we be, if we suffer our hearts to be filled with earthly delights, & in the meane season haue little or no desire to behold with the eyes of our minde this goodly spectacle that is to be seen in the passion of Christ, that serues to reuine and refresh our soules to life eternall?

Thirdly, if Christ when he was most weak and base in the eyes of men, did molt or all triumph vpon the crosse: then euery one of vs must learne to fly with the Apostle Paul, God forbid that I should reioyce in any thing, but in the crosse of Christ Iesus our Lord. That we may fly this truly, first of all wee must labour to haue the benefit of the crosse of Christ, not only in the remission, but also in the mortification of our sinnes: secondly, we must not be discomforted but rather reioyce and triumph therein. A Christian man can neuer haue greater honor then to suffer for the Gospell of Christ, when God calls him therunto: and therefore Paul teacheth to them another most glorious shew which all those must make that suffer any thing for Gods cause. They must encounter with the world, the flesh, and the diuel, and are placed as it were on a theaters, and in this conflict the beholders are men & angels: yea the whole hoast of heauen and earth: the vmpire or iudge is God himselfe, who will giue sentence of victory on their side, and so they shall overcome. We must not hereupon thrust our selues into danger: but when it shall please God to call vs thereunto, we must thinke our selues highly honoured of him. As when God sendeth losse of friends, of substance, or good name, or any other calamity, wee must not despaire, or be ouer grieved, but rather reioyce and address our selues, then with our Saviour Christ to make a triumph.

Thus much of Christs triumph, and the passion of his crosse. Now followeth the second degree of this humiliation, in these words, And buried. Where we must consider these points: I. Why it was needfull that Christ should be buried. II. Who was the author of his buriall. III. The manner or preparation to his buriall. IV. The place and time where and when he was buried. Of these in order. For the first, the causes are many, but especially foure, why Christ was to be buried. I. That the truth & certainty of his death might be confirmed vnto vs, and that no man might so much as imagine that his death was a phantasticall deatn, or his body a phantasticall body: for men vie not to bury a lining but a dead man; or a man in shew, but a true man. II. That his buriall might bee vnto him a passage from the estate of humiliation to the estate of exaltation, which began in his resurrection: and hee could not haue risen againe, if hee had not bin first buried. III. That the outward humiliation in the forme of a seruant, which he took vpon him, might bee continued vpon him to the lowest degree of all: and therefore it was not sufficient that he should be crucified euen to death, but being dead, he must also be buried. IV. Christ was buried, that he might not only vanquish death on the crosse, but euen after the manner of conquerours, subdue him at his owne home, and as it were, plucke him out of his owne cabine or denne.

II. The authors of Christs buriall were Ioseph of Arimathea, & Nichodemus, who came to Iesus by night. Now concerning them and this their fact, there are many things worthy to be considered in this place. First of all, they were disciples of Christ, & the difference betweene them and the rest is to be considered. The other disciples though in number they were but few, yet in the feast before his passion they openly followed him: but when Christ was to be arraigned, and the persecution of the Church of the new Testament began in him, then Iudas betrayed him, Peter denied him, and the rest fled away: yet euen at the same instant these two secret disciples of our Saviour Christ, Ioseph of Arimathea and Nichodemus take courage to themselves, and in time of danger openly professe themselves to bee Christs disciples by an honourable & solemne buriall; God no doubt opening their hearts and inabling them to doe so. The like is to be seene in all ages since the passion of Christ in the Church of God, in which men zealous for the Gospel in peace haue bin timorous in perfection, whereas weakie ones haue stood out against their enemies euen vnto death it selfe. The reason is, because God will humble those his seruants which are often-times indued with great measure of graces, & contrariwise exalt & strengthen the weak and feeble: and the same no doubt will be found true among vs, if it should please God to send any new trial into the Church of England.

This serueth to teach vs to thinke charitably of those which are as yet but weakie among vs: & withal in our professio to carry a low faile, and to thinke basely of our selues, & in the whole course of our liues creepe alow by the ground, running on in feare and trembling, because the Lord oftentimes humbles those that be strong, and giues courage and strength to weakie ones boldly to confesse his name. Secondly, whereas these two disciples haue such care of the buriall of Christ, we learne that it is our duty to be carefull also for the honest and solemne buriall of our brethren. The Lord himselfe hath commanded it, Thou art dust, & to dust thou shalt returne. Also the bodies of men are the good creatures of God, yea the bodies of Gods children are the temples of the H. Ghost, & therefore there is good cause why they should bee honestly laid in the earth. And it was a curse & iudgement of God vpon Iehoiakim, that he must not be buried, but like a dead asse be drawne and cast out of the gates of Ierusalem. And so the Lord threatens a curse vpon the Mobites, because they did not bury the king of Edom, but burnt his bones into lime. And therefore it is a necessary duty, one neighbor & friend to looke to the honest buriall of another. Hence it folloes, that the practise of Spaine & Italy and all the popish countries, which is to keepe the parts of mens bodies and such like reliques of Saints vnburi'd, that they may bee seene of men & worshipped, hath no warrant: dust they are, and to dust they ought to be returned.

Furthermore, the properties and vertues of both these men are feuerally to bee considered. And first to begin with Ioseph, he was a Senator, a man of great account, authority, and reputation among the Iewes. It may seeme a strange thing, that a man of such account would abase himselfe so much as to take downe the body of Christ from the crosse. It might haue bin an hindrance to him, & a disgrace to his estate & calling: as we see in these daies, it would be thought a base thing for a knight or lord to come to the place of execution, & take down a thiefe from the hand of the hangman to bury him: but this noble Senator Ioseph for the loue he bare to Chr. made no account of his estate & calling, neither did hee scorne to take vpon him so base an office, considering it was for the honour of Christ: where we learne, that if wee truly loue Christ, and our hearts be set to belecue in him, we will neuer refuse to perform the basest seruice that may be for his honour; nothing shall hinder vs. It is further said, that hee was a good man and a iust, and also a rich man. And the first appeareth in this, that hee would neither consent to the counsell nor fact of the Iewes in crucifying Christ. It is rare to find the like man in these daies.

From this example we learne these Lessons. I. That a rich man, remaining a rich man may bee a seruant of God, and also be fixed: for riches are the good blessings of God, and in themselves do no whit hinder a man in coming to Christ. But some will say, Christ himselfe saith, It is easier for a cable to goe through the eye of a needle, then a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heauen. Answer. It is to be vnderstood of a rich man, so long as hee sweleth with a confidence in his wealth: but we know, that if a cable bee vntwisted and drawne into small threads, it may be drawne through the eye of a needle: so hee that is rich let him denie himselfe, abase himselfe, & lay aside all confidence in himselfe, in his riches and honour, and be as it were, made small as a twine thread, and with this good Senator Ioseph become the disciple of Christ, he may enter into the kingdom of heauen. But Christ saith in the parable, that riches are thornes, which choke the grace of God. Answer. It is true, they are thornes in that subiect or in that man that putteth his trust in them; not in their owne nature, but by reason of the corruption of mans heart, who makes of them his God. S. Iohn saith further, that Ioseph was a disciple of Christ, but yet a close disciple for feare of the Iewes. And this shewes, that Christ is most readie to receive them that come vnto him, though they come laden with manifold wants. I say not this, that any hereby should take boldnesse to line in their sinnes, but my meaning is, that though men be weakie in the faith, yet are they not to be dismayd, but to come to Christ, who refuseth none that come to him. Draw neere to God (saith Saint Iames) and he will draw neere to you.

Christ doth not forsake any, till they forsake him first. Lastly, the holy Ghost saith of him, that he waited for the kingdom of God, that is, hee did beleue in the Messias to come, and therefore did waite daily till the time was come, when the Messias by his death and passion should abolish the kingdom of sin and Satan, and establish his owne kingdom throughout the whole world. The same is said of Simeon, that he was a good man, and feared God, and waited for the consolation of Israel. This was the most principall vertue of all that Ioseph had, and the very roote of all his goodnes and righteounes, that he waited for the kingdom of God. For it is the property of faith, whereby we haue confidence in the Messias, to change our nature; and to purifie the heart, and to make it bring forth workes of righteounesse. There bee many among vs, that can talke of Christs kingdom, & of redemption by him, and yet make no confidence of sinne, and haue little care to liue according to the Gospel which they professe: and all is, because they do not foundly beleue in the Messias, and they wait not for the kingdom of heauen, & therefore there is no change in them: but we for our parts must labour to haue this assistance in the Messias with Ioseph, & to waite for the second appearance, that thereby wee may bee made new creatures, hauing the kingdom of Satan battered and beaten downe in vs, and the kingdom of God erected in our hearts.

Touching Nichodemus S. Iohn saith, that he came to Iesus by night. Many men build vpon this example, that it is lawfull to bee present at the masse; so be it, in the mean season wee keepe our hearts to God: and indeede such men are like Nichodemus, in that they labour to bury Christ as much as they can, though now after his resurrection hee should not bee buried againe. But though Nichodemus durst not openly at the first professe the name of Christ, yet after his death when there is most danger, he doth: and by this meanes he reformeth his former action.

Thus much of the persons that buried Christ. The third thing to be observed, is the manner of Christs buriall, which standeth in these foure points. First, they take downe his bodie from the crosse: secondly, they winde it: thirdly, they lay it in a tombe: fourthly, the tombe is made fure. Of these in order. First, Ioseph taketh downe the body of Christ from the crosse wheron he was executed, but marke in what manner: hee doth it not one his owne head without leave, but he goeth to Pilate and beggett the body of Christ and craueth libertie to take it downe, because the disposing of dead bodies was in Pilate hand, he being deputie at that time: whereby we learne, that in all our dealings and actions (though they haue neuer so good an end) our duty is to proceede as peaceably with all men as may be, as Saint Iames saith: the wisefolme that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, &c. Again, this teacheth vs, that in all things which concerne the authority of the Magistrate, and be long vnto him by the rule of Gods word, wee must attempt to do what soeuer we do by leave. And by this wee see what vnaduised courses they take, that being private men in this our Church, will notwithstanding take vpon them to plant churches without the leave of the magistrate being a Christian Prince. Hauing thus taken the body of Christ downe, they go on to winde it. And Ioseph for his part brought linnen clothes, that is, Nichodemus a mixture of Mirrhe & Aloes to the quantity of an hundred pounds for the honourable buriall of Christ. His winding was on this manner: they wrapp'd his bodie hastily in linnen clothes, & sweete odours put there to. Besides all this, in the Jewes buriall there was embalming and washing of the body, but Christs body was not (a) embalmed or washed, because they had no time to doe it, for the preparation of the Passover drew neare. And whereas these two men burye Christ at their owne cost and charges, we are taught to bee like affected to the living members of Christs: when they want we must relieue and comfort them liberally and freely. It may herebee demanded, whether men may not bee at cost in making funerals, considering euen Christ himselfe is with much cost buried. Ans. The bodies of all dead men are to be buried in seemely and honest manner; & if they bee honourable, they may bee buried honourably: yet now there, in no cause why mens bodies should be washed, anointed, and embalmed, as the vs was amongst the Jewes: for they vsed embalming as a pledge and signe of the resurrection; but now since Christs coming we have a more certaine pledge thereof, euen the resurrection of Christ himselfe, and therefore it is not requisite that we should vse embalming & washing as the Jewes did. And the clause which is specified in Saine Mathew is not to bee omitted, that Ioseph wrapped Christs body in Aloe and linen cloths: wherby we learne, that howsoever the strange fashions fetcht from Spaine & Italy are monstrous and to be abhorred, yet seeing the body of a man is the creature of God, therefore it must be arraigned in cleanly manner, and in holy comelinesse. Paul requires that the minister of the Gospell in all things bee seemely or comely: and herein he ought to be a patterne of sobriety vnto all men. Thirdly, after they haue wound the body of Christ, they lay it in a tombe, and lastly, they make it sure, closing it up with a stone rolled over the mouth of it. Also the Jewes request Pilate to seale it that none might presume to open it: besides they set a band of souldiers to watch the tombe, and to keepe it that his body be not stolen away. Many reasons might be alleaged of this their dealing, but principally it came to passe by the providence of God, that hereby he might confirme the resurrection of Christ. For whereas the Jewes would neither bee moued by his doctrine, nor by his workes and miracles to beleeue, he caught this to bee done, that by the certaintie of his resurrection, he might convince them of hardness of heart, and proue that he was the Sonne of God.

This much of the manner of his buriall. Now followes the place where Christ was buried. In the place we are to mark three things: First, that Christ was laid in Iosephs tombe, wherby wee may gather the greatnesse of Christs pueritie, in that he had not so much ground as to make himselfe a graue in: and this must bee a comfort to the members of Christ that are in pueritie. And it teacheth them, if they haue no more but food and rayment, to be reuolunt content, knowing that Christ their head and king hath consecrated this very estate vnto them. Secondly, the tombe wherein Christ was laid was a new tombe wherein neuer any man lay before. And it was the speciall appointment of Gods providence that it should be so, because if any man had beene buried there aforetime, the malicious Jewes would haue pleaded, that it was not Christ that rose againe, but some other. Thirdly, we must obserue, that this tombe was in a garden, as the fall of man was in a garden; and as the apprehension of Christ in a garden beyond the brooke Cedron: And here we must note the practise of a good man: in this garden was the place of Iosephs delight and holy recreation; wherein he vsed to place himselfe in beholding the good creatures of God: yet in the same place doth hee make his owne graue long before he died: wherby it appears, that his recreation was ioynd with a meditation of his ends: and his example must be followed of vs. True it is, God hath giuen vs his creatures not onely for necessity, but also for our lawfull delight; but yet our dutie is, to mingle therewith serious meditation and consideration of our last end. It is a brutish part to vse the blessings and creatures of God, and not at all to bee betwixt in regard of our last end by a further vse thereof.

The time when Christ was buried was the evening, wherein the Sabbath was to begin according to the manner of the Jewes, which began their daies at Sanne setting: from euening to euening, according to that in Genesis: the evening and the morning was the first day. Now Ioseph commeth a little before euening and beggeth the body of Christ, and buryeth it: where note, that howsoever we are not bound to keepe the Sabbath so strictly as the Jewes were, yet when we haue any busines or worke to be done of our ordinary calling, we must not take apart of the Lords Sabbath to doe it in, but present the time, and doe it either before, as Ioseph did, or rather after the Sabbath. This is little practised in the world. Men thinke, if they goe to Church before and afternoone to heare Gods word, then all the day after they may do what they list, and spend the rest of the time at their owne pleasure: but the whole day is the Lords, and therefore must be spent wholly in his seruice, both by public hearing of the word, and also by priuate reading and meditation on the same.

To conclude the doctrine of Christs buriall. Here it may be demanded, how he was always after his incarnation both God and man, considering that he was dead and buried, and therefore body and soule were sundred, and a dead man seemes to be no man. Ans. A dead man in his kinde is as true a man as a living man: for though body and soule be not vniited by the bod of life, yet are they vniited by a relation which the one hath to the other in the counsell and good pleasure of God; and that as truly as man and woman remaine coupled pled into one flesh by couenant of marriage, though afterward they bee distant a thousand miles asunder. And by vertue of this relation every soule in the day of iudgement shall be reunited to his owne body, and every body to his owne soule. But there is yet a more streight bond betweene the body and soule of Christ in his death and buriall. For as when he was living, his soule was a meane or bond to vniite his Godhead and his body together: so when hee was dead his very Godhead was a meane or middle bond to vniite the body and soule: & to say otherwise, is to dissolve the hypostaticall vnion, by vertue whereof Christs bodie and soule though seuered each from other, yet both were still ioynd to the Godhead of the Sonne.

The vse and profit which may be made of Christs buriall is two-fold. I. It serueth to work in vs the buriall of all our finnes. Know ye not (saith Paul) that all who haue bene baptized into Christ, haue bene baptized into his death, and are buried with him by baptisme into his death: If any shall demand, how any man is buried into the death of Christ, the answer is this: Every Christian man and woman are by faith mytically vniited vnto Christ, and made all members of one body, whereof Christ is the head. Now therefore as Christ by the power of his Godhead when he was dead and buried, did overcome the graue and the power of death in his owne person: so by the very same power, by meanes of his spiritual coniunction doth hee worke in all his members a spiritual death and buriall of sinne and naturall corruption. When the Israelites were in burying of a man, for feare of the souldiers of the Moabites, they cast him for hart into the sepulchre of Elyshah. Now the dead man, so soone as he was down, and had touched the body of Elyshah, hee ruinated and stood vpon his feete: so let a man that is dead in sinne bee cast into the graue of Christ, that is, let him by faith but touch Christ dead & buried, it will come to passe by the vertue of Christs death and buriall, that he shall bee raised from death and bondage of sinne to become a new man.

Secondly, the buriall of Christ serueth to be a sweete perfume of all our graues & burialls: for the graue in it selfe is the house of perdition, but Christ by his buriall hath as it were consecrated & perfumed all our graues: and in stead of houses of perdition, hath made them chambers of rest and sleepe, yea beds of down: & therefore howsoever to the eye of man the beholding of a funeral is terrible, yet if we could then remember th buriall of Christ, & consider how he thereby hath changed the nature of the graue, euen then it would make vs to reioyce. Lastly we must imitate Christs buriall in being continually occupied in the spiritual buriall of our finnes.

Thus much of the buriall. Now followeth the third and last degree of Christs humiliation: He descended into hell. It seemes very likely that these words were not placed in the Creede at the first, or (as some thinke) that they crept in by negligence, because about threefoore Creeds of the most ancient Councils and Fathers want this clause: and among the rest the Nicene Creede. But if the ancient & learned Fathers assembled in that Councell had bin perswaded, or at the least had imagined that these words had bin set downe at the first by the Apostles, no doubt they would not in any wise haue left them out. And an ancient writer lieth directly, that these words, He descended into hell, are not found in the Creede of the Romane Church, nor vsed in the Churches of the East, and if they be, that then they signifie the buriall of Christ. And it must not seeme strange to any, that a word or twaine in proceesse of time should creepe into the Creede, considering that the original copies of the bookes of the old and new testament haue in them sundry (a) varieties of readings and (b) words otherwhiles, which from the margine haue crept into the text. Neuertheless considering that this clause hath long continued in the Creede, and that by common consent of the Catholike Church of God, and it may carie a fit sense and exposition; it is not, as some would haue it, to be put forth.

Therefore that wee may come to speake of the meaning of it, we must know that it hath foure vsuall expositions, which wee will rehearse in order, and then make choice of that which shall be thought the fittest. The first is, that Christs soule after the passion vpon the crosse, did really and locally descend into the place of the damned. But this seemes not to be true. The reasons are these. I. All the Evangelists, and among the rest S. Luke, intending to make an (c) narration of the life and death of Christ, hath set downe at large his passion, death, buriall, resurrection, and ascension, and withall they make rehearse of small circumstances, therefore no doubt they would not haue omitted Christs locall descent into the place of the damned, if there had beene any such thing. And the end why they penned this history was, that we might beleeue that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God; and beleeuing, we might haue life euertlasting. Now there could not haue beene a greater matter for the confirmation of our faith than this, that Iesus the sonne of Mary who went downe to the place of the damned, returned thence to lue in happiness for euer. II. If Christ did goe into the place of the damned, then either in soule or in bodie, or in his Godhead. But his Godhead could not descend, because it is euerie where; & his body was in the graue. And as for his soule it went not to hell, but presently after his death it went to paradise, that is, the third heauen, a place of ioy and happiness. Luk. 23. 43. This day shalt thou be with me in paradise: which words of Christ must bee vnderstood of his manhood or soule, and not of his Godhead. For they are an answer to a demand: and there-therefore vnto it they must bee furable. Now the thiefe seeing that Christ was first of all crucified, and therefore in all likelihood should first of all die, makes his request to this effect: Lord, thou shalt shortly enter into thy kingdome, remember me then; to which Christs answer (as the very words import) is thus much: I shall enter into Paradise this day, and there shalt thou bee with me. Now there is no entrance, but in regard of his soule or manhood. For the Godhead which is at all times in all places, cannot bee said properly to enter into a place. Again, when Christ saith, thou shalt be with me in Paradise, he doth intimate a resemblance, which is between the first and second Adam. The first Adam sinned against God, and was presently cast forth out of Paradise: Christ the second Adam having made a satisfaction for sinne, must immediately enter into Paradise. Now to say that Christ in soule descended locally into hell, isto abolish this analogie between the first and second Adam. III. Auncient Councels in their confessions and Creeds omitting this clause, shew, that they did not acknowledge any real descent, and that the true meaning of those words, he descended, was sufficiently included in some of the former articles, and that may appeare, because when they set downe it, they omit some of the former: as Athanasius in his Crede setting downe those words, he descended, &c. omits the buriall, putting them both for one as he expounds himselfe (b) elsewhere. Now let vs see the reasons which may bee alleadged to the contrary.

Obiect. I. Matth. 12. 40. The Sonne of man shall bee three dayes and three nights in the earth, that is, in hell. Ans. I. This exposition is directly against the scope of the place: for the Pharisees desired to see a signe, that is, some sensible & manifest miracle: & herunto Christ answers that hee will giue them the signe of Iouas, which cannot bee the descent of his soule into the place of the damned, because it was insensible; but rather his buriall, and after it his manifest and glorious resurrection. II. The heart of the earth may as well signifie the graves, as the center of the earth. For thus Tyru bordering vpon the sea, is said to be in the heart of the sea. III. This exposition takes it for granted that hell is seated in the midst of the earth: whereas the Scriptures reueale vnto vs no more but this, that hell is in the lower parts: but where these lower parts should be, no man is able to define.

Obiect. II. Act. 2. 37. Thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy holy one to see corruption. Ans. I. These words cannot proue any local descent of Christs soule. For Peters drift in alladging of them is, to proue the resurrection, and he saith expressly, that the words must be vnderstood of the resurrection of Christ. ver. 31. Hee seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ. What? namely these words, his soule was not left in hell, &c. Now there is no resurrection of the soule, but of the body only, as the soule can not bee said to fall, but the body. It will be replied that the word see cannot signifie the body, and the word see the graue. Answer. The first word, signifies not onely the spirituall part of man, the soule; but also the whole person, or the man himselfe, Rom. 13. 1. 1. Cor. 15. 40. And the second is as well taken for the graue, as for hell; Apoc. 20. 14. Death and sin are cast into the lake of fire. Now we can not say, that hell is cast into hell, but the graue into hell. And the very same word in this text, must needs haue this sense. For Peter makes an opposition between the graue into which Dauid is shut vp, and the hell out of which Christ was deliuered. v. 29. 31. Again, it will be said, that in this text there are two distinct parts: the first, of the soules coming forth of hell, in these words, Thou wilt not leaue my soule in hell. The second, of the bodies rising out of the graue, in the next words: Neither wilt thou suffer my flesh to see corruption. Ans. It is not so. For fish in this place signifies not the body alone, but the humane nature of Christ, as appeares verse. 30. vnto us we shall say, that one and the same word in the same sentence is takē two waies. And the words rather carrie this sense: Thou wilt not suffer me to continue long in the graue; nay which is more, in the time of my continuance there, thou wilt not suffer me so much as to feele any corruption: because I am thy holy one.

Obiect. III. 1. Peter. 3. 19. Christ was quickened in spirit, by the which spirit he went, and preached to the spirits which are in prison. Ans. The place is not for this purpose. For by spirit is not meant the soule of Christ, but his Godhead, which in the ministry of Noe preached repentance to the old world. And I thinke that Peter in this place alludes to another place in Gen. 6. 3. where the Lord saith, My spirit shall not alwaies strue with man, because he is but flesh. And if the spirit doe signifie the soule, then Christ was quickened either by his soule, or in his soule. But neither is true. For the first, it can not be said, that Christ was quickened by his soule, because it did not ioyne it selfe to the body; but the Godhead ioyned them both. Neither was hee quickened in soule: for his soule died not. It could not die the first death, which belongs to the body: and it did not die the second death, which is a totall separation from God: onely it suffered the sorrowes of the second death, which is the apprehension of the wrath of God; as a man may feele the pangs of the first death, and yet not die the first death, but liue. Again, it is to no end that Christs soule should goe to hell to preach, considering that it was neuer heard of that one soule should preach to another, especially in hell, where all are condemned, and in conscience convicted of their iust damnation, and where there is no hope of repentance or redemption. It will be answered, that this preaching is onely real or experimentall, because

Christ shewes himselfe there to conuince the vnbeleefe of his enemies: but this is batte aginst reason. For when a man is iustly condemned by God, and therefore sufficiently convicted, what neede the iudge himselfe come to the place of execution to conuict him? And it is flat against the text; For the preaching that is spoken of here, is that which is performed by men in the ministration of the word, as Peter expounds himselfe. 1. Per. 4. 6. To this purpose was the Gospel also preached vnto the dead, that they might bee condemned according to men in the flesh, that they might bee liue according to God in the Spirit. Lastly, there is no reason why Christ should rather preach and shew himselfe in hell, to them that were disobedient in the daies of Noe, than to the rest of the dāned. And this is the first exposition, the second follows: He descended into Hell, that is, Christ descended into the graue, or was buried. This exposition is agreeable to the truth, yet is it not meete or conuenient. For the clause next before, he was buried, contained this point: and therefore if the next words following yeeld the same sense, there must be a vaine and needles repetition of one and the same thing twice, which is not in any wise to bee allowed in fo short a Crede as this. If it be said, that these words are an exposition of the former, the answer is, that then they should bee more plaine then the former. For when one sentence expoundeth another, the latter must alwaies be the plainer: but of these two sentences, He was buried, he descended into hell, the first is very plaine and easie, but the latter very obscure and hard, and therefore it can be no exposition thereof: and for this cause this exposition neither is to be received.

Thirdly, others there be which expound it thus: He descended into hell, that is, Christ Iesus, when hee was dying vpon the crosse, felt and suffered the pangs of hell and the full wrath of God seazing vpon his soule. This exposition hath his warrant in Gods word, where hell often signifies the sorrowes and paines of hell, as Hanna in her song vnto the Lord saith, The Lord visiteth and maketh a iue, he bringeth down to hell, and raiseth vp, that is, he makes men feele woe & miserie in their soules, euen the pangs of hell, and after reforesh them. And Dauid saith, The sorrowes of death compassed mee, and the terrors of hell laid hold on mee. This is an vsuall exposition received of the Church, and they which expound this Article thus, giue this reason thereof. The former words, was crucified, dead, and buried, doe containe (say they) the outward sufferings of Christ: now because he suffered not onely outwardly in body, but also inwardly in soule, therefore these words he descended into hell, doe set forth vnto vs his inward sufferings in soule, while he felt vpon the crosse the full wrath of God vpon him. This exposition is good and true, and whoeuer will may receive it. Yet neuertheless it seemes not so selve to agree with the order of the former articles. For these words, was crucified, dead, and buried, must not be vnderstood of any ordinary death, but of a cursed death, in which Christ suffered the full wrath of God, euen the pangs of hell both in soule and body: seeing then this exposition is contained in the former words, it cannot fitly stand with the order of this short Crede, vntill there should bee a distinct article of things repeated before.

But let vs come to the fourth exposition, He descended into hell, that is, when he was dead and buried, hee was held captiue in the graue, and lay in bondage vnder death for the space of three dayes. This exposition also may be gathered forth of the Scriptures. S. Peter saith, God hath raised him vp (speaking of Christ, and losed the sorrowes of death, because it was impossible that he should be holden of it. Where we may see that betweene the death & resurrection of Christ, there is placed a third matter, which is not mentioned in any clause of the Apostles Crede, save in this; and that is his bondage vnder death, which commeth in betweene his death and rising againe. And the words themselves doe most fitly beare this sense, as the speech of Jacob sheweth, I will goe downe into hell vnto my sonnes mourning. And this exposition doth also beitt agree with the order of the Crede: first, he was crucified and died; secondly, he was buried; thirdly, laid in the graue, and was therein held in captiuitie and bondage vnder death. And these three degrees of Christs humiliation, are most fitly correspondent to the three degrees of his exaltation. The first degree of exaltation, he rose againe the third day, answering to the first degree of his humiliation he died: the second degree of his exaltation, he ascended into heauen, answering to going downe into the graue, was buried: and thirdly, his sitting at the right hand of God (which is the highest degree of his exaltation) answering to the lowest degree of humiliation, he descended into hell. These two last expositions are commonly received, and we may indifferently make choise of either: but the last (as I take it) is most agreeable to the order and words of the Crede.

Thus much for the meaning of the words: now follow the vses. And first of all Christs descending into hell, teacheth euery one of vs, that proteste the name of Christ, that if it shall please God to afflict vs, either in body or in mind, or in both, though it bee in most grievous and tedious manner, yet must wee not thinke it strange. For if Christ vpon the crosse not onely suffered the pangs of hell, but after he was dead, death takes him, & as it were carries him into his den, or cabbins, and there triumpheth ouer him, holding him in captiuitie and bondage, and yet for all this was he the Sonne of God: and therefore when Gods hand is heavy vpon vs any way, we are not to despaire, but rather thinke it is the good pleasure of God to frame and fashion vs, that wee may become like vnto Christ Iesus as good children of God. David a man after Gods owne heart was by Samuel anointed King over Israel, but withall GOD raised vp Saul to persecute him, as the fowler hunteth the Partridge in the mountains, in so much that David said, there was but one steppe betwene him and death. So likewise Iob a iust man & one that feared God with all his heart, yet how heavily did God lay his hand vpon him? his goods and cattle were all taken away, and his children slaine, and his body stricken by Sathan with lothsome byles from the sole of his foote to the crowne of his head: so as he was faine to take a postheard, and scrape himselfe sitting among the ashes. And Ierem the seruant and Prophet of the most high God, when hee was called to preach to Ninive, because hee refused for feare of that great citie, God met with him, and he must be cast into the sea, & there be swallowed vp of a Whale, that so he might chaunge him and thus doth he deale with his own seruants, to make them conformable to Christ. And further when it pleased GOD to lay his hand vpon our soules, and make vs haue a troubled and distressed conscience, so as wee doe as it were struggle with Gods wrath as for life & death, and can find nothing but his indignation feazing vpon our soules, which is the most grieuous and perplexed estate that any man can bee in: in this case howeuer we cannot discern or see any hope or comfort in our selues, wee must not thinke it strange, nor quide despaire of his mercy. For the Sonne of God himselfe descended into hel, and death carried him captiue, and triumphed ouer him in the graue: and therefore though God seeme to bee our vtter enemy, yet wee must not despaire of his helpe. In diuers Psalmes wee reade how David was not onely persecuted outwardly of his enemies, but euen his soule and conscience were perplexed for his finnes, so as his very bones were consumed within him, and his moisture was turned into the drought in sommer. This caused Iob to cry out, that the arrows of God were within him, and the venom thereof did drinke up his spirit, the terrors of God did fight against him, and the griefe of his soule was as weighty as the sand of the sea, by reason whereof he saith, that the Lord did make him a mark & aduise to shoue at: and therefore when God shall thus afflict vs, either in body, or in soule, or in both, wee must not alwaies thinke that it is the wrathfull hand of the Lord that beegins to bring vs to vtter condemnation for our finnes, but rather his fatherly worke to kill sinne in vs, and to make vs grow in humilitie, that so we may become like vnto Christ Iesus. Secondly, whereas Christ for our sakes was thus abased, euen vnto the lowest degree of humiliation that can bee, it is an example for vs to imitate, as Christ himselfe preferibeth: Learn of mee that I am meeke and lowly. And that we may the better do thus, wee must learne to become nothing in our selues, that wee may be all in all forth of our selues in Christ: we must loath, and thinke as basely of our selues as possibly may bee in regard of our finnes, Christ Iesus vpon the crosse was content for our sake, to become a worme and no man, as David saith; which did chiefly appeare in this lowest degree of his humiliation, when as death did as it were tread on him in his dennee, and the same mind must likewise be in vs which was in him. The liking that we haue of our selues must be meere nothing, but all our loue and liking must bee forth of our selues in the death and blood of Christ.

And thus much of this classe, as also of the state of Christs humiliation. Now followeth his second estate, which is his exaltation into glory, set downe in these words, The third day he rose againe from the dead, &c. And of it wee are first to speake in generall, then in particular according to the severall degrees thereof. In generall, the exaltation of Christ is that glorious or happy estate, into which Christ entered after he had wrought the worke of our redemption vpon the crosse. And he was exalted according to both natures, in regard of his Godhead, and also of his manhood. The exaltation of the Godhead of Christ, was the manifestation of the Godhead in the manhood. Some will peradventure demand, how Christs Godhead can bee exalted, seeing it admits no alteration at all. Answer. In it selfe it cannot be exalted, yet being considered as it is ioyned with the manhood into one person, in this respect it may be said to be exalted: and therefore I say, the exaltation of Christs Godhead is the manifestation of the glory thereof in the manhood. For though Christ from his incarnation was both God and man, and his Godhead all that time dwelt in his manhood, yet from his birth vnto his death, the same Godhead did little shew it selfe, and in the time of his suffering did as it were lye hid vnder the vail of his flesh, as the soule doth in the body, when a man is sleeping, that thereby in his humane nature hee might suffer the curse of the Law, & accomplish the worke of redemption for vs, in the low and base estate of a seruant. But after this worke was finished, he began by degrees to make manifest the power of his Godhead in his manhood. And in this respect his Godhead may be said to be exalted. The exaltation of Christs humanity stood in two things. The first, that hee laid downe at the infirmities of mans nature, which hee carried about him so long as hee was in the state of a seruant, in that he ceased to be wearie, hungry, thirstie, &c. Here it may be demanded, whether the wounds and skarres remaine in the body of Christ now after it is glorified. Answer. Some thinke that they remaine as testimonies of that victorie which Christ obtained of his and our enemies, and that they are no deformitie to the glorious body of the Lord, but are themselves also in him in some vnspeakable manner glorified. But indeede it rather seemes to be a truth, to say that they are quite abolished; because they were a part of that ignominious and base estate in which our Saviour was vpon the crosse: which after his entrance into glory hee laid aside. And if it may be thought, that the wounds in the hands and feet of Christ remaine to be seene, euen to the last iudgement, why may wee not in the same manner thinke, that the veines of his body remaine emptied of their blood, because it was shed vpon the crosse?

O' ev. l. 1. 2. subst. fact. & Th. Bez.

The second thing required in the exaltation of Christs manhood is, that both his body and soule were beautified & adorned with all qualities of glory. His minde was enriched with as much knowledge & vnderstanding as can possibly befall any creature, and more in measure then all men and angels haue: and the same is to be said of the graces of the spirit in his will and affections: his body also was incorruptible, and it was made a shining body, a resemblance wherof some of his disciples saw in the mount: & it was indued with agility, to moue as well vpward as downward, as may appeare by the ascension of his body into heauen, which was not caused by contraint, or by any violent motion, but by a propertie agreeing to all bodies glorified. Yet in the exaltation of Christs manhood we must remember two cautions: first, that hee did neuer lay aside the essentiall properties of a true body: as length, breadth, thickeness, visibillity, locality, which is to be in one place at once and no more, but keeps all these still, because they serue for the being of his body. Secondly, we must remember that the gifts of glory in Christs body are not infinite, but finite: for his humane nature being but a creature, and therefore finite, could not receive infinite graces and gifts of glory. And hence it is more then manifest, that the opinion of those men is false, which hold that Christs body glorified, is omnipotent & infinite, every way able to do whatsoever hee will: for this is to make a creature to be the creator.

Thus much of Christs exaltation in generall. Now let vs come to the degrees thereof, as they are noted in the Creede, which are in number three: I. He rose againe the third day: 11. He ascended into heauen: III. Hee sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty. In the handling of Christs resurrection we must consider these points: I. why Christ ought to rise againe: II. the manner of his rising: III. the time when he rose: IV. the proofes of his resurrection: V. the vses thereof. For the first, it was necessary that Christ should rise again, and that for three especiall causes. First, that hereby he might shew to all the people of God that hee had truly overcome death. For also, if Christ had not risen how should we haue bin persuaded in our consciences, that hee had made a full and perfect satisfaction for vs? nay rather we should haue reasoned thus: Christ is not risen, and therefore hee hath not overcome death, but death overcame him. Secondly, Christ which dyed, was the Sonne of God; therefore the author of life if selfe: and for this cause it was neither meet nor possible for him to be holden of death, but hee must needs rise from death to life. Thirdly, Christs priesthood hath two parts: one, to make satisfaction for sinne by his one only sacrifice vpon the crosse, the other, to apply the vertue of this sacrifice vnto every beleuer. Now he offered the sacrifice for sinne vpon the crosse, before the last pang of his death, and in dying satisfied the iustice of God: and therefore being dead must needs rise againe to performe the second part of his priesthood, namely, to apply the vertue thereof vnto all that shall truly beleue in him, and to make intercession in heauen vnto his Father for vs here on earth. And thus much of the first point.

Now to come to the manner of Christs resurrection; five things are to be considered in it. The first, that Christ rose againe not as every priuate man doth, but as a publike person representing all men that are to come to life eternall. For as in his passion, so also in his resurrection, he stood in our roome and place: and therefore when he rose from death, we all, yea the whole Church rose in him, & together with him. And this point not considered, we do not conceiue aright of Christs resurrection, neither can we reape sound comfort by it.

The secondis, that Christ himselfe, and no other for him, did by his owne power raise himselfe to life. This was the thing which hee meant, when he said, Ioh. 2. 19. Destroy this temple, and in three dayes I will build it againe: and more plainly, I haue (saith hee, Ioh. 10. 18.) power to lay downe my life, & I haue power to take it againe. From whence we learne diuers instructions. First, whereas Christ raised himselfe from death to life, it serueth to proue that he was not onely man, but also true God. For the body being dead, could not bring againe the soule and ioyn it selfe vnto the same, & make it selfe aliae againe; neither yet the soule that is departed from the body can returne againe and quicken the body: and therefore there was some other nature in Christ, namely his Godhead, which did reunite soule and body together, and thereby quicken the manhood. Secondly, if Christ giue life to himselfe being dead in the graue, then much more now being aliae in heauen glorified, is he able to raise vp his members from death to life. We are all by nature euen starke dead in sinne, as the dead body rotten in the graue: and therefore our duty is, to come to Christ our Lord by humble prayer, earnestly intreating him that hee would raise vs vp every day more and more from the graue of our finnes to newnes of life. He can of men dead in their finnes, make vs aliae vnto himselfe, to lue in righteoussesse and true holinesse all the dayes of our life.

The third thing is, that Christ rose againe with an earthquake. And this serueth to proue that hee lost nothing of his power by death, but still remained the absolute Lord and King of heaven & earth, to whom therefore the earth under his feere trembling doth him homage. This also proueth vnto vs, that Christ which lay dead in the graue, did raise himselfe againe by his owne almighty power. Lastly, it serueth to conuince the Keepers of the graue, the women which came to embalm him, and the disciples which came to the sepulchre, and would not yet beleue that he was risen againe. But how came this earth-quake? Ans. S. Matthew faith, there was a great earth-quake. For the Angel of the Lord descended from heauen, &c. Maith. 28. 2. This shewes that the power of Angels is great, in that they can moue and stir the earth. Three angels destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah. An angel destroyed all the first borne of Egypt in one night. In the hoast of Smachirib one angel slue in one night an hundred fourescore and fise thousand men. Of like power is the diuell himselfe to shake the earth, and to destroy vsall, but that God of his goodnesse limits and restraines him of his libertie. Wll, if one angel be able to shake the earth, what then will Christ himselfe doe when he shall come to iudgement the second time, with many thousand thousands of angels? oh how terrible and fearefull will his coming be! Not without cause, faith the holy Ghost, that the wicked at that day shall cry out, wishing hils to fall vpon them, and the mountaines to couer them for feare of that great and terrible day of the Lord.

The fourth thing is, that an Angell ministered to Christ, being to rise againe, in that he came to the graue, and rolled away the stone, and fate vpon it. Where obserue, first how the angels of God minister vnto Christ, though dead and buried; whereby they acknowledge that his power, maiestie, and authority is not included within the bounds of the earth, but extends it selfe euen to the heauens themselves & the hoasts thereof, and that according to his humanity. Wicked men for their parts laboured to close him vp in the earth, as the basest of all creatures; but the angels of heauen most readily accept him as their soueraigne Lord & King: as in like manner they did in his temptation in the wilderness, & in his agony in the garden. Secondly, that the opinion of the Papists & others, which thinke that the body of Christ went through the graue-stone when he rose againe, is without warrant. For the end no doubt, why the angel rolled away the stone was that Christ might come forth. And indeed it is against the order of nature, that one bodie should passe thorow another, without corruption or alteration of either, considering that every body occupies a place, & two bodies at the same instant cannot be in one proper place.

Furthermore it is said, that when the angell fate on the stone, Mat. 28. 3. 4. His countenance was like lightning, & his rayment as white as snow: and this serueth to shew what was the glory of Christ himselfe. For if the seruant and minister be so glorious, then endlesse is the glory of the Lord and master himselfe. Lastly it is said, that for feare of the angell the watch-men were astonished, and became as dead men: which teacheth vs, that what God would haue come to passe, all the world can neuer hinder. For though the Iewes had closed vp the graue with a stone, and set a band of soldiers to watch, lest Christ should by any meanes be taken away, yet all this auailed nothing: by an angell from heauen the scale is broken, the stone is remoued, and the watch-men are at their wits ends. And this came to passe by the prouidence of God; that after the watch-men had testified these things to the Iewes, they might at length bee conuicted, that Christ whom they crucified, was the Messias.

The fifth and last point is, that Christ rose not alone, but accompanied with others: as S. Matthew faith, Mat. 27. 52. 53. that the graues opened, and many bodies of the Saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graues, and went into the citie, and appeared vnto many after Christs resurrection. And this came to passe, that the Church of God might know & consider, that there is a reuiuing & quickning vertue in the resurrection of Christ, whereby he is able, not only to raise our dead bodies vnto life, but also when we are dead in sinne, to raise vs vp to newnes of life. And in this very point stands a maine difference betweene the resurrection of Christ, and the resurrection of any other man.

For the resurrection of Peter nothing auiailes to the raising of Dauid or Paul: but Christs resurrection auiailes for all that haue beleueed in him: by the very same power whereby hee raised himselfe, he raiseth all his members: and therefore he is called a quickning spirit. And let vs marke the order obserued in rising. For Christ riseth, & then the Saints after him. And this came to passe to verifie the Scripture, which faith, that Christ is the first borne of the dead. Now he is the first borne of the dead, in that he hath this dignity & priuiledge to rise to eternall life the first of al men. It is true indeed that Lazarus & sundry other in time rose before Christ: but yet they rose to liue a mortall life, & to die againe: Christ he is the first of all that rose to life euertlasting and to glory: neuer any rose before Christ in this manner. And the persons that rose with Christ are to be noted, they were the Saints of God, not wicked men: whereby we are put in minde, that the Elect children of God only are partakers of Christs resurrection. Indeed both good and bad rise againe, but there is great difference in their rising: for the godly rise by the vertue of Christs resurrection, & that to eternal glory: but the vngodly rise by the vertue of Christ, not as he is a redeemer, but as he is a terrible Iudge, & is to execute iustice on the. And they rise againe for this end, that besides the first death of the body, they might suffer the second death, which is the powring forth of Gods wrath vpon bodie & soule eternally. This differ. &c. is proued ynto

to vs by that which Paul faith, Christ is the first fruits of them that sleepe. Among the Iewes such as had corne fields gathered some little quantity thereof, before they reaped the rest, and offered the same vnto God: signifying thereby, that they acknowledged him to be the author and giuer of all increase; and this offering was also an assurance vnto the owner, of the blessing of God vpon the rest, and this beeing but one handfull did sanctifie the whole crop. Now Christ to the dead is as the first fruits to the rest of the corne, because his resurrection is a pledge and an assurance of the resurrection of the faithfull. When a man is cast into the sea, and all his body is vnder the water, there is nothing to bee looked for but present death; but if he carie his head aboue the water, there is good hope of a recovery: Christ himselfe is risen as a pledge that al the iust shall rise againe: he is the head vnto his Church, & therefore all his members must needs follow in their time. It may bee demanded, what became of the Saints that rose againe after Christs resurrection. Ans. Some thinke they died againe: but seeing they rose for this end to manifest the quickning vertue of Christs resurrection, it is as like, that they were also glorified with Christ, and ascended with him to heauen.

Thus much of the manner of Christs resurrection: Now follows the time when he rose againe, and that is specified in the Creede, The third day he rose againe. Thus faith our Saviour Christ vnto the Pharisees, Mat. 12. 39. As Ionas was three daies & thre nights in the Whales belly: so shall the Sonne of man be three daies & three nights in the heart of the earth. And though Christ was but one day and two pieces of two daies in the graue; (for he was buried in the evening before the Sabbath, & rose in the morning the next day after the Sabbath) yet is this sufficient to verifie the saying of Christ. For if the analogie had stood in three whole daies, then Christ should haue risen the fourth day. And it was the pleasure of God that hee should lyie thus long in the graue, that it might be knowne that he was thoroughly dead: and he continued no longer, that he might not in his body fee corruption. Again, it is said that Christ rose againe in the end of the Sabbath, whe the first day of the week began to dawne. And this very time must be considered, as the reall beginning of the new spiritual world, in which we are made the sonnes of God. And as in the first day of the first world, light was commanded to shine out of darkness vpon the deepes; so in the first day of this new world, the Sunne of righteousness riseth and giueth light to them that sit in darkness, and dispels the darkness that was vnder the old Testament. And here let vs marke the reason why the Sabbath day was changed. For the first day of the week, which was the day following the Iewes Sabbath, is our Sabbath day, which day we keepe holy in memory of the glorious resurrection of Christ: and therefore it is called the Lords day. And it may not vnfitly be termed (as) Sunday, though the name came first from the heathen, because on this day the blessed Sin of righteousness rose fro death to life.

His bodie in the graue was about 38. houres.

Mat. 16. 1.

Let vs now in the next place proceed to the proofes of Christs resurrection, which are diligently to be obserued, because it is one of the most principall points of our religion. For as the Apostle faith, Rom. 4. 25. Hee died for our finnes, and rose againe for our iustificatiō: and againe, 1 Cor. 15. 14. If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vaine, and your faith is also vaine.

The proofes are of two sorts: first, Christs appearances vnto men: secondly, the testimonies of men. Christs appearances were either on the first day, or on the daies following. The appearances of Christ the same day he rose againe are fise. And first of al early in the morning he appeared to Mary Magdalen, Mark. 16. 9. In this appearance diuers things are to be considered. The first of what note and qualitie the partie was, to whom Christ appeared. Answer. Mary Magdalen was one that had bin possided with seauen diuels, but was deliuered and became a repentant sinner, and stood by when Christ siffred; and came with sweet odours when hee was dead to embalm him. And therefore to her is granted this prerogative, that she should be the first that should testify his resurrection vnto men. And hence we learne, that Christ is ready and willing to receiue most miserable wretched sinners, euen such as haue bin vassals and bondslaves of the diuell, if they will come to him. Any man would thinke it a fearefull case, to be thus possided with diuels, as Mary was: but let al those that lie in ignorance, and by reason thereof liue in sinne without repentance, know this; that their case is a thousand times worse then Mary Magdalens was. For what is an impenitent sinner? surely nothing else but the cattle and hold of the diuel, both in body and soule. For looke as a captaine that hath taken some holde or skone, doth rule and gouerne all therein, and disposeth it at his will & pleasure: euen so it is with all blinde & impenitent finners; not one diuell alone: but euen legions of diuels possesse them, and rule their hearts: and therefore howsoeuer they may soothe themselves, and say all is well, for God is mercifull; yet their case is farre worse then Maries was. Now then, would any be freed from this fearefull bondage? let them learne of Mary Magdalen to follow Christ, and to seeke vnto him, and then albeit the diuell and all his angels possesse their hearts, yet Christ beeing the strong man, will come and cast them all out, and dwell there himselfe.

The second is, what Christ in his appearance said to Mary. Ans. He said, Ioh. 20. 17. Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father. Mary no doubt, was glad to see Christ, and therefore looked to haue conuersed as familiarly with him as shee was wont before his death: but he forbids her to touch him, that is, not to looke to enjoy his corporall presence as before, but rather to seeke for his spirituall presence by faith, considering he was shortly to ascend to his Father. For this cause when he appeared to his disciples, he staied not long with them at any time, but only to manifest himselfe vnto them, thereby to proue the certentie of his resurrection. This prohibition shewes first of all, that it is but a fond thing to delight in the outward picture and portraiture of Christ, as the Iesuites doe, who stand much vpon his outward forme and lineaments. Secondly, it ouerthroweth the popish crucifixes, and all the carued and molten images of Christ, wherein the Papists worship him. For corporall presence is not now required: therefore spirituall worship only must be giuen vnto him. Thirdly, it ouerthroweth the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament. Many are of minde, that they cannot receiue Christ, except they eate and drinke his body and blood corporally: but it is not much materiall, whether we touch him with the bodily hand or no, so be it we apprehend him spiritually by faith. Lastly, as we must not haue earthly considerations of Christ; so must we on the contrary labour for the spirituall hand of faith, which may reach vp it selfe to heauen, & there lay hold on him. This is the very thing which Christ insinuateth vnto Mary in saying, Touch mee not. And Saint Paul saith, 2 Cor. 5. 16. 17. Henceforth know wee no man after the flesh, yea though wee had knowne Christ after the flesh, yet now we know him no more: that is, we know him no more as a man liuing among vs, and therefore hee addeth, If any man be in Christ, hee is a new creature: and this new creation is not by the bodily presence of Christ, but by the apprehension of faith.

The second appearance was to Mary Magdalen, and to the other Marie, as they were going from the graue to tell his disciples; at which time, Christ meets them, & bids them goe tell his brethren that hee is risen againe. And whereas Christ sendeth women to his disciples, he purposed hereby to checke them for their vnteliefe. For these women forsooke him not at his death, but stood by & saw him suffer, and when he was buried they came to embalm him: but all this while what became of his disciples? Surely, Peter denied him, and all the rest fled away, euen James and Iohn the finnes of thunder, sate that Iohn stood aloofe to behold his death. Hereupon Christ to make them ashamed of their fault, sendeth these women vnto them, to publish that vnto them which they by their calling ought auaue another to haue published. Secondly, this teacheth that whereas Christ buildeth his kingdome and publisheth his Gospel by Apostles, Euangelists, Pastours, Teachers, he can if it please him, performe the same by other means. In this his second appearance, he vsed weake & filly women to publish his resurrection, and thereby sheweth that hee is not bound to the ordinary means, which now he vseth. Thirdly, he sent them to his disciples, to shew that howsoever they had dealt vnfaithfully with him, by forsaking him, and denying him, yet hee had not quite forsaken them, but if they would repent and beleue, hee would receiue them into his loue and fauour againe, and therefore calleth them his brethren, saying, Goe and tell my brethren. This teacheth vs a good lesson, that howsoeuer our finnes past are to humble vs in regard of our felices, yet must they not cut off, or dismay vs from seeking to Christ; yea euen then when we are laden with the burden of them, we must come vnto him, and he will ease vs, Mar. 16. 7. Fourthly, whereas filly women are sent to teach Christs disciples, which were schollers brought vp in his owne schoole, we are admonished, that superioritie in place & calling, must not hinder vs sometime to heare and to be taught of our inferiours. Iob saith, Iob 31. 13. hee neuer refused the counsell of his seruant: and Naaman the Syrian obeyed the counsell of a filly maide which aduised him to goe to the Prophet of the Lord in Samaria to be cured of his leprosie: and when he had bin with the prophet, hee obeyed the counsell of his seruants, that perswaded him to do all the Prophet had said, Wash and be cleane.

Now after that the women are come to the disciples & make relation of Christs resurrection, the text saith, Luk. 24. 11. Their words seemed as fained things vnto them, neither beleued they them. Hence wee learne two things: the first, that men of themselves cannot beleue the doctrine of Christian religion; it is a hard matter for a man to beleue sundry things in the worke of creation. The temporall deliuerance of the children of Israel seemed to them as a dreame: and the resurrection of Christ, euen to Christs owne disciples, seemed as fained thing. The second, that it is an hard thing truly and vnfainedly to beleue the points of religion. Disciples brought vp in the schoole of Christ, and often catechised in this very point of Christs resurrection, yet dall are they to beleue it. This confuteth and condemneth our carnal gospellers, that make it the lightest and easiest thing that can bee to beleue in Christ: and therefore they say their faith is so strong, that they would not for all the world doubt of Gods mercy: whereas indeed they are deceived, and haue no faith at all, but blind presumption.

The third appearance was on this manner: As two of Christs disciples were going from Ierusalem to Emmaus about thre score furlongs, and talked together of all the things that were done, Iesus drew neere and talked with them, but their eyes were holden that they could not know him: and as they went he communed with them, & proued out of the Scripture his resurrection, expounding vnto them all things that were written of him: then they made him stay with them, and their eyes were opened, and they knew him by breaking of bread: but he was takē out of their sight. In this notable appearance we may obserue these foure points: The first, that Christ held their eyes that they could not know him: they saw a man indeed, but who he was they could not tell. By this it is more then manifest, that the vse of our outward senses, as seeing, feeling, smelling, &c. is supplied vnto vs continually by the power of Christ; & therefore euen in these things wee must acknowledge the continuall goodness of God. Now if one man cannot so much as discern an other but by the blessing of Christ, then shall wee neuer be able to discern the way of life from the way of death without him: and therefore we must pray vnto God that hee would giue vs his holy spirit to enlighten the eyes of our vnderstanding, whereby we may be able to see & know the way that leadeth vnto life, & also to walke in the same.

The second, that as Christ was in expounding the Scriptures vnto them, their hearts burned within them. By this we learne, that howsoeuer the ministers of God publish the Gospell to the outward eares of men, yet it is the proper worke of Christ alone to touch & inflame the heart by the fire of his holy spirit, and to quicken and raise men vp to the life of righteousness and true holiness: it is he onely that baptiseth with the holy Ghost and with fire. And it further admonisheth vs, that we should heare the word preached from the mouth of Gods ministers with burning and melting hearts: but alas, the ordinary practise is flat contrary; mens eyes are drouie and heauie, and their hearts dead and frozen within them: and that is the cause why after much teaching there folloves but little profit.

The third thing is, that Christ did eate with the two disciples, and was knowne of them in breaking bread. It is very like that our Saviour Christ did in some speciall manner blesse the bread which he brake, whereby his disciples discerned him from others. And in like manner we must by blessing our meates & drinks distinguish our felices, though not from such as are the seruants of God, yet from all vngodly and careless men. Many beeing silent themselves do make their children to giue thanks, and to blesse their meates. And indeede it is a commendable thing if it bee done sometimes to nurture the child; but for men to disburden themselves wholly of this duty, is a fault. And it is a shame, that that mouth which openeth it selfe to receiue the good creatures of God, should neuer open it selfe to blesse and praise God for the same. Therefore in this action of eating and drinking, let vs shew our felices followers of Christ, that as by blessing the same, he was knowne from all others, so we may al hereby distinguish our felices from the prophane and wicked of this world. Otherwise what difference shall there bee betweene vs & the very hogge that eats milt on the ground, but neuer looke vs to the tree from whence it falls? And as Christ revealed himselfe vnto his disciples, at that time when they caused him to eate meate with them; so let vs suffer Christ to bee our guest, and let vs entertaine him in his members, & no doubt he will blesse vs, and withall reueale himselfe vnto vs. The fourth thing is, that hauing eaten, hee is taken out of their sight. And this came to passe not because the body of Christ became spirituall, but because either he held their eyes as before, or hee departed with celerity and speede according to the properties of a bodie glorified.

The fourth appearance of Christ was to Peter alone, mentioned onely by S. Paul, 1. Cor. 15. 5. He was seene of Cephus.

The fifth appearance was to all the disciples together at Iane Thomas, Ioh. 20. 19. In it we must consider three things, which are all effectfull arguments to proue Christs resurrection. The first, that he came and stood in the midst among the doors being shut. Now it may be demanded, how this could be. Answer. The Papists say, his body was glorified & so passed through the dore, but (as I haue said) it is against the nature of a bodie, that one should passe through another, as heate doth through a peece of yron, both bodies remaining intire and found: therefore we may rather thinke, that whereas Christ came in, when the doors were shut; it was either because by his mighty power hee caused the doors to giue place, the disciples not knowing how: or else because he altered the very substance of the doors, that his body might passe through, as hee thickned the waters to carrie his body when he walked vpon the sea. Now if this be true, as very like it is, that these dumbe creatures giue place to Christ, and became playable vnto his commandement, then much more ought wee to carrie our hearts conformable and pliant to the will of our Lord Iesus in all his commandements. The second point is, that when as the disciples thought Christ to haue bin a spirit; hee to proue the truth of his manhood, shewed vnto them his hands & feete, and the wound in his side, and calls for meate, and eates among them. But it may be asked how this could be, considering that a glorified bodie hath no blemish, and needs not to eate, but is supported by God without meate: for if this be true in our bodies when they shall be glorified, then much more will it be true in Christ. Answer. True it is, a glorified body hath no blemishes; but our Saviour Christ had not yet entered into the fulnesse of his glory. If hee had bin fully glorified, hee could not so sensibly & plainly haue made manifest the truth of his resurrection vnto his disciples: and therefore for their sakes and ours hee is content, after his entrance into glory, still to remaine in his body some remnants of the ignominies and blemishes, which if it had pleased him, he might haue laid aside, hee is also content to eate, not to eate, but to proue that his body was not a body in shew, but a true body: This teacheth vs two lessons: first, if Christ for our good and comfort be content to retaine these ignominious blemishes, then answerably every one of vs must as good followers of Christ retere the workes of our callings to the good of others, as Paul saith, He was free from all men, yet he was content to become all things unto all men, that by all means he might win the more. Secondly, we learne, that for the good of our neighbour, and for the maintaining of loue & charity, we must be content to yeeld from our own right, as in this place our Saviour Christ yeelds of his owne glory for the good of his Church.

The third point is, that he then gaue the Disciples their Apostolicall commission, saying, Go and teach all nations: of which, three points are to be considered. The first, to whom it is giuen. Ans. To them all, as well to one as to another, and not to Peter onely. And this ouerthrowes the fond and forged opinions of the Papists concerning Peters supremacy. If his calling had bene about the rest, then he should haue had a speciall commission about the rest: but one and the same commission is giuen alike to all. The second, that with the commission he giues his spirit; for whom hee appointeth to publish his will and word, them he furnisheth with sufficient gifts of his holy spirit to discharge that great function: and therefore it is a defect, that any are set apart to be ministers of the Gospell of Christ, which haue not receiued the spirit of knowledge, the spirit of wisdom, and the spirit of prophesie in some measure. The third point is, that in conferring of his spirit hee vseth an outward signe: for the text saith, Ioh. 20. 22. Hee breathed on them, and said, receive the holy Ghost. The reasons hereof may be these: First, when God created Adam, & put into him a liuing soule, it is said, Gen. 2. 7. He breathed in his face. And so our Saviour Christ in giuing vnto his Disciples the holy Ghost, doth the same, to shew vnto them, that the same person that giueth life, giueth grace; & also to signifie vnto them, that being to send them ouer all the world to preach his Gospell, he was as it were to make a second creation of man, by renewing the image of God in him which he had lost by the fall of Adam. Again, he breathed on them in giuing his spirit, to put them in minde that their preaching of the Gospell could not bee effectfull in the hearts of their hearers, before the Lord doth breath into them his spirit, and thereby draw them to beleue: & therefore the spoule of Christ desires the Lord to send forth his north and south winde to blow on her garden, that the spices thereof might flow out, Cant. 4. 16. The garden is the Church of God, which desires Christ to comfort her, & to poure out the graces of his spirit on her, that the people of God which are the herbes and trees of righteousness, may bring forth sweet spices, whose fruit may bee for our use, and their leaues for medicines.

Thus much for the five appearances of Christ the same day he rose againe: Now fol-

A low the rest of his appearances which were in the fourtie daies following, which are in number six. The first is mentioned by S. Iohn in these words, Ioh. 20. 26. Eight daies after when the disciples were within, and Thomas with them, came Iesus when the doores were shut, & stood in the midst of them, and said, Peace be vnto you. In it we must consider two things: I. The occasion thereof: II. The dealing of Christ. The occasion was this: after Christ had appeared vnto the other disciples in Thomas absence, they told him that they had seene the Lord: but he made answer, Except I see in his bodie the print of his nailes, and put mine hand into his side, I will not beleue. Now eight daies after, our Saviour Christ appeared againe vnto all his disciples, especially for the curing of Thomas his vnbeleefe, which was no small sinne, considering it contains in it three great sins. The first, is blindness of minde: for he had bin a hearer of our Saviour Christ a long time, & had bin instructed touching the resurrection diuers times: he was also with Christ & saw him when he raised Lazarus, & had seene, or at least wife had heard the miracles which he did: and also had heard all the disciples say that they had seene the Lord, and yet will it not sinke into his head. The second is deadnes of heart. When our Saviour Christ went to raise Lazarus that was dead, Thomas spake very confidently to his fellow disciples and said, Iohn. 11. 16. Let vs goe, that wee may die with him, yet when Christ was crucified he fled away, and is the longest from Christ after his resurrection, and when he is certainly told thereof, he wil not acknowledge it or yeeld vnto it. The third is, wilfulnesse: for when the disciples told him that they had seene the Lord, he said flatly, that vnlesse he saw in his hands the print of his nailes hee would not beleue, and that which is worse then all this, he continued eight daies in this wilfull minde. Now in this exceeding measure of vnbeleefe in Thomas, any man, euen he that hath the most grace, may see what a masse of vnbeleefe is in himselfe, and what wilfulnesse and vntowardnesse to any good thing, in so much that we may truly say with David, Lord what is man that thou shoud regardst him? And if such measure of vnbeleefe was in such men, as the disciples were, then we may assure our selues, that it doth much more exceede in the common profession of religion in these daies, let them protest to the contrary what they will.

Now the cause of his vnbeleefe was this: hee makes a law to himselfe, that he will see and feele, or else he will not beleue: but this is flat against the nature of faith which consisteth neither in seeing nor feeling. Indee, in things natural a man must first haue experience in seeing and feeling, and then beleefe: but it is contrary in diuinity, a man must first haue faith and beleefe, and then comes experience afterward. But Thomas hauing not learned this, doth ouer-shoot himselfe: and herein also many deceiue themselves, which thinke they haue no faith, because they haue no feeling. For the chiefest feeling that we must haue in this life, must bee the feeling of our finnes and the miseries of this life, and though we haue no other feeling at all, yet we must not therefore cease to beleue.

In Christs dealing with Thomas we may consider three actions. The first, that he speaks to Thomas alone, and answers him accordingly to the very words which hee had spoken of him in his absence, & that word for word. And by this hee laboured to ouerthrow his vnbeleefe, and to conuince him, that being absent he knew what he spake. And by this we learne that though wee want the bodily presence of Christ, he being now in heauen, yet he knoweth well what we say, and if neede were, could repeat all our sayings word by word: and if it were not so, how could it be true that we must giue an account of euery idle word? Now this must teach vs, to looke that our speech be gracious according to the rule of Gods holy word. Secondly, this must make vs willing and ready to direct our prayers to Christ, considering he knoweth what we pray for, and heareth euery word we speake. The second action is, that Christ condescends to Thomas, and giues him libertie to feele the print of the nailes, and to put his finger into his side. Hee might haue reiected Thomas for his wilfulnesse, yet to helpe his vnbeleefe, hee yeeldeth vnto his weaknesse. This sheweth that Christ is most compassionate to all those that vnfaignedly repent them of their finnes and cleaue vnto him, although they do it laden with manifold wants. David saith, that the Lord hath compassion on them that feare him, as a father hath compassion on his children: and hee adds the reason: For he knoweth of what we are made. And the Prophet Esay, Hee will not breake the bruised reede, and smoking flaxe hee will not quench. When a child is very sicke, in so much that it casteth vp all the meate which it taketh, the mother will not be offended thereat, but rather pitie it. Now our Saviour Christ is ten thousand times more mercifull to them that beleue in him, then any mother is or can be. The third action is, that when Thomas had seene and felt the wounds, Christ reuiued his faith, whereupon he brake forth and said, My Lord & my God. In which words he doth most notably bewaile his blindnesse and vnbeleefe; and as a fire that hath bin smothered, so doth his faith burst forth and shew it selfe. And in this example of Thomas we may see the estate of Gods people in this life. First, God giueth the faith, yet afterward for a time he doth (as it were) hide the same in some corner of their hearts, so as they haue no feeling thereof, but thinke themselves to be void of all grace: and this hee doth for no other end but to humble them: & yet againe after all this, the first grace is further renewed and reuiued. Thus dealt the Lord with David & Salomon (for whereas hee was a pen-man of Scripture, & therefore an holy man of God, we may not thinke that he was wholly forsaken) with Peter, and in this place with Thomas. And the experience of this shall euery seruant of God finde himselfe.

The second appearance of Christ was to seuen of his Disciples as they were on fishing, in which hee giues three testimonies of his godhead, & that by death his power was nothing diminished. The first, that when the Disciples had fished all night, and caught nothing, afterward by his direction they catch fish in abundance and that presently. This teacheth vs, that Christ is a Soueraigne Lord ouer all creatures, and hath the disposing of them in his owne hands: and that if good successe follow not when men are painfull in their callings, it is because God will prepare and make them fit for a further blessing. Christ comes in the morning, and giues his Disciples a great draught of fish: yet before this can bee, they must labour all night in vaine. Ieseph must be made ruler ouer all Egypt, but first hee must be cast into a dungeon where he can see no Sun, nor light, to prepare him to that honour: and David must be king ouer Israel, but the Lord will first prepare him hereunto, by raising vp Saul to persecute him: therefore when God sendeth any hinderances vnto vs in our callings, we must not despair, nor be discouraged; for they are the means whereby God maketh vs fit to receiue greater blessings at his hands, either in this life or in the life to come. The second is, that the net was vnbroke, though it had in it great fishes to the number of an hundred fifty three. The third, that when the disciples came to land, they saw hote coales & fish laid thereon, and bread. Now some may aske, whence was this food? Ans. The same Lord that was able to provide a whale to swallow vp Jonas, & so to saue him: and hee that was able to provide a fish for Peters angle with a peece of twenty pence in his mouth; & to make a little bread & a few fishes to feed so many thousands in the wilderness; the same also doth of himselfe provide bread and fishes for his disciples. This teacheth vs, that not onely the blessing, but also this very hauing of meate, drinke, apparell is from Christ: and hereupon all states of men, euen the kings of the earth are taught to pray that God would giue them their daily bread. Again, when we sit down to eate & drink, this must put vs in minde that we are the guests of Christ himselfe: our food which we haue, cometh of his meere gift; and he it is that entertaines vs if wee could see it. And for this cause we must soberly & with great reuerence, in feare and trembling vse all Gods creatures as in his presence. And when we eate & drink, we must alwayes looke that all our speech be such as may become the guests of our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ. Vnally the practise of men is far otherwife, for in feasting many take liberty to suffer, & to be drunk, to sweate, and to blaspheme: but if we serue the Lord let vs remember whose guests we are, and who is our entertainer; and so behaue our selues as beings in his presence, that all our actions and words may tend to his glory.

1 Cor. 15. 7. The third appearance was to James, as S. Paul recordeth, although the same bee not mentioned in any of the Euangelists.

Mith. 28. 16. The fourth was to all his disciples in a mountaine whither he had appointed them to come.

A. A. 1. 1. The fifth and last appearance was in the mount of Olives, when he ascended into heaven. Of these three last appearances, because the holy Ghost hath onely mentioned them, I omit to speake, and with the repeating of them I let them passe.

Thus much of the appearances of Christ after his resurrection: the witnesses therof are three sorts: I. angels. II. women that came to the graue to embalm him. III. Christs own disciples who did publish and preach the same according as they had sene and heard of our Sauour Christ: and of these likewise I omit to speake, because there is not any speciall thing mentioned of them by the Euangelists.

Now follow the vses, which are two-fold: some respect Christ, and some respect our selues. Vses which concerne Christ are three: I. Whereas Christ Iesus being Clarke dead rose againe to life by his owne power, it serueth to proue vnto vs that he was the Son of God. Thus Paul speaking of Christ saith, that he was declared mightily to be the Sonne of God touching the spirit of sanctification, by the resurrection from the dead. And by the mouth of Dauid God said, Psal. 2. 7. Thou art my sonne, this day haue I begotten thee. Which place must be vnderstood not so much of the eternall generation of Christ before all worlds, as of the manifestation thereof in time after this manner. This day, that is, at this time of thine owne incarnation, but especially at the day of thy resurrection; I haue begotten thee, that is, I haue made manifest that thou art my Sonne: so is this place expounded by Saint Paul in the Acts. Secondly, Christs rising from death by his owne power, proues vnto vs evidently, that he is Lord ouer all things that are: & this vs S. Paul makes hereof, for saith he, Rom. 1. 4. Christ therefore dyed, that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the quicke. And indeede whereas he rose againe on this manner, he did hereby shew himselfe most plainly to be a mighty Prince ouer the graue, death, hell, and condemnation, and one that had all-sufficient power to euermee them. Thirdly, it proues vnto vs, that he was a perfect Priest, and that his death & passion was a perfect satisfaction to the iustice of God for the sin of mankind. For whereas Christ died he died for our finnes: now if he had not fully satisfied for them all (though there had remained but one fin, for which he had made no satisfaction) he had not risen againe: but death which came into the world by sin, and is strengthened by it, would haue held him in bondage: & therefore, whereas he rose againe,

A it is more then manifest, that he hath made fo full a satisfaction, that the merit thereof doth and shall counteruaile the iustice of God for all our offences. To this purpose Paul saith, 1. Cor. 15. 17. If Christ be not risen againe, your faith is vaine: & you are yet in your finnes, that is, Christ had not satisfied for your sins, or at least you could not possibly haue knowne that hee had made satisfaction for any of them, if he had not risen againe.

The vses which concerne our selues are of two sorts: comforts to the children of God, & duties that are to be learned and practised of vs all. The comforts are especially three. First, Christs resurrection serueth for the iustificati-on of all that beleeue in him, euen before God the Father: as Paul saith, Rom. 4. 25. Christ was giuen to death for our finnes, and is risen againe for our iustification: which words haue this meaning: when Christ died, we must not consider him as a priuate man, as we haue shewed before, but as one that stood in the stead and room of all the elect: in his death he bare our finnes, and suffered all that we should haue suffered in our owne persons forever, and the guilt of our offences was laid vpon him: and therefore E. Jay saith, he was numbered among the wicked. Now in this rising againe, he freed and disburdened himselfe not from any finnes of his owne, because he was without sinne, but from the guilt and punishment of our finnes imputed vnto him. And hence it comes to passe, that all those which put their trust and affiance in the merit of Christ, at the very first instant of their beleeuing haue their owne sins not imputed vnto them, and his righteousness imputed.

Secondly, the resurrection of Christ serueth as a notable meanes to worke inward sanctification, as Saint Peter saith, We are regenerate to a liuely hope by the resurrection of Iesus Christ from the dead. And S. Paul, We are the (saith he) buried with him by baptisme into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glorie of his Father, so we also should walke in newnesse of life. For if we be grafted with him to the similitude of his death, we shall be also to the similitude of his resurrection. Which words imports thus much, that as Christ by the power of his own Godhead, freed his manhood from death and from the guilt of our sins: so doth hee free those that are knit vnto him by the bond of one spirit, from the corruption of their natures in which they are dead, that they may liue vnto God. In the naturall body, the head is the fountaine of all the senses and of motio: & therefore by sundry nerves dispersed thorow the body, the power of mouing and of sense is deriued euen to the least parts; so as the hands and feete mooue by meanes of that power which comes from the head: and so it is in the spiritual body of Christ, namely, the Church: he is the head and the fountaine of life, and therefore hee conueyeth spirituall life to euery one of his members: and that very power of his Godhead, whereby hee raised vp himselfe when he was dead, he conueieth from himselfe to his members, and thereby raised them vp from the death of sinne to newnesse of life. And looke as in a perfect bodie, when the head hath sense and motion, the hand that is of the same bodie hath also the sense and motion conuenient for it: so likewise Christ being the resurrection and the life, as there is spirituall life in him, so euery member of his shall feele in it selfe spirituall sense and motion, whereby it is raised vp from sinne, and liueth vnto God. For the better conceiuing of this, we must consider two things: the outward meanes of this spirituall life, and the measure of it. For the meanes, if we will haue common water, we must goe to the well: & if we will haue water of life, we must goe vnto Christ, who saith, If any man thirst, let him come vnto me and drinking. Now this well of the water of life is very deepe, & we haue nothing to draw with, therefore we must haue our pipes & conduits to conuey the same vnto vs, which are the word of God preached, and the administration of the Sacraments. Christ saith, The dead shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and they that heare it shall liue; where by the dead is meant, not the dead in the graue, but those that are dead in sinne. And againe, Christ saith, the words which I speake are spirit and life, because the word of God is the pipe whereby he conueieth into our dead hearts spirit and life.

Ioh. 7. 37.

Ioh. 5. 15.

Ioh. 6. 63.

As Christ when hee raised vp dead men, did onely speake the word and they were made aliue: and at the day of iudgement by his very voice, when the trumpet shall blow, all that are dead shall rise againe: So it is in the first resurrection; they that are dead in their sins, at his voice vttered in the ministry of the word shall rise againe. To goe further, Christ raised three from the dead; Lazarus daughter newly dead; the widowes sonne dead and wound vp and lying on the hearfe; Laz. vnto dead and buried, and linking in the graue; & all this hee did by his very voice: so also by the preaching of his word, hee raiseth all sorts of sinners, euen such as haue lien long in their finnes as rotting and stinking carion. The sacraments also are the pipes and conduits whereby God conueieth grace into the heart, if they are compared to thatis, if they be receiued in vnfained repentance for all our finnes, and with a true & liuely faith in Christ for the pardon of the same finnes. And so, I take it, they be rightly vied, flocks of wine, which reuiue the Church being sick and fallen into a swoond. As for the measure of life deriued from Christ, it is but small in this life, and giuen by litle and litle, as Of saith, The Lord hath spoiled vs, and hee will heale vs, he hath wounded vs, & hee will bind vs up. After two diues he will reuiue vs, & in the third he will raise vs up, and we shall liue in his sight. The Prophet Ezechiel in a vision is caried into the midst of a field, full of dead bones, and he is caused to prophesie ouer them, and say,

Cant. 2. 7.

Of. 6. 1. 2.

A O dry bones, heare the word of the Lord; at the first there was a shaking, and the bones came together bone to bone, and their sinewes and flesh grew vpon them, and vpon the flesh grew a skinne. Then hee prophesied vnto the winds the second time, and they liued and stood vpon their feet, for the breath came vpon them, & they were an exceeding great army of men. Hereby it signifieth not onely the state of the Iewes after their captiuitie, but in them the state of the whole Church of G O D. For these temporall deliuerances signifieth further a spirituall deliuerance. And we may here see most plainly, that God worketh in the hearts of his children the gifts & graces of regeneration by litle and litle. First, he giueth no more then flesh, sinewes and skin: then after he giueth them further graces of his spirit, which quickeneth them and maketh them aliue vnto God. The same also we may see in the vision of the waters that ranne out of the Temple: First, a man mult made to the ankles, then after to the knees, and so to the loynes; then after the waters grow to a riuer that cannot be passed ouer: and so the Lord conueyeth his graces by litle and litle, till at the last men haue a full measure thereof.

Eze. 47. 3. 4. 5.

Thirdly, the resurrection of Christ serueth as an argument to proue vnto vs our resurrection at the day of iudgement. Paul saith, If the spirit of him that raised vp Iesus from the dead dwell in you, hee that raised Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortall bodies. Some will say, that this is no benefit, for all must rise againe, as well the wicked, as the goodly. Answe. True indeede: but yet the wicked rise not againe by the same cause that the goodly doe. They rise againe by the power of Christ, not as he is a Sauour, but as he is a iudge to condemn them. For God had said to Adam; at what time hee should eare of the forbidden fruit, he should die the death; meaning a double death, both the first, and the second death. Now when the goodly rise againe, that God may inflict vpon them the punishment of the second death, which is the reward of fin, that so Gods iustice may be satisfied: but the goodly rise againe by the power of Christ their head and redeemer, who raiseth them vp that they may be partakers of the benefit of his death, which is to enioy both in body and soule the kingdom of heaven, which he hath so dearly bought for them.

Rem. 8. 11.

Thus much for the comforts: Now follow the duties, and they are also three. First, as Christ Iesus when he was dead rose againe from death to life by his own power, so we by his grace, in imitation of Christ, must endeavour our selues to rise vp from all our sinnes both originall and actuall vnto newnesse of life. This is worthily set downe by the Apostle, saying, We are buried by baptisme into his death, that as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glorie of the Father, so we also should walke in newnesse of life: and therefore we must endeavour our felues to shew the same power to be in vs euerie day, by rising vp from our owne personall finnes to a reformed life. This ought to be remembered of vs, because howsoever many heare and know this point, yet very few do practise the same. For to speake plainly, as dead men buried would neuer heare though a man should speake neuer so loud: so vndoubtedly among vs there bee also many liuing men, which are almost in the same case. The ministers of God may cry vnto them daily, & iterate the same thing a thousand times, & tell them that they must rise vp from their finnes and leade a new life, but they heare no more then the dead carkas that lieth in the grane. Indee men heare with their outward eares, but they are so farre from practising this duty, that many iudge it to bee a matter of reproach and ignominy. And those which make any conscience of this duty, how they are laden with nick-names & taunts, who knoweth not? I need not to rehearse them: so odious a thing now adaeies is the rising from sinne to newnesse of life. Sound a trumpet in a dead mans eares, he stirres not: and let vscrie for amendment of life till breath goe out of our bodies, no man almost faith, What haue I done? And for this cause vndoubtedly, it it were not for conscience of that duty which men owe vnto God, we should haue but few ministers in England. For it is the ioy of a minister to see the vnfaied consercion of his people: whereas, alas men generally lie snoring in their corruptions, and rather goe forward in them still, then come to any amendment; such is the wonderfull hardnesse that hath possessed the hearts of most men. He which hath but halfe an eye may fee this to betruer. Oh! how exceeds Atheisme in all places, contempt of Gods worship, prophanation of the Sabbath; the whoredomes and fornications, the cruelty and oppression of this age cry to heauen for vengeance. By these and such like finnes the world crucifies Christ againe. For looke as Pilate souldiers with the wicked Iewes, tooke Christ and stripped him of his garments; butfered him, and slew him; so vngodly men by their wicked behaviour stricke him of all honour, and slay him againe. If an infidell should come among vs, and yeeld himselfe to be of our religion, after he had seene the behaviour of men, he would peraduenture leaue all religion: for he might say, surely it seemes this God whom these men worship, is not the true God, but a God of licentious liberty And that which is more, whereas at all times we ought to shew our felues new creatures, and to walke worthy of our Saviour and redeemer, & therefore also ought to rise out of our finnes, and to liue in righteousness and true holinesse; yet we for the most part go on still forward in sin, and euerie day goe deeper then other to helward. This hath bene heretofore the common practise, but let vs now learne after the example of Christ, being quickned and reuiued by his grace, to endeavour our felues especially to come out of the graue of sinne, and learne to make conscience of euerie bad action. True it is, a Christian man may vse the creatures of God for his delight, in a moderate and godly manner, but Christ neuer gaue liberty to any to liue licentious; for he that is free, is yetseruant vnto Christ, as Paul faith: and therefore we must not enterprize any thing, but that which may be a worke of some good dutie vnto God; to which end the Apostle faith, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee life. If this will not moue vs, yet let the iudgement of God draw vs thereunto, Blessed is he (saith the holy Ghost) that hath part in the first resurrection: for on such the second death hath no power: where mention is made of a double death; the first, is the separation of soule and body, the second, is the eternall condemnation of soule and bodie in hell-fire. Would we now escape the second death after this life? we must then labour in this life to be partakers of the first resurrection, and that on this manner: looke what finnes we haue liued in heretofore, we must endeavour to come out of them all, & leade a better life according to all the commandments of God. But if it be so that ye will haue no care of your owne soules goe on hardly to your owne perill, and so ye shall be sure to enter into the second death, which is eternall damnation.

Secondly, we are taught by the example of Saint Paul, to labour about all things, to know Christ, and the vertue of his resurrection. And this we shall doe, when we can say by experience that our hearts are not content with a drowisie profession of religion, but that we feele the same power of Christ, whereby he raised vp himselfe from death to life, to be effectual and powerfull in vs, to worke in our hearts a consercion from all our finnes, wherein we haue liued dead, to newnesse of life, with care to liue godly in Christ Iesus. And that we may further attaine to all this, we must come to heare the word of God preached and taught with feare and trembling; hauing heard the word, we must meditate therein, and pray vnto God, not onely publicly, but priuately also, intreaching him that he would reach forth his hand, and pull vs out of the graue of sinne, wherein we haue liued dead so long. And in so doing, the Lord of his mercy, according as he hath promised, will send his spirit of grace into our hearts, to worke in vs an inward sense and feeling of the vertue of Christs resurrection. So dealt he with the two disciples that were going to Emmaus; they were occupied in the meditation of Christ his death and passion: and whiles they were in hearing of Christ, who conferred with them, hee gaue them such a measure of his spirit, as made their hearts to burne within them. And Paul prayeth for the Ephesians, that God would enlighten their eyes, that they might see and feele in themselves the exceeding greatnesse of the power of God, which he wrought in Christ Iesus, when he raised him from the dead.

Thirdly, as Saint Paul saith, If we be risen with Christ, then we must seeke the things that are above. But how & by what meanes can we rise with Christ, seeing we did not die with him? Ans. We rise with Christ thus. The burgesse of a towne in the Parliament house beareth the person of a whole towne, and whatsoever he faith, that the whole towne faith, and whatsoever is done to him, is also done to all the towne: so Christ vpon the crosse stood in our place, and bare our person; and what he suffered, we suffered: & when he died, all the faithfull died in him; and so likewise as hee is risen againe, so are all the faithfull risen in him. The consideration wherof doth teach vs, that we must not haue our hearts wedded to this world. We may vse the things of this life, but yet so as though we vied them not. For all our loue & care must be for things above, and specially we must seeke the kingdom of God and his righteousness, peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost. We must therefore sue for the pardon of sinne, for reconciliation to God in Christ, and for sanctification. These are the precious pearles which we must seeke, & when we haue found them, we must sell all that we haue to buy them; and hauing bought them, we must lay them vp in the secret corners of our hearts, valuing and esteeming of them better then all things in the world beside.

Thus much of Christs resurrection, containing the first degree of Christs exaltation: now follovyeth the second in these wordes, He ascended into heauen: in the handling wherof we are to consider these speciall points: I. the time of his ascension. II. the place. III. the manner. IV. the witnesses. V. the vyes thereof. For the first, the time of Christs ascension was forty daies after his resurrection, when hee taught his disciples the things which appertaine to the Kingdom of God. And this sheweth that he is a most faithfull king ouer his Church, procuring the good thereof. And therefore Esay faith, The gouernment is on his shoulders: And the Apostle faith, hee was more faithful in all the house of God, then Moses was. Hence we gather, that whereas the Apostles changed the Sabbath from the seauenth day to the eight, it was no doubt, by the counsell and direction of Christ before his ascension: and likewise in that they planted Churches, & appointed teachers & meeete ouersers for the guiding & instruction hereof, we may resolute our felues that Christ prescribed the same vnto them before his ascension, and for these and such like causes did he ascend no sooner.

Now looke what care Christ at his ascension had ouer his Church, the same must all masters of families haue ouer their households when God shall call them out of this world. They must haue care not onely that their families be well gouerned while they liue; but also, that after their death, peace, loue, and

A good order may bee continued in their posterity. And therefore the Prophet Esay is sent to Ezechias King of Iuda, to bid him for his house in order, for he must die, signifying, that it is the duty of a good master of a family, to haue care not onely for the gouernement of his house whilest he is alieue, but also that it may be well gouerned when hee is dead. The same also must bee practised of Gods ministers: a part of whose fidelity is this, that they haue not onely a care to feede their particular flockes while they are alieue, but also that they further provide for the people after their departure, as much as they can. Example whereof we haue in Peter, who saith, I will endeavour alwayes that ye may bee able also to haue remembrance of these things, after my departure.

The place of Christs ascension was, the mount of Oliues neere Bethanie; and it was the same place from whence Christ went to Ierusalem to be crucified. One place serueth to be a passage both to paine and torments, and also to glorie. This sheweth that the way to the kingdom of heauen is through afflictions. There are many which haue Gods hand heauie vpon them in lingring sicknesses, as the dead pale, & such like, wherein they are faine to lie many yeares without hope of cure, whereupon their beds, which should bee vnto them places of rest and ease, are but places of woe & miserie. Yet may these men hence haue great comfort, if they can make a good vye of their sicknesses: for the beds whereon they suffer so much torment, shall bee places from whence they shall passe to ioy and happinesse. Again, there bee many that for the testimonie of the truth, and for religions sake suffer imprisonment, with many afflictions; now if they can vye their afflictions well, their prisons shall be Bethanias vnto them; although they be places of bondage, yet God will at length make them places of entrance to liberty. Many a man for the maintaining of faith and good conscience, is banished out of his country, and is faine to liue in a strange place among a people to whom he is vnknowne: but let him vye it well: for though it bee a place of griefe for a time, as Bethany was to Christ when he went to suffer, yet God will make it one day to be a passage into heauen.

Thus much of the place of his ascending. The third thing to be considered, is the manner of Christs ascension, and it containeth three points. The first, that Christ being now to ascend, lift vp his hands, and blessed his disciples. In the Scripture are mentioned diuers kinde of blessings. The first, when one prayeth to God for a blessing vpon another: and this blessing doe kings and princes bestow vpon their subiects, & parents on their children: and for this cause children are well taught to aske their fathers and mothers blessing, that they may pray to God to bless them. There is another kind of blessing, when a man doth not onely pray for a blessing, but also pronounceth it.

This

2. Pet. 1. 15.

Luk. 24. 50. & 19.

10. 10. 1. 12.

Luk. 24. 10.

This did the priests in the old Testament: and thus Melchisedeck when hee met Abraham blessed him, saying Blessed art thou Abraham of God, the most high possessor of heauen and earth. And this was the ordinarie duty of the priests, prescribed by God himselfe: & therefore the very forme of words which they vsed is set downe after this manner, The Lordbless thee & keepe thee, the Lord make his face to shine vpon thee, &c. The third kinde of blessing is, when a man doth not onely pray to God and pronounce blessing, but by the spirit of prophesie doth foretell a particular blessing vpon any. Thus Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau, particularly foretelling both their estates. And Jacob blessed the twelue Patriarkes by the same spirit foretelling them what should befall them many hundred yeares after. Now our Sauour Christ did not blesse his disciples any of these three waies: & therefore there remaineth a fourth kind of blessing which he vsed, & that was after this manner: Christ in blessing his disciples did not onely pronounce or foretell a blessing that should come to his disciples, but did conferre and giue the same vnto them. For he is the fountaine and author of all blessings. And therefore Paul saith, that God the Father hath blessed vs in all spiritual blessings in Christ.

Hence wee learne, first, that all those which denie themselves and flie to Christ, and put their affiance in him, shall bee freed from the curse of the law, and from the wrath of God due vnto them for their sinnes, whatsoever they are. Secondly, that the curses of men must not discourage vs from doing well. For though men curse, yet Christ blesseth: and for this cause he saith, Woe be vnto you when all men speake well of you: as if hee should say, then you want the blessing of God. And wee must remember, that when men shall curse vs for doing our duty, euen then the blessing of God shall bee vpon vs; and the curse causelesse shall not hurt. And God saith to Abraham, See will curse them that curse him: Thirdly, we learne that no witchcraft, nor forcery, (which of en are done with cursing) shall be able to hurt vs. For looke where Christ will blesse, there all the diuels in hell can neuer fasten a curse. This is found true by experience. For when Balaam the wizard should haue cursed the people of Israel, & had assailed to doe it many waies, but could not; at length he said, *There is no forcereis against Jacob, nor saith saying against Israel. This is a notable comfort to the people of God, that witches and forcerers, doe what they can, shall neuer bee able to hurt them. It may be, that their bad practises may annoy mens bodies and goods, yet the Lord will turne all to a blessing vpon his seruants, either in this life, or in the life to come.

The second point is, that Christ went apart from his disciple, and ascended upward toward heauen in their sight. For the right vnderstanding of this, sundry special points must be obserued. The first, that the lifting vp of his bodie was principally by the mighty power of his Godhead, and partly by the supernaturall property of a glorified body, which is to moue as well vpward as downward, without constraint or violence. The second, that Christ did goe from earth to heauen really and actually, and not in appearance onely. The third, that he went visibly in the sight of his Disciples. The fourth, that hee went locally, by changing his place and going from earth to heauen, so as he is no more on earth bodily, as we are now on earth. It may be objected, that Christ made a promise that he would be with his Church to the end of the world. Ans. That promise is to be vnderstood of the presence of his spirit, or Godhead, not of the presence of his manhood. Again, it may be further alleadged, that if the Godhead be on earth, then must the manhood be there also, because they are both vnited together. Ans. It is not true, that of two things conioyned, where the one is, there must the other be also. For the Sunne it selfe, and the Sun-beames are both ioyned together, yet they are not both in all places together. For the bodie of the Sunne is onely in the heauens, but the Sunne-beames are also vpon the earth. The argument therefore folloes not: Christs manhood subsists in that person which is euery where: ergo his manhood is euery where. And the reason is, because the Sonne of God subsists not onely in his diuine nature, but also by it: whereas hee doth not subsist at all by the manhood, but onely in it: for he subsisted before all eternitie, when the manhood was not. Nay rather because the manhood doth subsist by the person of the Sonne, therefore the person extends it selfe further then the manhood, which is assumed and sustained by it; and hath his ex-isting thence. For that very thing whereby any other thing either essentially or accidentally is, extends it selfe further then the thing whereby it is. As the humane nature whereby Peter is a man, extends it selfe further then to Peter, namely, to all other men: and the whitenesse whereby the snow is white, extends it selfe further then to that snow which a man holds in his hand.

The third point is, that in the ascension a cloud took Christ from the sight of his disciples. And whereas hee caused a cloud to come betweene their sight and himselfe, it signified vnto the, that they must now be contented with that which they had seene, and not to seeke to know further what became of him afterward; and the same thing is taught vnto vs also: we must content our selues with that which God hath reuealed in his word, and seeke no further, specially in things which concerne God. For the like end in the giuing of the law in Sinai, God appeared in a cloud; and when he did manifest his glory in the temple which Salomon made, a thicke cloud filled the fume.

The fourth point to be considered, is concern-ning the witness of his ascension, which were his owne disciples in the mount of Oliues at Bethanie, and none but they. Now it may be demanded, why hee would not haue all the whole nation of the Iewes to see him ascend, that so they might know that he was risen againe, and beleene in him. Ans. The reason may be this: it was his good pleasure that the points of faith and religion, wherof this article is one, should rather be learned by hearing then by seeing. Indeed Christs owne disciples were taught the same by sight, that they might the better teach others which should not see; whereas now the ordinarie meanes to come by faith is hearing.

The vbes to bee made of Christs ascension, are of two sorts; some are comforts to Gods Church and people, and some are duties. The comforts are especially foure. The first is this: Christ leas did ascend vp to heauen, to leade captiuitie captiue, a most worthy benefit. By captiuitie is meant, sinne and Satan which did & do leade men captiue into perdition: secondly death and the granes, which held him captiue and in bondage for the space of three daies. And he leades them al captiue two waies: first in himselfe, in that he began his triumph vpon the crosse, as I haue shewed, & continued the same till his very ascension: secondly, in all his members, because by his mighty power being now ascended, he doth subdue & weaken the power of sinne & Satan; which he manifesteth every day by killing the corruption of their natures, and the rebellion of their flesh. But it may be demanded, how Christ doth leade his enemies captiue, considering the diuell reigns euery where, and the world and death & hell. Ans. Christs victory ouer his and our enemies hath fise degrees. First, it is ordained by God; secondly, it is fore-told; thirdly it is wrought; fourthly, it is applied; lastly, it is accomplished. The ordaining of it was before all worlds: the fore-telling of it was in all the ages of the olde testament: the working of it was vpon the crosse, and afterward: the applying hath bene since the beginning of the world more or lesse; and it is onely in part in this life; that while Christ is bruising of the head of Satan, he againe may bruise his heele: the accomplishment shall not be before the last iudgement.

From this great benefit bestowed on Gods Church, there are many duties to be learned. First, here is an instruction for all ignorant persons & impenitent sinners, which abound among vs in euery place, who soeuer they bee, that liue in the blindness of their mindes, and hardnes of their hearts; they must know this, that they are captiues and bondslaves of sin and Satan, of hell, death, and condemnation: & let no man flatter hi selfe of what state or degree hee be (for it is Gods truth,) if he haue not repented of all his sinnes, hee as yet is no better then a seruant or a vassall, yea a very drudge of the diuell. Now then, what wilt thou doe in this case? The best thing is, to lay to thy heart this benefit of Christ. Hee is ascended vp to heauen to leade captiue, and to vanquish the diuell and all his angels, vnder whom thou liest bound, and that not onely in himselfe, but in his members. Now the if thou wilt become a true member of Christ, he will free thee from this bondage. Therefore take heed how thou continue longer in thy olde sinnes, and in thy grosse ignorance: and seeing Christ hath made a way to liberty: let vs seeke to come out of this spiritual bondage: hee is ascended for this end and purpose to free vs from it; therefore if we refuse this benefit, our state will be the more damnable. A man lies bound hand and foot in a darke dungeon, and the keeper comes & sets open the prison dore, and takes off his bolts, & biddes him come out; if hee refuse and say that he is well, may it not bee thought that he is a madde man, and will any be soe for his case? No surely. Well, this is the state of all impenitent sinners. They lie fast fettered and bound vnder the power of sinne & Satan, and Christ it is who is ascended into heauen to vnlooke them of this bondage: he hath set open the prison dore, and hath ynnlocked our fetters: if we refuse to come out, & lie still in our sins, there remaineth nothing for vs, but euermlasting thralldome. Let vs therefore in the feare of God, if we haue care of our owne souls, receiue & embrace this benefit which redounds vnto vs by Christs ascension.

Secondly, in that Christ is ascended to heauen to leade captiue sinne and Satan, here is a good consolation for all those that are afflicted in conscience for their sins. There is no man in this case but he hath great cause to feare, yet must hee not be discouraged. For Christ by his ascension like a noble captaine hath taken sin and Satan prisoners, and hath pinned them fast, so as all the power they haue, is in Christs hand: & therefore for this cause although they are suffered to exercise and afflict vs, yet by his gracethey shall neuer be able to preuaile against vs. Therefore wee may fairly cast our care vpon God, and not feare ouermuch.

Hence also wee may learne a third durtie. There is no man that knoweth what sin meaneth, and what the blood of Christ meaneth, but in regard of the corruption of his owne nature, he will say with Paul, that hee is sold vnder sinne, and in regard thereof will cry out with him also, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death? yea it will make his hart to bleed with in him. Now what shall hee doe in this case? Surely let him remember the end of Christs ascension, which is to vanquish and subdue the rebellion of his nature, and labour to feelee the benefit thereof: and then hee shall no doubt finde, that Christ will disolue in him the works of the diuell, & tread Satan vnder his feete. And thus also those that feelee in themselves the law of their members rebelling against the law of their minde, must come to Christ, & he will helpe and free them.

The second benefit of Christs ascension is that that he ascended vp to heauen to bestow gifts vpon his Church, as it is said in the place before mentioned. He ascended vp on high, &c. He gave gifts vnto men, that is, the gift of the knowledge of Gods word, the gift of preaching and prophetic, & al other gifts needfull for the good of his Church. The consideration of this, that Christ who is the fountaine of grace, & in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom & knowledge, should be mindful of vs, & vouchsafe such speciall fauour to his Church, must cause every one of vs who hath receiued any gift of God (as there is no man but he hath receiued his portion) to be humbled in his owne eyes for the same. There is no cause why wee should be proud of our gifts; seeing wee haue nothing but that which we haue receiued. For to this end Christ ascended, to giue gifts vnto men, and therefore our gifts whatsoever they bee, are not our owne, but we had them from Christ, & we are stewards of them a while for the good of others. The more the Lord giues to man, the more he requires at his hands; and as for such as hauing good gifts abuse the same, their sin is the more grievous, and their danger the greater. Men of great gifts vnlesse they vse them aright with humbled hearts, shall want Gods blessing vpon them. For he giuech grace to the humble. The high hills after much tillage are often barren, whereas the low vallies by streams of waters passing through them, are very fruitful: and the gifts of God ioyned with a swelling heart are fruitlesse; but ioyned with loue & the grace of humilitie they edifie.

Secondly, if Christ ascend vp to heauen to giue gifts vnto men, here we may see how many a man and woman in these our daies are ouerseen, in that they plead ignorance, & say that they hope God will haue them excused for it, seeing that they are not learned; they haue dul vs, & it is not possible to teach the now, they are past learning; & hereupon they presume they may liue in grosse ignorance, as blinde almost in religion as when they were first borne. But mark, I pray you, who is it that is ascended vp into heauen; namely, Christ Iesus our Lord, who made thee of nothing. Now was hee able to giue thee a being, when thou wert not, and is he not likewise able to put knowledge into thy soule, if so bethou wilt vse the means which he hath appointed? and the rather, seeing he is ascended for that end; but if thou wilt not vse the means to come to knowledge, thy case is desperate, and thou art the cause of thine owne condemnation, and thou bringest confusion vpon thine owne head.

Therefore let ignorant men labour for knowledge of Gods word. Ignorance shall excuse none: it will not fit and for patient at the day of iudgement. Christ is ascended to this end to teach the ignorant, to giue knowledge & wisdom vnto the simple, & to giue gifts of prophecy vnto his ministers, that they may teach his people. Therefore I say againe, let such as be ignorant vse the means diligently, & God will giue the blessing. Thirdly, whereas it is thought to be a thing not possible, to furnish a whole Church with preaching ministers, it seemes to be otherwise. For wherefore did Christ ascend to heauen? was it not to giue gifts vnto his Church? what is Christs hand now thorned? vndoubtedly we may resolve our felues, that Christ bestowed gifts sufficient vpon men in the Church: but it is for our sins that they are not employed. The fountaines of learning the vniuersities; though they are not dammed vp, yet they stream not abroad as they might. Many there bee in them indued with worthy gifts for the building of the Church; but the counteniesse of men hinders the comfortable entrance which otherwise might be. Lastly, seeing Christ ascended to giue gifts needfull for his Church, as the gift of teaching, the gift of prophecy, the gift of tongues, of wisdom, and knowledge: the duty of every man is, especially of those which liue in the schooles of learning, to labour by all means to increase, cherish and preserve their gifts, and as Paul exhorteth Timothie, so stirre vp the gift of God, that is, as men preserve the fire by blowing it, so by our diligence wee must kindle and reuiue the gifts & graces of God bestowed on vs. Christ hath done his part, and there is nothing required but our paines and fidelity.

The third benefit that comes by Christs ascension is, that hee ascended to prepare a place for all that should beleeue in him: In my Fathers house (saith Christ) are many dwelling places: if it were not so, I would haue tolde you. I goe to prepare a place for you. For by the sin of Adam our entrance into heauen was taken away. If Adam by his fall did exclude himself from the earthly paradise, then how much more did he exclude himselfe from heauen? And therefore al mankind sinning in him, was likewise deprived of heauen. The people of Israel being in woe & misery, cried out that they had sinned, & therefore the Lord had covered himselfe with a cloud, that their prayers could not passe through. And Esaie saith, that our sins are a wall betwixt God and vs. And S. Iohn, that no vnclane thing must enter into the heavenly Ierusalem. Now seeing we haue shut our selues out of heauen by our sins, it was requisite that Christ Iesus our Saviour should go before vs to prepare a place, and to make ready a way for vs. For he is King over all, he hath the keyes of heauen, hee openeth and no man shutteth: and therefore it is in his power to let vs in, though wee haue shut our selues out. But some may say, if this be the end of his ascension to prepare a place in heauen, then belike such as died before the coming of Christ were not in heauen. Answ. As there are two degrees of glory, one incomplete & the other complete or perfect, (for the faithfull departed are in glory but in part, and there remains fulnes of glory for such then at the day of iudgement, when soule and body shall be both glorified together:) so answerably there are two degrees of preparation of places in heauen. The places of glory were in part prepared for the faithfull from the beginning of the world, but the full preparation is made by Christs ascension. And of this last preparation is the place of Iohn to be vnderstood.

The vice of this doctrine is very profitable: First, it overthroweth the fond doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teacheth that Christ by his death did merit our iustification, & that we being once iustified doe further merit saluation, and purchase for our selues a place in heauen. But this is as it were to make a partition betwene Christ and vs in the worke of our redemption, whereas in truth not onely the beginning and continuance of our saluation, but also the accomplishment thereof in our vocation, iustification, sanctification, glorification, is wholly and onely to be ascribed to the meere merit of Christ: and therefore hauing redeemed vs on earth, he also ascends to prepare a place in heauen for vs.

Secondly, this serueth to condemn the fearefull, lamentable, and desperate securitie of these our daies. Great is the losse of Christ in that he was content to suffer the pangs of hell to bring vs out of hell: and withall to goe to heauen to prepare a place for vs there: and yet who is it that careth for the place, or maketh any account thereof? who forsaketh this world, and seekes vnto Christ for it? And further, lest any man should say, alas, I know not the way: therefore Christ before he ascended made a new and liuing way, with his owne blood, as the Apostle speaketh. And to take away all excuses from men, hee hath set markes and bounds in this way, and hath placed guides in it, namely, his ministers, to shew all the passengers a straight and ready course into the kingdom of heauen. And though Christ haue done all this for vs, yet the blindnes & securitie of men is such, that none almost walketh in this way, nor careth to come into this mansion place; but in stead of this they walk in by-ways according to the lusts of their own flesh. Where they are commanded to go Eastward to Ierusalem, they turn Westward another way: where they are commanded to go on forward to heauen, they turne again backward & go straight to hell. Men runne all the daies of their liues in the broad way that leadeth to destruction, and neuer so much as once make inquiry for a resting place in heauen; but when the houre of death cometh, then they call for the guide; whereas all their liues before they haue run out of the way many thousand miles: but then alas, it is too late, vnlesse it be the vnpeakeable mercy of God. For they haue wandered so far astray, that in so short a space they cannot be able to come into the right way againe. Yet generally, this is the state of most among vs, whose securitie is so much the more grievous and fearefull, because Christ hath done all that heart can wish. There is nothing else required, but only that by his grace wee should walke in the way. There was neuer any that knew the state of the people in these daies, but he will grant, that this is most true which I say. Besides, as by this we are brought to a sight of the desperate securitie of this age: so we may further learne our owne duties. Is Christ gone to heauen before-hand to prepare a place for thee then? practise that which Paul teacheth: Flare thy conscience in heauen. The words which he vsareth very significant, & the meaning of the is: Ye are free denizens of the city of God, & therefore as free-men in Gods house, let all your cares & duties, all your affaires & doings be in heauen. In the world if a man make purchase of an house, his heart is alwaies there: there he pulls downe & builds againe; there he makes him orchards and gardens: there hee means to liue & die. Christ Iesus hath bought the kingdom of heauen for vs (the most blessed purchase that euer was) & hath paid the dearest price for it that euer was paid, eue his own precious blood: & in this city he hath prepared for vs a dwelling place, & made vs free denizens of it: therefore about you, & about your affaires ought to be there. It will be said, how shall a man vpon earth haue his conuersation in heauen? Answ. We must conuerse in heauen, not in body but in heart: and therefore, though our bodies be on earth, yet our hearts joy & comfort, and al our meditation must be in heauen. Thus must we behaue our selues like good free-men in Gods house. It must be far from vs, to haue our joy and our hearts set on the things of this world.

Thirdly, the consideration of this; that Christ Iesus hath prepared a place for vs in heauen, and also hath trained the way with his owne blood, must make every one of vs to strive to enter in at the straight gate, as our Saviour Christ counsaileth vs, Luke 13. 24. & that as warrlers do, which strive for life and death. Within this gate is a dwelling place of happiness ready for vs. If a man were assured that there were made for him a great purchase in Spaine or Turkey, so as if he would but comethither, he might enjoy it; would hee not adventure the dangers of the sea, and of his enemies also, if hee neede were, that he might come to his owne? Well, behold Christ Iesus hath made a purchase for vs in heauen, & there is nothing required of vs, but that we will come & enjoy it. Why then should men refuse any paines, or feare in the way? may we must strueto get in it may be we shall be pinched in the entrance, for the gate is strait & low: & we must be faine to leave our wealth behind vs, & the pleasures of this life; and enter we must, though we should be constrained to leave our flesh behind vs, for the purchase that is made is worth ten thousand worlds. And besides, if we loffe it by sinning in the way our purchase shall be the blacknes of darkness for euer with the diuel & al his angels; who therefore would not strive, though hee lost his life in the gate? The vring of this point is needfull in these daies. There is striving enough for worldly preterm, but a man almost must goe alone in the straight way that passage.

Y 2 leadeth

leadeth to heaven, he shall have none to beare him company. And where are they that strive to enter? where is the violence offered to the kingdom of heaven? where bee the violent which should take it to themselves, as in the daies of John Baptist? Math. 11. 12.

Fourthly, if Christ haue prepared a place for vs in heauen, then wee are in this world as pilgrims & strangers, and therefore must learne the counsell of Saint Peter: As strangers and pilgrims abstaine from fleshly lusts, which fight against the soule, 1 Pet. 2. 11. Hee that doth esteeme himself as a pilgrime, is not to intringle himself with the affaires of this world, nor put in practise the behaviour thereof; but to be haue himself as a free-man of heauen, as strangers vs to live in forraigne countries, according to the fashion of their owne. And therefore in thought, word, & deede, in life & conuersation, he must loe carry himselfe, as thereby he may appeare to all the world of what country he is. An ancient diuine speaking of such as had curled & embroidered haire, bids them consider, whether they must go to heauen with such haire or no: and whereas they adorned themselves with winckles made of other womens haire, he asks them whether it may not bee the haire of a damned person or no. If it may be, he further demanded, how it may become them to wear it which professe themselves to be the sonnes and daughters of God. The like may be said of all other sins, they that bee of Gods house must beate themselves as free-men there. And when God hath made vs free, it doth not becom vs to make our selues bond-men of sin and Satan, and of this world.

Fifthly, seeing Christ went to heauen to prepare a place for all that beleue in him, here is a good duty for parents. Many of them are very careful to prefer their children to great places & noble-mens houses, and they are not to be blamed therefore: but if they would indeede be good parents to their children, they should first endeavour themselves to get roomes for them in heauen; they that do this, are good parents indeed. Some will say, how shall we get this preferment for them? Ans. God hath two houses, his Church, & the kingdom of heauen. The Church is his house of grace; heauen is his house of glorie. Now if thou wouldest bring thy child to a place in the house of glory, then thou art first of all to get him a place in the house of grace: bringing him vp to in the feare of God, that both in life and conuersation he may shew himselfe to bee a member of the Church: and then assure thy selfe, that after this life, he shall be remooued to the second house of God, which is the house of glory, & there bee free-man for euer in the kingdom of heauen. And if thou shalt thus provide for thy child, thou shalt not leave him as an orphan when thou diest, but he shall haue God for his father, and Christ for his brother, and the holy Ghost his Comforter. And therefore first of all & above all, remember to make thy child a member of Gods Church. Let the example of David excite all parents hereunto: I had rather (saith hee) be a doer-keeper in the house of God, then to dwell in the tabernacle of wickednes. For a day in thy courts is better then a thousand else-where. Psal. 84. 10.

Lastly, hence we may finde remedy against the tediousnes of sicknesse and feare of death. Thou which fearest death, remember that Christ is gone to heauen to prepare a place for thy body, where it must be glorified, and liue for euer with the blessed Trinitie, and all the Saints and Angels, though for a while it lye dead and rot in the graue. Remember this also, thou which continuest in any lingering sicknesse, Christ Iesus hath prepared a place for thee, wherein thou shalt rest in ioy and blisse without all paine or faintnesse.

The fourth benefit is, that Christ ascended vp to heauen to send the Comforter vnto his Church. This was a speciall end of his ascension, as appeares by Christs owne words, Ioh. 16. 7. It is (saith he) expedient that I go away for if I go not, the Comforter will not come: but if I depart, I will send him vnto you. And againe, Ioh. 14. 16. I will pray vnto the Father, and he shall giue you another Comforter, which shall abide with you for euer, even the spirit of truth. But some will say, how can Christ send his spirit vnto his Church, for the person sending, & the person sent are vnequall, whereas all three persons in Trinitie are equal, none greater or lesser then another, none inferior or superiour to other. Ans. It is true indeede: but we must know, that the action of sending in the Trinitie makes not the persons vnequall, but onely shewes a distinction and order among equals. The Father sends the Sonne, the Father and the Sonne both send the holy Ghost: yet the Father is not above the Sonne, neither the Father or the Sonne above the holy Ghost, but all are equal in degree, though in regard of order one is before another: and it stands with reason. For two men that are equal in degree, may vpon mutuall consent one send another. But it may be further demanded, how the holy Ghost can be sent which is euery where? Ans. The H. Ghost indeed is euery where, therefore he is sent not so much in regard of the presence of himselfe or substance, as of his operation whereby he reneweth and guideth the members of Christ.

Now then, this being so, here first we haue occasion to consider the misery of the world. When a man is troubled in his minde (as no vngodly man, but sometime he feels the terror of conscience for his finnes) then hee labours to remooue it by merry companie and pleasant bookes, whereas Christ at his ascension sent his holy Spirit to be the comforter of his Church: and therefore when we are troubled in conscience for our finnes, we should not seeke ease by such slender means, but rather seeke for the helpe & comfort of the H. Ghost, and labour to haue our finnes washed away, & our hearts purified and cleansed by the blood of Christ. As for wine, and mirth and such like of comfort, neither at the day of death, nor at the day of iudgement shall they stand vs in stead, or be able to comfort vs. Again, when crosses & calamities fall, the counsel of the minister is not sought for, but the helpe of such as are called cunning men & cunning women, that is, of charmers, inchanters, and figure-casters: a bad practise. Christ at his ascension sent his holy spirit vnto his Church and people, to be their guide & comforter in their calamities and miseries: and therefore when any man is in distresse, hee should haue recourse to the right means of comfort; namely the word and Sacraments, & there he should finde the assistance of the holy Ghost. Thus the Prophet Esaie informeth the Iewes: When they shall say vnto you: inquire at them which haue a spirit of divination, & at the fourthayers which whisper and murmur: Should not a people inquire at their God from the living to the dead? to the law, and to the testimony. Rebecca, when the two twinnes sitoue in her wombe, what did shee? the text faith, shee sent to aske the Lord. Yet commonly the men of these daies laue God, and seeke to the instruments of the diuell. To goe yet further, God vseth for sundry causes most of all to afflict his dearest children. Iudgement saith Peter, begins at Gods house. S. Luke saith, that a certaine woman was bound of Satan eighteen yeeres, but what was shee? a daughter of Abraham, that is, a child of God. When the like condition shall befall any of vs, let vs remember the ende why Christ ascended vp to heauen: & let vs pray vnto God that he will giue vs his spirit, that thereby we may be eased and deliuered, or els inabled to perseuere & continue in patience: and this is the true way and meanes to lighten & ease the burthen of all afflictions. And for this cause Paul praeth, that the Colosians might be strengthened with all might, through his glorious power, vnto all patience and long suffering with ioyfulness. For to whom soeuer God giues power to beleue, to them also hee giues power to suffer affliction by the inward worke of his spirit. Secondly, if Christ haue sent vnto his Church the holy spirit to be our comforter, our duty is, to prepare our bodies and soules to be fit temples and houses for so worthy a guest. If a man were certified that a Prince would come to his house, hee would dresse it vp, & haue all things in as good order as might be: and that not we much more endeavour to purifie & cleanse our soules and bodies, from all sinne, that they may be fit temples for the entertainment of the holy Ghost, whom Christ Iesus had sent to be our comforter? the Shunamite was careful to entertaine the man of God Elisha, for the said to her husband, Let vs make him a little chamber I pray thee, with walls, and let vs fit him there a bed and a steele, a table and a candle-sticke. Now how much more carefull ought wee to be to entertaine God himselfe, who is content to come and dwell with vs: and therefore we must adorne our bodies and soules with grace, that he may lodge, and suppe, and dine with vs, as he hath promised: but on the contrary, if wee defile our bodies with sin, wee banish the holy Ghost out of our hearts, and inuite the diuell to come & dwell with vs. For the more a man defileth his body, the fitter and cleaner it is for him. And to conclude this point, let vs remember that saying which is vsed of some, that Christ when he went hence, gaue vs his pawne, namely, his spirit, to assure vs, that he would come to vs againe, and also hee tooke with him our pawne, namely, his flesh, to assure vs further, that we should ascend vp to him.

Thus much for the benefits of Christs ascension. Now follow the duties whereunto we are moued, and they are two. First, we must be here admonished, to renounce the vbiqutry, and the error of the reall & essentiall presence of the bodie of Christ in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; as flatly oppugning this article of Christs ascension into heauen. For it is flat against the nature of a true bodie to subsist in many places at once. Secondly, as the Apostles then did, when they saw Christ ascending vp into heauen, so must we do also: while he was present with them, they gaue him honour, but when they saw him ascending, they adored him with far greater reuerence: and so must we now for the same cause bow the knees of our hearts vnto him.

Thus much of the second degree of the exaltation of Christ: Now follows the third, in these words, And sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty. In the handling whereof, we are first to shew the meaning of the words, secondly, the comforts and benefits that redound to Gods Church, thirdly, the duties that we are moued vnto. For the meaning of the words: if we speake properly, God hath neither right hand nor left, neither can hee be said to sit or stand; for God is not a body, but a spirit: the words therefore containe a borrowed speech fro earthly kings & potentates, whose manner and custome hath bene, to place such persons at their right hands, whom they purposed to aduance to any speciall office or dignity. So, King Salomon when his mother came to speake with him rose vp from his throne, & met her, and caused a seat to be set at his owne right hand, and set her vpon it, in token, no doubt, of honour which hee gaue vnto her. To the same purpose David saith, Vpon thy right hand did stand the Queen in a vesture of gold. And the sonnes of Zebadiah made iure to Christ, that one of them might sit at his right hand, and the other at his left in his kingdom. Now their request was to haue the two speciall and principall dignities of his kingdom. Thus we see it is manifest, that the sitting at the right hand of an earthly Prince signifieth aduancement into authority and honour: and therefore the same phrase of speech applied to Christ signifieth two things. First, his full and manifest exaltation in dignity, honour, and glorie: and

Luk. 24. 42.

1 King 2. 19.

Psal. 45. 9. Mark. 16. 37.

Phil. 2. 9. in this sense it is said, that to him is given a name that is above all names, that at the name of Iesus every knee shall bow. Secondly, it signifieth his full and manifest exaltation into the authority & government of his kingdom: which spreads it selfe ouer heauen and earth: so Dauid saith, Psalm 110. 1. The Lord said vnto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool. Which place being alledged by S. Paul repeating the words, but changing the phrase, is thus set downe: He shall reigne till he haue put all his enemies vnder his feete. 1. Cor. 15. 25. And to speake in briebe, the scope of the words is to shew, that Christ God and man after his ascension is aduanced to such an estate in which he hath fulnesse of glory, power, maiestie, and authority in the presence of his Father and all the Saints and holy Angels.

Furthermore in the words three circumstances must be obserued. The first, is the place where Christ is thus aduanced, noted in the former article, Hee ascended into heauen, and sits in the place in heauen at the right hand of God. The place then, where Christ Iesus in both his natures, as he is God and also man, doth rule in full glory, power, & maiestie is heauen it selfe. To which effect Paul saith, Eph. 1. 20. God raised Christ from the dead, and put him at his right hand in the heavenly places. And in the Epistle to the Hebrewes it is said, he sits at the right hand of the maiestie in highest places. This point well considered, serueth to discouer the oueright of sundry Diuines, which hold and teach, that to sit at the right hand of God; is to be euerie where in all places; and not in heauen onely, that they might hereby lay a foundation for the vbiquty of *Christ*s manhood: which neuertheless the heauens must containe till the time that all things be restored. The second circumstance, is the time when Christ began to sit at the right hand of God the Father, which is to be gathered by the order of the articles. For first, Christ died & was buried, then he rose again & ascended into heauen, & after his ascension he is said to sit at the right hand of his Father. This order is also noted vnto vs by S. Paul. Who shall condemne? (saith he) it is Christ which is dead, yea or rather risen againe, who is also at the right hand of God. And S. Marke saith, when Christ was risen againe he appeared to his disciples, and after he had spoken vnto them, he was receiued into heauen, and set at the right hand of God. But it may be demaied, how this can stand with truth, that Christ should not begin to sit at the right hand of his Father before the ascension, considering he is one God with the Father, and therefore an absolute and soueraigne King from all eternitie. Answer. As Christ is God or the Word of the Father, hee is coequal and coeternal with him in the regiment of his kingdom: and hath neither beginning, middle, nor ending thereof; yet as Christ is God incarnate, and in one person God-man or Man-god; hee began after his ascension and not before, to sit at the right hand of his Father: and as S. Peter saith, was made Lord; partly because as he was God, hee did then manifest himselfe to be that which indeed hee was before, namely, God & Lord of heauen & earth; and partly, because as he was man, he receiued dominion or Lordship from the Father, which he had not before, & thereby was euen in his manhood exalted to be king of heaue & earth; and in this sense Christ saith of himselfe, All power is giuen to me in heauen and earth. The third circumstance, is concerning the person at whose right hand Christ sits, noted in the words of the article, of God the Father Almighty; whereby is signified, that he receiues all the honour, power, and glory of his kingdom from his Father: as he, that is set at the right hand of a Prince, receiues the honour & authority which he hath, from the prince. Now if it bee alledged, that by this meanes Christ shall bee inferior to his Father, because he which receiue honour of another, is inferior to him of whom hee receiue it: in the answer is, that in Christ we must consider his person and his officin respect of his person, as he is the eternal Sonne of God, he is equall to the Father, and is not here said to sit at his right hand; yet in respect of the office which he beares, namely, as he is a Mediatour, and as he is man, he is inferior to the Father, and receiues his kingdom from him. As he is God, he is our King and head, and hath no head more then the Father: as hee is Mediatour, he is also our head, yet so as he is vnder the Father as beeing his head. And wee must not thinke it strange, that one and the same thing should be both equal and inferior to another, diuers respects considered.

Now in that *Christ*s placing at the right hand of his Father argues inferiority between the Father and him, hence we learne that they are deceiued which from this article gather, that in the glorification of Christ there is a transfusion of the properties of the God-head, as omnipotency, omnipresence, &c. into his manhood. For this is to abolish all inferiority, and to make an equality between the creature and the Creator.

And whereas againe the word Almighty is repeated, it is done vpon speciall reason: because Christ sitting at the right hand of God doth presuppose omnipotency. For in vaine were all power in heauen and earth giuen to him, vnicles he were omnipotent as the Father to execute the same. And therefore the song of the Elders was on this manner: Worthy is the Lambe that was killed to receive power and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and praise, Rev. 5. 2. 2.

The benefits which redound vnto vs by *Christ*s sitting at the right hand of God are two, one concerns his priesthood, the other his kingly office. The benefit rising from his priesthood is his Intercession for vs: for this is one of the ends why Christ is now exalted in glory, and sits at the right hand of his Father; namely, to make request in the behalfe of all that come vnto him, as Paul saith, Christ is risen againe, and sitteth at the right hand of God, and maketh request for vs.

namely,

Now that we may rightly vnderstand what his Intercession is, wee are to consider these points. First, to whom it is made: secondly, in what manner: thirdly, whether it be made by Christ alone or no: fourthly, what be the fruits and benefits thereof: fifthly, the duties whereunto wee are moued thereby. For the first, Intercession is, to make sute, request, or intertreatie in some ones behalfe to another: and this is done by Christ for vs vnto God, as Paul saith, There is one God, and one Mediatour betweene God & man, which is the man Christ Iesus. Here at the very first ariseth a difficultie: for in every intercession there be three parties: the person offended; the person offending; the intercessour, distinct fro them both. Now if Christ the Son of God, make intercession to God for man, then he maketh intercession to himselfe, because hee is true God, which cannot be: how then shall Christ be a Mediatour?

Answer. This point hath so troubled the Church of Rome, that for the resolving of it, they haue deuised an error, auouching that Christ is Mediatour onely as he is man, not as hee is God, which is vntue. For as both natures doe concurre in the work of satisfaction, so likewise do they both concur in the work of intercession: & therefore a more meet & couenient answer is this; Christ Iesus God-man in both natures is directly our Mediatour to the first person the Father, as S. Iohn saith, If any man sinne, we haue an Advocate with the Father, Iesu Christ the right.

And thus we haue three persons in the worke of intercession really distinguished. The partie offended is God the Father; the partie offending is man; and thirdly, the intercessour distinct from them both, is Christ the second person in Trinity. For howsoeuer in Godhead he and the Father be one, yet in person they are really distinguished, and hee as it were in the middle betweene the Father and vs: for the Father is God and not man: wee that beleeue in Christ are men not God: Christ himselfe both man and God. It may be further replied, that this answer will not stand, because not only the Father is offended, but also the Sonne and the holy Ghost: and therefore there must be a Mediatour to them also. Ans. The intercession of Christ is directed to the Father: the first person immediately: now the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost haue all one indiuisible elience, and by consequent one and the same will; whereupon the Father being appealed by *Christ*s intercession; the Son and the holy Ghost are also appealed with him and in him. Thus then intercession is made to the whole Trinity, but yet immediately and directly to the first person, and in him to the rest.

The second point to be considered, is the manner of his intercession vnto his Father, We must not imagine, that Christ now in heauen kneeles down on his knees, & vtters words, & puts vp a supplication for all the faithfull to God the Father: for that is not becomming the maiestie of him that sits at the right hand of God. But the manner of his intercession is thus to be conceived: When one is to speake to an earthly Prince in the behalfe of another; first of all hee must come into the presence of the king, and secondly, make his request: and both these, Christ performeth for vs vnto God. For the first, after his ascension he entred into heauen, where hee did present vnto his Father, first of all his owne person in two natures; secondly, the inuoluable merits of his death and passion, in which hee was well pleased. And wee must further vnderstand, that as on the crosse hee stood in our roome, so in heauen hee now appeares as a publike person in our stead, representing all the elect that shall beleeue in him, as the holy Ghost saith, Christ Iesu ascended vp into heauen, to appeare in the sight of God for vs. And for the second, Christ makes request for vs, in that hee will be according to both his natures, and desireth as hee is man, that the Father would accept his satisfaction in the behalfe of all that are giuen vnto him. And that he makes request on this manner, I proue it thus: Looke what was his request in our behalfe when hee was here vpon earth, the same for substance it continues still in heauen: but here on earth the substance of his request was, that hee would desire that his Father would be well pleased with vs for his merits, as appeares by his prayer in Saint Iohn, Father, I will that those which thou hast giuen me be with me.

And thus we haue three persons in the worke of intercession really distinguished. The partie offended is God the Father; the partie offending is man; and thirdly, the intercessour distinct from them both, is Christ the second person in Trinity. For howsoeuer in Godhead he and the Father be one, yet in person they are really distinguished, and hee as it were in the middle betweene the Father and vs: for the Father is God and not man: wee that beleeue in Christ are men not God: Christ himselfe both man and God. It may be further replied, that this answer will not stand, because not only the Father is offended, but also the Sonne and the holy Ghost: and therefore there must be a Mediatour to them also. Ans. The intercession of Christ is directed to the Father: the first person immediately: now the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost haue all one indiuisible elience, and by consequent one and the same will; whereupon the Father being appealed by *Christ*s intercession; the Son and the holy Ghost are also appealed with him and in him. Thus then intercession is made to the whole Trinity, but yet immediately and directly to the first person, and in him to the rest.

And thus we haue three persons in the worke of intercession really distinguished. The partie offended is God the Father; the partie offending is man; and thirdly, the intercessour distinct from them both, is Christ the second person in Trinity. For howsoeuer in Godhead he and the Father be one, yet in person they are really distinguished, and hee as it were in the middle betweene the Father and vs: for the Father is God and not man: wee that beleeue in Christ are men not God: Christ himselfe both man and God. It may be further replied, that this answer will not stand, because not only the Father is offended, but also the Sonne and the holy Ghost: and therefore there must be a Mediatour to them also. Ans. The intercession of Christ is directed to the Father: the first person immediately: now the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost haue all one indiuisible elience, and by consequent one and the same will; whereupon the Father being appealed by *Christ*s intercession; the Son and the holy Ghost are also appealed with him and in him. Thus then intercession is made to the whole Trinity, but yet immediately and directly to the first person, and in him to the rest.

world. For whatsoever Christ willeth, the same also the Father being well pleased with him, willeth; and therefore whatsoever Christ as a Mediator willeth for vs at the hands of his Father, in effect or substance is a request or prayer.

The third point is, that Christ alone, and none with him makes intercession for vs. And this I prove by induction of particulars. First of all, this office appertains not to the angels: they are indeed ministering spirits for the good of Gods chosen; they reioyce when a sinner is converted; and when he dieth, they are ready to carry his soule into Abrahams bosome; and God otherwhiles vseth them as messengers to reueale his will: thus the Angel Gabriel brings a message to Zachary the Priest, that God had heard his prayer: but it is not once said in all the Scriptures, that they make intercession to God for vs. As for the Saints departed, they cannot make intercession for vs, because they know not our particular estates here on earth, neither can they heare our requests. And therefore if we should pray to them to pray for vs, we should substitute them into the room of God, because we ascribe that to them, which is proper to him, namely, the searching of the heart, and the knowledge of all things done vpon earth; though withall wee should say, that they doe this not by themselves, but of God. As for the faithfull here on earth, indeed they haue warrant, yea commandement to pray one for another: yet can they not make intercession for vs. For first, hee that makes intercession must bring something of his owne, that may be of value and price with God to procure the grant of his request: secondly, he must doe it in his owne name: but the faithfull on earth make request to God one for another, not in their owne names, nor for their owne merits, but in the name, and for the merits of Christ. It is a prerogative belonging to Christ alone to make a request in his owne name, and for his owne merits: we therefore conclude, that the work of intercession is the sole worke of Christ, God and man, not belonging to any creature beside in heaven or in earth. And whereas the Papists cannot content themselves with his intercession alone, as being most sufficient: it argues plainly, that they doubt either of his power, or of his will: whereupon their prayers turne to sinne.

The fruits and benefits of Christs intercession are these. First, by means of it we are assured, that those which are repenta sinners shall stand and appeare righteous before God for ever: at what time soever Christ, being now in heaven, and there presenting himselfe and his merits before his Father, shewes himselfe desirous and willing, and they whose hearts they are being sinners, should be accepted of God for the same, even then immediately at that very instant this his will is done, and they are accepted as righteous before God: indeede. When a man looks vpon things directly through the ayre, they appeare in their proper formes and colours as they are, but if they be looked vpon through a Greene glasse, they all appeare Greene: so likewise if God behold vs as we are in our selues, we appeare as vile and damnable sinners: but if he looke vpon vs as we are presented before his throne in heaven, in the person of our Mediator Christ Iesus, willing that we should be approued for his merits: then we appeare without all spot and wrinkle before him. And this is the vfe Paul makes hereof. It is God (saith he) that iustificeth: and the reason is rendred: for it is Christ that is dead, yea or rather which is risen againe, who is also at the right hand of God, and makes request for vs.

Secondly, Christs intercession serueth to preserve all repentant sinners in the estate of grace: that being once iustified and sanctified, they may so continue to the end. For when any seruant of God is ouertaken by the corruption of his owne nature, and falls into any particular sinne, then Christs intercession is made as a blessed hand to apply thealue of his death to that particular sore. For he continually appeares before God, and shewes himselfe to be willing that God the Father should accept his one onely sacrifice for the daily and particular finnes of this or that particular man: and this is done, that a man being iustified before God, may not fall away quite from grace, but for every particular sinne may be humbled, and receive pardon. If this were not, sojour estate should be most miserable, considering that for every sinne committed by vs after our repentance, we deserve to be cast out of the fauour of God.

Thirdly, Christs intercession serueth to make our good works acceptable to God. For euery in the best works that a man can doe, there are two wants. First, they are good onely in part: secondly, they are mingled with sinne. For as a man is partly spirit or grace, and partly flesh; so are his works partly gracious, and partly fleshly. And because grace is onely begun in this life, therefore all the works of grace in this life are sinfull and imperfect. Now by Christs intercession his satisfaction is applied to our persons, and by consequent the defect of our works is covered and remoued, and they are approued of God the Father. In a vision S. Iohn saw an Angell, standing before the altar with a golden censer full of sweete odours to offer vp with the prayers of the Saints vpon the same. And this signifies, that Christ presents our works before the throne of God, and by his intercession sanctifies them, that they may be acceptable to God. And therefore we must remember that when wee doe any thing that is accepted of God, it is not for our sakes, but by reason of the value and vigour of Christs merit.

Fourthly, the intercession of Christ made in heaven, breedeth and causeth in the hearts of men vpon earth that beleene another intercession of the spirit, as S. Paul saith, He giueth vs his spirit, which helpeth our infirmities, and maketh request for vs with sighes, which cannot be expressed, but he which searcheth the heart, knoweth what is the meaning of the spirit, for he maketh request for the Saints, according to the will of God. Now the spirit is said to make request, in that it stirres and moues euery contrite heart to pray with sighes and groanes vnspokeable to God for things needfull: and this grace is a fruite deriued from the intercession of Christ in heaven by the operation of the spirit. For as the Sunne though the bodie of it abide in the heauens, yet the beames of it descend to vs that are on the earth: So the intercession of Christ made in heaven is tyed as it were to his person alone, yet the groanes and desires of the touched heart, as the beames thereof, are here on earth among the faithfull. And therefore if we desire to know whether Christ make intercession for vs or no, we need not to ascend vp into the heauens to learne the truth: but we must descend into our owne hearts and looke whether Christ haue giuen vs his spirit, which makes vs cry vnto God, and make request to him with groanes and sighes that cannot be expressed: and if we finde this in our hearts, it is an euident and infallible signe, that Christ continually makes intercession for vs in heaven. He that would know whether the Sun shine in the firmament, must not climbe vp into the cloudes to looke, but search for the beames thereof vpon the earth: which when he sees, he may conclude, that the Sunne shines in the firmament. And if we would know whether Christ in heaven makes intercession for vs, let vs ransacke our owne consciences, and there make search whether we feele the spirit of Christ crying in vs, Abba, Father. As for those that neuer feele this worke of Gods spirit in them, their case is miserable, whatsoever they be. For Christ as yet makes no intercession for them, considering these two alwaies goe together, his intercession in heaven, and the work of his spirit in the hearts of men, mouing them to bewaile their owne finnes with sighes and groanes that cannot be expressed, and to cry, and to pray vnto God for grace: and therefore all such, whether they be young or old, that neuer could pray, but mumble vp a few words for fashions sake, cannot assure themselves to haue any part in Christs intercession in heaven.

The duties to be learned hence are these. First, whereas Christ makes intercession for vs, it teacheth all men to be most careful to loue and like this blessed Mediatour, and to be ready & willing to become his seruants & disciples, & that not for forme & fashion sake onely, but in all truth and sincerity of heart. For hee ascended to heaven, and there sits at the right hand of his Father to make request for vs, that we might be deliuered from hell, and come to eternall life. Wicked Haman procured letters from Abasuerus, for the destruction of all the Iewes, men, women, and children in his dominions: this done, Hester the Queene makes request to the king that her people might be saved, and the letters of Haman reuoked: she obtaines her request, & freedom was giuen, and contrary letters of ioyfull deliuerance were sent in post-hast to all Prouinces where the Iewes were. Whereupon arose a wonderfull ioy & gladnesse among the Iewes, and it is said, that thereupon many of the people of the land became Iewes. Well now, behold a greater matter among vs then this: for there is the hand-writing of condemnation, the law; and therein the sentence of a double death, of bodie and soule, and Satan as wicked Haman accuseth vs, and seekes by all means our condemnation: but yet behold, not any earthly Hester, but Christ Iesus the Sonne of God is come downe from heaven, and hath taken away this hand-writing of condemnation, and cancelled it vpo the crosse, and is now ascended into heaven, and there sits at the right hand of his Father, and makes request for vs and in him his Father is wel pleased, & yeeldeth to his request in our behalfe. Now then what must we doe in this case? Surely, look as the Persians became Iewes when they heard of their factie: so we in life and conuersation must become Christians, turne to Christ, imbrace his doctrine, and practise the same vnto him. And we must not content our selues with a formall profession of religio, but search our owne hearts, & tie vnto Christ for the pardon of our finnes, and that earnestly, as for life and death, as the theefe doth at the barre, when the Iudge is giuing sentence against him. When we shall thus humble our selues, then Christ Iesus that sits at the right hand of God will plead our cause, and be our attorney vnto his Father, & his Father againe will accept of his request in our behalfe. Then shall we of Persians become Iewes, and of the children of this world become the sonnes of God. Secodly, when we pray to God, we must not doe as the blinde world doth, as it were, rush vpon God in praying to him without consideration had to the Mediatour between vs and him, but we alwaies must direct our prayers to God in the name of Christ, for hee is aduanced to power and glorie in heaven, that hee might bee a fit patron for vs, who might prefer and present our prayers to God the Father, that thereby they might be accepted, and wee might obtaine our request. So likewise wee must giue thanks to God in the name of Christ: for in him and for his sake God doth bestow on vs his blessings.

Thus much of Christs intercession: the other benefite which concerne Christs kingly office, is that hee sits at the right hand of his Father for the administration of that speciall kingdome which is committed to him. I say speciall, because he is our king, not onely by right of creation governing all things created together, together with the Father and the holy Ghost, but also more specially by the right of redemption in respect of another kingdom, not of this world, but eternall and spirituall, respecting the very conscience of man. In the administration whereof hee hath absolute power to command and forbid, to condemne and absolve, and therefore hath the keys of heaven and hell to open & shut, which power we measure beside; no nor the Angels in heaven can have. For the better vnderstanding of this which I say, we are to consider, first, the dealing of Christ toward his owne Church; secondly, his dealing in respect of his enemies. And his dealing toward his owne Church stands in foure things. The first, is the collecting or gathering of it: and this is a speciall end of his sitting at the right hand of his Father. Christ said to his Disciples, I haue chosen you out of this world, and the same may truly be said of all the Elect, that Christ in his good time will gather them all to himselfe, that they may be a peculiar people to God. And this action of his in collecting the Church, is nothing els but a translation of those whom hee hath ordained to life euerslasting out of the kingdom of darkness, in which they haue serued sinne & Satan, into his owne kingdom of grace, that they may be ruled & guided by him eternally. And this hee doth by two waies: first, by preaching of the word, for it is a powerful outward meanes, whereby hee singeth & worketh his owne seruants from the blind and foolish world, as Paul saith, He gaue some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Euangelists, and some Pastours and teachers, for the gathering together of the Saints. And hence we learne to things. The first, that euery minister of Gods word, and euery one that intendeth to take vpon him that calling, must propound vnto himselfe principally this end, to single out man from man, and gather out of this world such as belong to the Church of Christ: and as Jeremie saith, to separate the precious from the vile. The second: that all those which will be good hearers of Gods word, must shew themselves so farre forth conformable vnto it, that it may gather them out of the world; and that it may worke a change in them, and make them the seruants of Christ: and if the preaching of the word doe not worke this good in our hearts, then the end will be a separation from the presence of God. Christ when hee came neere Iherusalem, and considered their rebellion whereby they refused to be gathered vnto him, wept ouer it, and said, O Ierusalem, Ierusalem, thou which flonist the Prophets, and killest them that are sent vnto thee, how often would I haue gathered thy children together as the henne gathereth her chickens vnder her wings, and thou wouldest not. And by this he teacheth, that if the preaching of the word turne not vs to Christ, it turnes to our destruction.

The other meanes of gathering the Church, and that more principall, is the inward operation of the spirit, whereby the minde is enlightened, the heart is mollified, and the whole man is conuerted to God. And this ordinarily is ioyned with the ministry or preaching of the word, as appeareth by the example of Lydia, S. Luke saith, God opened her heart when she attended to the doctrine of the Apostles. And by the example of Paul, when Christ saith, Saul, Saul, why persecuest thou me at this very speeche he is conuerted, and saith, Who art thou, Lord? what wilt thou that I doe? And this is manifest also by experience. There is nothing in the world more contrary to the nature of man, then the preaching of the word; for it is the wisdom of God, to which the flesh is enmity. Here then it may be demanded, how it can be in force to turne any man to God. Ans. The word preached is the fceptor of Christs kingdom; which against the nature of man, by the operation of the holy Ghost ioyned therewith, doth bend and bow the heart, will, and affections of man to the will of Christ.

The second worke of Christ is, after the Church is gathered, to guide it in the way to life euerslasting. Hee is the shepherd of his Church, which guideth his flocke in and out, and therefore Paul saith, They that are Christs, are guided by his spirit. And by Eisay the Lord saith, those his seruants which are turned from idolatry, he will guide in the way, and their eares shall heare a voice behind them saying, This is the way, walke in it, when thou turnest to the right hand and to the left. Which voice is nothing els but the voice of the holy Ghost in the mouth of the ministers, directing them in the waies of God. The children of Israel were traueiling from Egypt to the land of Canaan full fouretye years, whereas they might haue gone the iourney in forty daies. Their way was through the wilderness of Arabia, their guides were a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night: the manner of their iourney was this: when the pillar mooued, they mooued: when the pillar stood still, they stood still: and so long as the pillar either mooued or stood still, they likewise mooued or stood still. And by all this a further matter; namely, the regiment of Christ ouer his Church, was signified. Euery one of vs are as passengers and trauelers, not to any earthly Canaan, but to the heavenly Ierusalem: and in this iourney wee are to passe through the wild and desert wilderness of this world: our guide is Christ himselfe, figured by the pillar of fire and the cloud: because by his word and spirit he sheweth vs how farre we may goe in euery action, and where we must stand, and he goes before vs as our guide to life euerslasting.

The third worke of Christ is, to exercise his Church vnto spirituall obedience by manifold troubles, croeses, temptations & afflictions in this world, as earthly kings vse to traine and exercise their subiects. When our Saviour Christ was with his disciples in a ship, there arose a great tempest vpon the sea, so as the ship was almost couered with waues; but hee

14.

was asleepe: and his disciples came & awoke him, saying, Sane vs master, we perishe. Behold here a liuely picture of the dealing of Christ with his seruants in this life. His manner is to place them vpon the sea of this world, and to raise vp against them bleake stormes and flaes of contrary winds by their enemies, the flesh, the diuell, the world. And further, in the midst of all these dangers, he for his owne part maketh as though hee lay asleepe for a time, that he may the better make triall of their patience, faith, and obedience. And the ends for which he vseth this spirituall exercise are these. The first, to make all his subiects to humble themselves, and as it were to goe crooked and buckle vnder their offences committed against his maiestie in times past. Thus Iob after the Lord had long afflicted him, and laid his hand reue vpon him, saith, Behold I am vile; and again, I labour my selfe and repent in dust and ashes. In the same manner we being his subiects and people, must looke to be exercised with temptations and afflictions which shall make vs bend and bow for our finnes past, as the old man goeth crooked and doubles to the earth by reason of age. The second, is to preuent finnes in the time to come. A Father when hee sees his childe too bold & venturous about fire and water, takes it and holds it ouer the fire or ouer the water, as though he would burne or drowne it, whereas his purpose indeede is nothing els but to preuent danger in time to come. Unlike manner Christs subiects are bold to sinne by nature, and therefore to preuent a mischiefe hee doth exercise them with afflictions, and seemes for a season as though hee would quite forsake his Church; but his meaning is onely to preuent offences in times to come. The third end is, to continue his subiects in obedience vnto his commandments: so the Lord saith, when hee would bring his Church from idolatry: Behold, I will stoppey way with thornes, and make an hedge, that shee shall not finde her pathes. The holy Ghost here borrowes a comparison from bestes, which going in the way, see greene pastures, & desire to enter in, and therefore goe to the hedge, but feeling the sharpnes of the thornes dare not adventure to goe in: So Gods people like vnto wild bestes in respect of sin, viewing the greene pastures of this world, which are the pleasures thereof, are greatly affected therewith: and if it were not for sharpnes of croeses and temptations, which are Gods spirituall hedge by which hee keepeth them in, they would range out of the way, and rush into sinne, as the horse into the battell.

The fourth and last worke of Christ in respect of his Church is, that he sits at the right hand of his Father to defend the same against the rage of all enemies whatsoever they are: & this hee doth two waies. First, by giuing to his seruants sufficient strength to beare all the assaults of their enemies, the world, the flesh, and the diuell. For Paul saith, those to whom the Lord hath giuen the gift of faith, to them also he hath giuen this gift to suffer afflictions. And the same Apostle also prayeth for the Colossians, that they may be strengthened with all might through his glorious power, vnto all patience and long suffering with ioyfullnesse. The evidence hereof wee may more plainly see in the most constant deaths of the Martyrs of Christ, recorded both in the word of God, and in the Church-histories. It is wonderfull to see their courage and constancie. For at such times as they haue beene brought to execution, they refused to be bound or chained, willingly suffering most cruell tormentes, without shrinking or feare; such courage and strenght the Lord gaue them to withstand the violent rage of all their aduersaries.

Secondly, he defends his Church by limiting the power and rage of all enemies. And hence it is, that although the power of the Church of God on earth be weak and slender in it selfe, and contrariwise the power of the diuell exceeding great, yet can hee not so much as touch the people of God. And hee more preuailes by inward suggestions and temptations then by outward violence. And if it were not that the power of Christ doth bridle his rage, there could be no aboad for the Church of Christ in this world.

Thus we haue seene what are the works of Christ ingouerning his Church: and wee for our parts that profess our selues to be members thereof; must shew our selues to be soindeed, by an experience of these workes of his in our owne hearts. And we must suffer him to gather vs vnder his owne wing, and to guide vs by his word & spirit; & we are to acquaint our selues with those spirituall exercises, whereby his good pleasure is to nurture vs to all obedience. Lastly, we must depend on his aide & protection in all estates. And seeing we in this land haue had peace and rest with the Gospell of Christ among vs a long time, by Gods especiall goodness, wee must now after these daies of peace looke for daies of tribulation; we must not imagine that our ease and liberty will continue alwaies. For looke as the day & night doe one follow another: so likewise in the administration of the Church here vpon earth, Christ suffereth a continuall intercourse betwene peace and perfection. Thus he hath done from the beginning hitherto, and wee may resolve our selues, that so it will continue till the end: and therefore it shall be good for vs in these our daies of peace, to prepare our selues for troubles and afflictions: and when troubles come, wee must still remember the fourth worke of Christ in the government of his Church, namely, that in all dangers hee will defend vs against the rage of our enemies, as well by giuing vs power and strenght to beare with patience and ioy whatsoever shall be laid vpon vs, as also bridle the rage of the world, the flesh, and the diuell, so as they shall not be able to exercise their power and malice to the full against vs.

Thus much of the dealing of Christ towards his owne Church and people. Now followeth the second point, namely, his dealing toward his enemies; and here by enemies I vnderstand all creatures, but especially men, which as they are by nature enemies to Christ and his kingdome, so they perseuer in the same enmitie vnto the end. Now his dealing towards them is, in his good time to worke their confusion, as he himselfe saith, These mine enemies that would not that I should reigne over them, bring them hither, and slay them before me. And David saith, The Lord will bruis his enemies with a rod of iron, and break them in peeces like a potters vessel. And againe, I will make thine enemies thy foot-stoole. As Ishab dealt with the five kings that were hid in the caue; hee first makes a slaughter of their armies; then he brings them forth and makes the people to set their feete on their neckes, and to hang them on fue trees: So Christ deales with his enemies; he treades them vnder his feete, and maketh a slaughter: not so much of their bodies as of their soules. And this the Church of God finds to be true by experience, as well as it finds the loue of Christ towards it selfe.

Now he confounds his enemies two waies: The first, is by hardnesse of heart, which ariseth when God withdraweth his grace from him, and leaueh him to himselfe, so as he goeth on forward from sinne to sinne, and neuer repenteth to the last gaspe. And wee must esteeme of it as a most fearefull and terrible iudgement of God: for when the heart is possessed therewith, it becomes so flintie and rebellious, that a man will neuer relent or turne to God. This is manifest in Pharaoh, for though God sent most grievous plagues both vpon him and all the land of Egypt, yet would he not submit himselfe, save onely for a fit, while the hand of God was vpon him: for after, he returned to the former obstinacie, in which he continued till hee was drowned in the sea. And this iudgement of God is the more fearefull, because when a man is in the middelt of all his miserie, hee feels no misery. And asin some kinde of sicknesse a man may die languishing: so where hardnesse of heart reignes wholly and finally, a man may defend to the pit of hell triumphing and reioicing. And to come neere to our felues, it is to be feared lest this iudgement of all iudgements be among vs in these our daies. For where is any turning to God by repentance? Still men goe forward in sinne without remorse. Wee haue had the word preached among vs a long time, but it taketh no place in mens hearts. They are not softened with the hammer of Gods word; any they are like the smiths stithy or anuill, which the more it is beat with the hammer, the harder it is. But in the feare of God, let vs seeke to be changed, & take heed: the deathfullnesse of sinne is wonderfull. Let vs not be carried away with an ouerweining

A of our felues; a man may have good gifts of God; as the gift of knowledge, the gift of prophecy, the gift of conceiuing a prayer (I say not of praying truly:) and hereupon thinke himselfe in good case; and yet for all this haue nothing but an impenitent and flintie heart. For this cause it standeth euery man vpon to looke vnto it, lest this iudgement of God take hold on him. And that wee may auoide the same, wee must labour for two things: I. to feeble the heauy burden of our finnes, and to be touched in conscience for them, euen as wee are troubled in our bodies with the aches and paines thereof: this is a token of grace. II. We must labour to feeble in our soules the want of Christ: we say indeede that we feele it, but it is a very great matter to haue an heart that doth open it selfe, and as it were gape after Christ, as the dry and thirstie land where no water is. Though wee haue knowledge and learning neuer so much, and many other gifts of God, yet if we haue not broken hearts that feele the burden of our finnes, and the want of Christ, and that wee stand in neede of euery drop of his blood for the washing away of all these our sins, our case is miserable. And the rather wee must preuent this hardnesse of heart, because Christ Iesus in heauen sits at the right hand of his Father in full power and authority, to kill and confound all those that bee his enemies, and will not submit themselves to beare his yoaake.

C The second way is, by final desperation, I say, final, because all kinde of desperation is not euill. For when a man despaireth of himselfe and of his owne power in the matter of his saluation, it tends to his eternall comfort. But final desperation is, when a man vtterly despaires of pardon of his owne finnes, and of life cuerlasting. Examples hereof we haue in Saul that slue himselfe, and in Achitophel and Iudas, that hanged themselves. This sinne is caused thus: So many finnes as a man committeth without repentance, so many most bloody wounds he giueh vnto his own soule: and either in death or life God makes him feele the smart, and the huge weight of them all: whereby the soule sinks downe to the gulfe of despair without recovery. God said to Cain: If thou dost amisse, sinne lyeth at the doore. Where hee vseth a borrowed speech from wild beastes, who so long as they are sleeping stirre not; but being awaked, they rise in a mans face, and rend out his throat. In like manner the finnes which thou committest, lye at the doore of thine heart, though thou feele them not: and if thou do not preuent the danger by speedy repentance, God will make thee to feele them once before thou dye, and raise vp sixteir terrors in thy conscience, that thou shalt thinke thyselfe to bee in hell before thou art in it: and therefore it is good for euery man to take heede how hee continues an enemy to Christ. The best counse is to turne betime from our finnes, and become the friends of Christ, that so wee may escape these fearefull iudgements.

And whereas Christ in this manner governs all things in heauen and earth, we are bound so to performe vnto him three duties: reuerence, obedience, thankfulness. For the first, Paul saith, Phil. 2. 10. God hath exalted him and giuen him a name above all names, that at the name of Iesus (which name is his exaltation in heauen in full power and glory) should euery knee bow. We dare not so much as speake of an earthly king vnreuerently: what reuerence then doe we owe vnto Christ the king of heauen and earth? Dauids heart was touched in that he had cut off but the lap of Sauls garment, when hee might haue slaine him, because he was the Lords annointed, 1 Sam. 24. 6. oh then, how much more ought our hearts to be touched, if we shall in the least measure dishonour Christ Iesus our Lord and King? Secondly, we are here taught to performe obedience vnto him, and doe him all the homage we can. The master of his family in all his lawfull commandments must be obeyed: now the Church of Christ is a family, and we are members thereof; therefore we must yeeld obedience to him in all things: for all his commandments are iust. When Saul was chosen king over Israel, certaine men which feared God, whose hearts God had touched, followed him to Gibeah, and brought him presents; but the wicked despised him, 1 Sam. 10. 26, 27. the same is much more to be verified in vs toward Christ our Lord. We must haue our hearts touched with desire to performe obedience vnto him: if not, we are men of Belial that despise him. If this obedience were put in practise, the Gospel would haue better success in the hearts of the people, and the Lords Sabbath would be better kept, and men would beare greater love both to God and to their neighbours then now they doe. The third dutie which we owe vnto him is thankfulness, for the endles care which he shewes in the governing and preferring of vs. When David waxed old, and had made Salomon his sonne king in his stead, all the people shouted & cried, God saue king Salomon, God saue king Salomon, so as the earth rang againe, 1 King. 1. 39, 40. Shall the people of Israel thus reioyce at the crowning of Salomon, and shall not we much more reioyce when as Christ Iesus is placed in heauen at the right hand of his Father, and hath the cuerlasting scepter of his kingdome put into his hand? And we are to shew this thankfulness vnto him by doing any thing in this world that may tend to his honour & glory, though it be with the aduenture of our liues. When Dauid desired to drinke of the water of the well of Bethleem three of his mighty men went & brake into the house of the Philistines, & brought him water, 2 Sam. 23. 15, 16. thus they ventured their liues for Dauids sake: and shall not wee much more willingly venture our liues to doe Christ seruice in token of thankfulness for his continual preferring of vs?

Thus much of the highest degree of Christs exaltation in his kingdome. Now follows the last point to be considered concerning Christ in these words, From thence he shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead. And they containe a prooffe or a particular declaration of the former article. For as on earth those that are set at the right hand of kings doe execute iustice in courts or assises for the maintenance of the state and peace of the kingdome: so Christ Iesus sitting at the right hand of his Father, that is, being made foueraigne Lord of all things both in heauen and earth, is to hold a court of iustice, in which hee shall come to iudge both the quicke and the dead.

Now in handling the last iudgement, we are to consider these points: I. whether there shall be a iudgement or not: II. the time of it: III. the signes thereof. IV. the manner of it. V. the vse which is to be made thereof. Of these in order. For the first point, whether there shall be a iudgement or not? the question is needfull: for as S. Peter saith, 2 Pet. 3. 3. There shall come in the last daies mockers, which shall walke after their lusts, and say, Where is the promise of his coming? which daies are now. The answer to this questiō is set down in this article, in which we professe that the coming of Christ to the last iudgement, is a point of religion specially to be held and auouched. The reasons to prooue it, are principally two: first, the testimonie of God himselfe in the bookes of the old and new Testament, which afford vnto vs plentifull proofes touching the last iudgement, so as he which will but lightly reade the same, shall not neede to doubt thereof. The second reason is taken from the iustice & goodness of God, the propertie wherof is to punish wicked and vngodly men, and to honour and reward the godly: but in this world the godly man is most of all in miserie, (for iudgement beginneth at Gods house) and the vngodly haue their hearts ease: Wicked Dives had the world at will, but poore Lazarus is hunger-bitten, full of sores, and miserable euery way. This being so, it remaineth that after this life, there must neede be a iudgement and a second coming of Christ, when the godly must receive fullnesse of ioy and glory, and the vngodly fullnesse of woe and miserie. This second reason may stop the mouthes of all gaine-sayers in the world whatsoever. But it may be objected, that the whole world stands either of beleeuers, or vbeleuvers, and that there is no last iudgement for either of these: for the beleuer, as Christ saith, Ioh. 5. 24. hath euertlasting life, and shall not come into iudgements: and the vbeleuer is condemned already, Ioh. 3. 18. and therefore needeth no further iudgement. Answer. Where it is said, he that beleueth shall not come into iudgement, it must be vnderstood of the iudgement of condemnation, and not of the iudgement of abolition; and he that beleueth not, is condemned already in effect and substance three waies: I. in the counsell of God, who did fore-see and appoint his condemnation, as it is a punishment of sinne, and execution of his iustice. II. in the word of God, where he hath his condemnation set downe. III. hee is condemned in his owne conscience: for euery vngodly mans conscience is a iudge vnto himselfe, which doth euery houre condemne him, and it is a fore-runner of the last iudgement. And notwithstanding all this, there may remaine a second iudgement, which is a manifestation and finishing of that which was begun in the world: and therefore the meaning of that place is this, he that beleueth not is already iudged in part, but so as the full manifestation thereof, shall be at the second coming of Christ.

The second circumstance, is the time of his iudgement: in handling wherof first let vs see what is the iudgement of men; secondly, what is the truth. For the first, two opinions touching this time take place. The first is, that the second coming of Christ shall be about six thousand yeeres from the beginning of the world; and for the Elects sake some of these daies must be shortened: and now since the beginning of the world, are passed six thousand and almost one hundred yeeres, so as there remains but some foure hundred. The grounds of this opinion are these: First, the testimonie of Elia, Two thousand yeeres before the law: two thousand yeeres vnder the law: and two thousand yeeres vnder Christ. And for the Elects sake some of these yeeres shall be shortened. Answer. This was not the sentence of Elia the prophet, but of another Elia which was a Jew, no Prophet. And whereas he saith, two thousand yeeres before the law; and two thousand yeeres vnder the law; he saileth. For from the giving of the law to the coming of Christ; was about one thousand and five hundred yeeres: and from the law to the creation about two thousand. Now if Eliu cannot set downe a iust number for the time past, which a meane man may doe, what shall we thinke that he can doe for the time to come? And if hee deceiue vs in that which is more easie to finde, how shall we trust him in things that bee harder? The second reason is this: How long God was in creating the world, so long he shall bee in gouerning the same; but he was sixe daies in creating the world, and in the seauenth he resteth, and so proportionally he shall bee sixe thousand yeeres in gouerning the world; every day answering to a thousand yeeres, as Peter saith, 2 Pet. 3.8. A thousand yeeres are but as one day with God, and then shall the end bee. Answ. This reason likewise hath no ground in Gods word: as for that place of Peter, the meaning is, that innumerable yeeres are but as a short time with God, and wee may as well say, two thousand or tenne thousand yeeres are but as one day with God. For Peter meant not to speake any thing distinctly of a thousand yeeres, but of a long time. [A certaine number put for an vncertaine.] Thirdly, it is alleadged, that within sixe thousand yeeres from the creation of the world, shall appeare in the heauens strange coniunctions, and positions of the starres, which signifie nothing else but the subversion of the state of the world: nay some haue noted that the end thereof should haue bin in the yeere of our Lord, a thousand five hundred eightie eight: their writings are manifest: but we finde by experience that this opinion is false and frivolous, and their grounds bee as frivolous. For no man can gather by the ordinary change of the heauens, the extraordinary change of the whole world.

The second opinion is, that the end of the world shall be three yeeres and a halfe after the reuealing of Antichrist. And it is gathered out of places in Daniel and the Revelation, abused. Where at a time and times and halfe a time signifie not three yeere and a halfe, but a short time. And therefore to take the words properly, is farre from the meaning of the holy Ghost. For marke, if the end shall be three yeeres and a halfe after the reuealing of Antichrist, then any man know aforehand the particular moneth wherein the end of the world should be, which is not possible.

Now the truth which may bee auouched against all, is this, that no man can know, or set downe, or coniecture the day, the weeke, the moneth, the yeere, or the age wherein the second coming of Christ and the last iudgement shall be. For Christ himselfe saith, Matthew 24.36. Of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels in heauen, but God onely. nay, Christ himselfe as he is man knew it not. And when the disciples asked Christ at his ascension, whether he would restore the kingdom vnto Israel, he answered, It is not for you to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power, Act. 1.7. And Paul saith, 1 Thess. 5.2. Of the times and seasons, brethren, you haue not neede that I write vnto you. For you your selues know perfectly, that the day of the Lord shall come, even as a thief in the night. Now wee know that a man that keepeth his house, can not coniecture or imagine when a thief will come: and therefore no man can set downe the particular time or age, when Christ shall come to iudgement. This must wee hold stedfastly, and if wee reade the contrary in the writings of men, we are not to beleue their sayings, but account of them as the deuices of men, which haue no ground in Gods word.

To come to the third point, namely, the signes of the last iudgement, they are of two sorts: some goe before the coming of Christ, and some are ioyned with it. The signes that goe before, are in number seauen, recorded distinctly by the holy Ghost. The first, is the preaching of the Gospel through the whole world. So our Saviour Christ saith, Matthew 24.14. This Gospel of the kingdom must be preached through the whole world, for a witness vnto all nations, and then shall the end come. Which place must thus be vnderstood; not that the Gospell must bee preached to the whole world at any one time: for that (as I take it) was neuer yett scene, neither shall be, but that it shall bee published distinctly and successively at severall times: and thus vnderstanding the words of Christ, if we consider the time since the Apostles dayes wee shall finde this to be true, that the Gospell hath bene preached to all the world, and therefore the first signe of Christs coming is already past and accomplished.

The second signe of his coming, is the reuealing of Antichrist, as Paul saith, 2 Thess. 2.3. The day of Christ shall come before there be a departing first, and that man of some be disclosed, even the sonne of perdition, which is Antichrist. Concerning this signe, in the yeere of our Lord, 602. Gregory the first Pope of Rome, auouched this solemnly as a manifest truth, that whosoever did take to himselfe the name of Vniuersall Bishop, the same was Antichrist. Now five yeeres after, Boniface succeeding him, was by Phocas the Emperour imprisoned the Vniuersall Bishop, Pastour of the Catholike Church in the yeere of our Lord, 607. and of all Popes he was the first knowen Antichrist, and since him all his successors haue taken vnto them the same title of Vniuersall and Catholike Bishop, whereby it doth plainly appeare, that Rome hath bene and is the Antichrist. And this signe is also past.

The third, is a general departing of most men from the faith. For it is laid in the place before named, Let many deceiue you: for the day of Christ shall not come except there be a departing first, 2 Thess. 2.3. General departing hath bene in former ages. When Arrius spread his heresie, it tooke such place, that the whole world almost became Arrian. And during the space of nine hundred yeeres from the time of Boniface, the Popish heresie spread it selfe ouer the whole earth, and the faithfull seruants of God were but as a handfull of wheate in a mountaine of chaffe, which can scarce bee discerned. This signe is in part already past, neuertheless it shall continue to the end, because men shall continually depart from the faith. And the nearer the end of the world is, the more Satan will geth and seeketh to bring men into his kingdom. Therefore it standeth vs in hand to labour for the knowledge of true Religion, and hauing learned it, most heartily to love the same.

The fourth signe is, a general corruption in manners. This point the Apostle sets downe at large, saying, 2 Tim. 3.1. Towards the latter daies shall come to perilous times, when men shall be lovers of themselves, couetous, boasters, proud, cursive speakers, disobedient to parents, vnthankfull, vnholie, and without naturall affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of them which are good, traitours, headie, high minded, lovers of pleasures more then lovers of God, &c. This general corruption in the manners of men is noted by our Saviour Christ, when he saith, Luk. 18.8. When hee cometh he shall scarce finde faith vpon the earth. This signe hath bene in former ages, and is no doubt at this day in the world. For it is hard to finde a man that walketh iustly, soberly, and faithfully, doing the duties of his calling to God and man.

The fifth signe of Christ his coming standeth in terrible terrible and grievous calamities. For Christs disciples asking him a signe of his coming & of the end of the world, he saith, Mat. 24.6.7. There shall be warres and rumours of warres, nation shall rise against nation, & realme against realme: and there shall be pestilence and famine, and earthquakes in diuers places, and men shall bee at their wits end. These haue bene in former ages. In the first 3. hundred yeeres after Christ, were ten more fearefull persecutions; and since in Europe the Church of God hath bene wonderfully persecuted by the Antichrist of Rome in the hundred yeeres last past.

The sixth signe, is an exceeding deadnesse of heart, so as neither iudgements from heauen, nor the preaching of the word shall moue the hearts of men. So Christ saith, It shall be in the coming of the Sonne of man, as it was in the daies of Noe, and in the daies of Sodom: They knew nothing till the flood came, and fire from heauen destroyed them all. This signe vndoubtedly is manifest in these our daies, howsoever it hath bene also in former times. For where are any almost that are moued with Gods iudgement, or touching at the preaching of the word? nay rather men harden their hearts, and become secure and careless. The small fruit that the word of God bringeth forth in the liues of menshewes this to be most true.

The seauenth and last signe, set downe by the Apostle Paul, is, that there shall be a calling of the Lepers before the Lord come to iudgement, Rom. 11.25. but of the time when this calling shall be, of the manner how, or the number of them that shall be called, there is no mention, made in the word of God. Now it is likely that this signe is yet to come.

These are the signes that goe before the coming of Christ, all which are almost past, and therefore the end cannot be far off. Now followes the signe that is ioyned with the coming of Christ, called the signe of the Son of man. What this signe is, we finde not in the Scriptures. Some thinke it to bee the signe of the crosse, but that is frivolous: some, the glorie & maiestie of Christ, which shall be made manifest in his appearance: which seemes to be otherwise by the very words of Christ, Then (saith he) shall appeare the signes of the sonne of man, &c. and then they shall see him come in the clouds of heauen with power and great glorie: where he distinguisheth the one from the other. But I rather coniecture it to be the burning of heauen & earth with fire, at the very instant of Christs coming mentioned by Peter. We must not here dispute whether this fire shall come, or how it shall be kindled, for that the word of God hath concealed: & where God hath no mouth to speake, there we must haue no eare to heare.

The vles to be made hereof are these: When S. Peter had set downe the change that shall be at the coming of Christ, and that heauen and earth must be purged with fire, he makes this vfe thereof. Seeing all things must bee dissolved, what manner of men ought ye to be in holy con-uersion and godlinesse? and the reason is good. For if heauen and earth must be changed, and purged at Christs coming, then much more ought we to be changed, and put off the old man of sinne, and to become new creatures created after the image of God in righteousness & true holines. If the bruite creatures must be renewed by fire, then much more are wee to labour that the heat of Gods spirit may burne vp sinne, and corruption in vs, and so change vs that we may bee ready for him against his coming: else heauen & earth it self shall stand in iudgement, against vs to our condemnation. Secondly, the consideration of this, that the world shall be consumed with fire, teacheth vs moderation and sobriety in the vfe of Gods creatures, as in costly building, gorgeous attire, and such like. What madnes is this to bestow all that we haue, on such things, as at the day of iudgement shall be consumed with fire? For look what fouler abuse shall come to Gods creatures by our folly, the same shall then be abolished. Thirdly, we must consider that the cause why heauen & earth must be consumed with fire, is mans sin, by means whereof, they are made subiect to vanity & corruption. Here then we haue iust occasion to acknowledge the greatnesse and wretchednesse of our finnes. If any of vs had but seene the Iewes leprosie, it would haue made vs to wonder: for the contagion thereof did infect not onely the whole man, but his garments also that were about him, and sometime the wallies of his house: but howeuer we cannot see that leprosie among vs, yet we may fee a worke. For the leprosie of our finnes doth not onely infect our garments, and the things about vs with our bodie: but euen the high heauens and the earth are stained with the contagion thereof, and are made subiect to vanity and corruption: yea by sinne in vs the most glorious creatures in them, as the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, are become subiect to vanitie. Oh then, how wretched is the heart of man, that makes no bones of sin, which is the most noysome thing in all the world, the stinke whereof hath infected both heauen and earth! If we could consider this, we would not bee so slacke in humbling our selues for the same as we are. We cannot abide to looke on a poore leazar full of blaes and sores: but if we would see our sins in their right colours, they would make vs seeme vnto our selues ten thousand times more ougly then any leazar-man can bee; the contagion thereof is so great and noysome, that the very heauens which are many thousand miles distant from vs, are infected therewith. Yet here we are to know, that this fire shall not consume the substance of heauen and earth, but onely change the quality, and abolish the corruption, which our finnes haue brought vpon them.

The fourth point to be considered, is the manner of the last iudgement, in which wee may obserue two things: 1. who shall be iudged; 2. the proceeding of this iudgement. The first is

24.7. &
14.34.

2 2 expressed

expressed in this article; From thence hee shall come to iudge. He, that is, Christ Iesus, the second person in Trinity. For the Father hath committed all iudgement vnto him. It is indeed an action common to all the three persons in Trinity, but yet the execution thereof appertaines vnto the Son. The Father indeed doth iudge the world, but yet by the Son. But some may object, that the Apostles shall sit on twelue thrones, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israel. And S. Paul faith, 1. Cor. 6. 2. The Saints shall iudge the world. How then is this true, that Christ is the only iudge of the world? Ans. The authority of iudgement & giuing sentence at the last day is proper to Christ alone, and doth not belong either to the Apostles or to the Saints; and they shall iudge at the last day only as witnesses and approuers of Christs iudgement. At the great day of asise beside the iudge, the iustices on the bench are also in a manner iudges, not that they giue sentence, but because by their presence they approue & witness the equity of the sentence of the iudge: so the definitive sentence doth belong to Christ: & the Apostles, & Saints do nothing but approue, & being preface giue assent to his righteous sentence.

The whole proceeding of the last iudgement may be reduced to seauen points or heads. The first, is the coming of the iudge in the clouds. Here at the first, may be demanded, why Christ holds the last iudgement rather on earth than in heauen? Ans. He doth it for two causes. One, the creature to be iudged hath sinned here vpon earth; and he proceeds after the manner of earthly iudges, who holde their sessions & assises there where trespassers are commonly committed. The second, because the diuell and his angels are to be iudged, and it is a part of their punishment to be cast out of heauen. For no vncleane thing may come into his heauenly Ierusalem, and therefore they now remaine in the lower parts of the world, and there must be iudged. Furthermore, the second coming of Christ is sudden, as the coming of a thiefe in the night. He will come when the world thinketh not of him, as the fliedeth on the bird. The consideration whereof must teach vs the same duties which our Saviour Christ taught the men of his time. First he teacheth them what they must not doe: for he knowing all things, knew also the disposition of mans heart, & therefore he faith, Take heed to your selves, lest at any time your hearts be oppressed with surfeiting & drunkennes, & the cares of this life, lest that day come vpon you vnawares. For these sins beuill the heart, and steale away all grace. This exhortation in these our daies is most needfull. For mens hearts are like the smithes stithe, the more they are beaten with the hammer of Gods word, the harder they are. Secondly, he teacheth them what they must doe: Watch therefore (saith he) and pray continually: that yee may be counted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to passe, and that yee may stand before the

Some of man. But you will say: how may we be found worthy to stand before Christ at that day? Ans. Doe but this one thing: for your liues past be humbled before God, and come vnto him by true, heartie, and vnfeigned repentance be changed, and become new creatures: pray vnto him earnestly for the pardon of your finnes in Christ, and pray continually that God will turne your hearts from your old finnes every day more and more; and then come the last iudgement when it will, yee shall be found worthy to stand before Christ at his comming. The repentant sinner is hee, that shall finde fauour in the sight of God at that day. The consideration here of may mooue vs to change our liues. Those which were neuer yet humbled for their finnes, let them now begin: & those which haue already begun, let them go forward and continue. But the diuell will drie in the hearts of some men, that this exhortation is as yet needlesse: for the day of iudgement is not nere, because all the signes are not yet passed. Ans. Suppose the day of iudgement be farre off, yet the day of death cannot be so, for the common saying is true, to day a man, to morrow none. Now looke as death leaueth thee, so shall the day of iudgement finde thee. Impenitent Cain dyed long since, and yet the day of iudgement when it cometh, shall finde him impenitent still. The same thing may be said of Saul, Achiorphel, and Iudas. They dyed desperately and impenitent, and the Lord shall finde them so at his comming. So will it be with thee, whosoever thou art that repentest not. Death may come vpon thee, the next day or the next houre, therefore watch and pray. Prepare thy selfe against the day of death, that at the day of iudgement thou maist be found worthy to obtaine fauour in the sight of the Lord. Security doth ouerwhelme the world; but let vs for our parts learne to prepare our selues daily: for if the day of death doe leaue thee vnworthy, then the Lord Iesus at his comming shall finde thee vnworthy: and the diuell shall stand before thee and accuse thee, thy conscience shall condemne thee, and hell shall be ready to swallow thee vp. If this admonition take no place in thy heart, then at the day of iudgement it shall stand against thee, and be a bill of indictment to thy further condemnation.

The second point followeth, that Christ after that he is come in the clouds, shall sit in a throne of glory, as the foueraigne iudge of heauen and earth, after the manner of earthly kings, who when they will shew themselves vnto their subjects in maiestie, power, and glory, vnto ascend into the thrones of their kingdomes, and there to shew themselves and appeare in state vnto all the people. Now what this throne is, & how Christ sits in the same, the scripture hath not revealed, & therefore I will not stand to search. Yet here must we further mark, that this appearance of his in endless glorie and maiestie shall be more terrible and dreadfull to the vngodly, and therefore in Daniel his throne is said to be like a flame of fire, and at the very sight thereof men shall desire the mountains to fall vpon them, and the hills to couer them.

The third point, is the ciring of all men and of the Angels before his maiestie in that day, there to answer for themselves. This ciring shall be done by the voice of Christ, as hee himselfe faith, I will call all that are in the graues shall heare his voice, & they shall come forth. And here we are to consider two things. 1. the power of his voice: I. the minister whereby it shall be uttered. For the first, no doubt the power of his voice shall be vnspokeable, and therefore it is compared to a trumpet, the loudest & shrillest of all musickall instruments; and to the crie of the mariners, whose maner hath bin in the doing of any busines with all their strength at one instant to make a common shout. And sensible experience shall manifest the force thereof. For if that cause all the dead euen from the beginning of the world to rise againe, though they haue lien rotten in the earth many thousand yeares and all vncleane spirits shall be forced and compelled, will they, nill they, to come before Christ; who shall be vnto them a most feareful and terrible iudge, neither man nor angel shall be able to absent or hide himselfe; all without exception must appeare, as well high as low, rich as poore: none shall be able to withdraw themselves, no not the mightie Monarches of the earth.

Furthermore, this voice shall be uttered by Christ. As in the Church Christ vseth men as his ministers by whom he speaks vnto his people: so at the last day hee shall vse the ministerie of Angels, whom hee shall send forth into the foure winds to gather his Elect together: and therefore it is likely that this voice shall be uttered by them. And by this which hath bene said, we must be moued to make conscience of all sinne. For there is no anything of this iudgement, we cannot absent our selues, no excuse will serue the turne: euen the most rebellious of all creatures, whether man or angel, shall be forced to appeare: and therefore it stands vs in hand, while we haue time in this life, to looke vnto our estates, and to practise the duties of Christianity, that when we shall be cited before his glorious maiesty at the last day, we may be cleared and absolved.

The fourth point is, the separation of the sheepe from the goats, the good from the bad, Mat. 25. 32. for when all the kindreds of the earth, and all vncleane spirits shall stand before Christ, sitting in the throne of his glory: then as a good shepheard hee shall separate them one from another, the righteous from the wicked, and the elect from the reprobate. He which knoweth the hearts of all men, knoweth also how to doe this: and he will doe it. This full and final separation is referred to Christ, and shall not be accomplished till the last day. For so it is in the parable, that the tares must grow with the wheate till harvest, and the reapers must separate them, and gather the wheate into the barn, but the tares must be burned with vnquenchable fire. By the consideration of this one point, we learne diuers things: 1. That in the Church of God in this world, good and bad are mingled together, elect and reprobate: and we are not to imagine any perfection of the Church of God vpon earth, as many haue dreamed, which when they could not finde, they haue therefore forsaken all assemblies. I confesse indeed, that the preaching of the word is the Lords tanner, whereby he cleanseth his Church, in part, but yet the finishing of this worke shall not be before the last iudgement. For when the ministers of God haue done all that they can, yet shall the wicked be mingled with the godly.

Therefore the Church is compared to a barne floor, where is both wheate and chaffe: and a corne-field, where is both eares & good corn; and a draw-net, wherein is both good fish and bad. Secondly, whereas this separation must not be before the end of the world, hence we learne the estate of Gods Church in this life. It is like a flocke of sheepe mingled with goates, and therefore the condition of Gods people in this world, is to be troubled many waies by those with whom they liue. For goates vse to strike the sheepe, so annoy their pasture, and to make their water muddy: that they cannot drinke of it: and therefore we must prepare our selues to beare all annoyances, crosses, & calamities that shall befall vs in this world by the wicked ones among whom we liue. Thirdly, we are taught, that goates & the sheepe be very like, and feede in one pasture, and lyb both in one fold: all the life tyme yet Christ can and will seare them asunder at the last day. Therefore, considering as we are borne of Adam, we haue the nature of the goate, yea of the wild beast, and not of the sheepe; it stands vs in hand to lay aside our goatish conditions; and to take vnto vs the properties of the sheepe of Christ, which hee expresseth in these words, My sheepe (saith he, Ioh. 10. 27.) heare my voyce, I know them, and they follow me. And the properties are three: no know him, so be knowne of him, and to follow him; namely, in obedience: and he that finds them all in himselfe, weares the brand and marke of the true sheepe of Christ: but contrariwise they that make profession of Christ: and yet therewithall ioyne not obedience, howeouer the world may account of them, they are but goates and no sheepe. Let vs therefore with the knowledge of Christ ioyne obedience to his word, that when the day shall come that the goates must be separated from the sheepe, we may be found to be in the number of the true sheepe of Christ. We may deceiue men both in life and death, and beare them in hand that we are sheepe, but when the iudgement shall come, we cannot deceiue Christ; he it is that formed vs, he knowes our hearts, and therefore can easily discerne what we are.

The fifth thing is, the trial of every mans particular cause: so point especially to be considered.

Heb. 4. 12.

For as at the bar of an earthly iudge, the malefactor is brought out of prison, and set before the iudge, and there examined: euen so in that great day, shall euery man without exception be brought before the Lord, to be tried. But how shall this trial be made? Ans. By workes: as the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 5. 10. We must all appeare before the iudgement seat of Christ, that euery man may receive the things which are done in his body according to that hee hath done, whether it be good or euill. And the reason is, because workes are the outward signes of inward grace and holines. And though we be iustified by faith alone without workes, yet may we be iudged both by faith and workes. For the last iudgement doth not serue to make men iust that are vniust, but only to manifest them to be iust indeede, which are iust before, and in this life truly iustified. The consideration of this very point should moue vs all to repent vs of our sinns past, and to reforme our selues throughout, and to be plentifull in all good workes. And vndoubtedly if we seriously thinke vpon it, it will hold vs more strictly to all good duties, then if with the Papists, we held iustification by workes.

Furthermore, in this trial two things must be scanned: I. how all mens workes shall be made manifest: II. by what meanes they shall be examined. Of the manifestation of euery mans worke S. Iohn speaks, Reu. 20. 12. And I saw (saith he) the dead both great & small stand before God, and their bookes were opened: and another booke was opened, which is the booke of life, and the dead were iudged of those things which were written in the booke according to their workes. God is said to haue bookes not properly, but because all things are as certaine and manifest to him, as if he had his Registers in heauen to keepe rolles and records of them. His bookes are three: the booke of Providence, the booke of Iudgement, the booke of Life. The booke of his providence is the knowledge of all particular things past, present, or to come. Of this the Psalmist speaks, Psal. 139. 16. Thine eyes did see me while I was without forme: for in thy bookes were all things written, which in continuance were fulfilled, when there was none of them before. The booke of iudgement is that, whereby hee giues iudgement: and it is two-fold. The first, is Gods knowledge or prescience, in which all the affaires of men, their thought, words, & deedes, are as certainly knowne and set downe, as if they were put in bookes of Record. We may forget our sinnes, but God keeps them in a Register: he knows them euery one. The second booke is euery mans particular confidence, which also brings to remembrance, & testifies what men haue done, & what they haue not done. The booke of life is nothing else, but the decree of Gods election, in which God hath let down who be ordained to life eternal.

Now the opening of these bookes is a thing wherein the endless power of God shall most notably shew it selfe. For when we shall stand

A before the iudgement seat of Christ, hee then knowing all things in his eternall counsell, shall reueale vnto euery man his owne particular sinns, whether they were in thought, word, or deede, and then also by his mighty power, hee shall so touch mens consciences, that they shall afresh remember what they haue done. Now indeede, the wicked mans conscience is shut vp as a closed booke; but then it shall bee touched, and as it were opened, that hee shall plainly see and remember all the particular offences which at any time hee hath committed, and his very conscience shall be as good as a thousand witnesses: whereupon hee shall accuse and vterly condemne himselfe. The consideration of this ought to terrifie all those that liue in their sinnes: for howsoeuer they may hide and couer them from the world; yet at the last day, God will bee sure to reueale them all.

Now after that mens workes are made manifest, they must further be tried whether they be good or euill. And that shall be done on this this manner. They that neuer heard of Christ, must bee tried by the law of nature, which serueth to make them inexcusable before God. As for those that liue in the Church, they shall be tried by the Law and the Gospel, as Paul saith, Rom. 2. 12. As many as haue sinned in the law, shall be iudged by the law. And againe, v. 16. At the day of iudgement God shall iudge the secrets of our hearts according to his Gospel. And Heb. 11. 7. By faith Noah builded an arke, whereby hee condemned the old world. Then wee must in the feare of God heare his word preached and taught with all reuerence, and make conscience to profit by it. For otherwise in the day of iudgement when all our workes shall be tried by it, the sawe of God shall be a bill of indictment, and the fearefull sentence of condemnation against vs. Therefore let vs be humbled by the doctrine of the law, and willingly embrace the sweete promises of the Gospel: considering it is the only touchstone, whereby all our words, thoughts, and workes must be examined.

The fixt point in the proceeding of the last iudgement; is the giuing of sentence, which is two-fold: the sentence of abolution, and the sentence of condemnation, both which are to be obserued diligently, that we may receive profit thereby. And first of all, Christ shall begin his iudgement with the sentence of abolution; which shewes that he is ready to shew mercy, and slow to wrath. In this sentence we are to consider foure points: I. A calling of the Elect to the kingdom of heauen: II. The reason thereof: III. A reply of the Elect: IV. The answer of Christ to them againe. The calling of the Elect is set downe in these words: Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world. And the words are to be understood one by one. Come ye blessed Though Christ now sit in glory and maiesty in iudgement, yet hee causeth not to shew his tender affection of loue vnto his chosen. And this ouerthroweth the opinion of the Church of Rome, which would haue vs rather to come vnto Christ by the intercession of Saints, then by our selues immediately because hee is now exalted in glorie and maiesty. But marke, when he was here on earth hee said. Come vnto me all you that are heauie laden, and I will ease you: And when hee shall bee most glorious in maiesty and power at the day of iudgement, hee will then also say, Come ye blessed of my Father; and therefore we may resolve our selues, that it is his will now, that we should come vnto him without any intercession of Saints. Ye blessed of my Father The elect are here called the blessed of God, because their righteousness, saluation, and all that they haue, springs of the meere blessing of God. Nothing therefore must bee ascribed to the worke of man. Inherit That is, receive as your inheritance: therefore the kingdom of heauen is Gods meere gift. A father giueth no inheritance vnto his sonne of merit, but of his freegitt: whereupon it followes, that no man can merit the kingdom of heauen by his workes. The kingdom That is, the eternal estate of glory and happinesse in heauen; therefore in this life we must so vse the world, as though wee vsed it not: all that we haue here is but vaine and transitory: and all our study and endeavour must be to come to the kingdom of heauen. Prepared Here note the vnspcakable care of God for the faithfull. Had hee such care to provide a kingdom for his children before they were? then wee may assure our selues, hee will haue greater care ouer the now whet they haue a being. For you that is, for the elect & faithfull. Hence it appeares, that there is no vniuersall election, whereby (as some suppose) God decrees that all and euery man shall be saved. Indee if hee had said, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for all, but receiued of you, it had bene something, but the faith only, prepared for you; and therefore all were not chosen to saluation.

The reason of this calling, is taken from workes, as from signes, in these words: For I was hungry and ye gaue me meate, &c. When he saith For I was hungry, hee meanes his poore and distressed members vpon earth: & thereby hee signifies vnto vs, that the miseries of his seruants are his owne miseries. Thus the Lord saith in Zachary, He which toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye. And when Saul was going to persecute them in Damascus & else-where that called on the name of Christ, hee cried from heauē, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And this is a notable comfort to Gods Church and people, that they haue an high Priest who is touched with the feeling of their infirmities, & if hee account our miseries his owne miseries, then no doubt hee will pittie our estate, and make vs able to beare the world. And ye gaue me meate Here we note, that the principall workes of men are those which are done to the poore

A members of Christ. We are indeede to helpe all, in as much as they are our very flesh & the creatures of God; but the rule of S. Paul must be remembered, Do good to all, but especially to those that are of the household of faith. Many are of mind that the best workes are to build Churches and Monasteries, but Christ tels vs here, that the best worke of all is to releue those that bee the liuing members of his mytticall body.

The third point, is the reply of the Saints to Christ againe, in these words, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? &c. They do not deny that which Christ auouched, but doe, as I take it, standing before the tribunall seate of God, humble themselves, hauing still an after consideration of the infirmities & offences of their liues past. Here note then, that it is a Satanicall practise for a man to bragge of workes, and to stand vpon them in the matter of iustification before God. And wee must rather doe as the Saints of God doe, a-bate our selues in regard of our sinnes past.

The last point, is the answer of Christ to them againe, in these words, Verily, I say vnto you, in as much as ye did it to the least of these my brethren, you did it to me. A most notable sentence, & it serueth to teach vs, how we should behaue our selues in doing workes of mercie, which are duties to be performed in this life. Wee are not to doe them of any sinister respect, as for praife of men or commodity, but wee must propound vnto our selues the partie to whom we doe any good, and in him looke on Christ, and so doe it, as vnto Christ, and for Christs sake only: and this is a good worke indeede. Christ saith, Who soeuer shall giue a cup of cold water to a discipule in the name of a discipule, shall not lose his reward. It is but a small gift, yet the manner of doing it, namely, in the name of a discipule, that is, in respect that he is a member of Christ, doth make it an excellent work of mercie. It is a speciall marke of a childe of God to shew mercy on a Christian, because he is a Christian. If any would know whether he be a Christian or no, let him search himselfe, whether he loue a man and can doe good vnto him, because he is a childe of God, and a member of Christ. For this is a plaine argument, that hee also is the childe of God. Many can loue, because they are loued againe: but to loue for Christ his sake, is a worke of Christ in vs and a speciall gift of God.

The sentence of condemnation followeth in the second place; & it containes foure points: I. The reiection of the vngodly: II. The reason of their reiection: III. The defence which the wicked make for themselves: lastly, the answer of Christ to them againe. The reiection of the wicked is vttered by a terrible sentence, Away from mee ye cursed into a hell fire. The vice hercot in general is two-fold. First, it serueth to awake and excite all men and women in the world, who soeuer they be that shall heare it, to looke vnto their owne estates. It is wonderful to see what great security reigneth every wherein these our daies. Men go on in sin from day to day and from yeare to yeare without repentance, nothing at all fearing the sentence of condemnation at the last day; like vnto many which for the obtaining of other mens goods are neither by the feare of arraignment or imprisonment kept in good order. The occasions of security are twofold: I. the prosperity of the wicked, who of all men liue at most ease without trouble, either in bodie or in minde. II. Gods patience, and long suffering; as Salomon saith, Because sentence against an euill worke is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the children of men are fully set in them to doe euill. But to awake all those which liue in their security; they must remember that howsoeuer the Lord God doth now deferre his iudgement, yet there is a day wherein he will no way shew mercy and long suffering, when they shall heare this fearefull sentence of condemnation pronounced against them. Away from me ye cursed. The second vs is to the godly: I. ferues to nurture them and to keepe them in awe before God: and no doubt this was a principall cause why this sentence was here penned by the holy Ghost. A wife master of a family will checke his seruant, and if the cause require, correct him in his chilles presence, that the childe it selfe may learne thereby to feare & stand in awe of his father: so Christ the most careful and wise gouernour of his Church hath set downe this sentence of condemnation against the wicked, that the children of God in this world whensoever they shall heare or reade the same, might be moued thereby to stand in feare of God, and more dutifully performe obedience vnto his commandments. Away from me. Here we may learne, what a blessed thing it is for a man to haue true fellowship with Christ in this world. For in the day of iudgement the punishment of the wicked is to be cut off from him, and driuen away from his presence. Now he that would haue fellowship with God after this life, and escape that punishment, must seeke to haue it in this life; and he that will not seeke to haue fellowship with him in this life, shall neuer haue it after in the day of iudgement. Again, let vs marke that it is nothing to draw neere vnto Christ with our lippes, if the heart be not with him: for such as come neere with the lippe and keepe aloofe in the heart, shall heare the sentence pronounced, Away from me ye cursed; and shall bee seuered as farre from Christ as hell from heauen. Therefore let vs not content our selues with formal profession, but open the doores of our hearts, that the king of glorie may come in. Ye cursed. They are cursed who are borne in sinne and liue in their sins, and all the daies of their liues so perseuere to the last gaspe without seeking recovery. Whosoever he be, that is in this estate, the curse of God hangeth ouer his head, and will so doe till he get reconciliation with

A God in Christ. This being so, about all things in this world wee must labour to be at peace with God, and neuer cease nor be quiet with our selues till we haue the same wrought and sealed in our hearts. For before such a time as we be in Gods fauour, his fearefull curse hangs ouer our heads, and if we so perseuere without repentance, the day will come when we shall heare this fearefull sentence pronounced against vs: Away from me ye cursed into hell fire. What hel fire is, we must not curiously search, but rather giue our whole endeauiour to learne how we may auoid it: as when a mans house is on fire, his care must be, not to search how it came, but rather how to quench it: yet wee are to know thus much that by hell fire is not meant any bodily flame, but it signifies the feazing of the fearefull and terrible wrath of God both on body and soule for euil. For howsoeuer the bodie bee subiect to burning with bodily fire, yet the soule being spirituall cannot burne; and therefore hell fire is not a materiall fire, but a grieuous torment, fully resembled thereby. Prepared for the diuell and his angels. There is in euery mans heart by nature this corruption; whereby when he sinneth, he thinks that there is no danger but all is well, having as E/sey saith, made a covenant with hell. But here consider, that although the diuel was once an angel of light, yet when he had sinned, he could not escape hell: it was prepared euen for him. How then shall vagabond men, which are not halfe so wily, thinke to escape?

C Now followeth the reason of their reiection in these words: For I was an hungred, and ye gaue me no meate, &c. Hence wee learne the two points: I. that all mans religion & seruing of God is in vaine, if so be hee shew no compassion toward the poore members of Christ, in feeding, cloathing, lodging, and visiting of them. For we must thinke, that many of those against whom this reason shall bee brought, did know religion and professe the same, yea, they prophesied in the name of Christ, and called on him, saying, Lord, Lord: and yet the sentence of condemnation goeth against them, because they shew no compassion toward the members of Christ; and therefore it is a principall vertue, and a speciall note of a Christian, to shew the bowels of compassion towards his needie brethren. Here againe wee note, that it is not sufficient for vs to abstaine from euill, but we must also doe good. For it is not said, I was an hungred and ye tooke from me, but, When I was hungry ye gaue me no meate. They are not charged with doing euill, but for not doing good. S. Iohn saith, The axe is laid to the roote of the tree, and the reason followes, not because the tree bare euill fruit, but because it bare not good fruit: therefore it must be cast into the fire. This condemnes a bad opinion of all worldly men, who thinke that all is well, and that God will be merciful vnto them, because they doe no harme. Thus wee see how the diuell blinds the eyes of men: for it will not stand for payment at the day of iudgement to say, I haue hurt no man, vnlesse wee further doe all the good we can.

The third point, is the defence which impenitent sinners make for themselves in these words, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, or thirsty or naked, or in prison, or sicke, and did not minister vnto thee? Thus in their owne defence, that which Christ saith, they gain-say, and iustifie themselves. Here marke the nature of all impenitent sinners, which is to soothe and flatter themselves in sinne, and to maintain their owne righteousnesse, like to the proud Pharisee in his prayer, who bragged of his goodnes, and said, Lord, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are extortioners, &c. and in the very same manner ignorant persons of all sorts among vs, iustifie themselves in their strong faiths and bragge of their zeale of Gods glory, and of their loue to their brethren, and yet indeed shew no signes thereof. And truly wee are not to maruell when wee see such persons to iustifie themselves before men, whereas they shall not bee ashamed to doe it at the day of iudgement before the Lord Iesus himselfe.

The last point, is Christs answer to them againe, in these words: Perily I say vnto you, in as much as ye did not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. This sentence being repeated againe, doth teach vs the lesson which we learned before, that we are to shew compassion to any man, especially if he be a member of Gods Church, we must not consider his outward estate or his basenesse, in that he wants food or rayment, but behold Christ in him, not respecting him as a man, but as a member of Christ. This it is, that must moue vs to compassion, and cause vs to make a supply of his wants more then any respect in the world beside. And surely when Christ in his members comes to our doores, and complains that he is hungry, and sicke, and naked, if our bowels yeerne not towards him, there is not so much as a sparke of the loue of God in vs.

The sixth point in the proceeding of the last iudgement, is the retribution or reward, in these words: And they shall goe into euertlasting paine, and the righteous into life euertlast. How do the wicked enter into hell, and the godly into heauen? Ans. By the powerfull and commanding voice of Christ, which is of that force, that neither the greatest rebel that euer was among men, nor all the diuels in hell, shall bee able to withstand it. And seeing that after the day of iudgement wee must remaine for euil either in heauen or in hell, we are to looke about vs, and to take heede vnto our hearts. In dede if the time were but a thousand or two thousand yeres, then with more reason men might take liberty to themselves: but seeing it is without end, we must be more carefull thorough the whole course of our liues so to liue and behaue our selues, that when the day of iudgement shall come, we may auoid that

A fearefull sentence of euertlasting woe and condemnation, which shall bee pronounced against the wicked. And whereas all wicked men shall goe to hell, at Christs commandment; it teacheth vs, willingly to obye the voice of Christ in the ministry of the word. For if we rebell against his voice in the world, when in the day of iudgement sentence shall be pronounced against vs, we shall heare another voice, at the giuing whereof, wee must obye whether we wil or no, and thereupon go to euertlasting paine, whither we would not. Let vs therefore in time deny our selues for our sinnes past, and onely relye vpon Christ Iesus for the free remission of them all; & for the time to come, leade a new reformed life.

B Thus much of the order of Christs proceeding at the day of iudgement: Now follow the vses thereof, which are either comforts to Gods Church, or duties for all men. The first comfort or benefit is this, that the same person which died for vs vpon the crosse to work our redemption, must also bee our iudge. And hence wee reape two speciall comforts. I. The people of God shall hereby inioy full redemption from all miseries and calamities, which they had in this life. So Christ himselfe speaking of the signes of the end of the world, saith to his disciples; When you see these things, lift up your heads: for your redemptio draweth neere. Then he shall wipe all teares from their eyes. Secondly, we shall hereby haue a final deliuerance from all sinne. Now what a ioyfull thing it is to be freed from sinne, may plainly appeare by the cry of Saint Paul: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death? And certaine it is, that hee which knows what sin is, and seriously repents him of the same, would wish with all his heart to be out of this world, that he might leaue off to sinne, and thereby cease to displease God.

The second comfort is this: the godly in this world haue many enemies: they are reviled, flattered, and oftentimes put to death; well, Christ Iesus at the day of iudgement will rake every mans cause into his owne hand; he will then heare the complaint of the godly, howsoeuer in this world they found no remedie: and then he will reuenge their blood that is shed vpon the earth, according to their prayer. This comfort is to be considered, especially of all those that are any way persecuted, or molested by the wicked of this world.

Now follow the duties to be learned of euery one of vs, and they are diuers. First, the consideration of the last iudgement serueth to teach all ignorant persons and impenitent sinners, repentance and humiliation for their sinnes, & to moue them with speede to seeke vnto Christ for the pardon of the same. When Paul preached to the Athenians, hee willed them to repent vpon this ground and reason, Because the Lord hath appointed a day wherein he will iudge the world in righteousnesse. To speake plainly; we can be content to heare the word of God, and to honour him with our lippes, yet for the most part, all is done but for falshous fakes: but still we lue in our old finness: our hearts are not turned: but in the feare of God let vs be thinke our felues of the time, when we shall come before the iudge of heauen and earth, and haue all our finnes laid open, and we must answer for them all. This is the point which the holy Ghost vseth as a reason to moue men vnto repentance: and assuredly it this will not moue vs, there is nothing in the world will. Secondly, to this purpose Paul faith, 1 Cor. 11. 31. If we would iudge our felues, we should not bee iudged. Wouldst thou then escape the iudgement of Christ at the last day? then in this life iudge thy selfe. Now a man in iudging of himselfe must performe foure things: I. He must examine himselfe of his own finnes: I. He must confesse them before the Lord. III. He must condemne himselfe, and as a iudge vpon the bench, giue sentence against himselfe. Lastly, he must plead pardon, and crie vnto God for life and death, for the remission of all his finnes: and he that doth this vnfaidely shall neuer be iudged of the Lord at the last day: but if wee slacke and neglect this duty in this life, then vndoubtedly there remains nothing but eternall woe in the world to come.

Thirdly, by this we may learne, one not to iudge or condemne another, as Paul faith, 1 Cor. 4. 5. Iudge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will lighten all things that are in darkenes, and make the counsels of the hearts manifest. And Christ faith, Luk. 6. 27. Iudgement is mine: and iudge not, and ye shall not be iudged. And againe Paul faith to the Romanes, Why doest thou iudge thy brother? for we must all appeare before the iudgement seat of Christ: but some will aske, how doth one iudge another? Ans. Thus: I. When a man doth well, to say of him that he doth euill: II. When a man doth euill, then to make it worse: III. when a thing is doubtful, to take it in the worst part. And by any of these three waies we are not to iudge either of mens persons, or of their actions.

Fourtly, we must endeavour our selues to keepe a good conscience before God and before all men. This is the practise of Saint Paul, who in consideration and hope of a resurrection vnto iudgement, as well of the iust as of the vnjust, endeauoured himselfe to haue alwaies a cleare conscience both towards God, and towards men. His example is worthy our marking and imitation: for fewe there bee that vpon this occasion make any conscience either of duty to God or to their brethren.

Fifthly, the last iudgement must stir vs vp to a reuerend feare of God, and cause vs to glorifie him as the Angel faith in the Reuelation, Fear God, and giue glory to him: for the hour of his iudgement is come. And doubtles if any thing in the world will moue a man to feare the Lord, it is this, to remember the

A fearefull and terrible day of iudgement.

Now hauing spoken hitherto of the first person the Father, and also of the Son, it followeth in the next place to speake of the third person in these words, I beleue in the H. Ghost. In which we may consider two things, the title of the person, and the action of faith, repeated from the beginning. The title is, holy Ghost, or spirit. It may here be demanded, how this title can be fit to expresse the third person, which seemes to be common to the rest: for the Father is holy, and the Sonne is holy; againe, the Father is a spirit, and the Son is a spirit. Ans. Indeede the Father and the Sonne are as well to be tearmed holy in respect of their natures as the third person: for all three subsisting in one and the same Godhead, are consequently holy by one and the same holinesse: but the third person is called holy, because beside the holinesse of nature, his office is to sanctifie the Church of God. Now if it be said that sanctification is a work of the whole Trinity, the answer is, that although it be so, yet the worke of sanctification agrees to the holy Ghost in speciall manner. The Father sanctifieth by the Sonne and by the holy Ghost: the Sonne sanctifieth from the Father and by the H. Ghost: the holy Ghost sanctifieth from the Father & from the Sonne by himselfe immediatly; and in this respect is the third person tearmed holy. Again, the third person is tearmed a Spirit, not only because his nature is spiritual (for in that respect the Father is a spirit, and the Sonne is a spirit); but because he is spired or breathed from the Father and from the Son, in that he proceeds from them both. Thus we see there is a speciall cause why the third person is called the holy Ghost.

Now the action of Faith which concernes the third person, is to beleue in him. Which is: I. to acknowledge the holy Ghost as hee hath reuealed himselfe in the word. II. in speciall to beleue that hee is my sanctifier and comforter. III. To put all the confidence of my heart in him, for that cause. In these words are comprised foure points of doctrine, which are to be beleue concerning the holy Ghost.

D The first, that he is very God. For we are not to put affiance or confidence in any but in God alone. And no doubt the penners of the Creede, in that they prefixed these words, I beleue in, before the article of the third person, meant thereby to signifie that he is true God, equall with the Father and the Sonne, according to the renour of the Scriptures themselves. Peter faith to Ananias: Why haist Satan filled thine heart that thou shouldst lye vnto the holy Ghost? and continuing the same speech, he changeth the tearme onely, and faith, Thou hast not lyed vnto men, but vnto God. Whereby hee insinuateth, that the holy Ghost is very God. In the vision of the Prophet Isay, the words by him set downe are these: I heard the voice of Iehonah, saying, Whom shall I send, &c. and he said, Goe and say to this people: Ye shall heare in deeds: yet ye shall not vnderstand. But Paul quoting the same place, spake on this manner: Well faith the holy Ghost by Isay the Prophet, saying, Goe vnto this people and say vnto them, &c. Now these places being compared together make it plaine, that the title of Iehonah, agreeth to the holy Ghost. But yet the enemies of this truth which thinke that the holy Ghost is nothing els but the action or operation of God, object out of the scriptures to the contrary: I. God knoweth the Sonne: the holy Ghost knoweth not the Sonne: for none knoweth the Sonne but the Father: ergo, the holy Ghost is not God. Ans. That place excludeth no person in Trinity, but only creatures, and false Gods, and the meaning is this: None, that is, no creature, or idol god, knoweth the Sonne of God; but the Father. And the opposition is made to exclude creatures, not to exclude the holy Ghost. Againe they object, that the holy Ghost maketh request for vs with groanes & sighes that cannot be vttered: therefore (say they) the holy Ghost is not God, but rather a gift of God. For he that is true God, cannot pray, groane, or sigh. Ans. Pauls meaning is thereby to signifie that the holy Ghost causeth vs to make requests, and stirreth vp our hearts to groane and sigh to God: for he said before, We haue receiued the spirit of adoption, whereby we crie Abba Father. Yet further, they object the words of the angel Gabriel to the virgin Mary, saying, The vertue of the most high hath ouer-shadowed thee: & hence they gather, that if the holy Ghost be the vertue of God, then he is not God indeede. Ans. As Christ is called the Word of God, not a word made of letters or syllables, but a substantiall word, that is, being for euer of the same substance with the Father: so in this place the holy Ghost is called the vertue of the most high, not because he is a created quality, but because he is the substantiall vertue of the Father and the Sonne; and therefore God equall with them both. Furthermore they alledge, that neither the Scriptures, nor the practise of the Primitiue Church doth warrant vs to pray to the holy Ghost. Ans. It is not true. For whensoever we direct our prayer to any one of the three persons in him we pray to them all. Besides we haue example of praier made to the holy Ghost, in the word of God. For Paul faith to the Corinthians, The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, the loue of God the Father, and the fellowship of the holy Ghost be with you all. And the words are as if Saint Paul had said thus: O Father, let thy loue, O Sonne, let thy grace, O holy Ghost, let thy fellowship bee with them all. And therefore this first doctrine is true, & as well to be beleue as any other, that the holy Ghost is God.

The second point is, that the holy Ghost is a distinct person from the Father and the Sonne. Hereupon the articles touching the three persons are thus distinguished: I beleue in the Father, I beleue in the Sonne, I be-

A leue in the holy Ghost. This point also is consonant to the Scriptures which make the same distinction. In the baptisme of Christ, the Father vttereth a voice from heauen, saying, This is my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleased; and not the Sonne, or the holy Ghost. Secondly, the Sonne flood in the water, and was baptized by John; and not the Father, or the holy Ghost. Thirdly, the holy Ghost descended from heauen vpon Christ in the forme of a done; and not the Father, or the Sonne, but the holy Ghost alone. Christ in his commission vnto his disciples, faith, Math. 28. 19. Goe teach all nations baptizing them into the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. Now if the holy Ghost had beene the same person either with the Father, or with the Sonne, then it had bin sufficient to haue named the Father and the Sonne onely. And the distinction of the third person from the rest may be conceiued by this, that the holy Ghost is the holy Ghost, and not the Father or the Sonne.

The third point to be beleueed, is that the holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne. For a further proofe hereof, consider these places. Paul faith, Rom. 8. 9. Ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit: for the spirit of God dwelleth in you. But if any man haue not the spirit of Christ, he is not his. And againe, Gal. 4. 6. Because ye are sonnes, God hath sent forth the spirit of the Son into your hearts. Where we may observe, that the holy Ghost is the spirit both of the Father and of the Sonne. Now the holy Ghost is called the spirit of the Father, not onely because he is sent of him, but because he proceedeth from the Father; as Christ faith to his disciples, Whom the comforter will come, whom I shall send vnto you from the Father, even the spirit of truth which proceedeth of the Father, he shall testifie of me. And therefore likewise hee is sent of the Sonne, not onely because hee is sent of the Sonne, but also because hee proceedeth from him. Againe, in the Trinitie the person sending, doth communicate his whole essence and substance to the person sent. As the Father sending the Sonne, doth communicate his essence and substance to the Sonne. For sending doth presuppose a communication of essence. Now the Father and the Sonne send the holy Ghost: therefore both of them communicate their substance & essence vnto the same person. Thirdly Christ faith, The holy Ghost hath receiued of mine which hee shall shew vnto you, namely, knowledge and truth, to be reuealed vnto his Church. Where we may reason thus: the person receiuing knowledge from another, receiues essence also: the holy Ghost receiues truth and knowledge from Christ to be reuealed vnto the Church: and therefore first of all he hath receiued substance and essence from the Sonne. But some peradventure will say, where is it written in all the Bible in expresse words, that the holy Ghost proceeds from the Sonne as hee proceeds from the father? Ans. The Scripture faith not so much in plaine teames, yet wee must know, that that which is gathered fro thence by iust consequence, is no lesse the truth of God, then that which is exprest in words. Hereupon all Churches, false those in Greece, with one consent acknowledge the truth of this point.

The fourth and last point is, that the holy Ghost is equal to the Father and the Sonne. And this we are taught to acknowledge in the Creede, in that we doe as well beleue in the holy Ghost, as in the Father and the Son. And though the holy Ghost be sent of the Father and the Sonne, (yet as I haue said before) that argues no inequality (for one equal may send another by consent,) but order onely, whereby the holy Ghost is last of all the three persons. Again, in that the holy Ghost receiue from the Sonne, it prooues no inferiority. Because he receiues from the Sonne whatsoever he receiues by nature, and not by grace. And he receiues not a part, but all that the Sonne hath, sauing the propriety of his person.

Now follow the benefits which are given by the holy Ghost, and they are of two sorts: some are common to all creatures, and some are proper to men. The benefite of the holy Ghost common to all creatures, is the worke of creation and preseruation. For all things were created and made, and afterward preferred by the holy Ghost, So Eliah saith, Iob 33. 4. The spirit of G O D hath made me. And Moses saith, Gen. 1. 2. In the beginning the spirit moved upon the waters. The phrase is borrowed from a bird, who in hatching of her young ones, sits vpon the eggs, moues her selfe vpon them, and heats them. And so likewise the holy Ghost in the beginning did by his owne power cherish and preserve the masse or lump whereof all things were made, and caused it to bring forth the creatures. This being evident, that the holy Ghost hath a Roke in the work of creation and preseruation, we must vnfaignedly acknowledg that we were first created, and since that time continually preferred by the benefite euen of the third person.

The benefits proper vnto men, are of two sorts: some are common to all men both good and bad, and some proper to the elect and faithfull. The benefits common to all men are diuers. 1. the gift of praising a particular calling. As in the body seuerall members haue seuerall vses; so in euery society seuerall men haue seuerall offices and callings, and the gifts whereby they are enabled to performe the duties thereof, are from the holy Ghost. When Godson became a valiant captain to deliuer the Israelites, it is said, he was clothed with the spirit. Iudg. 6. 34. Bezaleel and Aholiab being set apart to build the tabernacle, were filled with the spirit of God in wisdom and in vnderstanding, and in all workmanship, to finde out curious workmen, to worke in gold, and in siluer, & in brasse; also in the art to set stones, and to carue in timber, &c. By this it is manifested, that the skill of any handicraft is not in the power of man, but comes by the holy Ghost. And by this we are taught, to vse all those gifts wel, whereby we are enabled to discharge our particular callings: that they may serue for the glory of God, & the good of his Church: and those that in their callings vse fraud and deceit, or else liue inordinately, doe most vthankfully abuse the gifts of God, and dishonour the spirit of God the author of their gifts, for which thing they must giue an account one day.

The second gift common to all, is illumination, whereby a man is enabled to vnderstand the will of God in his word. The Iewes in the reading of the old Testament had a veile over their hearts: and the like haue all men by nature, to whom the word of God is foolishnesse. Act. 17. 18. Paul at his conuersion was blinded, and skales were vpon his eyes: the like also becometh the eyes of our mindes, and they must fall away, before we can vnderstand the wil of God. Now it is the worke of the holy Ghost to remoue these skales and filmes from our eyes. And for this very cause he is called the anointing & eye-saine: for as it doth cleare the eyes, and take away the dimnesse of them; so doth the holy Ghost take away blindness from our mindes, that we may see into the truth of Gods word. This being a common gift, and receiued both of good and bad, it standeth vs in hand not to content our selues with the bare knowledge of the word, but therewithall we must ioyne obedience, and make conscience thereof, or else that will befall vs which Christ foretold, that he which knoweth his masters will and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes.

The third gift of the holy Ghost, is the gift of Prophecie, whereby a man is made able to interpret and expound the Scriptures. Now albeit this gift be very excellent and not giuen to euery man, yet is it common both to good and bad. For in the day of iudgement when men shall cometo Christ and say, Master, we haue prophesied in thy name, he shall answer againe, I neuer knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquitie. Hereupon those that are in the calling of the ministration, & haue receiued the gift of prophecie, must not herewithall be puffed vp. For if they be not as well doers of Gods will, as teachers, their gifts will turne to their further condemnation. As the carpenters that built Noahs arke when the flood came were drowned, because they would not obey Noahs preaching; so those that haue the gift of prophecie, and are builders in Gods house, if they build not themselves as well as others, for all their preaching, at the day of iudgement they shall be condemned: and therefore it standeth them in hand, not to content themselves with this, that they know & teach others Gods will, but that they themselves must be the first doers of the same.

The fourth common gift of the holy Ghost, is Ability to bridle and reframe some affections, so as they shall not breake out into outrageous behauiour. Haman a wicked man, and an enemy to Gods Church, when he saw Mordecai the Iew sitting in the kings gate, and that hee would not stand vp to moue vnto him, hee was full of indignation: neuertheless the text saith, Hest. 5. 10. that he refrained himselfe. And when Arimasch an heathen king had taken Sarah Abrahams wife, God said vnto him, I know that thou diddest this with an upright heart: and the text addeth further, I haue kept thee that thou shouldest not sinne against me. And thus the Lord giues to men, as yet without the spirit of sanctification, this gift to bridle themselves, so as in outward action they shall not practise this or that sin. For why did not Arimasch commit adulterie? surely, because God kept him from it. Again, in the histories of the heathen we may read of many that were iust, liberal, meeke, continent, &c. and that by a general operation of the holy Ghost, that representeth the corruption of nature, for the common good. Here then if any man aske, how it comes to passe that some men are more modest and ciuill then others, seeing all men by nature are equally wicked, the answer may be, not as the common saying is, because some are of better nature then others; (for all the sonnes of Adam are equal in regard of nature) the childe new borne in that respect is as wicked as the eldest man that euer liued) but the reason is, because God giues this comon gift of restraining the affections more to some then to others. This must be considered of vs al. For a man may haue the spirit of God to bridle many sins, & yet neuer haue the spirit to mortifie the same, & to make him a new creature. And this being so, we must take heed that we deceiue not our selues. For it is not sufficient for a man to liue in outward ciuility, & to keep in some of his affections vpon some occasion (for that a wicked man may doe) but we must further labour to feeble in our selues the spirit of God, not only bridling sin in vs, but also mortifying & killing the same. Indeed both of the are the good gifts of Gods spirit, but yet the mortification of sinne is the chiefeft, being an effectuall signe of grace, & proper to the elect.

The fifth grace & gift of the holy Ghost is, to heare & receive the word of God with ioy. In the parable of the sower, one kinde of bad ground are they, which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy: and this is that, which the author of the Hebrews calls the tasting of the good word of God, and of the power of the world to come. We know that there is great difference betwene tasting of meat and eating of it. They that sit down at the table do both taste & eat, but they that dresse the meat do only see & taste thereof: so it is at the Lords table; Many there be that haue this gift, truly both to taste & cat of the body and blood of Christ offered in the word & Sacraments; and some againe do only taste & see the sweetnes of them and reioyce therein, but yet are not indeed partakers thereof. Now if this be so, then al those which heare the word of God, must take heed how they heare, and labour to finde the se two things in themselves by hearing: 1. that in heart & conscience they be thoroughly touched & humbled for their sins: 2. that they be certainly assured of the fauour & loue of God in Christ, & that the sweete promises of the Gospel doe belong to them: & in consideration hereof they must make a conscience of all sin both in thoughts, word, and deed, through the whole course of their liues. And this kinde of hearing bringeth that ioy which vanisheth not away.

Thus much of the benefits of the H. Ghost common to all men both good and bad: now follow such as are proper to the elect, al which may be reduced vnto one, namely, the inhabitation of the spirit, whereby the Elect are the temples of the holy Ghost: who is said to dwell in men, not in respect of substance (for the whole nature of the holy Ghost cannot be comprised in the body or soule of man) but in respect of a particular operation: and this dwelling stands in two things. The first, that the holy Ghost doth abide in them, not for a time onely, but for euer: for the word dwell, noteth perpetuities. Secondly, that the holy Ghost hath the full disposition of the heart, as when a man cometh to dwell in an house, whereof he is lord, hee hath libertie to gouerne it after his owne will. Now this disposition of the hearts of the faithfull by the holy Ghost, standeth in fine speciall and notable gifts; euery one worthy our obseruation.

The first is, a certaine knowledge of a mans own reconciliatid to God in Christ. As it is said in Ely 53. 11. By his knowledge my righteous seruants shall iustifie many. And Christ saith, Ioh. 17. 3. This is life eternal, that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. This knowledge is not generall: for then the diuels might be saued; but it is particular, whereby a man knoweth God the Father to bee his Father, and Christ the redeemer, to be his redeemer, and the holy Ghost to be his sanctifier and comforter. And it is a specull work of the holy Ghost, as Paul saith, Rom. 8. 16. The spirit of God beareth witness to our spirits, that we are the children of God. And 1 Cor. 2. 12. We haue receiued the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are giuen vnto vs of God.

The second gift, is regeneration, whereby a man of a limme of the diuel is made a member of Christ, & of a childe of Satan (whom euery one of vs by nature do as liuely resemble as a ny man doth his owne parent) is made the child of God. Except a man (saith our Sauiour) Christ, Ioh. 3. 5. be borne againe by water & the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heauen. Iohn Baptist in saying that Christ baptized with the holy Ghost and fire, compares the spirit of God to fire and water. To fire fortwo causes: 1. as it is the nature of fire to warme the body that is benumbed and frozen with dull, yet he is able to open thine understanding; for as there is outward teaching by the minister, so the work of the holy Ghost is joyned withall to enlighten the conceit of the minde, that they which heare the word with reuerence, may profit thereby, and get knowledge. But for all this men will not learne, but remaine ignorant still, then let them mark the example of the sonnes of Eli: he in some part did rebuke them for their wickednesse, but yet they would not obey: and the reason is there set downe, because the Lord would destroy them. 1. Sam. 2. 25. In the same manner, howeouer we may not iudge of any mans person, yet this may be said, that if men refuse to heare the word of God when they may, or if in hearing they will not obey, it is a fearefull signe that God will at length destroy them. When a trumpet is sounded in a mans eare, and hee lies still, not stirring at all, he is certainly dead. And surely when the trumpet of the Gospel is sounded in the eares of our hearts, if we awake not out of our finnes to newnes of life, we are no better then dead men before God. Wherefore the case being thus dangerous, and the punishment so great, let vs labour in time for the knowledge of Gods will, & preuent Gods iudgements before they light vpon vs.

Thirdly, as the Apostle saith, Gal. 5. 25. If we live in the spirit, we must walke in the spirit, that is, if we be dead vnto sin by the power of the holy Ghost, and be raised vp to newnes of life, then we must walke in the spirit. Now to walke in the spirit, is to lead our liues in shewing forth the fruits of the spirit. In Esay vne holy Ghost is compared vnto water poured forth on the drie land, which maketh their seeds to grow like the wild-flowes by the riues of waters. Esa. 44. 3. 4. wherefore those that haue the gifts of the spirit must be trees of righteousness: bringing forth the fruits of the spirit, which (as they are set down by Paul) are principally nine.

The first fruit is loue, which respects both God and man. Loue vnto God is an inward and spirituall motion in the heart, whereby God is loued absolutely for himselfe. This loue shewes it selfe in two things: 1. When a mans heart is set and disposed to seeke the honour and glory of God in all things. 2. When a man by all meanes strives and endeauours himselfe to please God in euery thing, counting it a most miserable estate to lue in the displeasure of God: and the heart that is thus affected, can haue no greater torment then to fall into sinne, whereby God is offended and his displeasure provoked. By these two signes a man may know whether he loue God or no, and by them also must hee testifie his loue. Now our loue to man is a fruit of this loue of God: for God is to be loued for himselfe: man is loued for God. This loue must not bee in they only, but in deede and action. Saint John teacheth vs not to loue in word & tongue only, but in deede & truth, 1. John 3. 18. Brotherly loue doth alwaies lie hid, but when an occasion is offered, it doth breake forth into action: it is like fire, which though for a time it be smothered, yet at length it breakes forth into a flame. And so much loue a man sheweth to his neighbour, as he hath; and where none is shewed, none is.

The second fruit is Joy, when a man is glad at the good of his neighbor as at his owne good: and this is a speciall worke of the holy Ghost. For the nature of man is to pine away, and to grieve at the good of an other; and contrariwise it is a worke of grace to reioyce thereat. Paul saith, Rom. 12. 15. Reioyce with them that reioyce. And this was the holy practise of the friends and neighbours of Zacharias and Elizabeth, when Iohn Baptist was borne, they came and reioyced with them.

The third fruit of the spirit, is peace. Of this Paul speaketh most excellently, saying, Rom. 12. 18. If it be possible, as much as in you is, haue peace with all men. It is nothing els but concord which must be kept in an holy manner, with all men, both good and bad, so farre forth as can be. Isay the Prophet speaking of the fruits of the Gospel, saith, Esa. 11. 6. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard with the kidde, &c. Where note, that in the kingdome of Christ, when a man is called into the state of grace, howeouer by nature hee bee as a wolfe, as a leopard, as a lyon, or as a Beare; yet hee shall then lay away his cruell nature, and become gentle, and lue peaceably with all men. Now for the practising of this peace, there are three duties especially to be learned and performed:

1. Rather then peace should be broken, a man must yeeld of his owne right. When Publicans came to our Saviour Christ for tribute, hee had a lawfull excuse: for howeouer hee liued in low estate among men, yet he was the right heire to the kingdome, and therefore was free: neuertheless hee stood not on his priuiledge, but called Peter, saying Math. 17. 26, 27. Left we offend them, go to the sea & cast in an angle, & take the first fish that cometh vp: and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of silver: take it, and give it to them for thee and mee. Here wee see that our Saviour Christ, rather then hee would breake the common peace, yeelds of his owne right; and so we must doe if we will be good followers of him. Secondly, when any man shall sinne either in word or in deede, specially if it be vpon infirmities, we must auoide bitter inuictiues and mildly tell him of his fault, and in all meeknesse and loue labour for his amendment. So Paul teacheth vs, saying, Galat. 6. 1, 2. If any man bee fallen into any fault by occasion, restore such an one with the spirit of meeknesse, considering thyselfe, lest thou bee also tempted, &c. Beare ye one anothers burden. Thirdly, euery man within the compass of his calling, must bee a peace-maker betweene them that are at variance. This is a speciall duty of godlinesse and christianitie, and therefore our Saviour Christ doth highly commend fuch, & pronounceth this blessing vpon them, that they shall be called the children of God.

The fourth fruit of the spirit, is long suffering: and it standeth in two points: 1. when a man deferreth his anger, & is hardly brought to it: 2. being angry doth yet moderate the same, and stay the hotnes of that affection. For the first, to bridle anger, it is a speciall worke of the holy Ghost, and the meanes to attaine vnto it are these: 1. not to take notice of the iniuries and wrongs done vnto vs, if they be not of great moment; but to let them passe, as not knowing them. Salomon saith, Prov. 19. 11. It is a mans discretion to deferre his anger. Now how is that done? it is added in the next words, It is the glory of a man to passe by infirmities: that is, when a man shall ouerhoote himselfe, either in word or in deede, to let it passe either wholly or till a time convenient, as though we knew not of it. The second way to deferre and bridle anger, is when a man hath injured vs either in word or deede, to thinke without felues that wee haue injured other in the same manner: and for this cause Salomon saith, Eccles. 7. 23, 24. Give not thine heart to all that men speake, lest thou beare by seruant cursing thee: for oftentimes thine heart also sweeth that thou hast cursed others. A man must not listen to euery mans words at all times: but he is to thinke that hee hath spoken or done the same to other men, and that now the Lord meeteth with him by the like as it is said, Mat. 7. 2. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you againe. This is a thing which few consider. Enill men desire good report, and would haue all men speake well of them, whereas they can speake well of none; but in deede they must begin to speake well of others before others speak well of the. Thirdly, a man must consider how God dealeth with him. For so often as he sinneth hee prouoketh God to cast him away, and to confound him eternally; yet the Lord is mercifull and long-suffering. Euen so when men doe offend & iniurie vs, we must do as God doth: not be angry, but fight against our affections, endeauouring to become patient and long-suffering as God is with vs. The second propertie of long-suffering, is to keep the affectio of anger in moderation and compass. It is not alwaies a sin to be angry, and therefore it is said of Christ (in whom was no blemish or sin) that he was angry: yet we must looke that our anger be moderate, not continuing ouerlong, as Paul saith, Let not the sunne goe downe vpon your wrath.

The fifth fruit of the spirit, is gentlenesse, whereby a man behauieth & shewes himselfe friendly and courteous to euery man, as Paul saith to Titus, Tit. 2. 2. Put them in remembrance that they speake euill of no man, that they be no fighters, but soft, shewing all meeknesse vnto all men, whilst they be good for bad. This gentlenesse standeth in three points: 1. to speake to euery man friendly and lovingly. 2. to salute friendly and courteously. 3. to be ready vpon euery occasion to giue reuerence and honour to euery man in his place. It is made a question of some, whether a man is to salute and speake vnto them that are knowne to be lewd and wicked men: but here wee see what our duty is, in that we are taught to be courteous to all men both good and bad, yet so as we approue not of their finnes: as for that which S. Iohn saith of false prophets, 2 Ioh. 10. Receive them not; neither bid them God speede, it is to bee vnderstood of giuing an outward approbation to false teachers.

The sixth fruit, is goodnesse, which is, when a man is ready to do good and become seruicable in his calling to all men, at all times, vpon all occasions. This was to be seene in that holy man Lebii: he saith, Iob. 59. 15, 16. that hee was eyes to the blinde, and feete to the lame, a father vnto the poore, and when his knew not the cause hee sought it out. And S. Paul shewed this fruit most notably after his conuersion, for hee saith, 1 Cor. 9. 22. that hee was made all things to all men: that he might save some. He was content to vndergoe any thing for the good of any man. And as we haue heard, the godly are trees of righteousness bearing fruit, not for themselves but for others, and therefore Paul in the Epistle to the Galatians giues this rule, Due service one to another in loue. In these daies it is hard to finde these duties performed in any place. For both practise and prowerbe is commonly this, Euery man for himselfe, and God for vs all: but it is a gracelesse saying; and the contrary must be practised of all, that desire to be guided by the spirit.

The seauenth fruit is faith; Faith or fidelitie stands in these two duties: 1. to make conscience of a lye, & to speake euery thing whereof wee speake, as we thinke it is, & not to speak one thing, and thinke another. A rare thing it is, to find this vertue in the world now adaies: who is he that makes conscience of a lye? and is not truth banished out of our coasts? considering that for gaines and outward commodities men make no bones of glozing and dissembling; but alas, the practise is damnable, & the contrary is the fruit of the holy Ghost; namely, to speake the truth from the heart: and he that can doe this, by the testimony of God himselfe shall rest in the mountaine of his holines, euen in the kingdome of heauen. The second point wherein fidelitie consisteth, is when a man hath made a promise that is lawfull and good, to keepe and performe the same. Some thinke it is a small matter to breake promise, but in deede it is a fruit of the flesh; and contrariwise a fruit of the spirit to performe a lawfull promise: and a mans word should be as sure as an obligation: and in conscience a man is bound to keepe promise so farre forth, as hee will to whom the promise is made. In deede if a man be releas'd of his promise, he is then free: otherwise if we promise and do not performe, we do not onely cracke our credite before men, but also sinne before God.

The eight fruit of the spirit, is meeknesse, which

Which is a notable grace of God, when a man provoked by injuries, doth neither intend, nor enterprize the requital of the same. And it stands in three duties. The first is, to interpret the sayings and doings of other men in better part as much as possibly may be. The second, when men mistake and misconstrue our sayings and doings, if the matter bee of smaller moment, to bee silent and patient as Christ was, when hee was accused before the high Priests and Pharisees: this being withall remembred, that if the matter bee of weight and moment, we may defend our selves by soft and milde answers. The third is, not to contend in word or deede with any man, but when we are to deale with others, to speake our minde, and so an end.

The last fruite of the spirit is temperance, whereby a man brideth his appetite or lust in meate, drinke, and apparell. In bridling the lust, these rules must be observed: I. Eating and drinking must bee ioynd with continuall fasting, after this manner: We must not glut our selves, but rather abstaine from that which nature desireth, and as some vsē to speake, leaue our stomackes crauing. II. A man must vsē to eate and drinke, as afterward hee may the better be enabled for Gods worship. Creatures are abused when they make vs visit to serue God. The common fault is, on the Sabbath day men so pamper themselves, as that they are made visit both to heare and learne Gods word, and fit for nothing but to slumber and sleepe: but following this rule of temperance, these faults shall be amended. III. This must be a caveat in our apparell, that we be attired according to our callings in holy comelinesse. The Lord hath threatned to visit all those that are clothed in strange apparell. Zeph. 1. 8. And holy comelinesse is this, wherein the apparell is both for fashion & matter so made and worne, that it may expresse & shew forth the graces of God in the heart, as sobriety, temperance, grauitie, &c. and the beholder may take occasion by the apparell, to acknowledge and commend these vertues. But lamentable is the time, looke on men and women in these daies, and you may see and reade their sins written in great letters on their apparell, as intemperance, pride, and wantonnesse. Euery day new fashions please the world; but indeed that holy comelinesse, which the holy Ghost doth commend to vs, is the right fashion when all is done. And these are the nine fruits of the spirit, which we must put in practise in our liues and conuersations.

Fourthly, if we beleue in the holy Ghost, and thereupon doe perfwade our selves, that hee will dwell in vs: we must daily labour as we are commanded to keepe our vessels in holines and honour vnto the Lord, 1 Thes. 4. 4. and the reason is good. If a man bee to entertaine but an earthly Prince or some man of state, hee would be fure to haue his house in a readinesse, and all matters in order against his coming, so as euery thing might bee pleasing vnto so worthy a guest: well now, behold, we put our confidence & affiance in the holy Ghost, and do beleue that he will come vnto vs, and sanctifie vs, and lodge in our hearts. He is higher the al states in the world whatsoeuer; & therefore we must looke that our bodies & soules be kept in an honourable and holy manner, so as they may be fit temples for him to dwell in. S. Paul biddeth vs not to grieve the holy spirit. Eph. 4. 30. Where the holy Ghost is compared to a guest, and our bodies & soules vnto houses: and as men vie their guests friendly and courteous, shewing vnto them all seruice and duties: so must we doe to Gods spirit which is come to dwell and abide in vs, doing nothing in any case, which may disquiet or molest him. Now there is nothing so grieuous vnto him as our finnes, and therefore we must make conscience of all manner of sinne, lest by abusing of our selves, we do cause the holy Ghost (as it were) with griefe to depart from vs. When the arke of the covenant, which was a signe of the presence of God, was in the house of Obed Edom, the text saith, 2 Sam. 6. 11. that the Lord blessed him and all his house: but when the holy Ghost dwells in a mans heart, there is more then the arke of the Lord present, euen God himselfe: and therefore may we looke for a greater blessing. Now then shall we grieve the holy Ghost by sinning, seeing we reape such benefit by his abode? It is said that our Sauour Christ was angry when he came into the temple at Ierusalem, and saw the abuses therein, Iob. 2. 15. Now shall he be angry for the abuses that are done in a temple of stone, and seeing the temples of our bodies, which are not made of stone, but are spirituall, figured by that earthly temple, seeing them (I say) abused by sinne, will hee not bee much more angry? yea, we may assure our selves he cannot abide that. And therefore if wee beleue in the holy Ghost, we must hereupon bee moued to keepe our bodies and soules pure and cleane. And further to perfwade vs hereunto, we must remember this, that when we pollute our soules and bodies with any manner of sinne, we make them euentuals and styes for our wretched enemy the diuell to harbour in. For when Satan is once cast out, if afterward we fall againe to our old finnes and loosenesse of life, and do defile our bodies, they are then most cleane & neare for him to dwell in: whereupon he will come and bring seauen other diuels worse then himselfe, and so a mans last end shall bee worse then his beginning. Now what a fearful thing is this, that the bodie which should bee a temple for the holy Ghost, by our finnes should be made a stable for the diuel. Furthermore, S. Paul biddeth vs not to quench the spirit. The graces of the holy spirit in this life, are like sparkes of fire, which may soone be quenched with a little water. Now so oft as we sin, we cast water vpon the grace of God, and as much as we can put out the flame: therefore it stands vs in hand to make conscience of euery thing wherein wee may offend and displease God. And wee may assure our selves, that so long as we liue and lie in our corruptions and sins, the holy Ghost will neuer come and dwell with vs. He is a spirit most pure and chaste, and therefore must haue an vdefiled temple to dwell in.

Thus we haue heard what is to bee beleue concerning the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. Now, looke as we beleue in God distinguished into three persons: so we must remember, that when we performe diuine worship to him, we may distinguish the persons, but we are not to seuer them: when we pray to the Father, we must not omit the Son or the holy Ghost, but make our prayers to them all: for as in nature they are one, and in person not diuided but distinguished: so in all worship we must neuer confound or seuer the persons, but distinguish them, and worship the Trinity in vnity, and vnite in Trinity: one God in three persons, and three persons in one God.

Hitherto we haue intreated of the first part of the Creede concerning God: now folloves the second part thereof concerning the Church: and it was added to the former vpon speciall consideration. For (a) the right order of a confession did require, that after the Trinity the Church should be mentioned, as the house after the owner, the temple after God, and the citie after the builder. Again, the Creede is concluded with points of doctrine concerning the Church, because whosoever it out of it, is also forth of the number of Gods children: and he cannot haue God for his Father, which hath not the Church for his mother.

Question is made what the wordes are which are to be supplied in this article, the holy Catholike Church, whether, I beleue, or I beleue in: and ancient expositours haue sufficiently determined the matter. One (b) saith, In these wordes, in which is set forth our faith of the God-head, it is said, In God the Father, in the Son, and in the holy Ghost; but in the rest where the speech is not of the God-head but of creatures & mysteries, the preposition, In is not added: but it should be, in the holy Church, but that we should beleue there is an holy Church, not as God, but as a company gathered in God. And men should beleue that there is remission of finnes, not, in the remission of finnes: and they should beleue the resurrection of the body, not, in the resurrection of the body: therefore by this preposition the Creator is distinguished from be creatures, and things pertaining to God from things pertaining to men. An other vpon these wordes, This is the worke of God that ye beleue in him, saith, If ye beleue in him, ye beleue him; not if ye beleue him, ye beleue in him: for the diuels beleueed God, but did not beleue in him. Again, of the Apostles, we may say, we beleue Paul, but we do not beleue in Paul: we beleue Peter, but we beleue not in Peter. For his faith that beleueth in him which is in us, is the way, is imputed to him for righteousness.

What is it therefore to beleue in him? by beleueing to loue and like, and as it were to passe into him, and to be incorporated into his members. Now the reasons which some Papists bring to the contrary, to prooue that we may beleue in the creatures, and in the Church, are of no moment. First, they alleadge the phrase of Scripture, Exo. 14. 31. They beleueed in God, and in Moses, 1 Sam. 27. 12. And Abis beleueed in David, 2 Chro. 20. 20. Beleue in the Prophet and prosper. Ans. The Hebrew phrase in which the seruile letter Be is vsed, must not be translated with a preposition that ruleth an accusatiue or ablatiue case, but with a datiu in this manner, Beleue Moses, David, the Prophet: and it doth not import any affiance in the creature, but only a giuing of credence one man to another. Secondly, they alleadge, that ancient fathers read the article on this manner, I beleue in the holy Catholike Church. Ans. And indeed some haue done so: but by this kinde of speech they signified no more but thus much, that they beleueed that there was a Catholike Church.

Thus hauing found what wordes are to be supplied, let vs come to the meaning of the article. And that we may proceede in order, let vs first of all see what the Church is. The Church is a peculiar company of men predestinated to life everlasting, and made one in Christ. First I say, it is a peculiar company of men: for S. Peter saith, Ye are a chosen generatiō, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, & a peculiar people. He speaks indeed of the Church of God on earth, but his saying may be also extended to the whole Church of God, as well in heaue as in earth. Now because there can be no cōpany yles it haue a beginning & cause wherby it is gathered: therefore I adde further in the definition, predestinated to life everlasting. Noting thereby the ground and cause of the Catholike Church, namely Gods eternal predestination to life everlasting: & to this purpose our Sauour Christ saith, Fear not little flocke for it is your Fathers will to giue you the kingdom: signifying thereby, that the first and principall cause of the Church, is the good pleasure of God, whereby he hath before all worlds purposed to aduance his Elect to eternal salvation. Therefore one saith wel, (a) only the Elect are the Church of God. And further, because no company can continue and abide for euer, vntles the members thereof be ioyned and coupled together by some bond, therefore I adde in the last place, made one with Christ. This vnion maketh the Church to bee the Church: & by it the members thereof, whether they be in heauen or in earth, are distinguished from all other companies whatsoever. Now this cōiunction between Christ & the Church is auouched by S. Paul when he saith, Christ is the head & body, which is his Church: & when hee ascribes the name of Christ not onely to the person of the Son, but to the Church it self, as in the Epistle to the Galatians, To Abraham &c. in his seed were the promises made: he saith not &c. to his seedes, as speaking of many, but &c. vnto his his seed, as speaking of one, which is Christ; that is, not the redeemer alone, but also the Church redeemed. For Christ as he is man is not the only seed of Abraham. And this definition of the Church is almost in so many words set down in the Scriptures, in that it is called the Family of God, partly in heaven, and partly in earth, named of Christ: and also it is called the heavenly Jerusalem, the mother of us all: and the celestial Jerusalem: and the congregation of the first borne. Now for the better understanding of the nature, estate, and parts of the Church, two points among the rest must be considered; the efficient cause thereof, Gods Predestination; & the forme, the mystical union.

In handling the doctrine of Predestination, my meaning is, onely to stand on such points as are revealed in the word & necessarie, tending to edification. And first I will shew what is the truth, & secondly the contrarie falsehood. In the truth I consider foure things: I. what Predestination is: II. what is the order of it: III. what be the parts of it. IV. what is the use.

Predestination may thus be defined, It is a part of the counsell of God, whereby hee hath before all times purposed in himselfe to shew mercie on some men and to passe by others, shewing his iustice on them for the manifestation of the glory of his own name. First, I say, it is a part of his counsell, because the counsell or decree of God, universally extends it selfe to all things that are: and Predestination is Gods decree so farre forth as it concerns the reasonable creatures, especially men. Now in every purpose or decree of God, three things must be considered; the beginning, the matter, the ende. The beginning is the will of God whereby hee willetti and appointeth the estate of his creatures: and it is the most absolute, supreme, and soveraigne cause of all things that are, so far forth as they haue being: having nothing either about it selfe or out of it selfe, to be an impulsive cause to moue or incline it; and to say otherwise, is to make the will of God to be no will. Indeed mens wills are moued and disposed by external causes out of themselves, borrowed from the things whereof deliberation is made, because they are to be ruled by equitie and reason: and a mans bare will without reason is nothing. Now Gods will is not ruled by another rule of reason or iustice, but it selfe is an absolute rule both of iustice and reason. A thing is not first of all reasonable and iust, and then afterward willed by God: but it is first of all willed by God, and thereupon becomes reasonable and iust. The matter of his purpose, is a decreed manifestation of two of the most principall attributes of the Godhead, mercie and iustice: and that with limitation or restraint of mercie to some of the creatures, and iustice to some others, because it was his good will and pleasure. And we are not to imagine that this is a point of cruelty in God; for his very essence or nature is not iustice alone, or mercie alone, but iustice and mercie both together: and therefore to purpose the declaration of them both vpon his creatures ouer whom he is a soveraigne Lord, and that without other respects, vpon his very will and pleasure, is no point of iniustice. The supreme end of the counsell of God, is the manifestation of his owne glorie, partly in his mercie, and partly in his iustice. For in common equitie, the end which he propounds vnto himselfe of all his doing must be answerable to his nature; which is maiestie and glorie, and (as I haue said) iustice and mercie it selfe.

And because Pauls disputation in the 9. to the Romanes giues light and sufficient confirmation to this which I now teach, I will stand a little to open and resolve the same. From the 1. verse to the 6. he sets downe his griefe conceiued for his brethren the Iewes, and therewithall, that it might not be thought that he spake of malice, he doth onely in close and obscure manner insinuate the Reiellion of that nation. This done, in the 6. verse he answers a secret obiection which might be made, on this manner: If the Iewes be reiectedi, then the word of God is of none effect: that is, then the covenant made with the forefathers is void: but the covenant cannot be voided: therefore the Iewes are not reiectedi. The assumption he takes for granted, & denies the consequence of the proposition. And the ground of his deniall is, because there is a distinction betweene man & man, even among the Iewes, whereby some are indeede in the covenant, some not. And this distinction is proued by three examples: the first in this verse, that of the children of Isaac the common parent of all the Iewes, some are Israel, that is, truly in the covenant as Isaac was: and some are not Israel. Now it might be further objected, that the Iewes are not onely the posterity of Isaac, but the seede of Abraham in whom all nations of the earth are blessed: and therefore not to be reiectedi. And to this Paul answers, verse 7. alleging a second example of the distinction betweene man and man out of the family of Abraham, in which some were indeede sonnes, some were not. For the prooffe of this, first, he sets downe the words of the text in Moses, in Isaac shall thy seed be called: and secondly, makes an exposition of them with a collection on this manner: All they which are the sonnes of the promise, are the seed of Abraham, or the sonnes of God: but Isaac is a sonne of promise and not Ismael, therefore Isaac is the seede of Abraham and heire of the blessing, and not Ismael. The proposition is in the eight verse, the assumption in the ninth verse, the conclusion in the tenth verse. Here make, 1. how hee makes a double seede, one according to the flesh, the other spiritual: and two kind of sonnes, one of the flesh, the other the son of the promise, or the sonne of God: for he puts the one for the other. II. That the distinction betweene Isaac and Ismael, whereby one is in the opened,

covenant of grace, the other not; stands not in their forefence faith and vnbeleefe, and the fruits of them: but in the purpose and will of God it selfe. For Isaac is called the child of promise, because by the vertue of it he was borne, and beleueed, and was adopted the child of God, and made heire of the covenant giuen to Abraham: and therefore consequently the right of adoption befall him by the mere good pleasure of God, which is the first cause of our saluation without respect of any thing in the person of Isaac. For what God by his promise brings to passe in time, that hee most freely decreed before all times. Now considering the Iewes might say, that Ismael was reiectedi, because hee was borne of the handmaide Hagar, whereas they for their parts descended of Abraham and Sarah, by Isaac the lawfull sonne, Paul addes a third example of the distinction betweene man and man out of the family of Isaac, in which Isaac was a true sonne and heire of the promise, and Esaus was not. Now the distinction of these two persons is propounded in the tenth verse, and confirmed vers. 11. 12. 13. in which are set downe three things: 1. the time of this distinction, ere the children were borne, and therefore when they had neither doo nor euill. And this circumstance is no eu, to shew that God was not moued by any preiudice or preconsideration of Isaacs godlinesse, and Esaus prophane-nesse to preterre the one before the other. II. the end why the distinction was made at this time, & not afterward when they were borne, is, that the purpose of God which is according to his election might remaine sure, not of works, but by him that calleth: that is, that by this means it might appeare, that when God receiues any man into the covenant of eternall life, it proceeds not of any dignitie in the man whom God calleth, but from his mercie and alone good pleasure, that his decree of fauing the elect might remaine firme and sure for euer. Hence it is manifest, that there is an vnchangeable decree of election of some men (for hee that takes all, and excepts none, cannot be said to choise) to saluation, depending vpon the alone will of God; and therefore necessarily by the law of contraries, there is an opposite decree of reprobation: for in that God ordaineth some to eternall saluation, hee reiecteth thereby, that his purpose is to passe by some without shewing of mercie. III. The author of this distinction, is God himselfe by his purpose before all times, which purpose hee made manifest by testimony giuen to Rebecca, saying, the elder shall serue the younger: that is, the first borne and more excellent according to the flesh, shall lose his birth-right and the blessing of his father, and in respect of title to the covenant be subiect to the younger. And because this testimonie concerning the freedome and seruitude of Isaac & Esaus might seeme insufficient to prouoe the election of the flesh, and the reiection of the second, therefore Paul addes a second testimonie out of Malachie, I haue loued Iacob, and hated Esau: that is, I haue purposed to loue Iacob, and to hate Esaus. And these words no doubt are alleaged to expound the former place out of Moses, & shew that the bondage of Esaus was ioyned with the hatred of God, and the freedome of Iacob with the lone of God as tokens thereof.

Against this receiued exposition of the former words which I haue now propounded, sundry expositions are made. First, that the prerogative of Isaac about Ismael, and Iacob about Esaus, was onely in temporary blessings, in that God vouchsafed vnto them the right of the land of Canaan. Ans. If these places are to be vnderstood of temporal blessings and not spiritual, then the Apostle hath not fitly alleaged the former examples, to prouoe the reiection of the Iewes from the Covenant. For though it be granted, there be a difference betweene man and man in respect of earthly blessings, yet doth it not follow, that there shall be the same difference in things concerning the kingdom of heauen. If a father for some cause disinherit one or two of his children, it were absurd therupon to conclude, that hee might therefore kill any of the rest. Again, the land of Canaan was not onely an earthly inheritance, but also a pledge and figure vnto our forefathers of a better inheritance in heauen: and therefore the excluding of Ismael and Esaus from the land of Canaan, was a signe that they were excluded from the covenant of grace, and the right of eternall life. Some others say, that by Iacob and Esaus are not meant two persons, but the two nations of the Idumeans and the Israelites. Ans. It is a manifest vntruth. For it was not possible for two nations to strine in the wombe of Rebecca, vnlesse we considered them as they were comprehended vnder the two heads, to wit, the very persons of Iacob & Esaus. And whereas they say, that Esaus in person neuer serued Iacob, but onely in his posteritie, the answer is that Iacobs freedome and prerogatives were spiritual, and not temporal, which by faith he saw a farre off, but enioyed not; and therefore proportionally Esaus was debased to the condition of a seruant in respect of his younger brother, not so much in respect of his outward estate and condition, as in regard of the covenant made with his ancellours from which he was barred. And though it be granted, that by Iacob and Esaus two nations, and not two persons, are to be vnderstood, yet all comes to one head: for the receiuing of the nation of the Israelites into the covenant, and the excluding of them of the Edomites, both depending of Iacob and Esaus, serue as well to prouoe Gods eternall election and reprobation, as the receiuing and reiection of one man. Others say that these words, I haue hated Esau, are thus to be vnderstood, I haue left out Esaus then Iacob. But how then shall we say that Paul hath fitly alleaged this text to Proove the refection of the Iewes from the favour of God and the covenant of grace, considering that of men whereof one is loved more of God, the other less; both may still remain in the Covenant. Lastly, it is alledged that the former exposition makes Ismael and Eſau damned persons. Answer. We must leave vnto God all secret iudgement of particular persons, and yet neuertheless, Paul doth very fitly in their two persons, both defending of Abraham, and both circumcised; set forth examples of such, as for all their outward prerogatives, are indeed barred from the covenant of life everlasting before God. And againe the opposition made by Paul, requires that the contrary to that which is spoken of Isaac and Jacob, should be said of Ismael and Eſau. And there is nothing spoken of either of them in the scriptures, which argues the disposition of men ordained to eternal life. Ismael is noted with the brand of a mocker, and Eſau of a prophane man.

To proceede in the text, because the doctrine of Paul deliuered in the former verses might seeme strange vnto the Romanes, therefore in the fourteenth verse, he laies downe an objection, and answers the same. The objection is this: If God put distinction between man & man, without respect had to their persons, vpon his owne will and pleasure, then is he vnjust; but he is not vnjust, therefore he makes no such distinction. The answer is, God forbid. Whereby hee denies the consequence of the proposition, on this manner: Though God should elect some to saluation, and reiect some others, and that vpon his will, yet were there no iniustice with God. The reason of this answer followes in the 18. verse. God hath absolute power or freedom of will, whereby without being bound to any creature, he may and can first of all haue mercy on whom he will, & secondly harden whom he will. For the prooofe of the first, that God hath mercy on whom he will, he laies downe the testimony of Moses, verſ. 15. I will haue mercy on whom I will shew mercy, and I will haue compassion on whom I will haue compassion. And in verſ. 16. makes his collection to enee, that is, (namely, the purpose of God according to election, verſ. 11.) is not in him that wills, or in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercie. Whereby he teacheth, that the election of God in order goes before all things that may in time befall man; and that therefore neither the intentions and endeauours of the minde, nor the workes of our life, which are the effects of election, can be the impulsive causes to moue God to chooſe vs to saluation. The second, that God hardens whom he will, is confirmed and made plaine by the testimony of Scripture concerning Pharaoh, verſ. 17.

In the 19. verse there followes another objection, arising out of the answer to the former on this manner: If God will haue some to be hardened and reiecte, and his will cannot be resisted; then with no iustice can he punish them that are necessarily subiect to his decree: but God will haue some to be hardened and reiecte, and his will cannot be resisted: therefore (saith the aduersarie) with no iustice can hee punish man that is necessarily subiect to his decree. Here make, that if there had bene an vniversal election of all men, and if men had bene elected or reiecte according as God did foresee that they would beleeue or not beleeue, the occasion of this objection had bene cut off. But let vs come to Pauls answer. In the twentieth verse hee takes the assumption for granted, that some are reiecte because God will: and that the will, that is, the decree of God cannot be resisted: and onely denies the coherence of the proposition, checking the malepert pride of the aduersary, and shewing that the making of this wicked and blasphemous collection against the will of God, is as if a man should sue God at the law, and bring him as it were to the barre, & plead against him as his equall, whereas indeede the creature is nothing to the Creator, and is absolutely to submit it selfe to his will in all things. In verſ. 21. he proceeds to a second answer, shewing that Gods will is not to be blamed, because by his absolute sovereignty & the right of creation, hee hath power to chooſe men, or to reiect or harden them. And where there is right and power to do a thing, the will of the doer is not to be blamed. Now that God hath his right & power over his creature, it is prooued by a comparison from the lesse to the greater, on this manner. The potter hath power over the clay to make of the same lump, one vessell to honour, and another to dishonour: therefore may God much more make some vessels of mercie, and some vessels of wrath prepared to destruction. The first part of the comparison is verſe 21. the second part, verſe 22, 23. And lest any man should thinke that God makes vessels of honour and dishonour without sufficient and iust cause in himselfe, as the potter may doe: therefore he sets downe ends of the will of God: he makes vessels of dishonour to shew his wrath, and to make manifest his power: and againe hee condemnes no man, till hee haue suffered him with long patience. And he makes vessels of honour that he might declare the riches of his glory vpon them. Hence it is manifest, first, that the end of Predestination is the glory of God, which is to be made manifest, partly in his iustice, and partly in his mercy: secondly, that men are not elected or reiecte of God, for their forecenne corruptions or vertues: for then Paul would not haue said, that God made vessels of dishonour, but that being to already, he left them in their dishonour.

Thus from the 6. verse of this chapter to the 24. Paul hath described vnto vs the doctrine of Gods eternal predestination, and that by the iudgement of (a) Diuines in all ages.

The order of Gods Predestination is this. It is the propertie of the reasonable creatures to conceive one thing after another, whereas God conceives all things at once with one act of vnderstanding, and all things both past and to come are present with him; and therefore in his eternal counsell hee decrees not one thing after another, but all things at once. Neuertheless for our vnderstanding sake, we may distinguish the counsell of God concerning man into two acts or degrees: the first, is the purpose of God himselfe, in which hee determines what he will doe, and the end of all his doings: and that is to create all things, specially man for his owne glory; partly by shewing on some men his mercy, and vpon others his iustice. The second, is another purpose, whereby he decrees the execution of the former, & laies downe meanes of accomplishing the end thereof. These two acts of the counsell of God are not to be seuered in any wise, nor confounded, but distinctly considered with some difference. For in the first, God decrees some men to honour, by shewing his mercie and loue on them, and some againe to dishonour, by shewing his iustice on them; and this man more then that, vpon his will and pleasure, and there is no other cause hereof knowne to vs. In the second, knowne and manifest causes are set downe of the execution of the former degree. For no man is actually condemned; yea God decrees to condemne no man but for his sins: and no man is actually saued but for the merit of Christ. Furthermore, this latter act of the counsell of God, must bee conceived of vs in the second place and not in the first. For euermore the first thing to be intended is the end it selfe, & then afterward the subordinate meanes and causes whereby the end is accomplished. Again, the second act of Gods counsell contains two others, one which setteth downe the preparation of the meanes whereby by Gods predestination begins to come in execution; and they are two, the creation of man righteous after the image of God, the voluntary fall of Adam, and withall the shutting vp of all men vnder damnation: the other appoints the applying of the feuerall meanes to the persons of men; that Gods decree, which was set downe before all times, may in time be fully accomplished, as shall afterward in particular appeare.

A child might answer this objection, meaning elect and reiect for their forecenne faith and vnbeleife.

Predestination hath two parts, the Decree of Election, the Decree of Reprobation, or No election. This diuision is plaine by that which hath bin said out of the 9. chapter to the Romanes, and it may be further confirmed by other testimonies. Of some it is said, that the Lord knowes who are his: and of some others, Christ shall say in the day of iudgement, I neuer knewe you. In the Acts it is said, that as many of the Gentiles as were ordained to life everlasting, beleeued. And Iude saith of false prophets, that they were ordained to condemnation.

In handling of the decree of election, I will consider three things: 1. what election is, 2. the execution thereof: 3. the knowledge of particular Election. For the first; Gods election is a decree, in which according to the good pleasure of his will, he hath certainly chosen some men to life eternal in Christ for the praise of the glorie of his grace. This is the same which Paul saith to the Ephesians, God hath chosen vs in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in loue: who hath predestinate vs to be adopted through Iesum Christ vnto himselfe, according to the good pleasure of his will. Now that wee may the better conceiue this doctrine, let vs come to a consideration of the feuerall points thereof. First of all I say, Election is Gods decree. For there is nothing in the world that comes to passe either vniuersally or particularly without the eternal and vnchangeable decree of God. And therefore whereas men are actually chosen, and brought to life everlasting, it is because God did purpose with himselfe and decree the same before all worlds. Now touching the decree it selfe, sixe things are to be obserued. The first, what was the mooue or impulsive cause that moued God to decree the saluation of any man. Answer. The good pleasure of God. For Paul saith, Hee will haue mercie on whom he will haue mercie: and, Hee hath predestinate vs according to the good pleasure of God. As for the opinion of them that say, that forecenne faith and good workes are the cause that moued God to chooſe men to saluation, it is frivolous. For faith and good workes are the fruits & effects of Gods election. Paul saith, he hath chosen vs, not because hee did foresee that we would become holy, but that we might be holy. And, he hath predestinate vs to adoption. Which is all one as if he had said, he hath predestinate vs to beleeue, because adoption comes by beleeuing. Now if men are elected that they might beleeue, then are they not elected because they would beleeue. For it cannot be that one thing should be both the cause and the effect of another.

The second point, is that Gods election is vnchangeable: so as they which are indeede chosen to saluation cannot perill, but shall without faile attaine to life everlasting. Paul takes it for a conclusion, that the purpose of God according to election must remaine firme and sure; and againe, that the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. And Samuel saith, The strength of Israel will not lie or repent: For he is not a man that hee should repent. Such as Gods nature is, such is his will and counsell: but his nature is vnchangeable, I am Iehouah, saith he, and I change not: therefore his will like wife and his counsels bee vnchangeable. And therefore whensoever the spirit of God shall testify vnto our spirit that we are iustified in Christ, and chosen to saluation; it must bee a meanes to comfort vs, and to establish our hearts in the loue of God. As for the opinion of them that say, the elect may fall from grace and be damned, it is full of hellish discomfort, & no doubt from the diuell. And the reasons commonly alledged for this purpose are of no moment, as may appear by the skanning of them. First they obiect, that the Churches of the Eph. 4. 2. 1. 1. theff. 1. 4. 1. Pet. 1. 1. 2. 2.

 phians, Theſſalonians, & the diſperſed Iews are all called Elect by the Apoſtles themſelves, yet ſundry of them afterward ſell away.
 Aſw. 1. There are two kinds of iudgement to be giuen of men, the iudgement of certainty & the iudgement of charity. By the firſt indeede, is giuen an vnfallible determination of any mans election; but it belongs vnto God principally and properly: and to men but in part, namely, ſo farre forth as God ſhall reueale the eſtate of one man vnto another. Now the iudgement of charitie belongs vnto all men; and by it leauing all ſecret iudgements vnto God, we are charitably to think, that all thoſe, that liue in the Church of God, profeſſing themſelves to be members of Chriſt, are indeede elect to ſaluation, till God make manifeſt otherwiſe. And on this manner, and not otherwiſe doe the Apoſtles call whole Churches elect. II. they are called elect of the principal part, and not becauſe euery member thereof was indeede elect; as it is called an heape of corne though the bigger part be chaffe. Secondly, it is alledged, that David praies that his enemies may be blotted out of the booke of life, which is the election of God, and that Moſes and Paul did the like againſt themſelves. Aſw. Davids enemies had not their names written in the booke of life, but onely in the iudgement of men. Thus Iudas ſo long as hee was one of the diſciples of Chriſt, was accounted as one hauing his name written in heauen. Now hence it followes, that mens names are blotted out of Gods booke, when it is made cleare & manifeſt vnto the world, that they were neuer indeede written there. And where Moſes ſaith, Forgiue them this ſin: if not blotte me out of thy booke: and Paul, I could wiſh to bee accuſed, &c. their meaning was, not to ſignifie that men elected to ſaluation might become repro-bates: onely they teſſifie their zealous affections, that they could be content to be deprived of their owne ſaluation, rather then the whole body of the people ſhould periſh, and God loſe his glory. As for that which Chriſt ſaith, Haue I not choſen you twelue, and one of you is a di-uell? it is to be vnderſtood, not of election to ſaluation, but of election to the office of an Apoſtle: which is temporary and changeable.

The third point, is that there is an actual election made in time, beeing indeede a fruit of Gods decree, and anſwerable vnto it; and therefore I added in the deſcription theſe wordes, whereby hee hath choſen ſome men. All men by nature are ſinners and children of wrath, ſhut vp vnder one and the ſame eſtate of condemnation. And actual election is, when it pleaſeth God to ſeuer and ſingle out ſome men about the reſt, out of this wretched ſtate of the wicked world, and to bring them to the kingdome of his owne ſon. Thus Chriſt ſaith of his

A owne diſciples, I haue choſen you out of the world.
 The fourth point, is the actual or real foundation of Gods election, & that is Chriſt and therefore wee are ſaid to be choſen to ſaluation in Chriſt. He muſt bee conſidered two waies: as he is God, we are predeſtinate of him, euen as we are predeſtinate of the Father and the holy Ghoſt. As hee is our Mediatour, we are predeſtinate in him. For when God with himſelfe had decreed to maniſeſt his glory in ſauing ſome men by his mercy, hee ordained further the creation of man in his own image, yet ſo as by his owne ſal he ſhould inſold him-ſelfe & all his poſterity vnder damnation: this done, he alſo decreed that the Word ſhould be incarnate actually, to redeeme theſe out of the former miſery, whom he had ordained to ſaluation. Chriſt therefore himſelfe was firſt of all predeſtinate as he was to be our head, & as Peter ſaith, ordained before all worlds, and we ſecondly predeſtinate in him, becauſe God ordained that the execution of mans election ſhould be in him. Here if any demand, how we may be aſſured that Chriſt in his paſſion ſtood in our roome and ſtead, the reſolution will be eaſie, if we conſider that he was ordained in the eternall counſell of God, to be our ſurety and pledge, & to be a publike perſon to repreſent all the Elect in his obedience & ſufferings: and therefore it is that Peter ſaith, that he was deli-uered by the foreknowledge and determinate counſell of God. And Paul, that grace was giuen vnto vs through Chriſt Ieſus before the world was.
 C The fifth point is, concerning the number of the Elect. And that I expreſſed in theſe wordes, hee hath choſen ſome men to ſaluation. If God ſhould deere to communicate his glory & his mercy to all & euery man: here could be no election. For he that takes all, cannot be ſaid to chooſe. Therefore Chriſt ſaith, Many are called but few are choſen. Some makethis queſtion, how great the number of the elect is: and the anſwer may be this, that the elect conſidered in themſelves be innumerable, but conſidered in compariſon to the whole world they are but few. Hence it followes neceſſarily, that ſauing grace is not vniuerſall, but indefinite or particular, vniuerſe will againſt common reaſon make the ſtreames more large & plentifull than the very fountaine it ſelfe. And this muſt excite vs above all things in the world to labour to haue fellowſhip with Chriſt, and to be partakers of the ſpeciall mercy of God in him, yea to haue the ſame ſealed vp in our hearts. Benefits common to all, as the light of the Sunne, &c. are not regarded of any. Things common to few, though they be but temporall bleſſings, are ſought for of all. God giues not riches to all men, but to ſome more, to ſome leſſe, to ſome none. And hereup on how do men like drudges toile in the world from day to day, & ſixty years to year, to enrich themſelves? Therefore much moreought men to ſeek for grace in Chriſt, conſidering it is not common to all. We muſt not content our ſelves to ſay, God is merciful;

but we muſt go further, & labour for a certificate in the conſcience, that we may be able to ſay that God is indeede mercifull to vs. When the diſciples would haue knowne how many ſhould be ſaved, he omitting the queſtion, anſwers thus, Strive to enter in at the ſtraight gate.
 The laſt point is, the end of Gods election, and that is, the maniſeſtation of the praife and ex-cellencie of the glorious grace of God. Eph. 1. 6.

Thus hauing ſeene what election is, let vs come to the execution thereof. Of which remember this rule, Men predeſtinate to the end, that is, glory, or eternall life, are alſo predeſtinate to the ſubordinate meanes whereby they come to eter-nall life: and theſe are vocation, iuſtification, ſanctification, obedience. For the firſt, he that is predeſtinate to ſaluation, is alſo predeſtinate to be called, as Paul ſaith, Rom. 8. 30. Whom hee hath predeſtinate, them alſo hee calls. Secondly, whom God calleth, they alſo were predeſtinate to beleue; therefore ſauing faith is called the faith of the elect, Tit. 1. 1. And in Acts 13. 48. as many as were ordained to life enſueuing, beleued. Thirdly, whom God hath predeſtinate to life, them he iuſtifieth, as Paul ſaith, Rom. 8. 30. whom he hath predeſtinate, them hee calleth, and whom hee calleth, them hee iuſtifieth. Fourthly, whom hee hath predeſtinate to life, them he hath predeſtinate to ſanctification and holines of life, as Peter ſaith, 1. Pet. 1. 2. that the Iews were elect according to the foreknowledge of Gods Father vnto the ſanctification of the ſpirit. Laſtly, they that are predeſtinate to life, are alſo predeſtinate to obedience, as Paul ſaith to the Ephesians, Eph. 2. 10. We are the workmanſhip of God created in Chriſt Ieſus vnto good workes, which God hath ordained that we ſhould walke in them.

This rule being the truth of GOD, muſt be obſerued: for it hath ſpeciall vſe. Firſt of all it ſerues to ſtoppe the mouthes of vngodly and prophane men. They vſe to bolſter vp themſelves in their finnes by reaſoning on this manner: If I be predeſtinate to eternall life, I ſhall be ſaved whatſoeuer come of it, how wickedly and lewdly ſoeuer I liue: I will therefore liue as I liſt, and follow the ſwinging of mine owne will. But alas, like blinde bayards they thinke they are in the way, when as they ruſh their heads againſt the wall, and ſarre deceive themſelves. For the ſafe ſtands thus: all men that are ordained to ſaluation, are likewiſe ordained in the counſell of God to vſe all the good meanes whereby they may come to ſaluation: And therefore all the elect that liue in this world ſhall be called, iuſtified, ſanctified, & leade their liues in all good conſcience before God and men: and they that liue and continue in their owne wicked waies diſputing on this manner, If I be ordained to ſaluation, I ſhall not be damned; ouerhoote themſelves, and as much as they can, plunge themſelves head-long into the very pit of hell. And for a man to liue and dye in his finnes, let the world diſpute as they will, it is an inſallible ſigne of one ordained to damnation. Secondly, there be others that thinke that the preaching of the word, the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, admonitions, exhortations, lawes, good orders, and all ſuch good meanes are needleſſe, becauſe Gods counſels be vnchangeable: if a man ſhall be condemned, nothing ſhall helpe: if a man ſhall be ſaved, nothing ſhall hinder. But wee muſt ſtill for our part remember, that God doth not onely ordaine the end, but alſo the meanes whereby the end is compaſſed: and therefore the very vſe of all preſcribed meanes is neceſſary. And for this cauſe we muſt be admoniſhed with diligence to labour & vſe all good meanes, that we may be called by the miniſtery of the Goſpel, and iuſtified and ſanctified, and at length glorified. If a king ſhould giue vnto one of his ſubiects a princely pallace, vpon condition that he ſhall goe vnto it in the way which hee ſhall preſcribe: job what paines would that man take to know the way, and afterward to keepe and continue in it! but behold, the kingdom of heauen is the moſt glorious and royall pal-lace that euer was; and God hath beſtowed the ſame on his elect: and he requires nothing at their hands, but that they would turne their faces from this world, and walke vnto it in the way which hee hath chalked forth vnto them in his word. Therefore if we would haue life enſueuing, wee muſt come forth of the broad way which leades to deſtruction, & enter into the ſtraight way that leades to eternall life. Wee muſt acquaint our ſelves with the guides, which are the miniſters of the word, that will cry vnto vs, Here is the way, walke ye in it, when ye get to the right hand or to the left, Iſa. 30. 21. Vocation, iuſtification, ſanctification, repentance, new-obedience, are the markes of the way, and we muſt paſſe by them all: and thus our wearie ſoules weltring a while in this wretched world, ſhall at length be receiued into eternall ioy and happineſſe.

Touching the knowledge of particular election, two ſpeciall points are to be ſcanned: I. whether a man may know his election: II. how it may be knowne. For the firſt, Papiſts are of minde, that no man can certainly know his owne election vniuerſe he be certified thereof by ſome ſpeciall reuelation from God: but the thing is falſe and erroneous which they ſay. When the diſciples of our Saviour Chriſt returned from preaching, and ſhewed what wonders they had done, and how diuels were ſubiect vnto them, the text ſaith, they reioy-ced greatly. But Chriſt answered them again, ſaying, Luke 10. 20. In this reioyce not, but rather reioyce that your names are written in heauen. Whereby hee ſignifies, that men may attaine to a certaine knowledge of their owne election. For we cannot, neither doe we reioyce in things either vnknewne or vn-certaine. Saint Peter ſaith, 2. Pet. 1. 10. Give all diligence to make your election ſure. Now in vaine were it to vſe diligence, if the aſſurance of election could not bee any waies compaſſed

without an extraordinary reuelation. And Paul faith to the Corinthians, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Prove your selves whether ye be in the faith or no. Where he takes it for granted, that he which hath faith, may know he hath faith, and therefore may also know his election: because fauouring faith is an infallible marke of election.

The second point, is how any man may come to know his own election. And there be two waies of knowing it. The one is by ascending vp as it were into heauen, there to search the counsell of God, and afterward to come downe to our felues. The second, by descending into our owne hearts to goe vp from our felues, as it were by Jacob's ladder, to Gods eternall counsell. The first way is dangerous, and not to be attempted. For the waies of God are vnsearchable & past finding out. The second way alone is to be followed, which teacheth vs by signes and testimonies in our felues, to gather what was the eternall counsell of God concerning our saluation. And these testimonies are twofold: the testimony of Gods spirit, and the testimonie of our spirits: Paul faith, The spirit of God beareth witness together with our spirits, that we are the finnes of God, Rom. 8. 16.

Touching the testimonie of Gods spirit, two questions may be demanded: The first is, by what means the spirit of God giues a particular testimonie in a mans conscience of his adoption. Ans. It is not done by any extraordinary reuelation, or enthusiasme, that is, an ordinary reuelation without the word; but by an application of the promises of the Gospel in the forme of a practical syllogisme, in this manner: Whosoever beleueth in Christ, is chosen to life everlasting. This proposition is set downe in the word of God, and it is further propounded, opened, and applied to all that be in the Church of God, by the ministers of the Gospel set apart for this end. Now while the hearers of Gods word giue themselves to meditate and consider of the same promise, comes the spirit of God and enlightens the eyes, and opens the heart, & giues them power both to beleue, and to beleue indeed: so as a man shall with freedom of spirit, make an assumption, and say, but I beleue in Christ, I re- nounce my selfe, all my ioy and comfort is in him: flesh & blood cannot say this: is the operation of the holy Ghost. And hence ariseth the blessed conclusion which is the testimonie of the spirit; therefore I am the child of God.

The second question is, how a man may discern betweene the illusion of the diuell, and the testimonie of the spirit. For as there is a certain perfwasion of Gods fauour from Gods spirit; so there be sleights and frauds of the diuell whereby hee flatters and soothes men in their finnes: and there is in all men naturall presumption in shew like faith, indeed no faith. And this counterfeite mocke-faith is far more common in the world then true faith is. Take a view hereof in our ignorant & carelesse people; aske any one of them, whether he be certaine of his saluation or no; hee will without bones-making, protest that he is fully perfwaded & assured of his saluation in Christ: that if there be but one man in a countrey to be fauoured it is he: that he hath serued God alwaies; and done no man hurt: that he hath euermore beleened, and that hee would not for all the world, so much as doubt of his saluation. These and such like presumptuous conceits in blind & ignorant persons run for currant faith in the world. Now the true testimonie of the spirit is discerned from naturall presumption, & all illusions of the diuell by two effects and fruits thereof, noted by Paul in that hee faith, Rom. 8. 16. 26. that the spirit makes vs cry, Abba, that is, Father. The first is, to pray so earnestly with groanes & sighes, as though a man would euen hill heauen and earth with the cry not of his lips, but of his heart, touched with sense and feeling of his manifold finnes and offences. And this indeed is a special and principall note of the spirit of adoption. Now look vpon the loofe and carelesse man, that thinkes himselfe so filled with the perfwasion of the loue and fauour of God, ye shall finde that hee very seldom or neuer prays: and when hee doth, it is nothing else but a mumbling out the Lords prayer, the Creede, and the tenne Commandements for fashion sake. Which argues plainly, that the perfwasion which he hath of Gods mercy, is of the flesh, and not of the spirit. The second fruit is, the affection of a dutifull child to God a most louing Father: and this affection makes a man stand in feare of the maiestie of God, wherefore hee is, and to make conscience of euery kill way. Now those that are carried away with presumption, so soone as any occasion is giuen, they fall straight into sin without milke or stay, as fire burnes with speed when dry wood is laid vnto it. In a word, where the testimonie of the spirit is truly wrought: there be many other graces of the spirit ioyned therewith, as when one branch in a tree buddeth, the rest bud also.

The testimonie of our spirit is the testimonie of the heart and conscience, purified and sanctified in the blood of Christ. And it testifieth two waies: by inward tokens in it selfe, by outward fruits. Inward tokens are certain special graces of God imprinted in the spirit, whereby a man may certainly be assured of his adoption. These tokens are of two sorts, they either respect our finnes, or Gods mercie in Christ. The first are in respect of finnes past, present, or to come. The signe in the spirit which concerneth finnes past, 2 Cor. 7. 10. is godly sorrow, which I may tearme a beginning and mother-grace of many other gifts and graces of God. It is a kinde of griefe conceived in heart in respect of God. And the nature of it may the better be conceiued, if we compare it with the contrary. Worldly sorrow springs of sinne, and is nothing else but the horror of conscience, and the apprehension of the wrath of God for the same: now godly sorrow, it may indeede bee occasioned by our finnes, but it springs properly from the apprehension of the grace and goodnesse of God. Worldly sorrow is a griefe for sinne onely in respect of the punishment; godly sorrow is a lively touch and griefe of heart for sin because it is sin, though there were no punishment for it. Now that no man may deceiue himselfe in iudging of this sorrow, the holy Ghost hath set downe seauen fruits or signes thereof whereby it may be discerned, 2 Cor. 7. 11. The first is, Care to leave all our finnes: the second is, Apologie whereby a man is moued and carried to accuse & condemn himselfe for his finnes past, both before God and man. The third is Indignation, whereby a man is exceedingly angry with himselfe for his offences. The fourth is Fear, lest he fall into his former finnes againe. The fifth is Desire, whereby he craueth strength and assistance that his finnes take no hold on him as before. The sixth is Zeale, in the performance of all good duties contrary to his speciall sins. The seauenth is Reuenge, whereby hee subdues his body, lest it should hereafter be an instrument of sinne as it hath bene in former time. Now when any man shall feele these fruits in himselfe, he hath no doubt the godly sorrow; which here we speake of.

The token which is in regard of finnes present, is the combat betweene the flesh and the spirit. Gal. 5. 17. proper to them that are regenerate, who are partly flesh, & partly spirit. It is not the checke of conscience which all men finde in themselves both good and bad, so oft as they offend God; but it is a fighting & struing of the minde, will, and affections with themselves, whereby so farre forth as they are renewed, they carry the man one way, and as they still remaine corrupt, they carry him flat contrary. Men hauing the disease called Ephraim, when they are halfe a sleep feele as it were some weighty thing lying vpon their breasts, and holding them downe: now lying in this case, they strine with their hands and feet, and with all the might they haue to raise vp themselves, and to remoue the weight, & cannot. Behold here a lively resemblance of this combat. The flesh which is the in-borne corruption of mans nature, lyes vpon the hearts of the children of God, and presseth them downe, as if it were the very weight of a mountaine: now they according to the measure of grace received, strue to raise vp themselves from vnder this burden, and to doe such things as are acceptable to God; but cannot as they would.

The token that respects sinne to come, is care to prevent it. That this is the mark of Gods children, appeareth by the saying of John. 1. 10. 18. If e that is borne of God sineth not, but keepeth himselfe, that the wicked one touch him not. And this care shewes it selfe not only in ordering the outward actions, but euen in the very thoughts of the heart. For where the Gospel is of force, it brings euery thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, 2 Cor. 10. 5. and the Apostles rule is followed: Whatsoeuer things are true, whatsoeuer things are honest, &c. thinke on these things, Phil. 4. 8.

The tokens which concerne Gods mercie are specially two: The first is, when a man feelles himselfe distressed with the burden of his sins, or when he apprehends the heauie displeasure of God in his conscience for them: then further to feele how hee stands in need of Christ, and withall heartily desire, yea to hunger and thirst after reconciliation with God in the merit of Christ, & that about all other things in the world. To all such Christ hath made most sweet and comfortable promises, which can appertaine to none but to the elect. If any man thirst, let him come to mee and drinke: he that beleueth in me, as faith the Scripture, out of his belly shall flowe riuers of water of life. Reu. 21. 6. I will giue vnto him which is athirst, of the well of the water of life freely. Now if hee that thirsteth, drinke of these waters, marke what followeth, Ioh. 4. 14. Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall giue him, shall neuer be more athirst: but the water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a well of water springing vp vnto everlasting life.

The second is a strange affection wrought in the heart by the spirit of God, whereby a man doth so esteeme and value, and as it were, set so high a price on Christ and his righteousness, that he accounts euen the most precious things that are, to be but as dung in regard thereof. This affection was in Paul, and it is expressed in the parable, in which after a man hath found a treasure, hee first hides it: and then sells all he hath, and makes a purchase of the field where it is. Now euery man will say of himselfe, that he is thus affected to Christ, and that hee more highly esteemes the least drop of his blood, then all things in the world beside: whereas indeede most men are of Ephraim minde, rather desiring the red broth then Isa. 48 blessing; and of the same affection with the Israelites, which liked better the onions and flesh-pots of Egypt, then the blessings of God in the land of promise. Therefore that no man may deceiue himselfe, this affection may be discerned by two signes. The first is, to loue & like a Christian man because he is a Christian.

For he that doth aright esteem of Christ, doth in like manner esteem of the members of Christ. And of this very point our Saniour Christ faith, Mat. 10. 41. Hei that receiueth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, shall receive a Prophets reward; and he that receiues a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, shall receive the reward of a righteous man. And S. Iohn faith, Herby we know that we are truely dead to life, because we loue the brethren: that is, such as are members euen because they are so. The second signe of this affection is a loue and desire to the coming of Christ, whether it be by death vnto any man particularly, or by the last iudgement vniuersally, and that for this end, that there may be a full participation of fellowship with Christ. And that this very loue is a note of adoption, it appears by that which Saint Paul faith, 2. Tim. 4. 8. that the crown of righteousness is laid up for all they that love the appearing of Christ.

The outward token of adoption, is Obedience, whereby a man endeavours to obey Gods commandments in his life and conversation: as Saint John faith, 1. Joh. 2. 3. Hereby we are sure that we know him, if we keep his commandments. Now this obedience must not be judged by the rigour of the morall law, for then it should be no token of grace, but rather a means of damnation: but it must be esteemed and considered as it is in the acceptance of God, Mal. 3. 17. who spares them that feare him, as a Father spares an obedient sonne.

esteeming things done not by the effect & absolute doing of them, but by the affection of the doer. And yet lest any man should here be deceived, wee must know that the obedience, which is an infallible marke of the childe of God, must be thus qualified. First of all, it must not be done unto some few of Gods commandments, but unto them all without exception. Mar. 6. 20. Herod heard John Baptist willingly, and did many things; and Judas had excellent things in him, as appears by this, that he was content to leave al & to follow Christ, & he preached the Gospel of Gods kingdom in Iurie as well as the rest: yet alas, all this was nothing: for the one could not abide to become obedient to the fuenth commandment in leaving his brother Philips wife; and the other would not leave his concubines, to dy for it.

Vpright & sincere obedience doth enlarge it selfe to all the commandments, as David faith, Psal. 119. 6. I shall not be confounded, when I have respect to all thy commandments. And, S. James faith, 1. Jam. 2. 10. he which faileth in one law is guilty of all: that is, the obedience to many commandments is indeede before God no obedience, but a great sin, if a man wittingly and willingly carrie a purpose to omit any one duty of the law. He that repents of one sinne truly, doth repent of al: & he that liues but in one knowne sinne without repentance, though he pretend neuer so much reformation of life, indeede repents of no sin. Secondly, this obedience must extend it selfe to the whole course of a mans life after his conversion and repentance.

Wee must not iudge of a man by an action or two, but by the tenour of his life. Such as the course of a mans life is, such is the man: though he, through the corruption of his nature, faile in this or that particular actio, yet doth it not preiudice his estate before God, so be it he renew his repentance for his severall slips and fals not lying in any sinne; and withall from yeare to yeare walke vnblamable before God and men. S. Paul faith, 2. Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of Gods mercie is this: the Lord knoweth who are his. Now some might hereupon say, It is true indeede, GOD knowes who are his; but how may I bee assured in my selfe, that I am his? to this demand, as I take it, Paul answers in the next words: Let every one that cal- leth on the name of the Lord depart from iniquities: that is, let men invoke the name of God, praying seriously for things whereof they stand in need, withall giuing thanks and departing from all their former sinnes, and this shall be vnto them an infallible token, that they are in the election of God. Thirdly, in outward obedience is required that it proceed from the whole man, 1. Theff. 3. 13, as the regeneration which is the cause of it, is through the whole man in body, soule, and spirit: Againe, obedience is the fruit of loue, and loue is from a pure heart, the good conscience, and faith vnfaied.

Thus we haue heard the testimonies and tokens whereby a man may be certified in his conscience, that hee was chosen to saluation before all worlds. If any desire further resolution in this point, let them meditate vpon the 15. Psalm, and first Epistle of S. John, being parcels of Scripture penned by the Holy Ghost for this end.

Here some will demanda, how a man may be assured of his adoption, if he want the testimonie of the spirit to certifie him thereof. Ans. Fire is knowne to be no painted but a true fire, by two notes, by heate, and by the flame: now if the case fall out that the fire want a flame, it is still knowne to be fire by the heate. In like manner, as I haue said, there be two witnesses of our adoption, Gods spirit, and our spirit: now if it fall out that a man feele not the principall, which is the spirit of adoption, he must then haue recourse to the second witness, and search out in himselfe the signes and tokens of the sanctification of his owne spirit, by which he may certainly assure himselfe of his adoption, as we know fire to be fire by the heate, though it want a flame.

Againe it may be demanded on this manner: how if it come to passe that after inquiry, we find but few signes of sanctification in our selues. Ans. In this case we are to haue recourse to the least measure of grace, lesse then which, there is no saving grace; and it stands in two things: an hearty disliking of our sinnes because they are sinnes, and a desire of reconciliation with God in Christ for them all: and these are tokens of adoption, if they be soundly wrought in the heart, though all other tokens for the present seeme to bee wanting. If any shall say, that a wicked man hath this desire, as Balaam, who desired to die the death of the righteous: the answer is, that Balaam indeed desired to die as the righteous man doth, but hee could not abide to liue as the righteous; hee desired the end, but not the proper subordinate means which tend vnto the end: as vocation, iustification, sanctification, repentance, &c. the first is the worke of nature, the second is the worke of grace. Now I speake not this to make men secure and to content themselves with these small beginnings of grace, but onely to shew how any may assure themselves that they are at the least babes in

Christ:

Christ: adding this withall, that they which haue no more but these small beginnings must be careful to increase them, because he which goes not forward goes backward.

Lastly, it may be demanded what a man should doe if he want both the testimonie of Gods spirit, and his owne spirit, and haue no means in the world of assurance? Ans. He must not vterly despair, but be resolute of this, that though he want assurance now, yet he may obtaine the same hereafter. And such must be aduertised to heare the word of God preached: and being outwardly of the Church to receiue the Sacraments. When wee haue care to come into the Lords vineyard, and to conuerse about the wine-press, we shall finde the sweete iuyce of heavenly grace pressed forth vnto vs plentifully by the word and Sacraments, to the comfort of our consciences, concerning Gods election. This one mercy, that God by these means in some part reueales his mercy, is vspeakable. When sickness or the day of death comes, the dearest seruants of God, it may bee, must encounter with the temptations of the diuell, and wastle in conscience with the wrath and displeasure of God, as for life and death: and no man knoweth how terrible these things are, but those which haue felt them. Now when men walke thus through the valley of the shadow of death, vnlesse God should as it were open heauen, and streame downe vnto vs in this world some lightsome beames of his loue in Christ by the operation of his spirit, miserable were the case euen of the righteous.

Thus much of Election, now followes Reprobation; in handling whereof we are to obserue three things, I. what it is. II. how God doth execute this decree. III. how a man may iudge of the same.

For the first, Reprobation is Gods decree, in which because it so pleased him, he hath purposed to refuse some men by means of Adams fall and their owne corruptions for the manifestation of his iustice. First, I say, it is a decree, and that is euident thus: If there bee an eternall decree of God, whereby he chooseth some men, then there must needs be another whereby he doth passe by others and refuse them. For election alwaies implies refusal. Againe, what God doth in time, that he decreed to doe before time; as the case falls out euen with men of meane wisdomed, who first of all intend with themselves the things to be done, and after do them. But God in time refuseth some men as the Scripture testifieth, and it appeareth to bee true by the event? Therefore God before all worlds decreed the reiecting of some men.

Now in this decree foure points are to bee considered. The first is, the matter or object thereof, which is the thing decreed, namely, the reiection of some men in respect of mercie, or the manifestation of his iustice vpon them. This may seeme strange to mans reason, but here we must with all submission strike our top-sayles, for the word of God saith as much in plaine termes. The Apostle Iude speaking of false Prophets faith, Iude 4. that they were of old ordained to this damnation. And Paul faith in emphaticall termes, Rom. 9. 22. that God makes vessels of wrath prepared to destruction, and some are reiected, whom he opposeth to them which are elected to saluation.

The second point is, the impious cause that moued God to set downe this decree concerning his creature, and that was nothing out of himselfe, but his very will and pleasure. Hee hardened Pharaoh with final hardness of heart, because hee would: and therefore hee decreed to doe so because hee would. And our Saviour Christ faith, I thinke thee, O Father, Lord of heauen and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise & men of understanding, and hast opened them vnto babes. But vpon what cause did God so? It followes in the next words, verse 26. It is so, O Father, because thy good pleasure is such. And if it be in the power and libertie of a man to kill an ox or a sheepe for his life, to hunt and kill the hare and partridge for his pleasure: then much more without iniustice may it be in the will and liberty of the Creator to refuse and forsake his creature for his glory. Nay, it stands more with equitie a thousand fold, that all the creatures in heauen and earth should jointly serue to set forth the glorie and maiestie of God the Creator in their eternall destruction, then the striking of a flie or the killing of a flea should serue for the dignitie of all men in the world. For all this, it is thought by very many to bee very hard to ascribe vnto God who is full of bounty and mercie, such a decree, and that vpon his very will: but let vs see their reasons.

First of all they say, it is a point of cruelty vnto God to purpose to create a great part of the world to damnation in hell fire: the answer is, that by the vertue of this decree God cannot be said to create any to damnation, but to the manifestation of his iustice & glory in his due and deserved damnation: and the doing of this is absolute iustice. Secondly it is alledged, that by this means God shall hate his owne creature, and that before it is: but it is an vntruth. Wee must distinguish betweene Gods purpose to hate, and actual hating. Now indeede God before all worlds did purpose to hate some creatures: and that iustly so farre forth as his hating of them will serue for the manifestation of his iustice: but hee neither hates them indeede, nor loues them before they are: and therefore actual hatred comes not in till after the creatio. Whom God hath decreed to loue, them, when they are once created, hee begins to loue in Christ with actual loue: and whom hee hath decreed to hate, them being once created, hee hates in Adam with actual hatred. Thirdly it is objected, that by this doctrine God shall be the author of sinne; for hee which ordaines to the end, ordaines to the means of the end: but God ordaines men

Si quod vis non potes, Deus facit, cum co. putat, Aug.

2. 9. 13.

to the end, that is damnation: therefore he ordaines them to the meanes thereof, that is fin. Ans. The proposition being thus understood, hee which ordaines a man to an end, in the same order and manner ordaines him to the meanes, is false. For one may be ordained to the end simply, the end being simply good; & yet not be simply ordained to the meanes, because they may bee euill in themselves, and onely good in part, namely, so far forth as they haue respect of goodnesse in the minde of the ordainer. Secondly, the assumption is false: for the supreme end of Gods counsel is not damnation, but the declaration of his iustice in the iust destruction of the creature: neither doth God decree mans damnation as it is damnation, that is, the ruine of man and the putting of him forth to perishment, but as it is a reall execution of iustice. Thirdly, we must make distinction betweene sinne it selfe, and the permission thereof: betwene the decree of refection, and actual damnation: now the permission of sinne, and not sinne it selfe properly is the subordinate meanes of the decree of refection. For when God had decreed to passe by some men, he withall decreed the permission of sinne, to which permission men were ordained: and sinne it selfe is no effect, but onely the consequent of the decree: yet so, as it is not onely the antecedent, but also the efficient and meritorious cause of actual damnation.

The third point, is the reall condemnation of the execution of this decree, in iust condemnation, and that is the voluntary fall of Adam, and of all his posterity in him, with the fruit thereof, the generall corruption of mans nature. For howsoever God hath purposed to refuse men because it so pleased him, yet when his purpose comes to execution, he condemneth no man but for his sins: and sinne though it were not in the counsel of God an impulsive cause that moued him to purpose a declaration of iustice and iudgement, yet was it a subordinate meanes of damnation: God in wonderfull wisdom ordering and disposing the execution of this decree, so as the whole blame and fault of mans destruction should be in himselfe. And therefore the Lord in the Prophet Osai saith, Hos. 13.9. One hath destroyed thee, but I will help thee: that is, saluation is of God, and the condemnation of men is from themselves. Now whereas many deprauing our doctrine say, that we ascribe vnto God an absolute decree in which he doth absolutely ordaine men to damnation, they may here be answered. If by absolute, they vnderstand that which is opposed to conditional, then we hold and auouch, that all the eternall decrees of God are simple or absolute, and not limited or restrained to this or that condition or respect. If by absolute, they vnderstand a bare and naked decree without reason or cause, then we deny Gods decree to be absolute. For though the causes thereof be not knowne to vs, yet causes there be, knowne to him and iust they are: yea the very wil of God it selfe is cause sufficient, being the absolute rule of iustice. And though men in reason can not discern the equity and iustice of Gods will in this point, yet may wee not thereupon conclude that therefore it is vniust. The sinne may shine clearly, though the blinde man see it not. And it is a flat mistaking to imagine that a thing must first of all be iust in it selfe, and then afterward be willed of God. Whereas contrariwise, God must first will a thing before it can be iust. The will of God doth not depend vpon the quality and nature of the thing, but the qualities of things in order of causes follow the will of God. For euery thing is as God wils it. Lastly, if it be called an absolute decree, because it is done without all respect to mans finne, then we still denie it to be absolute. For as God condemnes man for sinne: so hee decreed to condemne him for, and by his sinne: yet so, as if the question be made, what is the cause why hee decrees rather in his iustice to condemne this man than that man, no other reason can be rendered, but his will.

The last point is, the end of Gods decree, namely the manifestation of his iustice, as Salomon saith. The Lord hath made all things for his owne sake, and the wicked for the day of euill. And Paul saith, that God made vessels of wrath. To shew his wrath, and to make his power knowne.

Thus we haue scene what Reprobation is: now followes the Execution thereof, for that which God decrees before time, in time he executes. And here a speciall rule to be remembered is this, Those which are ordained to iust damnation, are likewise ordained to be left to themselves in this world, in blindness of minde and hardness of heart, so as they neither shal nor wil repent of their sins. The truth of this wee may see in Gods word. For S. Peter speaking of the priests and Doctors, and chiefe of the people among the Iewes, saith plainly, They stumbled as the word, & were disobedient. Why so? the reason is there set downe: because they were ordained to it of old. And so Paul saith to the Corinthians, that he handled not the word of Christ deceitfully, but in the declaration of the truth he approued himselfe to euery mans conscience in the sight of God. Now hereupon it may be said: how then comes it to passe that all reccieue not the Gospel in Corinth; and to this hee answers with a terrible sentence, Iff (saith he, 1. Cor. 4. 3.) our Gospel bee hid, it is hid to them that perish: giuing vs to vnderstand, that God leaues them to themselves in this world, whom he purposed to refuse. And the Lord by the Prophet Esaia saith of the Iewes, Esa. 6.9. By hearing they shall heare and not vnderstand, and by seeing they shall see and not perceiue, lest they should heare with their eares, and see with their eyes, and vnderstand with their hearts, and so turne and be saved.

The vse of this is manifold: first it serueth to ouerthrow the opinion of carnall men, which reason thus: If I be ordained to damnation, let me lue neuer so godly and well, I am sure

14.
Rom. 9.
32.

to be damned, therefore I will lue as I list: for it is not possible for mee to alter Gods decree. Blasphemous mouthes of men make nothing of this & like speeches, & yet they speake flat contraries. For whom God hath purposed in his eternall counsel to refuse, them also he hath purposed for their sins, to leaue to the blindness of their minds & hardnes of their hearts, so as they neither will, nor can lue a godly life.

Secondly, this rule doth as it were, leade vs by the hand to the consideration of the fearful estate of many people among vs. We haue had for the space of thirrie yeeres and more the preaching of the Gospel of Christ, and the more plentifully by reason of the schooles of learning. But what hath bin the issue of it? I doubt not: but in many it hath bin the meanes of their conuerſion & saluation: but to speake generally of the greater part, there is little or no fruit to be seene. The most after this long preaching remaine as blind, as impenitent, as hard-hearted, and as vnreformed in their liues as euery they were, though they haue heard the Lord calling them to repentance from day to day, and from yeere to yeere. Well, if this rule be the truth of God, as no doubt it is, then I say plainly, that there is a most fearful iudgement of God among vs. My meaning is not to determine or giue sentence of any mans person, of any towne, or people, neuertheless this may be auouched, that it is a terrible & dangerous signe of the wrath of God, that after this long & daily preaching, there is still remaining a generall hardnes of heart, impenitencie, and want of reformation in the liues of men. The Smiths stichy, the more it is beaten, the harder it is made: and commonly the hearts of men, the more they are beaten with the hammer of Gods word, the more dul, secure, & senselesse they are. This being so, it stands euery man in hand to looke to his own estate. We are careful to flee the infection of the bodily plague: oh then! how careful should we be to flee the common blindness and hardnes of heart which is the very plague of all plagues, a thousand-fold worse then all the plagues of Egypt: And it is so much the more fearful, because the more it takes place, the lesse it is perceiued. When a malfaſtour on the day of Asiſe is brought forth of the Layle, with great bolts & fetters to come before the Iudge, as he is going all men pitie him & speake comfortably vnto him: but why so? because he is now to be arraigned at the barre of an earthly Iudge. Now the case of all impenitent sinners is farre more miserable, then the case of this man: for they lye fettered in bondage vnder sinne and Satans, and this thort life is the way in which they are going euery houre to the barre of Gods iustice, who is the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, there to be arraigned and to haue sentence of condemnation giuen against them. Now canst thou play a man that is before an earthly Iudge, & wilt thou not be touched with the misery of thine own estate, who goest eue-ry day to the barre of Gods iustice; whether thou be sleeping or waking, sitting or standing, as a man on the sea in a ship, goes continually toward the haue, though he lister not his foore. Begin now at length to lay this point to your hearts, that, so long as ye run on in your blind waies without repentance, as much as ye can, ye make poſt-halt to hel-ward; and so long as you continue in these miserable conditions as S. Peter saith, 2. Pet. 2. 3. Your iudgement is not farre off, and your damnation sleepeth not.

Thirdly, seeing those whom God hath purposed to refuse, shall be left vnto themselves, and neuer come to repentance, we are to loue and embrace the word of God preached, and taught vnto vs by the Ministers of the Gospel: and withall submitting our selues vnto it, and suffering the Lord to humble vs thereby, that we may come at length out of the broad way of blindness of mind, and hardnes of heart, leading to destruction, into the strait way of true repentance and reformation of life, which leadeth to saluation. For so long as a man liues in this world after the lusts of his owne heart, he goes on walking in the very same broad way to hell, in which all that are ordained to condemnation walke: and what a fearful thing is it, but for a little while to be a companion in the way of destruction with them that perish: and therefore I say once againe, let vs all in the feare of God, lay his word vnto our hearts, & heare it with reuerence, so as it may bee in vs the sword of the spirit to cut downe the sinnes and corruptions of our natures, and worke in vs a reformation of life and true repentance.

The third point concerning the decree of Reprobation, is the Iudgement to be giuen of it. This iudgement belongeth to God principally & properly, because he knoweth best what he hath determined concerning the estate of euery man, and none but he knowes who they bee which are ordained to due & deserved damnatio. And againe, he only knoweth the hearts & wils of men, & what grace he hath giuen them, what they are, and what all their sins be, and so doth no angel nor creature in the world be able. As for men, it belongs not to them to giue iudgement of reprobation in themselves, or in others, vnles God reueale his wil vnto them, & giue them gift of discerning. The gift was bestowed on sundry of the Prophets in the old Testament, and in the new Testament on the Apostles. Dauid in many Psalmes maketh request for the confuſion of his enemies, not praying onely against their sins, (which we may do) but eue against their persons which we may not do. No doubt he was guided by Gods spirit & reccieued them an extraordinary gift to iudge of the oblatinate malice of his aduersaries. And Paul praises against the person of Demetrius, saying, The Lord reuend him according to his doings. And such kinde of prayers were lawfull in the, because they were earied with pure & vp-right zeale, & had no doubt a speciall gift whereby they were able to discern of the final estate their enemies. Again, God sometimes gives this gift of discerning of some mens sinall impenitencie to the Church vpon earth, I say not, to this or that priuate person, but to the body of the Church or greater part thereof. S. Iohn writing vnto the Churches faith, 1. Ioh. 5. 16. *There is a sinne vnto death, (that is, against the H. Ghost) I say not that thou shouldst pray for it: in which words he takes it for granted, that this sinne might be discerned by the Church in those daies. And Paul saith, If any man beleuee not the Lord Iesus, let him be had in execration, Maledictus, that is, pronounced accursed to euermlasting destruction. Whence it appeares that the Church hath power to pronounce men reiect to euermlasting damnation, vpon some especiall occasions, though I dare not say ordinarily & vniually. The Primitive Church with one consent praied against Iulian the Apostata, & the prayers made were not in vaine, as appeareth by the euent of his fearful end. As for priuate and ordinarie men, for the tempering and rectifying of their iudgement, in this case they must follow two rules. The one is, that euery member of the Church is bound to beleuee his own election: It is the commandment of God binding the very conscience, 1. Ioh. 3. 23. that we should beleuee in Christ. Now to beleuee in Christ, is not onely to put our affiance in him, and to be resolu'd that we are iustified and sanctified, and shall be glorified by him, but also that we are elect to saluation in him before the beginning of the world, which is the foundation of the rest. Again, if of things that haue necessary dependence one vpon another, we are to beleuee the one, then wee are to beleuee the other. Now election and adoption are things conioyned, and the one necessarily depends vpon the other. For all the elect (as S. Paul saith) are predestinate to adoption: & we are to beleuee our owne adoption: and therefore also our election. The second rule is, that concerning the persons of those that bee of the Church, wee must put in practise the iudgement of charitie, & that is to esteeme of them as of the elect of God, till God make manifest otherwise. By vertue of this rule the Ministers of Gods word are to publish and preach the Gospel to all without exception. It is true indeed there is both wheat and damell in Gods field, chaffe and come in Gods barne, fish and drosse in Gods net, sheepe & goates in Christs fold: but secret iudgements belong vnto God, and the rule of loue, which is to thinke & wish the best of others, is to be followed of vs that profess faith working by loue.*

It may be demanded, what we are to iudge of them that as yet are enemies of God. Ans. Our dutie is, to suspend our iudgement concerning their sinall estate: for wee know not whether God will call them or no; and therefore we must rather pray for their conuersion, then for their confusion.

Again, it may be demanded, what is to be thought of all our auncellors and forefathers, that liued and died in the times when poperie tooke place. Ans. We may wel hope the best, & thinke that they were faued: for though the Papacy be not the Church of God, and though the doctrine of Poperie raze the foundation, yet neuertheless in the very midst of the Roman Papacie, God hath alwayes had a remnant which haue in some measure truly seru'd him. In the old Testament when open Idolatrie tooke place in Israel, God said to Eliab, 1. King. 19. 18. I haue reserved seauen thousand to my selfe, that neuer bowed knee to Baal: and the like is and hath beene in the generall apostasie vnder Antichrist. Saint Iohn saith, that when the woman fled into the wilderness for a time, even then there was a remnant of her seede which kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Iesus Christ. And againe, when ordinarie meanes of saluation faile, then God can and doth make a supply by meanes extraordinary, and therefore there is no cause why wee should say, that they were condemned.

Thirdly, it may be demanded, whether the common iudgement giuen of Francis Spira, that he is a reprobate be good or no? Ans. We may with better warrant say no, than any man say yea. For what gifts of discerning had they which came to visit him in his extremity; and what reasons induced them to giue this peremptory iudgement? He said himself that he was a reprobate: that is nothing, a sicke mans iudgement of himselfe is not to be regarded. Yea, but he despair'd a senselesse reasoner for dooing many a manyeare by yeare, & that very often as deeply as euer Spira did; and yet by the good helpe of the ministry of the word, both are & may be recovered. And they which will auaunch Spira to be a reprobate, must goe further & proue two things, that he despair'd both wholly & finally: which if they cannot proue, wee for our parts must suspend our iudgements, and they were much to blame that first published the booke.

Lastly, it may be demanded, what is to be thought of them that make very fearefull ends in railing and blaspheming? Ans. Such strange behauiours are oftentimes the fruits of violent diseases which torment the body, and bereaue the minde of sense and reason: and therefore if the persons liued well, we must thinke the best: for wee are not by outward things to iudge of the estate of any man. Salomon saith, that all things come alike to all, and hee same condition is to the iust and to the wicked.

Thus much of the parts of Predestination: Now follows the vse therof: and it concerns partly our iudgements, partly our affections, and partly our liues. The vses which concerne iudgement are three. And first by the doctrine of predestination, we learne that there cannot be any iustification of a sinner before God by his workes. For Gods election is the cause of iustification, because whom God electeth to saluation after this life, them he electeth to be

iustified in this life. Now election it selfe is of grace, and of grace alone, as Paul saith, Rom. 11. 5. *Election is by grace, and is the gift of grace: it is not of works; or els were grace no grace: therefore iustification is of grace & of grace alone: and I reason thus: The cause of a cause is the cause of all things caused: but grace alone is the cause of predestination, which is the cause of our vocation, iustification, sanctification, &c. Grace therefore is also the alone cause of all these. Therefore the scriptures ascribe not onely the beginning, but also the continuance and accomplishment of all our happines to grace. For first, as election, so vocation is of grace. Paul saith, 2. Tim. 1. 9. God hath called vs not according to our workes, but according to his purpose and grace, which is in Christ is of grace. So it is said, Phil. 1. 29. To you it is giuen to beleuee in Christ. Also the iustification of a sinner is of grace. So Paul saith plainly to the Romanes: Rom. 3. 24. You are iustified freely by his grace. Again, sanctification and the doing of good workes is of grace. So it is said, Eph. 2. 10. We are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good workes, which God hath ordained that wee should walke in them. Also perseverance in good workes and godlines is of grace. So the Lord saith, Jer. 32. 40. I will make an euermlasting covenant with them, that I will neuer turne away from them to do them good, but I will put my feare in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Lastly, life euermlasting is of grace. So Paul saith, Rom. 6. 23. Life euermlasting is the gift of God through Iesus Christ. Now they of the Church of Rome teach the flat contrary: they make two iustifications; the first, whereby a man of an euill man is made a good man: the second, whereby of a good man he is made better. The first they ascribe to grace; but so, as the second, is by workes. Secondly, hence we learne, that the art of iudiciall astrology is vaine and fruitlesse. They that practise it, doe profess themselves to tell of things to come almost whatsoeuer, and this they doe by casting of figures: and the speciall point of their art is to iudge of mens naturallities. For if they may know but the time of a mans birth, they take vpon them to tell the whole course of his life from yeare to yeare, from weeke to weeke, and from day to day, from the day of his birth to the houre of his death: yea that which is more, they profess themselves to tell all things that shall befall men, either in body, goods, or good name, and what kinde of death they shall die. But that their practise is not of God, but indeede vniuersally, it may appeare by this, because it stands not with the doctrine of Gods predestination. Two twines begotten of the same parents, and borne both at one and the same time, by the iudgements of Astrologians must haue both the same life and the same death, and be euery way alike both in goods and good name: yet wee see the contrary to be true in Iacob and Esau, who were borne both of the same parents at one time. For Iacob* tooke Esau by the heele, so as there could not be much difference betweene them in times: yet for all this Esau was a fierce man & wilde, giuen to hunting; but Iacob was milde of nature, and liued at home: the one had fauour at Gods hand and was in the covenant, but God kept backe that mercy from the other. Again, in a pitch field are saine a thousand men at one and the same time: now if we consider the time of their births, it may bee, they were borne at a thousand sundry times, & therefore vnder so many diuers positions of the heauens, & so by the iudgment of all Astrologers should haue all diuers and sundry liues & ends: but wee see according to the determination of the counsell of God, they haue all one and the same end: and therefore this must admonish all those that are brought vp in schooles of learning, to haue care to spend their time in better studies and let teacheth those that are fallen in to any manner of diltresse, not to haue recourse vnto these fond figure-casters. For their astrological iudgements are false and foolish as we may see by the two former examples. Thirdly, the knowledge of God is one of the most speciall points in Christian religion: and therefore the Lord saith, Jer. 9. 24. Let him that reioiceth, reioice in this, that hee understandeth and knoweth me. For I am the Lord which shew mercy and iudgement in the earth. And our Saviour Christ saith, Ioh. 17. 3. This is life euermlasting to know thee, the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. Now Gods predestination is a glasse wherein we may behold his maiesty. For first, by it we see the wonderful wisdom of God, who in his eternall counsell did foresee and most wisely set downe the estate of euery man: secondly, his omnipotencie, in that he hath power to faue, and power to refuse who he will: thirdly, his iustice and meicy both ioyned together in the execution of election: his meicy, in that he saue those that were utterly lost; his iustice, in that he ordained Christ to be a mediator to suffer the curse of the law, and to satisfie his iustice for the elect: fourthly, his iustice, in the execution of the decree of Reprobation; for though he decreed to hold backe his mercie from some men, because it so pleased him, yet he condemneth no man but for his sinnes. Now the consideration of these and the like points, bring vs to the knowledge of the true God.

The vses which concerne our affections are these. First the doctrine of predestination minister to all the people of God matter of endless consolation. For considering Gods election is vniuersally, therefore they which are predestinate to saluation can not perish: though the gates of hel preuaile against them so as they be hardly faued, yet shall they certainly be faued; therefore our Saviour Christ saith: that in the latter daies shall arise false Christs and false prophets, which shall shew great signes and wonders, Mat. 24. 24. So that if it were possible they should deceiue the very elect.

In which words he takes it for granted, that the elect of God can neuer finally fall away. And hereupon he faith to his disciples when they reioyced that the diuels were subiect to them, Luk. 10. 20. Rather reioyce that your names are written in heauen. And S. Paul speaking of Hymeneus and Philetus, which had fallen away from the faith, lest the Church should be discouraged by their fall, because they were thought to be worthy men and pillars of the Church; he doth comfort them from the very ground of election, saying, 2. Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this scale: The Lord knoweth who are his. Where Gods election is compared to the foundation of an house, the building whereof may be shaken, but the ground-works standeth fast; and therefore Paul faith further, Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? Now then that we may have comfort in distresse, & some thing to stay vpon in all our troubles: we in this world are as strangers in a far country: our passage homeward is ouer the sea of this world: the ship wherein we saile is the Church: and Satan stirres vp many blafts of troubles & temptations, and his purpose is to sinke the ship, or to driue it on the rocks; but we must take the anchor of hope, and fasten it in heauen vpon the foundation of Gods election: which being done, we shall passe in safetie, and reioyce in the midst of all stormes and tempestes. Secondly, whereas God refuseth some men, and leaves them to themselves, it serueth to strike a feare into euery one of vs, whatsoeuer we be, as S. Paul faith in the like case, the Iewes being the naturall branches, Rom. 11. 20. are broken off, through vnbeleefe, & thou standest by faith: be not high minded, but feare. This indeede was spoken to the Romanes, but we must also lay it vnto our hearts. For what is the best of vs, but a lump of clay? and howsoeuer in Gods counsell wee are chosen to saluation, yet in our selues we are all shut vp vnder vnbeleefe, and are fit to make vessels of wrath. Our Sauour Christ calleth Iudas a diuell, and we know his lewd life and fearefull end: now what are we better then Iudas by nature? If we had bin in his stead, without the speciall blessing of God, we should haue done as he did: he betrayed Christ, but if God leaue vs to our selues, we shal not onely betray him, but by our sins euen crucifie him a thousand waies. Furthermore let vs betinke our selues of this, whether there be not some already condemned in hell, who in their liues were not more grievous offenders then wee. Esa. 1. 10. I called the people of his time a people of Sodom, and Gomorrah; giuing the Iewes then liuing to vnderstand, that they were as bad as the Sodomites, and as the people of Gomorrah, on whom the Lord had shewed his iudgements long before. If this be true, then let vs with feare and trembling be thankfull to vs manifeste that he hath preferred vs hitherto from deserved damnation.

A The vses which respect our liues & conuersations are manifold. First, seeing God hath elected some to saluation, and hath also laide downe the means in his holy word whereby we may come to the knowledge of our particular election, we must therefore as S. Peter counsellcth vs, 2. Pet. 1. 10. giue all diligence to make our election sure. In the world men are carefull & painfull enough to make assurance of lands and goods to themselves, and to their posterity: what a shame is it then for vs, that wee should be slacke in making sure to our selues the election of God, which is more worth then all the world beside? and if we shal continue to be slacke herein, the leases of our lands and houses and all other temporall assurances shall be bills of accusation against vs. At the day of iudgement to condemne vs. Secondly, by this doctrine we are taught to liue godly and righteously in this present world; because all those whom God hath chosen to saluation, hee hath also appointed to liue in newnesse of life, as S. Paul, Eph. 1. 4. God hath chosen vs in Christ before the foundation of the world: that we should be holy and without blame before him. And againe, Eph. 2. 10. We are created in Christ Iesus vnto good works, which God hath ordained that we should walke in them. And, God hath chosen you to saluation through sanctification of the spirit and faith of the truth. The elect are vessels of honour: and therefore all those that will be of the number of the elect, must carrie themselves as vessels of honour. For so long as they liue in their sins, they be like vessels of dishonour, employing themselves to the most base seruice that can be, euen to the seruice of the diuell. The sunne was ordained to shine in the day, and the moone in the night, and that order they keepe; yea euery creature in his kinde obserueth the course appointed vnto it by creation, as the grass to grow, and trees to bring forth fruit: now the elect were ordained to this end to leade a godly life; and therefore if wee should either perswade our selues or the world, that we are indeede chosen to saluation, we must be plentifull in all good workes, and make conscience of euery euill way; and to do otherwise, is as much as to change the order of nature, and as if the Sun should cease to shine by day, and the Moone by night. Thirdly, when God shall send vpon any of vs in this world crosses and afflictions, either in body or in minde, or any way els (as this life is the vale of miserie and teares, and iudgement must beginne at Gods house) we must learne to beare them withall submission and contentation of minde. For whom God new before, then he hath predestinate to be made like vnto his sonne. But wherein is this likeness? Paul faith, Phil. 3. 10. in the fellowship of his afflictions, & in a conformity to his death. And the consideration of this, that afflictions were ordained for vs in the eternall predestination of God, must comfort our hearts, and restraîne our impatience for as we shal go vnder the burden of them.

Hence

Hence againe we learne, that they which perswade themselves that they are in the fauour of God, because they liue at ease in wealth and prosperitie, are farre deceiued. For Saint Paul faith, Rom. 9. 22. God suffereth with long patience the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction, to make known his power, and to shew forth his wrath on the. This being so, no man then by outward blessings ought to plead that he hath the loue of God. Sheepe that goe in fat pastures come sooner to the slaughter-house then those which are kept vpon the bare commons: and they which are paped with wealth of this world, sooner forsake God, and therefore are sooner forsaken of God, then others. Salomon faith, Eccles. 9. 1. No man knoweth his time or his end, that is by outward things: for all things come alike to all: the same condition is to the iust and to the vniust, to the wicked and good, to the pure and polluted. Lastly it may be an offence vnto vs, when we consider that the doctrine of the Gospel is either not knowne, or else despised & persecuted of the whole world; but we must stay our selues with this consideration, that nothing comes to passe by chance: that God knowes who are his; & there must be some in the world, on whom God hath in his eternall counsell purposed to manifest his power and iustice. Again, Ministers of the Gospel may be discouraged, when after long preaching they see little or no fruit of their labours: the people whom they teach remaining as blind, impenitent, & vnreformed as euer they were. But they must also consider, that it is the purpose of God to chuse some to saluation & to reuise others: and that of the first, some are called sooner, some later, and that the second being left to themselves neuer come to repentance. To this Paul had regard when he said, 2. Cor. 4. 3. If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that perish. And againe, 2. Cor. 2. 15. We are vnto Gods the sweete saviour of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish.

Hitherto I haue deliuered the truth of this weighty point of religio, which also is the doctrine of the Church of England: now it followeth that we should consider the fallshood. Sundry Diuines haue denied, and in their writings published a new frame or platforme of the doctrine of Predestination: the effect whereof is this. The nature of God (say they) is infinite loue, goodness, and mercy it self: & therefore he propounds vnto himselfe an end answerable thereunto, and that is the communication of his loue and goodnes vnto all his creatures. Now for the accomplishing of this supreme & absolute end, he did foure things. First, he decreed to create man righteous in his owne image; secondly, he foresaw the fall of man after his creation, yet so, as he neither willed nor decreed it. Thirdly, he decreed the vniuersall Redemption of all and euery man actually by Christ, so be it they will beleue in him: fourthly, he decreed to call all and euery man effectually, so as if they will, they may be saved. This being done, he in his eternall counsell foreseeing who would beleue in Christ, did thereupon elect them to eternall saluation: and againe foreseeing who would not beleue but contemne grace offered, did thereupon also decree to reiect them to eternall damnation.

This platforme howsoeuer it may seeme plausible to reason, yet indeed it is nothing els but a deuice of mans braines: as will appere by sundry defects & errors that be in it. For first, whereas it is auouched that Adams fall came by the bare preference of God; without any decree or will of his, it is a flat vntruth. The putting of Christ to death was as great a sinne as the fall of Adam: may in some respects greater. Now that came to passe not onely by the foreknowledge of God, but also by his determination counsell. And therefore as the Church of Ierusalem faith, Act. 4. 28. Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles & the people of Israel, gathered themselves together, to doe what soeuer their hand and their counsell had determined before to bee done: so may we say, that Adams in his fall did nothing but that which the hand of God and his counsell had determined before to be done. And considering the will of God extends it selfe to the least things that are, euen to sparrows, wherof none doe light vpon the ground without our heavenly Father, how can a man in reason imagine that the fall of one of the most principall creatures that are, shall fall out altogether without the will and decree of God? And there can be nothing more absurd then to seuer the foreknowledge of God from his counsell or decree. For by this means, things shall come to passe God willing, or not knowing, or not regarding them. Now if any thing come to passe God willing it, then that is done which God would not haue done, and to say so, is to bereaue him of his omnipotency. And if wee shall say that things fall out, God not knowing of them; we make him to be imprudent, and denie his omniscience. Lastly, if we shall say that a thing is done, God not regarding it, we bring in an idol of our own braines, and stablish the idol-god of the Epicures. But it is objected to the contrary, that if God any way decreed and willed the fall of Adam, then he was the author of sinne: which once to say is blasphemie. Answer. The argument followes not. There be three actions in the will of God, one whereby he doth absolutely will any thing and delight in it: and of all such things God himselfe is the author. The second is, wholly or absolutely to Nill a thing: and all things thus nilled, cannot possibly come to passe, or haue the least being in nature. There is also a third action which comes as a meane betweene the two former, which is remittethly or in part both to nill and will a thing: whereby though God approve not euill, as it is euill, and therefore doth it not: yet he willeth the permitting of it to be done by others, or the being of it: because in respect of God that decreeth the permitting of euill, it is good that there should be euill. And on this manner and no other will God willed the fall of Adam; and therefore in the reason of any indifferent man, though he decreed the fall, yet shall hee be free from the blame thereof, which lies wholly vpon the doer: these two caueats alwaies remembred; first, that God by his will did not constraine or force the will of Adam to sinne, or infuse into it any corruption, and that therefore he sinned willingly and freely, onely by the (b) necessity of immutability, and not by the necessity of coaction; secondly, that God willed the fall for a most worthy end, which was, to lay downe a way tending to the manifestation both of iustice and mercy. Againe, it is alleadged, that if God willed Adams fall, then his will is flat contrary to it selfe, because he wils that which he ban by expresse commandement forbidden. Answe. Indeepe if God should both wil and forbid one and the same thing, in one & the same respect, there should bee a contradiction in Gods will; but that God doth not. Hee forbid Adams fall; as it was sinne: for so in euery commandement sinne, as it is sinne, is condemned and punished; and yet because it was in a new respect a meanes of manifesting his glory, who is able to bring light out of darkness: therefore he willingly decreed the permission of it. Incest as it is sin, it is condemned in the seventh commandement, and punished with death; yet as incest was a punishment of Dauids aduerture, God is said to take his wiues, and to giue them to his sonne Abraham. 2. Sam. 12. 11.

Some againe, as it appears by their writings, feare to ascribe vnto G O D so much as a permission of Adams fall; but no doubt they are deceived. For if these rules be true: that God is omnipotent: that he workes all things that are by the counsell of his will, and gouernes them, that he hath care and regard ouer men: that nothing is hidde from him: that he is vouchable, there must needs be permission of euill. If the diuell could not enter so much as into a heard of swine without permission, shall wee thinke that he could compass the fall and ouerthrow of man, without a permission? Indeed to permit, is not to hinder euill when one may: and with men it is a fault, but not with God, because he is not bound to hinder the euill which he permits.

The second fault, is that they make the Precedence of mans faith and vnbeleefe, to bee the (c) impulsive cause of Gods decree. For they say, that God eternally decrees to saue or refuse men, because he did foresee that they would beleefe or not beleefe. But indeed it is a manifest vntuith. Among the causes of all things that are, there is an order set downe by God himselfe, in which order some causes are highest, some lowest, some in the middle. Now the highest cause of all is that, which ouer-rules all, and is ouer-ruled of none; and that is Gods will, beyond which there can be no higher cause: for God is placed aboue all,

A and subiect to none, and this very will of his is the cause of all things that haue being: for wee must not imagine that a thing first of all existeth, and then afterward is willed of God, but first of all God wils a thing, and then afterward it comes to haue a being. Now to say that foreseene faith or vnbeleefe are the moouing causes whereby God was induced to ordaine men either to saluation or iust damnation, is to vndoe this diuine order of causes, and to displace the links; in that Gods will is made a secondary or middle cause subordinate to other causes placed aboue it: yea this is to make the will of God to depend vpon the qualitie and condition of the creature, whereas contrariwise all things depend vpon Gods will. Againe, Paul saith that God had opened the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, Eph. 1. 9. Which he had purposed to himselfe; whereby he makes a distinction between the creature and the Creator. Men when they purpose the doing of any thing, borrow reasons of their purposes & wils out of themselves from the things to be done; because mans bare will is no sufficient cause to warrant the doing of this or that, in this or that manner, vnlesse there be iust reason. But Gods will is a simple and absolute rule of righteousness, and a thing is good, so farre forth as God wils it. Therefore there is no cause, why he should goe forth of himselfe for external inducements and reasons of his eternall counsell: his very will in himselfe is a sufficient reason of all his purposes and decrees. And hereupon Paul saith, that Gods purpose was in himselfe, to shew that there is no dependence of his will vpon the creature, and that in ordering and disposing of his decrees, he had no reference or respectiue consideration of the qualities and workes of them. Thirdly, by this doctrine, there is fastened vpon God want of wisdom, who is wise-dome it selfe: and that is very absurd. A simple man that hath in him but a sparke of the wisdom of God, first of all, intends with himselfe the end & euent of the busines to be done, and then afterward the meanes whereby the end is accomplished: but in this plat-form God is brought in, in the first place to foresee and consider with himselfe the meanes which tend to the end, namely faith and vnbeleefe of men, and then afterward to determine with himselfe what shall be the end and final condition of euery man either in life or death; as if a man should purpose with himselfe to build an house without any consideration of the end why; and afterward conceiue with himselfe the particular vses to which hee will apply it. Fourthly, hence it followeth; that faith shall not onely be an instrument, but also an efficient cause in the act of iustification of a sinner before God. For the cause of a cause is also the cause of a thing caused; but foreseene faith is an impulsive cause whereby God was mooued to chooe some men to saluation (as it is said); and therefore it is not onely an instrument to apprehend Christs righteousness, but also a cause or meanes to mooue God to iustifie a sinner; because iustification proceeds of election which comes of fore-seene faith: now this is erroneous by the doctrine of all Churches, vnlesse they be Popish. Fifthly, this doctrine takes it for granted, that all both young and olde; euen Infants that die in their infancie, haue knowledge of the Gospel, because both faith & vnbeleefe in Christ presuppose knowledge of our saluation by him; considering that neither ordinarily, nor extraordinarily men beleefe or cotemne the thing vnkown. But how false this is, euen comon experience doth shew. Lastly, this plat-forme quite ouerthrowes it selfe. For whereas all men equally corrupt in Adam, are effectually both redeemed and called, the difference betweene man and man, stands not in beleeuing or not beleeuing, for all haue power to beleefe; but in this properly, that some are confirmed in faith, some are not. Now when all without exceptio are indued with grace sufficient to saluation, I demand why some men are confirmed in grace, & others not confirmed; as also of Angels, some were confirmed & stand, and some not confirmed, fell? No other reason can be rendered but the will of God. And to this must all come, true as long as they will, that of men being in one and the same estate, some are saued, some iustly forsaken, because God would. Againe, as the foreseeing of faith doth presuppose Gods giuing of faith, vnlesse men will say it is natural: so the foreseeing of faith in some men alone, doth presuppose the giuing of faith to some men alone. But why doth not God conferre the grace of constant faith to all? no other reason can be rendered, but because he will not. Thus then those men whose faith was foreseen, are saued, nor because their faith was fore-seene, but because God would.

The third fault is, that they ascribe vnto God a conditional purpose or counsel, whereby he decrees that all men shall be saued, so be it they will beleefe. For it is euery way as much against comon sense, as if it had bin said, that God decreed nothing at all concerning man. A conditional sentence determines nothing simply but conditionally, and therefore vncertainly; and when we speake of God, to determine vncertainly, is as much as if he had determined nothing at all, especially when the thing determined is in the power of mans will, and in respect of God, the decree may come to passe or not come to passe. Men, if they might alwaies haue their choice, desire to determine of all their affaires simply without condition: and when they doe otherwise, it is either because they know not the euent of things, or because things to be done are not in their power. No reason therefore that wee should burden God with that, whereof wee would disburden our selues. Again, the maiesty of God is disgraced in this kind of decree, God for his part would haue all men to be sa-

A ned: why then are they not? men will not keep the condition and beleefe. This is flat to hang Gods will vpon mans wil, to make euery man an Emperour, and God his vnderling, and to change the order of nature by subordinating Gods will, which is the first cause, to the wil of man, which is the second cause; whereas by the very law of nature, the first cause should order and dispose the second cause. But for the iustifying of a conditional decree it is alleadged, that there is no eternall hidden decree of God beside the Gospel, which is Gods predestination revealed. Answe. It is an vntuith. There be two wils in God, (a) one, whereby he determineth what he will doe vnto vs or in vs: the other, (b) whereby he determineth what we shall doe to him. Now Predestination is the first: whereupon it is commonly defined to be the preparation of the blessing of God, whereby they are deliuered which are deliuered; & the Gospel is the second. Againe, predestination determines who they are, and how many which are to be saued, and hereupon Christ saith, Ioh. 12. 18. I know whom I haue chosen; but the Gospel rather determines what kinde of ones and how they must be qualified which are to be saued. Lastly, Predestination is Gods decree it selfe: and the Gospel is an outward meanes of the execution of it: and therefore though the Gospel bee propounded with a condition, yet the decree of God it selfe may be simple and absolute.

C The fourth defect, is the opinion of Vniuersall sauing grace; appertaining to all and euery man: which may fitly be termed the School of vniuersall Atheisme. For it puts downe the pale of the Church, and laies it waste as euery common field it breeds a carelesnes in the vse of the meanes of grace, the word and Sacraments; when as men shall be perswaded, that grace shall be offered to euery one effectually, whether hee be of the Church or not, at one time or other, where soeuer or how soeuer hee liue: as in the like case, if men should be told that whether they liue in the market towne or no, there shall be sufficient prouision brought them, if they will but recuite it and accept of it, who would then come to mark?

D Vniuersall grace hath three parts. Vniuersall Election; vniuersall Redemption; vniuersall Vocation. Vniuersall Election of all and euery man, is a witlesse conceit: for if men vniuersally be appointed to grace without exception, then there is no election or chooing of some out of mankind to grace; and if some alone be appointed to grace, as it must needs be in election, then is not grace vniuersall. And it is flat against the word of God. For Christ acquainteth plainly, Mat. 12. 14. that fewer be chosen the called, & (as afterward we shall see) all are not called. And hee further saith, that all which are giuen vnto him shall bee one with him, and haue life euertlasting: but all men shall not be one with him and haue life euertlasting: and therefore all men are not giuen to Christ of the Father, that is, ordained to saluation. And the Scripture saith, Apo. 17. 14. and 20. 15. that all mens names are not written in the booke of life: and that the Kingdome of heaven was not prepared for all, Mat. 25. 14. And whereas men build this their vniuersall election vpon the largesse of the promise of the Gospel: vpon the like ground they might as well make a vniuersall decree of Reprobation, whereby God decrees all men to be damned indefinitely vpon this condition, if they doe not beleue. Now if vniuersall Reprobation be absurd, as it is indeed; then vniuersall Election of all and every man must take part therewith.

As for the vniuersall Redemption of all and every man, it is no better then a forgerie of mans braine. There shall be many in the day of iudgement of whom Christ shall say, Mat. 7. 23. that he neuer knew them. Again he saith, Ioh. 3. 36. He which beleeueth not, is already iudged, and the wrath of God abides vpon him. But if al were effectually redeemed, and only condemned for not beleueing in Christ, it should haue bin said that they are already iudged, and that the wrath of God not abides, but returns vpon them. Christ makes no intercession for the world, Ioh. 17. 9. and therefore his redemption is not effectual to all men. For the intercession is the meanes of applying the satisfaction. If it be said, that by the world is meant only contenters of grace, it appears to be otherwise, in that Christ opposeth the world to them which are the Fathers, and are giuen to Christ by him: thereby signifying, that by the world he means all such as are not the Fathers, & were neuer giuen to Christ. And Ioh. 10. 17. he laies downe his life for his sheepe: now the sheepe haue all these brands or marks; they heare his voice, they know him, they follow him, they shall not perishe, none shall plucke the out of Christ his hands: and these are ouely such of whom Paul saith, Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods Elect? it is God that iustificth, who shall condemn? And if this should be true, that Christ was crucified and died no lesse to make satisfaction for the finnes of the damned, then for the finnes of Peter and Paul, and the rest of the Saints, it follows necessarily that all their finnes are forgiven, considering that remission of sin depends inseparably vpon satisfaction made to Gods iustice for sinne: and satisfaction doth necessarily abolish all fault. We graunt that Christs death is sufficient to saue many thousand worlds: we graunt againe it is euery way most effectual in it selfe: but that it is effectual in or vnto the person of euery man, that we deny. For if it were thus effectual, then it should be applied to the person of euery man, as to Cain, Judas, Tero, Helioabulus, &c. euen as the plauter is laid to the loze: being applied, Christs righteousness should be imputed for the iustification and sanctification of al and euery man: and thus some iustified before God, and sanctified, should after goe to hell and be

A damned, whereas David neuer so much as dreaming of his diuinity, saith, Psa. 32. 1. that they are blessed which haue the pardon of their finnes: and Paul, Rom. 5. 1. that they which are iustified haue peace with God.

But let vs heare what reasons may bee alledged for the vniuersallitie of Redemption. I. Ezechiel. 33. v. 11. As I liue, saith the Lord, I will not be the death of the wicked, but that the wicked returns from his wicked way. Ans. The place is to be vnderstood not simply but in respect of the twaine God rather wils the repentance of the sinner then his death. Again, hee wils not death as it is the destruction of his creature; and so this place may be vnderstood: yet neuertheless he wils the same as it is a meanes of the manifestation of his iustice: and therefore the Prophet Esay saith, Esa. 45. 6. God creates euill. Li. 1. 11m. 2. 4. God would haue all men to be saved: and come to the acknowledgement of the truth. Ans. The place is meant not of the persons of all particular men, but of the orders and kindes of men. For in the first verse Paul exhorted Timothy that prayer should be made for all men: and in the second verse opening his owne meaning, he addeth these words, for kings: and all that be in authority: as though he should say, we must pray not only for private men and for the common people, but also for publick persons, though they persecute the Gospel. But why? because in that very order God hath his elect which shall be saved. And on this manner Paul expounds himselfe elsewhere, Gal. 3. 28. There is neither Jew nor Grecian: there is neither bond nor free: there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ. III. Ro. 11. 32. God hath shut vp all in vnbellefe that he might haue mercy on all. Ans. The word all, must be vnderstood of all that are to be saved, both of Iewes and Gentiles, as the article added to all importeth, and the meaning is, that God will saue all whom he purposeth to saue, of his mercie, and not of their merit, because all are sinners as well Iewes as Gentiles: thus Paul expounds himselfe, Gal. 3. 22. The Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should be giuen vnto them that beleue. And if we should expound the word all, for euery particular man, as some would haue it, Paul must contradict himselfe, who said before, that God would haue mercy on whom he will haue mercy, & whom he will he hardeneth, & in this very chapter his drift is to proue the reiection of the Iewes, & the calling of the Gentiles. IV. Iohn. 3. 16. God so loved the world that he hath giuen his only begotten Sonne, that whosoever beleueth in him shall not perish but haue everlasting life: and Ioh. 6. 15. I will giue my flesh for the life of the world. Ans. By world, we must not vnderstand euery particular man in the world, but the elect among the Iewes and Gentiles: for in both these places Christ doth ouerthwart the conceit of the Iewes, which thought that they alone were loued of God, and not the Gentiles.

And

And how this word is to be vnderstood in the new testament, Paul doth fully declare, Rom. 11. 12. If (saith he) the fall of them, that is, the Iewes, be the riches of the world, & the diminishing of them, the riches of the Gentiles, &c. and v. 15. If the casting away of them, be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving be but life from the dead? Where by the world, he vnderstands the body of the Gentiles in the last age of the world. And thus hee fully declares his owne meaning, when he saith to the Corinthians, 2. Cor. 5. 18. God was in Christ reconciling the world vnto himselfe. V. Rom. 14. 15. Destroy not him with thy meate for whom Christ died. 2. Pet. 2. 1. Denying the Lord that bought them, and bring vpon themselves swift damnation. Therefore Christ died for them also which are condemned. Ans. The reason is not good: For in these and such like places the Scripture speaks of men, not as they are indeed before God, but as they are in appearance and profession, and as they are in acceptance with men. For so long as a man holdes and embraces the Christian faith, so long in the iudgement of charitie wee must esteeme him to bee one that is redeemed by Christ, though indeede he be not. And this is the meaning of Peter when he saith, that false prophets deny the Lord that bought them. VI. In the preaching of the Gospel grace is freely offered not onely to the Elect, but to all men indifferently: and God in offering grace deludes no man: therefore Christs death appertaines and belongs to all men indifferently. Ans. The preaching of the Gospel is an ordinance of God appointed for the gathering together and the accomplishment of the number of the Elect: and therefore in the ministerie of the word, grace & saluation is offered principally and directly to the elect, and onely by consequent to them which are ordained to iust damnation: because they are mingled with the elect in the same societies, and because the ministers of God, not knowing his secret counsel, in charitie thinke all to be elect. And though God in offering grace do not conferre it to all, yet is there no delusion. For the offering of grace doth not onely serue for the conversion of a sinner, but also to be an occasion by mens fault, of blinding the minde, and hardning the heart, and taking away excuse in the day of iudgement.

To conclude this point; Vniuersall redemption of all men, we graunt: the Scripture saith so: and there is an vniuersallitie among the Elect and beleueers: but vniuersall Redemption of all and euery man, as well the damned as the elect, and that effectually, we renounce, as hauing neither footing in the Scripture, nor in the writing of any ancient and orthodox diuine, for many hundred yeares after Christ, his words not depraved and mistaken.

As for the vniuersall vocation, it is of the same kinde with the former: because it is flate against the word of God in which is set down

A distinction of the world from the creation to the daies of Christ, into two parts: one, the people of God, being receiued into the covenant: the other (being the greater part of the world) No people, and forth of the covenant. From the beginning of the world to the giuing of the law, the Church was shut vp in the families of the Patriarkes: and the covenant in the very familie of Abraham was restrained to Isaac: and the members of these families, for this cause, were called the sonnes of God: & the rest of the world beside being tearmed as they were indeed, the sonnes of men. From the giuing of the law till Christ, the nation of the Iewes the Church of God, and the rest of the world beside, no people of God. And therefore Esay cald them prisoners and them that are in darknesse: And Ose such as are without mercie and no people: and Zachary, such as are not ioynted to the Lord: and Paul, such as are set to walke in their owne waier, being without God and without Christ in the world. And this distinction betwene Iew and Gentile stood till the very ascension of Christ. And hereupon when hee was to send his disciples to preach, he charged them not to go into the way of the Gentiles: and not to enter into the cities of the Samaritanes, but rather to goe to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, Mat. 10. 5. and when the woman of Canaan made request for her daughter, hee gaue a denial at the first vpon this distinction, saying, Mat. 15. 24. 26. It is not meet to take the childrens bread and give it vnto dogs, and againe, I am sent but vnto the lost sheepe of the house of Israel. It will be said, that this distinction arose of this, that the Gentiles at the first fell away from the covenant, and contemned the Messias. It is true indeed of the first heads of the Gentiles the sonnes of Noe: but of their posterity it is false, which in times following did not so much as heare of the covenant, and the Messias. The Prophet Esay saith of Christ, Esa. 55. 5. A nation that knew not thee, shall runne vnto thee. And Paul speaking to the Athenians saith, Act. 17. 30. that the times of this their ignorance God regarded not: but now admonisheth all men euery where to repent: and to the Romanes he saith, Rom. 16. 29. that the ministerie touching Christ and his benefits was kept secret since the world began, and now opened and published amongst all nations, 1. Tim. 3. 16. And if the Gentiles had but knowe of the Messias, why did not their Poets and Philosophers, who in their writings notoriously abuse the Iewes with sundry nickenames, at the least signifie the contempt of the Redeemer? Wherefore to hold, & much more to aouch by writing, that all and euery one of the heathen were called, it is most absurd: and if it were so, the Canibals and the savage nations of America should haue knowne Christ without preaching, which by the histories of those countries is knowne to be false.

Again, if the Vocation of euery man be effectual, then faith must be common to all men either by nature, or by grace, or both: now to say the first, namely, that the power of beleueing is common to all by nature, is the heresie of the Pelagians, and to say it is common to all by grace, is false. All men haue not faith, saith Paul, 2 Thess. 3. 2. may many to whom the Gospell is preached, doe not so much as vnderstand it and giue assent vnto it; Satan blinding their minds that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ should not shine vnto them, 2 Cor. 4. 4. And to say that faith is partly by nature and partly by grace, is the condēned heresie of the Semi-Pelagian: for we cannot so much as thinke a good thought of our selues, 2 Cor. 3. 5.

The last defect in the platforme, is that they ascribe vnto God a wrong end of his counsels; namely, the communication of mercy or goodnesse in eternall happines. For the absolute and soveraigne end of all Gods doings must be answerable to his nature, which is not mercy and loue alone, but also iustice it selfe: and therefore the right end is the manifestation of his glory both in iustice and mercy by the expresse testimonie of Scripture. Again, if the communication of his goodnes were the highest end of all his counsels, all mea without exception should be saved, because God cannot be frustrated of his end and purpose: and if but one man be damned, he is damned, either because God will not saue him, or because he cannot. If they say he will not, then is he changeable; if he cannot, then is he not omnipotent, considering his purpose was to conuey happinesse to all creatures.

Thus much of the efficient cause of the Church, namely, Gods predestination which doctrine could not here be omitted, considering no man can beleue himselfe to be a member of the Church, vnlesse withall he beleue that he is predestinate to life eueralasting. Now wee come to the second point, namely, the Mysticall Vnion, which is the very forme of the Church, wherein all that beleue are made one with Christ, Gal. 3. 18. To the causing of this Vnion, two things are required, a Donation or giuing of Christ vnto man, which is to be made one with him, and a Coniunction betweene them both. Of the first, the Prophet Esa. 9. 6. Vnto vs a child is borne, and vnto vs a Sonne is giuen; and Paul, Rom. 8. 32. Who spared not his owne Sonne, but gaue him for vs all: how shall he not with him giue vs all things also? And touching is sundry points must be considered. The first is, what is meant by this giuing? Ans. It is an action or worke of God the Father by the holy Ghost, whereby Christ as redeemer in the appointed time is really communicated to all ordained to saluation, in such manner, that they may truly say, that Christ himselfe with all his benefits is theirs, both in respect of right thereto, and in respect of all fruits redounding thence, and that as truly as any man may say, that house and land giuen him of his ancestors is his owne both to possesse and to vse.

A The second point is, what is the very thing giuen? Ans. Whole Christ, God and man is giuen, because his humanity without his Godhead, or the Godhead without the humanity doth not reconcile vs to God. Yet in this giuing there must be a diuers consideration had of the two natures of Christ: for the communication of the Godhead is merely energetical, that is, only in respect of operation; in that it doth make the manhood personally vnited vnto it to be propitiatorie for our finnes and meritorious of life eternall. And to anouch any communicatio of the Godhead in respect of essence, were to bring in the heresie of the Maniches, and to maintaine a composition and a commixion of our natures with the nature of God. Again, in the manhood of Christ we must distinguish betweene the subiect it selfe, the substance of bodie and soule; and the blessings in the subiect which tend to our saluation. And the communication of the aforesaid manhood is in respect of both, without separation: for no man can receiue fauing vertue from Christ, vnlesse first of all hee receiue Christ himselfe, as no man can haue the treasure hid in the field, vnlesse he first of all haue the field, Ioh. 6. 53, 54. and no man can be nourished by meate and drinke, vnlesse first of all he receiue the substance of both. And this is the cause, why not opely in the preaching of the Lords Supper, expresse mention is made, not only of Christs merit, but also of his very body and blood, whereby the whole humanity is signified, as appeares by that place, where it is said Ioh. 1. 14. that the word was made flesh. And though the flesh of it selfe profit nothing, as Saint Iohn saith, yet as it is ioyned to the godhead of the Sonne, and doth subsist in his person, it receiue thence quickening vertue, to renew and renew all those to whom it shall be giuen. Lastly, among the blessings that are stored vp in the manhood of Christ for our saluation, some are giuen vnto vs by imputation as when we are iustified by the righteousness, indeede inherent in his manhood, but imputed vnto vs: some by infusion, as when holiness is wrought in our hearts by the spirit, as a fruit of that holiness which is in the manhood of Christ, and derived from it, as the light of one candle from another.

The third point is, in what manner Christ is giuen vnto vs. Ans. God the Father giueth Christ vnto his Church not in an earthly or bodily manner, as when a king bestowes a gift with his owne hand, and putteth it into the hand of his subiect: but the manner is altogether celestiall and spirituall: partly, because it is brought to passe by the mere diuine operation of the holy Ghost; and partly, because in respect of vs, this gift is receiued by an instrument which is supernaturall, namely faith, whereby we lay hold on, and apply vnto our selues the Euangelicall promises. And thus manner of giuing may be conceived thus:

A man

A man that neuer stirred foot out of England holds and enioyes land in Turke: in what comes it to be his? Thus: the Emperour was willing and content to bestow it; and the man for his part as willing to accept and receiue it: and by this means that which at the first was the Emperours, by mutuall consent becomes the mans. In the same manner God the Father hath made an Euangelicall couenant with his Church: in which of his mercie he hath made a grant of his owne Sonne vnto vs, with righteousness, and life eueralasting in him: and we againe by his grace accept of this grant, and receiue the same by faith: and thus by mutuall consent according to the tenor of the couenant, any repētant sinner may truly say, though I now haue my abode vpon earth, & Christ in respect of his manhood be locally in heauen; yet is hee truly mine to haue and to enioy, his body is mine, his blood is mine. As for the giuing and receiuing of the body and blood of Christ in bodily manner (which the Papists maintaine in anouching the reall transubstantiation of bread & wine in the Sacrament, into the body & blood of Christ, & the Lutherans also in teaching, that his body and blood is substantially either in, or with, or vnder the bread & wine) is an erroneous conceit, flat opposit to sundry points of the Christian faith. For Christ to this very houre retaineth still the essence and essentiall properties of a true body, and we beleue that really & visibly he ascended into heauen, and there abides till his second coming to the last iudgement: who then hauing but common reason would imagine a communication of the body of Christ pent vp in the element of bread, and conueyed into our bodies by the mouth and stomack?

The fourth point is, whether wee are not Lords of Christ, he being thus giuen vnto vs? Ans. No: for this donation is not single but mutuall. As Christ is giuen vnto vs, so we againe are giuen to Christ, as he himselfe saith, Ioh. 17. 2. Those whom thou hast giuen me, Father, I haue kept. And we are giuen vnto him, that our bodies and soules are made his, not onely as he is God, but also as he is our redeemer: and our finnes with the guilt thereof are made his by imputation, and the punishment thereof is wholly laid vpon him. This is all the dowry which the Church, being the spouse of Christ, hath brought vnto him.

The fifth point is, how any man in particular may know that Christ is giuen vnto him of the Father. Ans. When God giues Christ to man, he withall giues man grace and power to receiue Christ, and to apprehend him with all his benefits: and this wedoe when we vterly renounce our selues, this world, & all things therein, beswaile our finnes past, relying on the death of Christ for the pardon of them all, and as it were with both the armes of faith catching hold vpon him in all estates, both in life and death. When the heart of any man is truly disposed and inclined to doe these and the like things, we may truly say, that God hath giuen him grace to receiue Christ.

The second thing required to make vs one with Christ, is the Mysticall vnion, which is a coniunction whereby Christ and his Church are actually coupled into one Mysticall bodie. Now that we may the better conceiue the nature of it, sundry questions are to be moued. The first, what kinde of coniunction this is? Ans. In the Scripture we meet with three kind of coniunctions. The first, is coniunction in nature, where sundry things are coupled by one and the same nature. As the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost, being three distinct substances are all one, and therefore ioyned in one Godhead or diuine nature. Now Christ & the beleuer are not ioyned in nature: for then they twaine should haue one bodie and soule. The second coniunction is in person, when things in nature different, so concur together, that they make but one person; as the body and soule make one man: and the Godhead of the Son with his manhood make but one Christ: in whom there is an vnion of distinct natures with vniety of person. Now Christ and a Christian are not ioyned in person: for Christ is one person, Peter a second person, and Paul a third distinct from them both: and so many men as there be, so many seuerall persons. The third coniunction is in spirit; & this is the coniunction meant in this place, where by Christ and his Church are ioyned together: for the very same spirit of God that dwells in the manhood of Christ, & filleth it with all graces above measure, is deriued thence and dwells in all the true members of the Church, and filleth them with the like graces in measure, and therefore S. Iohn saith, Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his spirit. Hence it folloves, that the bond of this coniunctio is one and the same spirit descending from Christ the head to all his members, creating also in them the instrument of faith, whereby they apprehend Christ and make him their owne.

The second is, what are the things vnited? Ans. Not the bodie of the beleuer to the bodie of Christ, or the soule to his soule, but the whole person of the man to the whole person of Christ: yet in this order; we are first of all and immediately ioyned to the manhood of Christ, & by the manhood to the godhead.

The third question is, what is the manner of this coniunction? Ans. We must not thinke that Christ & his Church are ioyned by imagination, as the Munde of man and the thing whereof he thinks or by consent of heart, as one friend is ioyned with another, and as the Iewes conuerced were all of one heart and soule: or by any abode in one place, or by touching, as sea & land are both ioyned together and make one globe: or by any composition or commixion of substances, as when many ingredients are put together, to make one medicine. But this coniunction is altogether

1 Ioh. 4. 13.

spirituall as the former Giuing was; & incomprehensible to mans reason: and therefore we must rather labour to feele it by experience in thy heart, then to conceiue it in the braine. Yet neuertheless it shall not be amiss to consider a resemblance of it in this comparison. Suppose a man hauing the parts of his bodie disioyned farre asunder, his head lying in Italy, one arme in Germany, the other in Spaine, and his legs with vs in England: suppose further, all these parts or quarters haue all one soule, extending it selfe vnto them all & quickning each of them severally, as though they were neerely ioyned together: & though the parts be seuered many hundred miles asunder, yet the distance of place doth not hinder the coniunction, considering one and the same soule doth enlarge it selfe and giue life vnto them all. In the same manner the head of the Mytticall body Christ our Saniour is now in heauen, & some of his mēbers in heauen with him, and some in earth: and of these, some in England, some in Germany, some in Italy, some in Spaine, distant many thousand miles asunder: and the spirit of God is as it were the soule of this body which giues spirituall life to all the members: distance of place doth not hinder this coniunction, because the H. Ghost which linketh al the parts together is infinite.

The benefits which we receive by this Mytticall vnion are manifold. For it is the ground of the conueyance of all grace. The first is, that by meanes hereof euery Christian as hee is a Christian or a man regenerate, hath his beginning and being in Christ, howsoever as he is a man he hath his being & subsisting in himself, as Paul saith, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Ye are of God in Christ. And, Eph. 5. 30. Ye are members of his body, of his flesh, & of his bones. How (will some say) can this be? After this manner: The comparison is taken from our first parents. Eue was made of a rib taken out of Adams side, he being cast into a slumber: this being done, Adam waked & said, This now is bone of my bone, & flesh of my flesh. Gen. 2. 23. Christ was nailed on the crosse, and his most precious blood was shed, & out of it arise and spring all true Christians: that is, out of the merit of Christs death and passion, whereby they become new creatures. Secondly, euery one that beleueth in Christ by reason of this vnion hath an vnspcakable prerogative: for hereby he is first vnited to Christ, and by reason thereof is also ioyned to the whole Trinity, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, and shall haue eternall fellowship with them. Thirdly, sundry men, specially Papists, deride the doctrine of iustification by imputed righteousness: thinking it is absurd, that a man should be iust by that righteousness which is inherent in the person of Christ: as if we would say, that one man may liue by the soule of another: or be learned by the learning of another. But here we may see, that it hath sufficient foundation. For there is a most nere and freight vnion betweene

A Christ and all that beleue in him: and in this vnion Christ with al his benefits according to the tenour of the covenant of grace, is made ours really: and therefore we may stand iust before God by his righteousness; it being indeed his, because it is in him as in a subiect; yet so, as it is also ours, because it is giuen vnto vs of God. Now there is no such vnion betweene man and man, and for that cause one man cannot liue by the soule of another, or be learned by the learning of another. Fourthly, from this fountaine springs our sanctificatio, whereby we dye to sinne, and are renewed in righteousness and holinesse. Wormes and flies that haue lien dead all winter, if they be laid in the Sunne in the spring time begin to renewe, by vertue therof: euen so, when we are vnited to Christ, & are (as it were) laid in the beames of this blessed Son of righteousness, vertue is denuded thence, which warmeth our benumbed hearts dead in sinne, and reneweth vs to newnes of life: whereby we begin to affect & like good things, and put in practise all the duties of religion. Fifthly, hence we haue the protection of Gods angels; for they alwaies wait & attend on Christ, & because we are made one with him, they attend vpon vs also. Lastly, by reason of this vnion with Christ, euery beleuer comes to haue interest and to recouer his title in the creatures of God, and to haue the holy and lawfull vse of them all. For we must consider, that although Adam created in the image of God, was made Lord ouer all things in heauen & earth; yet when he fell by eating the forbidden fruit: he, & in him all mankind lost the title & vse of them all. Now therefore that a man may recouer his interest, hee must first of all be vnited & made one with Christ: and then by Christ, who is Lord and King ouer all, shall hee recouer that title in the creatures of God, which he had by creation; & be made Lord ouer them againe. But some will say, if this be so, then a Christian man may haue & enioy all creatures at his pleasure; and therefore the goods of other men? Ans. The reason is not good, for in this life we haue no more but (a) right vnto the creature; and (b) right in it, that is, actual possession is referred for the life to come. Therefore we must content our selues with our allowed portions giuen vnto vs by God, by his grace viving them in holy manner, expecting by hope the full fruition of all things till after this life. Again, if all titles to the creatures be recouered by Christ, it may be demanded, whether infidels haue any interest to their goods or no? Ans. Infidels before men are right lords of all their lands and possessions which they haue obtained by lawfull meane; and in the courts of men they are not to be deprived of them: but before God they are but vipers: because they hold them not in capite, that is, in Christ: neither haue they any holy & right vse of them, for to the vncleane, all things are vncleane. Tit. 1. 15. And they must first of all become members of

Christ,

Christ, before they can hold and enioy them aright, and vse them with good conscience.

The duties which are to be learned of the doctrine of this vnion, are manifold. And first of all, we are taught to purge our hands and hearts of all our sins, and especially to auoide all those finnes whereby mens bodies are defiled, as drunkennes, vncleannes, fornication: for they driue away the spirit of God from his owne house, and dissolve the bond of the coniunction betweene Christ and vs. Secondly, we must euery one of vs, which professeth our selues to be members of Christ, labour to become conformable vnto him in holinesse of life, and to become new creatures: for this vnion requireth thus much. Let a man take the grafts of a crabbe-tree, & set them into good stockes; yet will they not change their sappe, but bring forth fruit according to their owne nature, euen sowre crabbes: but it must not be so with vs: we are indeed wilde oliues, and the branches of wilde vines; yet seeing we are persuaded that we are grafted into Christ, and made one with him, we must lay aside our wild & sowre nature, and take vpon vs the nature of the true vine, beare good fruit, haue good iuyce in vs, & render sweete wine. Thirdly, we are taught hence to bee plentifull in all good works, considering we are ioyned to him that is the fountaine of grace. And therefore Christ saith, Ioh. 15. 1. I am the true vine, & my father is the husband-man: euery branch that beareth no fruit in me, hee taketh away: and euery one that beareth fruit, hee purgeth it, that it may beare more fruit. And the prophet Esai compares the Church of God to a vineyard with a tower & wine-press in it. And God himselfe comes often downe vnto it, to see the fruits of the vally, to see if the vine bud, and the Pomegranate flourish. And further we must bring forth fruit with patience: For the Lord of this vineyard comes with crosse and afflictions, as with a pruning knife in his hand, to pare & to dresse vs that we may be fit to bring forth fruit, plentifull in duties of piety to God, & in duties of loue to al men, yea to our enemies. Christian men are trees of righteousness growing by the waters of the Sanctuarie: but what trees? not like ours: for they are rooted vpwrd in heauen in Christ, and their graines and branches grow downward that they may beare fruit among men.

Hitherto we haue heard what the Church is: now to beleue the Church is nothing els but to beleue that there is a company of the predestinate made one in Christ, and that withall we are in the number of them.

Before we procede any further, three rules must be obserued touching the Church in general. The first, that Christ alone is the head of the Catholike Church, and that he neither hath nor can haue any creature in heauen or earth to be fellow herein. For the Church is his body, and none but he can performe the duty of an head vnto it: which dutie stands in two things; the first, is to gouerne the Church by such power and authority whereby he can & doth prescribe lawes properly binding the conscience of all his members; the second, is by grace to quicken & to put spirituall life into them, so as they shall be able to say, that they liue not, but Christ in them. As for the Supremacy of the sea of Rome, whereby the Pope will needs stand in ministeriall head to the Catholike Church, it is a fatallian forgery. For the headship (as I may term it) of Christ is of that nature or quality, that it can admit no deputy, whether we respect the commanding, or the quickening power of Christ before named. Nay Christ needs no vicar or deputy; for he is all-sufficient in himselfe and alwaies present with his Church, as he himselfe testifieth, saying, Math. 18. 20. Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst among them. And whereas al commissions cease in the presence of him that giues the commission: it is as much pride and arrogancie for the Pope to take vnto himselfe the title of the head and vniuersall Bishop of the Church; as it is for a subiect to keepe himselfe in commission in the presence of his King.

The second rule is, that there is no saluation out of the Church, and that therefore euery one which is to be saved must become a member & a citizen of the Catholike and Apostolike Church: & such as remaine for euer out of the same perish eternally. Therefore S. Iohn saith, They went out from vs, they were not of vs: for if they had bene of vs, they would haue remained with vs: but this cometh to passe: that it might appeare, that they are not all of vs. And again, that such as be holy are in the city of God: but without that, is forth of the Church, are dogs, enchanters, whoremongers, adulterers, &c. And the arke out of which all perished, figured the Church, out of which are all condemned. And for this cause S. Luke saith, that the Lord added to the Church from day to day such as should be saved. And the reason hereof is plain: for without Christ there is no saluation: but out of the militant Church there is no Christ, nor faith in Christ: and therefore no saluation. Again forth of the militant Church there are no means of saluation, no preaching of the word, no inuocation of Gods name, no Sacraments, and therefore no saluation. For this cause euery man must be admonished euermore to ioyn himselfe to some particular Church being a found member of the Catholike Church.

The third rule, that the Church which here we beleue is only one. As Christ himselfe speaketh, My dove is alone, and my vndisfiled is the only daughter of her mother. And as there is only one God, & one redeemer, one faith, one baptisme, and one way of saluation by Christ only, so there is but one Church alone.

The Catholike Church hath two parts: the Church Triumphant in heauen, and the Church Militant on earth.

The Triumphant Church may thus be described: It is a company of the spirits of iust men, triumphing over the flesh, the diuell, and the world, praying God. First I say, it is a companie of the spirits of men, as the H. Ghost expressely teacheth it, because the foules onely of the godly departed, as of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, &c. are as yet ascended into heaven, and not their bodies. Furthermore the properties of this companie are two: The first, is to make triumphantour their spiritual enemies, the flesh, the diuell, the world: for the righteous man, so long as he liues in this world, is in continual combat without truce with all the enemies of his saluation: and by constant faith obtaining victorie in the end of his life, he is strallared in glorious and triumphant manner into the kingdom of glory. This was signified to John in a vision, in which he saw an innumerable company of all sorts of nations, kindreds, people, and tongues stand before the Lambe, clothed in long white robes, with palmes in their hands, in token that they had bene warriours, but now by Christ haue gotten the victory and are made conquerours. Their second propertie, is to praise and magnifie the name of God, as it followeth in the same place, saying, A voice, praise, and glory, and wisdom, &c. thanks, honour, power and might bee vnto our God for euermore. Hence it may be demanded, whether Angels be of this Triumphant Church or no? Ans. The blessed angels bee in heaven in the presence of God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, but they are not of the mysticall body of Christ, because they are not vnder him, as he is their redeemer, considering they cannot be redeemed, which neuer fell, and it cannot be proued that they now stand by the vertue of Christs redemption: but they are vnder him as he is their Lord and King; and by the power of Christ as he is God, and their God, are they confirmed. And therefore as I take it, wee can not say, that Angels are members of the mysticall body of Christ, or of the triumphant Church; though indeede, they be of the companie of the blessed.

The Church Militant may be thus described: It is the companie of the elect or faithful liuing vnder the crosse, desiring to be remoued, and to bee with Christ. I say not that the Militant Church is the whole body of the elect, but only that part thereof which liueth vpon earth: and the infallible marke thereof is that faith in Christ which is taught and deliuered in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles: and this faith againe may be discerned by two markes. The first, is that the members of this companie liue vnder the crosse, and profit by it in all spiritual grace. And therefore it is said, that we must through many afflictions enter into the kingdom of heauen. And our Sauour Christ faith, if any man will come after me, let him deny himselfe, and take up his crosse every day and follow me. The second marke, is a desire to depart hence & to be with Christ, as Paul faith, We loue rather to be remoued out of this body and to be with Christ. And againe, I desire to bee loosed and to be with Christ, which is best of all. Where yet we must remember, that the members of Christ do not desire death simply and absolutely, but in two respects: I. That they might leaue off to sinne, and by sinning leaue to displeace God. II. That they might come to enioy happines in heauen, and to be with Christ.

Touching the generall estate of the militant Church, two questions are to be considered. The first, how farre forth God is present with it, assisting it by his grace. Ans. God giues his spirit vnto it in such a measure, that although the gates of hel can not preuaile against it, yet neuertheless it remains still subiect to errour both in doctrine and manners. For that which is true in euery member of the Church, is also true in the whole: but euery member of the Militant Church is subiect to errour both in doctrine and manners, because men in this life are but in part enlightened and sanctified; and therefore still remaine subiect to blindness of mind & ignorance, & to the rebellion of their wills and affections: whereby it comes to passe, that they may casily faile either in iudgement or in practise. Again, that which may befall one or two particular Churches, may likewise befall all the particular Churches vpon earth, all being in one and the same condition; but this may befall one or two particular Churches to faile either in doctrine or manners: The Church of Ephesus failed in leaving her first love, whereupon Christ threatned to remoue from her the Candlestick. And the Church of Galatia was remoued to another Gospel from him that had called them in the grace of Christ: now why may not the same things befall twentie, yea an hundred Churches, which befall these twaine? Lastly, experience sheweth this to be true, in that generall Councils haue erred. The Council of Nice being to reforme sundrie behauiours among the Bishops and Elders, would with common consent haue forbidden marriage vnto them, thinking it profitable to be so; vntill Paphnutius had better informed them out of the Scriptures. In the third Council at Carthage, certaine booke Apocrypha, as the booke of Syrach, Tobie, and the Machabees, are numbered in the Canon, & yet were excluded by the Council of Laodicea. And the saying of a Diuine is recited, that former Councils are to be reformed and amended by the latter. But Papists maintaining that the Church cannot erre, alledge the promise of Christ: Howbeit when he is come which is the spirit of truth, he will lead you into all truth. Ans. The promise is directed to the Apostles, who with their Apostolicall authority had this priuiledge granted them, that in the teaching and penning of the Gospel they should not erre: and therefore in the Council at Ierusalem they conclude thus, It seemed good vnto vs, and to the holy Ghost. And if the promise be further extended to all the Church, it must bee vnderstood with a limitation: that God will giue his spirit vnto the members thereof thereof to leade them into all truth, so far forth as shall be needfull for their saluation.

The second question is, wherein stands the dignity and excellency of the Church? Ans. It stands in subiection & obedience vnto the will and word of her spouse and head, Christ Iesus. And hence it followes, that the Church is not to challenge vnto her selfe authority ouer the Scriptures, but only a ministry or ministerial service, whereby shee is appointed of God to preserve & keepe, to publish & preach them, and to giue testimonie of them. And for this cause, it is called the pillar & ground of truth. The Church of Rome not content with this, faith further, that the authoritie of the Church in respect of vs, is above the authoritie of the Scripture, because (say they) we cannot know Scripture to be Scripture, but by the testimony of the Church. But indeed they speake an vntruth. For the testimonie of men that are subiect to errour cannot be greater & of more force with vs, then the testimonie of God who cannot erre. Again, the Church hath her beginning from the word: (for there cannot be a Church without faith, and there is no faith without the word, and there is no word out of the Scriptures) and therefore the Church in respect of vs, depends on the Scripture, & not the Scripture on the Church. And as the Lawyer which hath no further power but to expound the law, is vnder the law: so the Church which hath authoritie only to publish and expound the Scriptures, cannot authorize them vnto vs, but must submit her selfe vnto them. And whereas it is alledged, that faith comes by hearing, and this hearing is in respect of the voice of the Church, and that therefore faith comes by the voice of the Church: the answer is, that the place must bee vnderstood, not of that generall faith whereby wee are reformed the Scripture is Scripture, but of iustifying faith whereby wee attaine to saluation. And faith comes by hearing the voyce of the Church, not, as it is the churches voice, but as it is a ministry or means to publish the word of God, which is both the cause and object of our beleeuing. Now on the contrary we must hold, that as the carpenter knowes his rule to be straight, not by any other rule applied vnto it, but by it selfe: for casting his eye vpon it, he presently discernes whether it bee straight or no: so we know and are reformed that Scripture is Scripture, even by the Scripture it self, though the Church say nothing, so bee it wee haue the spirit of discerning when we reade, heare, and consider the Scripture. And yet the testimonie of the Church is not to be despised, for though it breed not a perswasion in vs of the certainty of the Scripture, yet it is a very good indcement thereto.

The Militant Church hath many parts. For as the Ocean sea which is but one, is deuided into parts according to the regions and countries against which it lyeth, as into the English Spanish, Italian sea, &c. so the Church dispersed ouer the face of the whole earth, is diuided into other particular Churches according to the countries are seuerall in which it is seated, as into the Church of England and Ireland, the Church of France, the Church of Germanie, &c.

Again, particular Churches are in a twofold estate: sometime they lie idle in persecution, waiping the publike preaching of the word, & the administration of the Sacraments: and sometime againe they are visible, carrying before the eyes of the world an open profession of the name of Christ: as the Moone is sometime eclipsed, and sometime shined in the full. In the first estate was the Church of Israel in the daies of Eliab, when he wished to die: because the people had forsaken the command of the Lord, broken down his altars, slain his prophets with the sword, and he was left alone, & they sought to take his life also. Behold a lamentable estate when so worthily a Prophet could not find another beside himselfe that feared God: yet marke what the Lord faith vnto him, I haue left Iemen thousand in Israel, euen all the knees that haue not bowed vnto Baal, and every mouth that hath not kissed him. Again it is said, That Israel had bin along season without the true God, without Priest to teach, and without the law. Neither must this trouble any that God should so farre forth forsake his Church: for when ordinarie means of saluation faile, he then gathereth his elect by extraordinary means, as when the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness wanting both circumcision and the Passouer, hee made a supply by Manna, & by the pillar of a cloud. Hence we haue direction to answer the Papists, who demand of vs where our Church was three-score years agoe before the daies of Luther: we say, that then for the space of many hundred years, an vniuersall Apostacie ouerspread the whole face of the earth; and that our Church then was not visible to the world, but lay hidde vnder the chaffe of popery. And the truth of this, the Records of all ages manifest.

The second estate of the Church, is when it flourisheth and is visible, not that the faith and secret election of men can bee fene (for no man can discern these things but by outward signes) but because it is appaant in respect of the outward assemblies gathered to the preaching of the word and the administration of the Sacraments, for the praise and glorie of God, and their mutual edification. And the visible Church may be thus described: It is a mixt company of men professing the faith, assembled together by the preaching of the word. First of all, I call it a mixt company, because in it there be true beleevers and hypocrites, Elect and Reprobate, good and bad. The Church is the Lords field, in which the enemy sowes his tares, it is the corn floor, in which lyeth wheat & chaffe: it is a band of men, in which be those that be of valour and courage there be white-livered souldiers. And it is called a Church of the better part, namely, the elect whereof consisteth, though they be in number few. As for the vngodly, though they be in the Church, yet are they no more parts of it indeede, then the superfluous humours in the veines are parts of the body. But to proceede; how are the members of the visible Church qualified and discerned? the answer followeth in the definition, professing the faith. Whereby I meane the profession of that religion which hath bene taught from the beginning, and is now recorded in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles. And this profession is a signe and marke whereby a man is declared and made manifest to be a member of the Church.

Againe, because the profession of the faith is otherwhiles true & sincere, and otherwhiles only in shew, therefore there be also two sorts of members of the visible Church, members before God, and members before men. A member of the Church before God, is he that beside the outward profession of the faith, hath inwardly a pure heart, good conscience, and faith vnfaigned, whereby he is indeede a true member of the Church. Members before men, whom we may call reputed members, are such as haue nothing else but the outward profession, wanting the good conscience, and the faith vnfaigned. The reason why they are to be esteemed members of vs, is, because wee are bound by the rule of charity to thinke of men as they appeare vnto vs; leauing secter iudgement vnto God.

I added in the last place, that the Church is gathered by the word preached, to shew that the cause whereby it is begun and continued, is the word: which for that cause is called the immortal feede: whereby we are borne anew, and milke, whereby wee are fed and cherished to life eueralting. And hence it followeth necessarily, that the preaching of the doctrine of the Prophets & Apostles, ioyned with any measure of faith and obedience, is an infallible marke of a true Church. Indee it is true, there bee three things required to the good estate of the Church, the preaching of the Gospel, the administration of the Sacraments, and the due execution of Discipline according to the word: yet if the two later be wanting, so be it there be preaching of the word with obedience in the people, there is for subsistence a true Church of God. For it is the banner of Christ displayed, vnder which all that war against the flesh, the diuell, the world, must range themselves. As the Lord saith by the Prophet Esaie, I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, & set up my standard vnto the people, and they shall bring their fumes in their armes, and their daughters shall be carried vpon their shoulders. Hence it followeth, that men which want the preaching of the Gospel, must either procure the same vnto themselves; or if that cannot be, because they liue in the midst of idolatrous nations, as in Spaine & Italy, it is requisite that they should ioyne themselves to those places where with liberty of conscience they may enioy this happie blessing. Men are not to haue their hearts glued to the honours and riches of this world, but they should be of Dauids mind, and rather desire to be doore-keepers in the house of God, then to dwell in the tents of vngodliness. In the Canticles the spouse of Christ saith, Shew mee, O thou whom my soule loueth, where thou feedest, where thou lyest at noone: for why should I bee as mee that turneth aside to the flockes of thy companions? To whom he answereth thus: If thou know not, O thou the fairest among women, get thee forth by the steeppes of the flockes, and feede thy kiddes by the teems of the sheepe: that is, in those places where the doctrine of righteoussesse and life eueralting by the Mesiās, is published. When the Shunammite childe was dead, he told her husband that he would go to the man of God, to whom he answered thus: Why wilt thou goe to him to day, it is neither new Moone, nor Sabbath day. whereby it is signified, that when teaching was scarce in Israell, the people did resort to the Prophets for instruction and consolation. And Dauid saith, that the people whereof euer their aboad was, went from strength to strength, till they appeared before God in Sion. And oftentimes they being Profelytes, their aboad must needs be out of the precincts of Iewrie.

Thus we see what the visible Church is: now further concerning it, three questions are to be skanned. The first, is how we may discern whether particular men and particular Churches holding errors, bee found members of the Catholike Church or no. For the answering of this, we must make a double distinction, one of errors, the other of persons that erre. Of errors some are destroyers of the faith, some onely weakeners of it. A destroye is that, which ouerturneth any fundamentall point of religion; which is of that nature, that if it be denied, religion it selfe is ouerturned; as the deniall of the death of Christ, and the immortality of the soule, iustification by workes, and such like: and the summe of these fundamentall points is comprised in the Creede of the Apostles & the Decalogue. A weakening error is that, the holding whereof doth not ouerturne any point in the foundation of saluation; as the error of free-will, and sundry such like. This distinction is made by the holy Ghost, who saith expressly that the doctrines of repentance, and faith, and baptisme, and laying on of hands, and the resurrection, and the last iudgement, are the foundation, namely, of religion: and again, that Christ is the foundation, and that other doctrines consonant to the word, are as gold and silver laid thereupon. Secondly, persons erring, are of two sorts: some erre of weaknesse, being carried away by others: or of simple ignorance, not yet being convicted & informed concerning the truth. Some againe erre of obstinacie, or affected ignorance, which hauing bene admonished and convicted, still perseuere in their forged opinions. This being said, we now come to the point. If any man or Church, shall hold an error of the lighter kinde, hee still remains a member of the Church of God, & so must be reputed of vs. As when a Lutheran shall hold, that images are still to be retained in the Church, &c. for these and such like opinions may be maintained, the foundation of saluation vnafraid. This which I say is flatly auouched by Paul. If any man (saith he) build on this foundation, gold, silver, pretious stones; timber, hey, stubble, his worke shall be made manifest by the fire, &c. and if any mans worke burne, he shall lose, but yet he shall be safe himselfe. And therefore the hay and stubble of mens errors that are beside the foundation, on which they are laid, doe not debarre them from being Christians or members of the Church. A man breakes down the windowes of his house; the house stands: hee breakes downe the roofoe or the wals; the house yet stands though deformed: hee pulles vp the foundation; the house is selfe fals & cealeth to be an house. Now religion which we profess is like an house or building: and some points thereof are like windowes, doores, wals, roofes, & some are the very foundation: & the former may be battered, the foundation standing. Againe, if the error be directly or by necessary consequent, euen in common sense against the foundation, consideration must be had whether the Church or party erreth of weaknesse or malice: if of weaknesse, the party is to be esteemed as a member of the Catholike Church. And thus Paul writes vnto the Church of Galatia, as to a Church of God, though by false teachers it had bene turned away to another Gospel, embraced the fundamentall error of iustification by workes. But when any man or Church shall hold fundamentall errors in obstinacie or affected ignorance, wee are not then bound to repute them any longer as Churches or Christians, but as such to whom condemnation belongs, as Paul sheweth by the example of Iannes and Iambres. And as Iannes and Iambres, (saith he) withstood Moses; so doe these also resist the truth, men of corrupt mindes, reprobate concerning the faith. Yet withall, this cauet must euer be remembered, that wee rather condemne the error then the person that erreth, because Gods mercy is like to a bottomlesse sea, whereby he worketh what he wil and when he will in the hearts of miserable sinners.

The second question is, where at this day we may finde such visible Churches as are indeed found members of the Catholike Church. And for the resolving of it, we are to goe thorough all countries and religions in the world. And first to begin with Turkes and Iewes, we are not in any wise to acknowledg their assemblies for Churches, because they worship not God in Christ who is the head of the Church.

As for the assemblies of Papists which haue bin a great part of the world, if thereby we vnderstand companies of men holding the Pope for their head, & beleuing the doctrine established in the Council of Trent; in name they are called Churches, but indeede they are no true or found members of the Catholike Church. For both in their doctrine and in the worship of God, they raze the very foundation of religion, which will appeare by these three points: First of all, they hold iustification by workes of grace: auouching that they are not onely iustified before God by the merit of Christ, but also by their owne doings. Which opinion flatly ouerturneth iustification by Christ. For as Paul saith to the Galatians, If ye be circumcised, Christ profiteth you nothing; that is, if ye looke to be iustified by the workes of the ceremoniall law, ye are fallen from Christ: ioyned circumcision and Christ together in the matter of iustification, and ye doe quite ouertrow iustification by Christ. Now if this be true, which is the word of God that cannot lie, then we say to the Papists; if ye will needes be iustified by workes of grace, ye are fallen from grace. The second point is, that they maintaine a daily rull sacrifice of the bodie of Christ in the masse for the finnes of the quicke and dead. And this is also a fundamentall heresie. For Christs sacrifice on the crosse must either bee a perfect sacrifice or no sacrifice, and if it be often iterated and repeated by the Masse-priest, it is not perfect but imperfect. The third point is, that they worship the Images of the Trinitie and Saints departed, and their Breaden god, which is as vile an abomination as euer was among the Gentiles: all being directly against the true meaning of the second commandment, and defacing the worship of God in the very substance thereof. Thus then it appeares, that the old Church of Rome is changed, and is now at this day, of a spouse of Christ become an harlot: and therefore no more a Church of Christ indeede, then the carcase of a dead man that weareth a liuing mans garment is a liuing man, though he looke neuer so like him. And whereas they pleade for themselves, that they haue succession from the Apostles, the answer is, that succession of person is nothing without succession of doctrine, which they want: and we see that hereticikes haue succeeded lawfull Ministers. Secondly, whereas it is alleadged, that in the Popish assemblies the Sacrament of Baptisme is rightly for substance administrered; and that also is a note of a Church, three things may be answered. First, that baptisme secured from the preaching of the Gospel, is no more a signe of a Church then the leale euered from the indenture is of force; and that is nothing. Circumcision was used in Colchis, yet no Church, and among the Samaritans, yet no people. Secondly, Baptisme in the assemblies of the Church of Rome, is as the purse of a true man in the hand of a theefe: and indeede doth no more argue them to bee Churches, then the true mans purfe argues the theefe to bee a true man. For Baptisme though it be in their assemblies, yet doth it not appertaine vnto them, but vnto another hidden Church of God, which he hath in all ages, gathered forth of the midst of them. Thirdly, though they haue the outward baptisme, yet they by necessary consequent of doctrine, ouerturne the inward baptisme that stands in iustification and sanctification. Moreover, whereas it is alleadged, that they maintaine the bookes of the old and new Testament penned by the Prophets and Apostles; the answer is, that they doe it with adding to the Canon, and by corrupting the native sense of the Scriptures in the very foundation: and therefore they are but as a lantern, that shewes light to others, and none to it selfe. Fourthly, it is further said, that they hold the Creede of the Apostles, and make the same confession of faith that we do. I answer, that in shew of words they doe so indeede; but by necessarie consequents in the rest of their doctrine they ouerturne one of the natures, & all the offices of Christ, and therewithall moit offe the articles of the Creede. And herein they deale as a father, that in outward shew tenders the body of his childe, and will not abide the least blemish vpon it: and yet by secret conueinances inwardly annoyues the hart, or the liuer, and so in truth destroys the same. Fifthly, it is alleadged, that Antichrist must sit in the temple of God, that is, the Church; therefore say some that desire an vnion betwene vs & the Papists, popish assemblies are true Churches: but the argument is not good. For it is one thing to be in the Church, and another thing to be of it. And Antichrist is said to sit in the Church, not as a member thereof, but as an vsurper, or as the pyrate in the shippe of the merchant: & hence it cannot be proued, that the assemblies of Papists are Churches, but that in them and with them there is mingled another hidden Church, in the midst whereof Antichrist the Pope ruleth, though himselfe hath no part therein. Lastly, whereas some being no Papists, thinke their Churches to be like a body, diseased and full of sores and wounds from the head to the foote, and the throat also cut, yet so as life is still remaining; we may better thinke (their foule errors considered, & their worship of God, which is nothing else but a mixture of Iudaisme and Paganisme) that it is a rotten & dead corpse void of spirituall life. And therefore we haue seuered our selues from the Church of Rome vpon iust cause: neither are we schismatiques in so doing, but they rather, because the ground and the proper cause of the seuering is in them.

As for the assemblies of Anabaptists, Libertines, Antinomites, Tritheites, Arianes, Samaritanians, they are no Churches of God, but conspiracies of monstrous hereticks iudicially condemned in the primitive Church, and againe by the malice of Satan renewed and renewed in this age. The same we are to thinke and say of the Family of Ioue.

As for the Churches of Germany commonly called the Churches of the Lutherans, they are reputed of vs as the true churches of God. Though their Augsburgene Confession haue not satisfied the expectation of other Reformed Churches: yet haue they all the same enemies in matter of religion, and do alike confesse the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: and of the office of the Mediatour, of faith and good workes, of the Word, the Church, & the Magistrate, are all of one iudgement. They differ indeede from vs in the question of the Sacrament, but it is no sufficient cause to induce vs to hold them as no Church: for that there is a true or all receiuing of the body and blood of Christ in the Lords supper, we all agree; and we ioyntly confesse that Christ is there present, so farre forth that he doth truly feede vs with his very bodie and blood to eternall life: and all the controuersie lies in the manner of receiuing; we contenting our selues with that spirittuall receiuing which is by the hand of faith, they adding thereto the corporall, whereby they imagine themselves to receiue Christ with the hand and mouth of the body. And though to maintaine this their opinion, they be constrained to turne the ascensio of Christ into a disparicion, whereby his body being visible becomes inuifible, yet in the maine points we agree: that he entred into his kingdom in our name and for vs: that we are gouerned and preferred by his power and might: and that whatsoever good thing we haue or doe, proceedes wholly from the grace of his spirit. Indeeede the opinion of the Pequinique of the body of Christ, reuiuech the condemned heresies of Eucheus and Nestorius, and it ouerturneth by necessarie consequent most of the articles of faith: but that was priuate to some men, as Brentius and others, and was not receiued of whole Churches: and whereas the men were godly and learned, & we are vncertaine with what affection, and how long they held this error, we rest our selues in condemning it, leauing the persons to God. Again, Popish Transubstantiation and Lutheran Consubstantiation, are both against the truth of the manhood of Christ, yet with great difference. Transubstantiation is flat against an article of faith: for if Christs body be made of bread, & his blood of wine (which must needs be, if there bee a conseruacion of the one into the other,) then was not he conceived and borne of the virgin Mary: for it cannot both be made of Bakers bread, and of the substance of the Virgin. Again, it abolisheth the outward signe in the Lords Supper, as also the analogie betwene the signe and the thing signified, & so ouerturnes the Sacrament: but Consubstantiation doth not so, neither doth it ouerturne the substance of any article of religion, but only a maine point of Philosophy, which is, that a body doth occupy one onely place at once.

Furthermore, the Churches of Helmetia, & Sauioy, and the free cities of France, & the low Countries, and Scotland are to be reuerenced as the true Churches of God, as their confessions make manifest. And no lesse must we thinke of our owne Churches in England and Ireland. For we hold, beleue, and maintaine, and preach the true faith, that is, the ancient doctrine of saluation by Christ, taught and published by the Prophets and Apostles, as the booke of the articles of faith agreed vpon in open Parliament doth fully shew: and withall now we are, and haue beene ready to testifie this our faith, by venturing our liues euen in the cause of religio against torrenie power, and especially the Spaniard: and hereupon all the Churches in Europe giue vnto vs the hand of fellowship. And whereas sundry among vs that separate and indeed excommunicate themselves, giue out that there is no Church in England, no Ministers, no Sacraments: their peremptorie asseuerations wanting sufficient ground, are but as paper shot. They alleadge that our assemblies are full of grievous blots and enormities. Ans. The defects & corruptions of Churches must be distinguished: and they be either in doctrine, or manners. Again, corruptions in doctrine must further bee distinguished: some of them are errors indeed, but beside the foundation: & some errors directly against the foundation: & these ouerturne all religion, whereas the former do not. Now it cannot be shewed that in our Churches is taught any one error that rasheth the foundation, and consequently annihilates the truth of Gods Church. Indeeede there is controuersie among vs touching the point of Ecclesiasticall regiment: but marke in what manner. We all ioyntly agree in the substance of the regiment, confessing freely that there must be preaching of the word, administration of the Sacraments, according to the institution, and the vse of the Power of the Keyes in admonitions, suspensions, excommunications: the difference between vs is only touching the persons, and the manner of putting this gouernment in execution: and therefore men on both parts, though both hold not the truth in this point; yet because both hold Christ the foundation, they still remaine brethren and true members of Christ. As for corruptions in manners, they make not a Church to be no Church, but a bad Church. When as the wicked Scribes & Pharisees sitting in Moses chaire, taught the things which he had writte, the people are commanded to heare them, & to do the things which they say, not doing the things which they doe. And whereas it is said, that we hold Christ in word, and deny him in deede, that is answered thus: deniall of Christ is double, either in iudgement, or in fact: deniall in iudgement ioyced with obduracy, makes a Christian to be no Christian; deniall in fact, the iudgement still remaining found, makes not a man to be no Christian, but a bad Christian. When the Iewes had crucified the Lord of life, they still remained a Church, (if any vpon earth;) and notwithstanding this their fact, the Apostles acknowledged that the conuenance and the promises still belonged vnto them: and they neuer made any separation from their Synagogues, till such time as they had bene sufficiently comitted by the Apostollicall ministry that Christ was the true Messias.

Thus we see where at this day we may find the true Church of God. Now I come to the third question; and that is, at what time a man may with good conscience make separation from a Church. Ans. So long as a Church makes no separation from Christ, wee must make no separation from it: and when it separates from Christ, we may also separate from it: and therefore in two cases there is warrant of separation. The one is, when the worship of God is corrupt in substance. And for this we haue a commandment, Be not, saith Paul, unequally yoked with infidels, for what fellowship hath righteoussnes with vngrighteousnes, or what communion hath light with darknes? or what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath the beleuer with the infidel? or what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Wherefore come out from among them, & separate your selues, saith the Lord. And we haue a practise of this in the old testament. When Ieroboam had set vp idols in Israel, then the Priests and Leuites came to Israhel and Ierusalem to serue the Lord. The second is, when the doctrine of religio is corrupt in substance: Paul saith, If any man teach otherwise, and constant not to the wholesome words of our Lord Iesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godlinesse, he is puffed up: from which separate your selues. A practise of this we haue in the Apostle Paul, who being in Ephesus in a Synagogue of the Iewes, spake boldly for the space of three moneths, disputing and exhorting to the things which concerne the kingdom of God: but when certaine men were hardened and disobeyed, speaking euill of the way of God, he departed from them and separated the disciples of Ephesus: & the like he did at Rome also. As for the corruptions that be in the manners of men that be of the Church, they are no sufficient warrant of separation, vntill it be from priuate company, as we are admonished by the Apostle Paul: and by Danids & Loss examples. By this which hath bin said, it appears that the practise of such as make separation fro vs, is very bad & schismaticall, considering our Churches faile not either in the substance of doctrine, or in the substance of the true worship of God.

Now to proceed in the Creed. The Church is further set forth by certaine properties and prerogatiues. The properties or qualities are two, holinesse and largenesse. That the Church is holy, it appears by Peter which calls it an holy nation, and a chosen people: and by S. Iohn, who calls it the holy city. And it is so called, that it may be distinguished from the false Church, which is tearmed in Scriptures, the Synagogue of Satan, and the malignant Church.

Now this holines of the Church is nothing else but a created qualitie in euery true member thereof, whereby the image of God, which was lost by the fall of Adam, is againe renewed and restored. The author of it is God by his word & spirit, by little & little abolishing the corruption of Sinne, and sanctifying vs throughout, as Christ saith, Father, sanctifie them in thy truth, thy word is truth. And holines must be cōceiued to be in the Church on this manner: it is perfect in the Church Triumphant, & it is onely begun in the Church Militant in this life, and that for speciall cause, that wee might giue al glory to God, that we might not be high minded, that we might work our saluation with feare & trembling, that we might deny our selues & wholly depend vpon God.

Hence we learne three things: first that the Church of Rome erreth in teaching that a wicked man, yea such an one as shall neuer be faued, may be a true member of the Catholike Church: for in reason, euery man should be answerable to the qualitie & condition of the Church wherof he is a member: if he be holy, as it is, he must be holy also. Secondly, we are euery one of vs, as Paul saith to Timothy, to exercise our selues vnto godlines, making conscience of al our former vnholie waies, endeavouring our selues to please God in the obedience of al his commandments. It is a disgrace to the holy Church of God, that men professing themselves to be members of it, should be vnholie. Thirdly, our duty is, to eschew the society of atheists, drunkards, fornicators, blasphemers, & al wicked & vn godly persons, as Paul saith, Be ye no companions of them, and haue no fellowship with vnprofitable workers of darknesses. And he charges the Theflawians, that if any man among them walke inordinately, they haue no companie with him, that he may be ashamed. 2. Theff. 3. 14.

Eph. 5.7.

The largenes of the Church is noted in the word Catholike, that is, general or vniuersall. And it is so called for three causes. For first of all, it is general in respect of time, because the Church hath had a being in all times & ages, euer since the giuing of the promise to our first parents in Paradise. Secondly, it is general, in respect of the persons of men: for it stands of all sorts & degrees of men, high and low, rich and poore, learned and vnlearned, &c. Thirdly, it is Catholike or vniuersall in respect of place, because it hath bene gathered from all parts of the earth, specially now in the time of the new Testament; when our Saviour Christ saith, Mat. 26. 13, that the Gospel shalbe preached in al the world. To this purpose S. Iohn saith in Reuel. 7. 9. I beheld, and loe, a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations & kindreds, and peoples, and tongues, stood before the throne and before the lambe, clothed with long white robes and palmes in their hands.

Catholical, per toram or epistol. 150.

And the Church which we here profess to beleeue, is called Catholike, that we may distinguish it from particular Churches, which are not beleeued, but sene with eye, wherof mention is made often in the Scriptures. Rom. 16. 5. 1. Cor. 16. 19. the Church in thy house, and the Churches of Asia. Coloss. 4. 15. Salute Zymphas and the Church in his house. Act. 11 22. the Church of Ierusalem. Act. 13. 1. the Church at Antioch, &c.

That the Church is Catholike in respect of time, place, person, it ministers matter of endlesse comfort vnto vs. For hereby we see that no order, degree, or estate of men are excluded from grace in Christ, vnlesse they will exclude themselves. S. Iohn saith, 1. Ioh. 2. 1. If any man sinne, we haue an advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the righteous. Now it might be answered, it is true indeed, Christ is an Advocate to some men, but hee is no Advocate to me. S. Iohn therefore saith further, vers. 2. and he is the reconciliation for our finnes, and not for our finnes onely, but for the whole world, that is, for all beleueers of what condition or degree soeuer.

Thus much of the properties of the Church: now follow the prerogatiues or benefites which God bestoweth on it, which are in number foure. The first is expresse in these words, the Communion of Saints. Where communion significeth that fellowship or society that one hath with another: and by Saints we vnderstand not dead men inrolled in the Popes calendar, but all that are sanctified by the blood of Christ, whether they be liuing or dead, as Paul saith, 1. Cor. 1. 2. Vnto the Church of God which is at Corinthus, to them that are sanctified in Iesus Christ, Saints by calling. And. 14. 33. God is the God of peace in al the Churches of the Saints. Now if we add the clause I beleeue, vnto these words; the meaning is this: I confesse and acknowledge that there is a spirituall fellowship and society among al the members of Christ, being the faithfull seruants and children of God: and withall I beleeue that I am partaker of the same with the rest.

This communion hath two parts, fellowship of the members with the head, and of the members with themselves. The communion of the members with their head, is not outward, but altogether spirituall in the conscience: and for the opening of it, we must consider what the Church receiue of Christ, and what hee receiues of it. The Church receiues of Christ 4. most worthy benefites. The first, that Christ our Mediatour, God & man, hath truly giuen himselfe vnto vs, & is become our lot and portion, and withall God the Father, and the truly Spirit, in him, as David saith, Iehoua is the portion of mine inheritance, and of my cup: thou shalt maine mine lot: the lines are fallen vnto me in pleasant places: yea I haue a faire heritage. And, 7. Psal. 73. 26. My flesh saileth, and my heart also: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for euer. The second, is the Right of adoption, whereby al the faithfull whether in heauen or earth are actually made the true children of Cod. The benefite is wonderfull,

wonderfull, howsoeuer carnall men esteeme not of it: If a man should either by election or birth, or any way else be made the sonne and heire of an earthly Prince, hee would thinke himselfe highly advanced: how highly then are they extolled which are made the fomes of God himselfe? The third benefite, is a tiel, and right to the righteousness of Christ in his sufferings and his fulfilling of the law. The excellencie of it is vnspcakable, because it serues to award the greatest temptations of the diuell. When the diuell replieth thus, thou art a transgressor of the law of God; therefore thou shalt be damned: by means of that communion which we haue with Christ, we answer againe: that Christ suffered the curse of the law to free vs from due and deserued damnation: and when he farther replies, that seeing we neuer fulfilled the law, we cannot therefore enter into heauen, we answer againe, that Christs obedience is a fulfilling of the law for vs, and his whole righteousness is ours to make vs stand righteous before God. The fourth benefite, is a right to the kingdom of heauen, as Christ comforting his disciples saith, Fear not little flocke, it is your Fathers pleasure to giue you a kingdom: and hence it is sundry times called  the inheritance, and he lot of the Saints.*

1. A. 16.
Eph. 1.8

Furthermore, for the conueyance of these benefites vnto vs, God hath ordained the preaching of the word, and the administration of the Sacraments, specially the Lords Supper; and hath commanded the solemne and ordinarie vse of them in the Church. And here vpon the Lords Supper is called the Communion. The cup of blessing (saith Paul, 1. Cor. 10. 16.) which we blesse, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? and the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? that is, a signe and seale of the communion.

Again, the things which Christ receiues of vs are two: our finnes with the punishment thereof made his by application or imputation, and our afflictions with all the miseries of this life which he accounts his owne, & therefore doth as it were put vnder his shoulders to beare the burden of them. And this communion betwene Christ and vs is expresse in the Scriptures by that blessed and heavenly bargain in which there is mutual exchange betwene Christ and vs: he imparts vnto vs, B. 1. 55. 1. Milke and wine without siluer or money; or refresh vs, and golde tried by the fire, that wee may become rich, and Reu. 3. 18. white raiment that we may be clothed, and eye-salue to anoint our eyes that we may see: and we for our parts returne vnto him nothing but blindness, and nakednesse, and poutery, and the loathsome burden of all our filthy finnes.

The second part of the communion, is that which the Saints haue one with another. And it is either of the liuing with the liuing, or of the liuing with the dead. Now the communion of the liuing stands in three things: 1. in the like affection: 1. I. in the gifts of the spiriti-

III. in the vse of temporall riches. For the first: communion in affection, is whereby all the seruants of God are like affected to God, to Christ, to their owne finnes, and each to other. They are all of one nature and heart alike disposed, though they be not acquainted, nor haue any external fellowship in the flesh. As in a family children are for the most part one like another and brought vp alike: euen so it is in Gods family which is his Church: the members thereof are all alike in heart and affection: and the reason is; because they haue one spirit to guide them all: and therefore S. Peter saith, Act. 4. 32. The multitude of them that beleeued, were of one heart and of one soule, neither any of them said that any thing which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common: And the Prophet Esay fore-telling the vnicie which should be in the kingdom of Christ, said, I. 11. 6, 7. The wolfe shall dwell with the lambe, and the leopard shall lie with the kid, and the catte, and the lyon, and the fat beast together, & a little child shall leade a bren. The cowe and the beare shall feed, and their young ones shall lie together: and the lyon shall eat straw like the bullocke. The sucking child shall play vpon the hole of the asse, and the weaned child shall put his hand into the cockatrice hole. By these beastes are signified, men that be of a wicked and brutish nature: which when they shall be brought into the kingdom of Christ, shall lay aside the fame, and become louing, gentle, courteous, and al of one minde. And S. Peter 2. Per. 1. 7. requires of the Church the practise of brotherly loue, and that is to carry a tender affection to men, not because they are of the same flesh, but because they are ioyned in the bond of one spirit with vs. Furthermore, by reason of this that al the children of God are of one heart, there follows another duty of this communion, whereby they beare one the burdens of another, and when one member is grieued or is grieved; when one reioyceth all reioyce, as in the body when one member suffereth all suffer.

The second branch of their communion, is in the gifts of Gods Spirit, as loue, hope, feare, &c. And this is shewed, when one man doth implore the graces of God bestowed on him, for the good & saluation of another. As a candle spendeth it selfe to giue light to others: so must Gods people spend those gifts which God hath giuen them for the benefite of their brethren. A Christian man howsoeuer he be the freest man vpon earth, yet is he seruant to all men, especially to the Church of God, to do seruice vnto the members of it by loue for the good of all. And this good is procured, when we conuey the graces of God bestowed on vs to our brethren: and that is done five waies: 1. by example: 1. I. by admonition: 1. I. I. by exhortation: 1. I. by consolation: 1. I. by prayer. The first, which is good example, we are enioyned by Christ, saying, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in heauen.

And

And that our hearts might bee touched with special care of this duty the Lord sets before vs his owne blessed example, saying, Leu. 11. 44. Be ye holy as I am holy: and Mat. 11. 29. Learn of me that I am meeke and lowly. And Paul faith, 1. Corin. 11. 1. Be ye followers of me, as I follow Christ: and the higher men are exalted, the more careful ought they to be in giuing good example. For let a man of note or estimation doe euill, and he shall presently haue many followers. Euill example runnes from one to another like a leprosie or infection: and this Christ signified when he said, that the fig-tree planted in the vineyard, If it beares no fruit, makes all the ground barren, Luk. 13. 7. The second meanes of communication of the gifts of God vnto others, is admonition, which is an ordinance of God whereby Christian men are to recouer their brethren from their sins. A man by occasion fallen into the water, is in danger of his life; and the reaching of the hand by another is the meanes, to saue him. Now euery man when hee sinneth, doth as much as in him lieth, cast his soule into the very pit of hell: and wholesome admonitions are as the reaching out of the hand to recouer him againe. But it will peraduerture be said, how shall wee proceede in admonishing of others? Ans. Wee are to obserue three things. The first is, to search out whether wee that are to reprove bee faultie our selues in the same thing or no. First, we must take out the beame that is in our owne eye, and so shall wee see clearly to pull out the mote in our brothers eye, Mat. 7. 5. Secondly, before we reprove, we must be sure that the fault is committed: we must not goe vpon heare-say or likelihoods: and therefore the holy Ghost faith, Heb. 10. 28. Let vs consider or desire one another to prouoke vnto loue & good works. Thirdly before we reprove, we must in Christian wisdom make choice of time and place: for all times and places serue not to this purpose. And therefore Salomon faith, It is the glory of a man to passe by an offence. Furthermore in the action of admonishing, two things are to be obserued: 1. a man must deliuer the words of his admonition (so farre forth as he can) out of the word of God, so as the partie which is admonished, may in the person of man see God himselfe to reprove him. 11. his reproofe must be made with as much compassion and fellow-feeling of other mens wants as may be. As Paul faith, Gal. 6. 1. If any man be fallen by occasion into any fault, ye which are spirituall (a) restore such an one with the spirit of meeknesse. The third way of communicating good things to others, is exhortation: and it is a meanes to excite and stirre them on forward, which doe already walke in the way of godlinesse. Therefore the holy God faith, Hebrewes. 3. 13. Exhort one another daily, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sinne. But alas, the practise of this duty, as also of the former, is hard to bee found among men; for it is vsuall in families, that masters and fathers in stead of admonishing their seruants and children, teach them the practise of sin in swearing, blaspheming, slandering, &c. and as for exhortation, it is not vsed. Let a man that hath the feare of God offend neuer so little, in stead of brotherly exhortation, hee shall heare his profession cast in his teeth, and his hearing of sermons: this practise is so generall, that many beginning newly to tread in the steps of godlinesse, are hereby daunted, and quite driuen backe. The fourth way, is consolation, which is a meanes appointed by God, whereby one man should with words of heavenly comfort refresh the soules of others afflicted with sicknesses or any other way feeling the hand of God either in bodie or in minde. And this duty is as little regarded as any of the former. In time of mens sicknesse neighbours come in, but what say they? I am sorrie to see you in this ease, I hope to see you well againe, I would be sorrie else, &c. Not one of an hundred can speake a word of comfort to the wearie; but we are faulty herein. For with what affection doe we beleue the communion of Saints, when wee our selues are as drie fountaines, that doe scarce conuey a droppe of refreshing to others? The last meanes, is prayer, whereby Gods Church procures blessings for the seuerall members thereof, and they againe for the whole: And herein lies a principall point of the communion of Saints; which ministreth notable comfort to euery Christian heart. For hence we may reason thus: I am indeede a member of the Catholike Church of God, and therefore though my owne prayers be weak, yet my comfort is this, I know that I am partaker of all the good prayers of all the people of God dispersed ouer the face of the whole earth my fellow-members, & of all the blessings which God bestowes on them. This will make vs in all our troubles to say with Eliphaz, 2. King. 6. 16. Feare not for they that bee with vs are more then they that bee with them. When the people of Israel had sinned in worshipping the golden calfe, the wrath of the Lord was kindled, and made a breach into them, as cannon shot against a wall: but Moses the seruant of God stood in the breach before the Lord to turne away his wrath, lest hee should destroy them. And the praier of Moses was so effectuall, that the Lord said, Exod. 32. 10. Let me alone, as though Moses by prayer had held the hand of God that hee could not punish the people. And some thinke that Seruens prayer for his enemies, when he was ftoned, was a meanes of Pauls conversion. And surely though there were no other reason, yet this were sufficient to moue a man to embrace Christian religion, considering that being a member of the Church, he hath part in all the prayers of the Saints through the world, and of the blessings of God that come thereby.

The third part of this communion, is in temporall things, as goods & riches: whereby

I meane,

I meane, not (b) Anabaptistall communion, but that which was vsed in the primitive Church, when they had all things common in respect of vs: and some sold their goods and possession and parted them to all men, as euery one had neede. And by their example we are taught, to be content to imploy those goods which God hath bestowed on vs, for the good of our fellow-members within the compasse of our callings, and to our abilitie, and beyond our ability if neede require. Paul faith, Gal. 6. 10. Doe good to all, but especially to them which are of the household of faith.

The communion of the liuing with the dead, stands in two things: the one is, that the Saints departed in the Church Triumphant doe in generall pray for the Church Militant vpon earth, desiring the final deliuerance of all their fellow-members from all their miseries. And therefore in the Apocalyps they cry on this manner, How long Lord holy and true! dost thou not iudge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? I say in generall, because they pray not for the particular conditions & persons of men vpon earth, considering they neither know, nor see, nor heare vs: neither can they tell what things are done vpon earth. The second is, that the godly on earth doe in heart & affection conuerse with them in heauen, desiring continually to be dissolued & to be with Christ. Now whereas the Papists doe further enlarge this communion, aouaching that the Saints in heauen doe make intercession to Christ for vs, and impart their merits vnto vs: and that we againe for that cause are to imocate them, and to doe vnto them religious worship; we dissent from them, being resolu'd that these things are but inventions of mans braine, wanting warrant of the word.

Lastly, to conclude, a question may be demanded, how any one of vs may particularly know & be assured in our selues, that we haue part in this communion of Saints. Ans. Saint John opens this point to the full, when hee faith, 1. Ioh. 1. 6, 7. If we say that we haue fellowship with him, and yet walke in darknes, we lye: but if we walke in the light, as he is light, then we haue fellowship one with another, and the blood of Christ purgeth vs from all our sins. In which words he makes knowledge of Gods will ioyned with obedience, to be an infallible marke of one that is in the communion: as on the contrary, ignorance of Gods wil, or disobedience, or both, to be tokens of one that hath neither fellowship with Christ, or with the true members of Christ. And therefore to end this point, if we would haue fellowship with Christ, let vs learne to know what sinne is, and to flie from the same as from the bane of our soules, and to make conscience of euery euill way.

The duties to be learned by the communion of Saints, are manifold. And first of all, if we doe beleue the fellowship which all the faithful haue with Christ & with themselves; and be resolu'd that wee haue part therein, then we must we separate & withdraw our selues from all vngodly and vnlawfull societies of men in the world whatsoever they be. Vnlawfull societies are manifold, but I will only touch one, which euery where annoyeth religion, and hindreth greatly this communion of Saints, & that is, when men ioyneth themselves in company to passe away the time in drinking, gaming, &c. Behold a large fellowship which beareth sway in all places; there is almost no towne but there is at the least one knot of such companions: and he that will not be combined with such loose mates, he is thought to be a man of no good nature: he is foisted forth of euery company; he is no body: & if a man will yeeld to run ryot with them in the mispending of his time and goods, he is thought to be the best fellow in the world. But what is done in this society? and how doe these companions spend their time? surely the greatest part of day and night is vntilally spent in swearing, gaming, drinking, surfetting, reuelling, and railing on the ministers of the word, and such as professe religion, to omit the enormities which they procure to themselves hereby: and this behaviour spreads it selfe like a canker ouer euery place, and it desiles both towne & country. But we that looke for comfort by the communion of Saints, must not call in our lot with such a wicked generation, but separate our selues from them. For vndoubtedly their society is not of God, but of the diuell: and they that are of this societie, can not be of the holy communion of Saints: and surely except the magistrate by the sword, or the Church by the power of the keyes, doe pul downe such fellowship, the holy societie of Gods Church and people must decay. Excommunication is a censure ordained of God for this end, to banish them from this heavenly communion of the members of Christ, that liue inordinately and haue communion with men in the workes of darkenesse.

Secondly, by this wee are taught, that men professing the same religion, must be linked in societie & conuerse together in Christian loue, meekenes, gentleness, and patience: as S. Paul taught the Philippians, If there be any fellowship of the spirit, if there be any compassion and mercie, fulfill my ioy, that we may bee like minded, hauing the same loue, being of one accord, and of like iudgement. And againe, Keep (saith he) the vntie of the spirit in the bond of peace. Why? marke how his reason is fetched from this communion: Because there is one body, one spirit, when as you are called into the hope of your vocation: one Lord, one faith, one hope, one baptisme, one God & Father of all, which is above all, & in you all. And no doubt the same reason made David say, Psal. 16. 3. All my delight is in the Saints which be vpon earth.

Thirdly, euery Christian man that acknowledgeth this communion, must carrie about with him a fellow-feeling, that is, an heart touched with compassion in regard of all the miseries that befall either the whole Church or any member thereof, as Christ our head, teacheth vs by his own example, when he called to Saul, and said, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? giving him to vnderstand, that he is touched with the abuses to his Church, as if they had directly bin done to his owne person. The prophet Amos reprooueth the people, because they drank wine in bowels, & annointed themselves with the chiefe ointments: but why was it not lawfull for them to doe for yes: but the cause for which they are reprooued followes: No man (saith he) is sorry for the afflictions of Joseph. In the midst of their delights and pleasures they had no regard of the miseries of the poore Church & seruants of Gods elsewhere in affliction, which euery man ought to shew forth in the practise of all duties of loue: and therefore Paul saith, Pray alwaies with all manner of prayers and supplications in the spirit, and watch thereunto with all perseverance & supplications for the Saints. And hee highly commendeth the Philippians, for communicating to his afflictions, And further he bids Philemon to comfort Onesimus his bowels in the Lord. And S. Iohn saith, If a mans life would save his neighbours soule, he must lay it downe, if need require. We haue al of vs daily occaſion to practise this duty towards the afflicted members of Gods Church in other countries. For howsoeuer we enjoy the Gospel with peace, yet they are vnder persecution for the sake: & so oft as we heare report of this, we should suffer our hearts to be grieved with them, and pray to God for them.

We must here be admonished not to seeke our owne things, but to referre the labours of our callings to the common good, especially of the Church whereof we are members. As for them that seeke for nothing but to maintain their owne estate and wealth, and therefore in their trades vse false waightes & measures, the ingrossing, corrupting, mingling of wares, glozing, lying, smoothing, swearing, forswearing, dissembling, griping, oppressing of the poore, &c. they may plead for themselves what they will, but in truth they neuer knew yet what the Communion of Saints meant.

Lastly, considering we are all knit into one mystical body, and haue mutual fellowship in the same, our duty is to redresse the faults of our bretheren, and to couer them, as the hand in the body laies a plaister vpon the sore in the foote or in the legge, and withall couers it. Loue couers the multitude of finnes. And when men disgrace their bretheren for their wants, and blaze them to the world, they doe not the duty of fellow-members.

Thus much for the first benefit bestowed on the Church: the second is, Forgiueneſſe of ſins: which may be thus described: Forgiueneſſe of ſins is a blessing of God vpon his Church procured by the death and passion of Christ, whereby God-freesome of ſins, as no ſins, or, as not committed, In this description I haue couched fūe points, which we are ſeuerally to conſider. The first, who is the author of forgiueneſſe of finnes?

A. Anſ. God, whose blessing it is: for sinne is only committed against God, and the violating of his lawes and commandments are properly finnes. And the offence done to any man or creature is no more in it selfe, but an offence or iniurie: yea the breach of mans commandment is no sinne, vntill it doe imply withall the breach of Gods commandment. Therefore it is a prerogative belonging to God alone to pardon sin: and when we are taught to say, Forgiue vs our trespases, as we forgiue them that trespase against vs, the meaning is not, that we forgiue finnes as they are finnes, but onely as trespases, that is offences, hurts, and damages done vnto vs by men. It may be further said,

God hath giuen this power and commandment to his ministers for forgiue ſins, saying, Whose ſins ye remit, they are remitted. Anſ. Gods Ministers doe not properly forgiue finnes, but onely in the name of God according to his word pronounce to a penitent sinner, that his finnes are pardoned and forgiuen of God: and therefore it is a most certaine truth, that none can forgiue finnes but God only: it was annouced by the Pharisees, & not denied by Christ. Hence it followes, that remission of sinne, being once granted remains for euer, because Gods loue vnto the elect is vnchangeable, and his decree concerning their saluation cannot be altered. The second point is, to whom remission of sins is giuen? Anſ. To the Catholic Church, that is, to the whole company of men predestinate to saluation: as Eſay saith, The people that dwell therein (that is, the Church) shall haue their ſins forgiuen. And, They shall call them the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord: and thou shalt be named, A city sought out, and not forsaken. And if there had beene an vniuersall remission of sins to all men, as some doe dreame, it should not here haue bin made a peculiar prerogative of the Church. The third point is, what is the meane whereby pardon of sinne is procured at Gods hand? Anſ. The death and passion of Christ: so Paul saith, Rom. 4. 25. Christ died for our finnes: that is, Christ died to be a payment & satisfaction to Gods iustice for our finnes. And S. Iohn saith, The blood of Iesus Christ his Sonne cleanseſh vs from all finnes. And Peter saith, Knowing that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold from your vaine conuerſation, &c. but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lambe vndefiled and without spot. The fourth point is, after what manner sin is forgiuen? Anſ. By an action of God, whereby for the merit of Christ, he esteemes and accounts sinne as no sinne, or, as if it had neuer bin committed. Therefore David saith, Pſalme 32. 2. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeſh no ſinne. And in Eſa. 44. 22. the Lord saith; I haue put away thy transgressions like a cloud, and thy finnes as a miſt. Now we know that clouds and miſts which appeare for a time, are afterward by the Sunne vtterly diſperſed. And King Hezekias when hee would shew that the Lord hath forgiuen him his finnes, saith, God hath caſt them behind his back, alluding to the manner of men, who when they will not remember or regard a thing, doe turne their backs vpon it. And Micheas saith, that God doth caſt all the finnes of his people into the bottome of the ſea, alluding to Pharaoh, whom the Lord drowned in the bottome of the red ſea. And Christ hath taught vs to pray thus: forgiue vs our debts, as we forgiue our debtors: in which words is an alluding to credulours, who then forgiue debts, when they account that which is debt, as no debt, & croſſe the booke. Hence it appeares that damnable and vile is the opinion of the Church of Rome, which holdeth that there is a remission of the fault without a remission of the punishment: & herewithall fall to the ground, the doctrine of humane ſatisfactions, and indulgences, and purgatorie, and prayer for the dead, built vpon this foundation, which are of the same kind.

Moreouer, we must remember to adde to this clause, ſeſeue, and then the meaning is this: I doe not onely beleene that God doth giue pardon of sin to his Church and people (for that the very diuels beleene) but withall I beleene the forgiueneſſe of mine owne particular finnes. Hence it appeares, that it was the iudgement of the primitive Church, that men should beleene the forgiueneſſe of their owne finnes.

By this prerogative we reape endlesse comfort: for the pardon of sinne is a most wonderful blessing, and without it euery man is more miserable and wretched, then the most vile creature that euer was. We loath the serpent or the toad; but if a man haue not the pardon of his finnes, procured by the death and passion of Christ, he is a thousand-fold worse then they. For when they die, there is the end of their woe and miserie: but when man dieth without this benefit, there is the beginning of his. For first in soule till the day of iudgement, and then both in body & soule for euermore, he shall enter into the endlesse paines and torments of hell; in which if one should continue so many thousand yeares as there are drops in the Ocean sea, and then be deliuered, it were some ease: but having continued so long (which is an vnſpeakable length of time) he must remaine there as long againe, and after that for euer and euer without releafe: and therefore among all the benefits that euer were or can be thought of, this is the greatest & most precious. Among all the burthens that can befall a man, what is the greatest? Some will say, sickness, some ignominy, some pouerty, some contempt: but indeed among all, the heauiest and the greatest, is the burthen of a mans owne finnes, lying vpon the conscience & preſſing it downe, without any assurance of pardon. David being a king had no doubt, all that heart could with; and yet he laying aside all the royalties and pleasures of his kingdom, saith this one thing aboue al, that he is a blessed man that is eased of the burthen of his sinne. Al-

A. zar man full of fores is vgly to sight, and wee cannot abide to looke vpon him: but no lazare is so loathsome to vs, as all sinners are in the sight of God: and therefore David counted him blessed, whose finnes are couered. It may be, some will say, there is no cause why a man should thus magnifie the pardon of sin, considering it is but a common benefit. Thus indeede men may imagine, which neuer knew what sinne meant: but let a man onely, as it were, but with the tip of his finger haue a little feeling of the smart of his finnes, he shall finde his estate so fearefull, that if the whole world were set before him on the one side, and the pardon of his sin on the other side, hee would chooſe the pardon of his sins before ten thousand worlds. Though many drouſie Protestants esteeme nothing of it, yet to the touched conscience it is a treasure, which when a man findes he hides it, and goes home, and ſels all that he hath, and buies it. Therefore this benefit is most excellent, and for it the members of Gods Church haue great cause to giue God thanks without ceasing.

The duties to be learned hence are these. And first of all here comes a common fault of men to be rebuked. Euery one will say, that he beleueeth the remission of finnes, yet no man almost laboureth for a true & certaine persuasion hereof in his owne conscience: and for prooſe hereof, propound this question to the common Christian; Dost thou perswade thy selfe, that God giues remission of finnes vnto his Church? The answer will bee, I know and beleue it. But aske him further: Dost thou beleue the pardon of thine owne finnes? and then comes in a blind answer, I haue a good hope to God-ward, but I cannot tell, I thinke no man can say so much: for God saith to no man, thy sins are pardoned. But this is to speak flat contraries, to say they beleene, and they cannot tel: & it bewraies exceeding negligence in matters of saluation. But let them that feare God, or loue their owne soules health, giue all diligence to make ſure the remission of their owne finnes: withall auoyding hardnesse of heart, & drowlines of spirit, the most fearefull iudgements of God, which euery where take place. The foolish virgins went forth to meete the bridegroome with lampes in their hands as well as the wife, but they neuer so much as dreamed of the home of oyle, till the coming of the bridegroom. So many men line in the Church of God as members thereof, holding vp the lampe of glorious profession: but in the meane season they seeke only for the things of this life: neuer calling, how they may assure themselves in conscience touching their reconciliation with God, till the day of death come.

Secondly, if wee be here bound to beleue the pardon of all our finnes, then we must euery day humble our selues before God, and seeke pardon for our daily offences: for hee giues grace to the humble or contrite: he fills the hungry with good things, when the rich are sent empty away. When Benhadad the king of Syria was discomfited & overcome by the king of Israel, by the counsell of his servants, who told him that the kings of Israel were mercifull men, he sent them clothed in sackcloth with ropes about their neckes to intreat for peace and fauour. Now when the king fw their submission, he made a couenant of peace with him. We by our sins most iustly deserue hel, death, and condemnation every day, and therefore it standeth vs in hand to come into the presence of God, and to humble our selues before him in sackcloth and ashes, crauing, and intreating for nothing in the world so much, as for the pardon of our sins, and that day by day without ceasing till the Lord giue this blessed answer to our confidence, that all our finnes are put out of his remembrance. Wee must not thinke that God putteth grace into mens hearts when they lie shoring vpon their elbowes, & either not vs, or despite the meanes: but we must first vs the meanes, partly by making confession of our finnes to God, and partly by crying to heauen for pardon: and then when by his grace we begin to desire grace, he giues further grace.

Lastly, if we beleene the pardon of our sins, then we must change the tenor and course of our liues, and take heede of breaking Gods commandments by doing any of those things, wherof our consciences may accuse vs, and tell vs, that by them we haue displeased God therefore. A man that for some misdemeanour hath bene cast into prison and lye there many yeares winter and sommer in cold irons: when he obtains liberty, he will often bethinke himselfe of his old misery, and take heed for euer lest he fall into the same offence againe: and he which hath seene his owne sins & felt the smart of them, and withall by Gods goodness obtained assurance touching the pardon of them, will neuer wittingly and willingly commit the like finnes any more, but in all things change the course of his life. As for such as say, that they haue the pardon of their finnes, and yet liue in them still, they deceive themselves, and haue no faith at all.

Thus much for the second benefit, which God bestoweth on his Church, namely remission of finnes: now followeth the third in these words: The resurrection of the body. In the handling wherof sundry points must be considered. The first, whether there be a resurrection or no? This questiō must needs be handled, because Epicures and Atheists in all ages, and at this day some doe call this article into question. Now that there is a resurrection of the body after death, it may be prooued by many arguments, wherof I will only touch the principal. The first, is taken from the work of redemption. Saint Iohn writeth, that Christ came to dissolve the works of the diuells: which are sinne, and by sinne death: and hence I reason thus: If sinne and death are to be dissolved veterly, then the bodies of the faithfull which are dead in the graue, must needs be made aliue: otherwise death is not abolished: but sin and death must bee vtterly abolished: therefore there shall be a resurrection. Secondly, God had made a couenant with his Church, the tenor wherof is this, I will be thy God, and thou shalt be my people. This couenant is not for a day or an age, or for a thousand yeares or ages, but is euertlasting and without end, so as Gods people may say of God for euer, God is our God: and likewise God will say of his Church for euermore, this people is my people. Now if Gods couenant be euertlasting, then all the faithfull departed from the beginning of the world must be raised againe to life. And if God should leaue his people in the graue vnder death for euer, how could they be called the people of God? for he is a God of mercy and of life it selfe: and therefore though they abide long in the earth; yet they must at length bee reuiued againe. This argument Christ vseth against the Sadduces, which denied the resurrection: God is not the God of the dead but of the liuing; but God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, which are dead, and therefore they must rise againe. The third argument must bee taken from the tenor of Gods iustice. It is a special part of Gods glory, to shew forth his mercy on the godly, and his iustice vpon the wicked in rewarding the according to their workes, as the Apostle saith, God will reward euery man according to his workes: to them that by continuance in well doing seeke glorie, and honour, & immortality life eternall: but vnto them that disobey the truth, that be contentious, and obey vnrightheousnes, shall be indignation & wrath. But in this life God rewardeth not men according to their doings: and therefore Salomon speaking of the estate of all men in this world, saith, All things come alike to all, and the same conditiō to the iust & vniust, to the good & bad, to the pure and polluted, to him that offereth sacrifice, and to him that offereth none. Nay which is more, here the wicked flourish, & the godly are afflicted. The vngodly haue hearts ease and all things at will: whereas the godly are oppressed and overwhelmed with all kind of miseries, & are as sheepe appointed for the slaughter. It remains therefore, that there must needs be a generall resurrection of all men after this life, that the righteous may obtaine a reward of Gods free mercy, and the wicked vtter shame and cōfōsion. But some will say, it is sufficient that God doe this to the soule of euery man, the body needeth not to rise againe. I answer, that the vngodly mā doth not worke wickednesse only in his soule, but his body also is an instrument thereof: and the godly doe not onely praefise righteousnesse in their soules but in their bodies also. The bodies of the wicked are the instruments of sin, and the bodies of the righteous are the weapons of righteousnesse, and therefore their bodies must rise againe, that both in body and soule they may receiue a reward, according to that which they haue wrought in them. The fourth argument, which is also vsed by Paul is this: Christ himselfe is risen, and therefore all the faithfull shall rise againe: for he rose not for himselfe as a priuate man, but in our roome and stead, & for vs. If the head be risen, then the members also shall rise againe: for by the same power whereby Christ raised himselfe, hee both can and will raise all those that be of his mysticall body, he being the first fruites of them that sleepe. The fifth argument is taken from expresse testimonie of Scripture. Iob hath an excellent place for this purpose: I am sure (saith he) that my redeemer liueth, and hee shall stand the last on the earth, and though after my skinne wormes destroy this body, yet I shall see God in my flesh, whom I myselfe shall see, and mine eyes shall behold, and none other for me. And Saint Paul to the Corinthians auoucheth & prooueth this point at large, by sundry arguments which I will not stand to repeat; this one remembered: If (saith he) the dead rise not againe, then your faith is vaine, our preaching is in vaine, & the godly departed are perished. The sixth argument may be taken from the order of nature, which ministrerth certaine resemblances of the resurrection; which though they bee no sufficient proofes, yet may they bee inducements to the truth. Both Philosophers & also Diuines haue writen of the Phoenix, that first shee is consumed to ashes by the heate of the sunne, and that afterward of her ashes ariseth a young one: and on this manner is her kinde preserved. Again, swallowes, wormes, & flies, which haue lien dead in the winter season, in the spring, by the vertue of the sunnes heat, reuiue againe: so likewise men fall in fownes & reauces, being for a time without breath or shew of life, and yet afterward come againe. And (to vs Pauls example) before the corn can grow and beare fruit, it must first be cast into the ground, and there rot. And if this were not seene by experience, men would not beleene it. Again, euery present day is as it were dead and buried in the night following, and yet afterward it returns againe the next morning. Lastly, we reade how the old Prophets raised some from death: and our Saviour Christ raised Lazarus among the rest, that had lien foure daies in the graue and stank: and why then should any thinke it impossible for God to raise all men to life.

But let vs see what reasons may be alleaged to the contrary. First it is alleaged, that the resurrection of bodies resolved to dust and ashes, is against common sense & reason. Ans. It is about reason, but not against reason. For impotent and miserable man, as experience sheweth, can by art euen of ashes make the curious workmanship of glasse; why then may we not in reason thinke, that the omnipotent and euertlasting God is able to raise mens bodies out of the dust. Secondly it is said, that mens bodies being dead are turned into dust,

A and so are mingled with the bodies of beasts and other creatures, and one mans bodie with another, and that by reason of this confusion, men can not possibly rise with their owne bodies. Ans. Howsoeuer this is impossible with men, yet it is possible with God. For he that in the beginning was able to create all things of nothing, is much more able to make euery mans body at the resurrection, of his owne matter, and to distinguish the dust of mens bodies from the dust of beasts: and the dust of one mans body from another. The goldsmith by his art can sinder diuers mettals one from another: and some men out of one mettall can draw another, why then should we thinke it vnpossible for the almighty God to doe the like? It may be further objected thus: A man is eaten by a wolfe, the wolfe is eaten of a Lyon, the Lyon by the foules of the ayre, and the foules of the ayre eaten againe by men againe one man is eaten of another, as it is vsuall among the Cannibals. Now the body of that man which is turned into so many substances, especially into the body of another man, cannot rise againe: and if the one doth, the other doth not. Ans. This reason is but a caill of mans braine: for we must not thinke, that whatsoever entrench into the body, and is turned into the substance thereof must rise againe, and become a part of the body at the day of judgement: but euery man shall then haue so much substance of his owne, as shall make his body to be entire & perfect: though another mans flesh once eaten be no part thereof. Again, it is vrged, that because flesh and blood cannot enter into the kingdom of God: therefore the bodies of men shall not rise againe. Ans. By flesh and blood, is not meant the bodies of men simply, but the bodies of men as they are in weakenes, without glory, subiect to corruption. For flesh and blood in Scripture, signifies sometime the original sinne and corruption of nature, and sometime mans nature subiect to miseries & infirmities, or the body in corruption before it be glorified, and so it must be vnderstood in this place. Lastly, it is objected that Salomon saith, The condition of the children of men, and the conditiō of beasts are euen as one conditiō. Now beasts rise not againe after this life, and therefore there is no resurrection of men. Ans. In that place Salomon expoundeth himselfe: They are like in dying: for so he saith; as the one dieth, so dieth the other: he speaketh not of their estate after death.

The second point to be considered, is the cause of resurrection. In mankinde we must consider two parts, the Elect and Reprobate: and they both shall rise againe at the day of iudgement, but by diuers causes. The godly haue one cause of their resurrection, and the vngodly another: The cause why the godly rise againe, is the resurrection of Christ, yea it is the proper cause which procureth and effecteth their resurrection. In the Scripture Adam and Christ are compared together, and Christ is called the second Adam: these were two roots. The first Adam was the root of all mankind, and he conveyeth sinne, and by sinne death to all that sprang of him, Christ onely exempted; the second Adam which is the roote of all the Elect, conveyeth life both in body & soule to all that are united to him: and by the vertue of his resurrection they shall rise again after this life. For look as the power of the Godhead of Christ when he was dead in the graue, raised his body the third day: so shall the same power of Christ his Godhead convey it selfe vnto all the faithfull, which euen in death remaine united vnto him, and raise the vp at the last day. And for that cause Christ is called quickning spirit. Now the cause why the wicked rise againe, is not the vertue of Christs resurrection, but the vertue of Gods curse set down in his word: In the day that thou shalt eat of the tree of knowledge of good and euill, thou shalt die the death, that is, a double death, both of body and soule. And therefore they arise onely by the power of Christ as hee is a iudge, that this sentence may be verified on them; and that they may suffer both in body and soule eternall punishment in hell fire.

Phil. 16. 9. 10.

My flesh also doth rest in hope. Why so? For (saith he) I shall not leave my soule in the graue, neither will I suffer my body one to see corruption. Though the dayes of this life be daies of woe & miserie, yet the day of the resurrection shall be vnto all the children of God a time of reioicing and felicity, and as Peter saith, It is the time of refreshing. Whosoever is now an hungred, shall then eate and be filled with the fruit of the tree of life; & whosoever is now naked, shall be then clothed with the white garment dipped in the blood of the Lambe: and whosoever is now lame, shall haue all his members restored perfectly. And as this day is ioyful to the godly, so on the contrary it is a day of woe and misery to the vngodly: as Saint Iohn saith, They that have done euill, shall come forth to the resurrection of condemnation. If they might cease to liue after this life, and dye as the beast doth, o then it would be well with them: for then they might haue an end of their miserie: but the wicked must after this life rise againe to condemnation, which is the accomplishment of their eternall woe and wretchednesse; a full and dolefull case to consider, and yet is it the state of all vneleueing and vnrepentant sinners. If a man were bidden to goe to bed, that after he had slept and was risen againe, he might goe to execution, it would make his heart to ake within him: yet this, yea a thousand fold worse is the estate of all impenitent sinners: they must sleepe in the graue for a while, & then rise againe, that a second death may be inflicted vpon them in body & soule, which is the suffering of the full wrath of God both in body and soule, eternally. This being so, let vs embrace the good counsel of S. Peter, who saith, Amend your liues and turne, that your sinnes may be done away when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. If a man die repentant for his sinnes, it is a day of refreshing; but if he die in his sins, impenitent, and hard-hearted, it is a day of eternall horror, desperation, and confusion.

Again, if we beleue that our bodies shall rise againe after this life, and stand before God at the last day of iudgement, we must daily enter into a serious consideration of this time, & haue in minde, that one day we must meete the Lord face to face. A traueiler comes into an Inne hauing but a penny in his purse, he sits downe and calls for all store of prouision and dainties: now what is to be thought of him? surely in the iudgement of all men his behauior betokens folly, or rather madnesse. But why? because he spends freely, and hath no regard to the reckoning which must follow: how foolish then and mad is the practise of every man that liueth in his sinnes, bathing himselfe in his pleasures in this world, neuer bethinking how he shall meete God at the last day of iudgement, & there make reckoning of all his doings? An ancient diuine writes of himselfe that this saying ran in his minde, & sounded alwaies in his eares: Arise ye dead and come vnto iudgement. And this ought alwaies to be sounding in our eares, that while we haue time we should prepare our selues to meete God at the last day.

Thirdly, if we beleue the resurrection of the body, we are not to weepe and mourne immoderately for our friends deceased. Our Saviour Christ did weepe for Lazarus; & wile Seneca was stoned to death, certaine men that feared God buried him, & made great lamentation for him: and therefore mourning is not condemned: & we must not be as stocks, that are bereft of all compassion: yet remember we must, what S. Paul saith to the Thessalonians: I would not, brethren, haue you ignorant concerning those which are asleepe, that ye sorrow not, as others, which haue no hope. For the godly man properly dyeth not, but laies himselfe downe to take a sleepe after his manifold labours in this life, which being ended, he must rise againe to ioyes everlasting: and therefore wee must needs moderate and mingle our mourning for the deceased, with this and such like comforts.

Fourthly, we are taught hence to labour & strive against the naturall feare of death: for if there be a resurrection of our bodies after this life, then death is but a passage or middle way from this life to eternall life. If a beggar should be commanded to put off his old ragges, that he might be clothed with rich and costly garments, would he be sorrie because he should stand naked a while till he were wholly bestripped of his ragges? No surely: well, thus doth God when he calls a man to death: hee bids him put off his old raggs of sinne and corruption, and bee clothed with the glorious robe of Christs righteousness: and our abode in the graue is but for a space, while corruption be put off. This is Pauls argument, saying, We know that when our earthly house of this tabernacle shall be dissolved, we haue a building giuen of God, which is an house not made with hands, but eternall in the heauens.

Fifthly, whereas the godly are subiect to manifold afflictions and miseries, both in bodie and minde in this life, here they shall finde a sufficient stay to quiet & calme their minds, if they consider that after this short life is ended, there will ensue a ioyfull resurrection. Iob in the extremity of all his temptations, made this the comfort to his soule, that one day hee should rise againe, in which he should enioy the glorious presence of his Creator. And the holy Ghost saith, that the seruants of God in the dayes of Antiochus were racked and tormented, and would not be deliuered: why so? because they looked for a better resurrection.

Lastly, the consideration of this point serueth to be a bridle to restrain a man from sinne; and a spur to make him goe forward in all godlienesse of life and conuersation. Saint Paul had hope toward God, that the resurrection of the dead should be but of the iust and iust. Now what did this moue him vnto? Marke. Herein (saith he) that is, in this respect) I endeavour my selfe alwaies to haue a cleare conscience toward God, and toward men. And let vs for our parts likewise remember the last iudgement, that it may be a meanes to moue vs so to behaue our selues in all our actions, that we may keepe a good conscience before God & before men: and let it also be a bridle vnto vs to keepe vs backe from all manner of sinne. For what is the cause why men daily defile their bodies and soules with so many damnable practises, without any remorse of conscience? Surely they neuer seriously remember the day of the resurrection after this life, wherein they must stand before Christ to giue an account of that which they haue done in this life, whether it be good or bad.

Thus much of the duties: now marke it is further said, The resurrection of the body. If the bodie rise, it must first fall. Here then this point is wrapped vp as a confessed truth, that all men must die the first death. And yet considering that the members of the Church haue the pardon of their sinnes which are the cause of death, it may be demanded, why they must die? Answer. We are to know that when they die, death doth not cease vpon them, as it is in his owne nature, a curse: for in that respect it was borne of Christ vpon the crosse, and that for vs: but for two other causes, which wee must thinke vpon, as being speciall meanes to make a man willing to die. 1. They must die that originall corruption may be vtterly abolished: for no man liuing on earth is perfectly sanctified; and originall sinne is remaining for speciall causes to the last moment of this life, then it is abolished and not before. 1. The godly die, that by death as by a straight gate they may passe from this vale of miserie to eternall life. And thus Christ by his death makes death to be no death, and turnes a curse into a blessing.

And to proceede: It is not here said, the resurrection of the soule, but of the body onely: what then (will some say) becometh of the soule? Diners haue thought, that the soules then, though they doe not die, yet are still kept within the body (being as it were asleepe) till the last day. But Gods word faith to the contrary. For the soules of the godly lie vnder the altar, and cry, how long Lord Iesus? Diners in soule did suffer the woe and torments of hell: and Lazarus had ioy in Abrahams bosome. Againe, some others thinke, that mens soules after this life do passe from one mans body to another: and Herod may seeme to haue bene of this opinion: for when news was brought him of Christ, he said, that Iohn Baptis being beheaded was risen againe, thinking that the soule of Iohn Baptis was put into the bodie of some other man. And for proofe hereof, some alleadge the example of Nebuchadnezzar, who forsaking the societie of men, liued as beasts, and did eate grasse like a beast: & they imagine that his owne soule went out of him, and that the soule of a beast entered into the roomethorof. But this indeede is a fond conceit: for euen then hee had the soule of a man when hee liued as a beast, being onely striken by the hand of God with an exceeding madness, whereby he was bereft of common reason; as doth appeare by that claufe in the text, where it is said, that his understanding or knowledge returned to him againe. Againe, some other thinke, that the soule neither dieth nor sleepe, nor passeth out of one body into another, but wadereth here one earth among men, and oftentimes appeareth to this or that man: and this is the opinion of some heretickes, and of the common people, which thinke that dead men walke: and for prooue hereof some alleadge the practise of the Witch of Endor, who is said to make Samuel to appeare before Saul; but the truth is, it was not Samuel indeed, but onely a counterfeit of him. For not all the witches in the world, nor all the diuels in hell are able to disquiet the soules of the faithfull departed, which are in the keeping of the Lord without wandering from place to place. For when men die in the faith, their soules are immediately translated into heauen, and there abide till the last iudgements; and contrariwise if men die in their finnes, their soules goe straight to the place of eternall condemnation, and there abide as in a prison, as Peter saith. In a word, when the breath goeth out of the body, the soule of every man goeth straight either to heauen or hell; and there is no third place of aboud mentioned in Scripture.

Reu. 6. 9. Luk. 16. 23.

To conclude, the resurrection of the bodie is expressly mentioned in the Creede, to shew that there is no resurrection of the soules, which neither dieth, nor sleepe, but is a spirituall and insubstantia, liuing, and abiding for euer as well forth of the body as in the same.

Thus much of the third prerogative or benefit now followeth the fourth and last, in these wordes, And life euerlasting. To handle this point to the full, & to open the nature of it, as it deserueth, is not in the power of man. For both the Prophet Esaie and S. Paul say, that the eye hath not seen, and the eare hath not heard, neither came it into mans heart to thinke of those things which God hath prepared for those that loue him. Againe Paul when hee was rapt into the third heauen faich, that hee saw things not to be uttered. Nevertheless, wee may in some part describe the same, so farre forth as God in this case hath revealed his will vnto vs. Wherefore in this last prerogative, I consider two things; the first, is life it selfe, the second, is the Continuance of life noted in the word euerlasting. Life it selfe, is that whereby any thing acteth, liueth, and moueth it selfe: and it is two-fold, vncreated, or created. Vncreated life is the very Godhead it selfe, whereby God liueth absolutely in himselfe, from himselfe, and by himselfe, giuing life & being to all things that liue & haue being: and this life is not meant here, because it is not communicable to any creature. Created life, is a quality in the creature; & it is againe twofold: naturall, spirituall. Natural life, is that whereby men in this world liue by meate and drinke, & al such meanes as are rai[n]nited by Gods prouidence. Spirituall life, is that most happy and blessed estate, in which all the elect shall reigne with Christ their head in the heauens after this life, and after the day of iudgement for euer & euer. And this alone is the life which in the Creede we confesse & beleeue: and it consisteth in an immediate coniunction and communion or fellowship with God himselfe: as Christ in his solemne prayer to his Father a little before his death saith: I pray not for these alone, but for them also which shall beleue in me through thy word, that they al may be one, as thou, O Father, art in me, and I in thee, even that they may be one also in us. And when S. Iohn in the Reuelation saith, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, & God himselfe shall be their God with them: he sheweth that the very foundation of that happinesse which God hath prepared for his seruants, stands in a society betwene God and them, whereby God shall dwell with them in heauen, and they againe shall there enioy his glorious presence.

Touching this communion, three points must be considered. The first is, in what order men shall haue fellowship with God? Ans. This communion shall be first of all with Christ as he is man; & by reason that the manhood of Christ is personally vnited to the Godhead of the Sonne: he shall also be with Christ as he is God; and consequently with the Father & the holy Ghost. The reason of this order is, because Christ, though he be the author and the fountaine of eternall life as he is God, yet he conueies the same vnto vs onely in & by his flesh or manhood. Yet must wee not here thinke, that life proceedeth from the manhood it selfe, as from a cause efficient: for the flesh quickeneth not by any vertue from it selfe, but by the word to which it is personally vnited, it being as it were a pipe eternally to conueie life from the Godhead vnto vs.

The second point is, in what things this communion consisteth? Ans. Saint Paul openeth this point to the very full, when he saith, that after Christ hath subdued all things vnto him, then God shall be all in all, that is, God himselfe immediately shall be al good things that heart can wish to all the elect. But some may say, What? is not God al in al vnto vs euen in this life? for whatsoeuer good things we haue, they are all from him. Ans. It is true indeede, God is all in all euen in this life: but how? not immediately, but by outward meanes; and that also in smal measure. For he conueies his goodnes & mercy vnto vs so long as we liue on earth, partly by his creatures, & partly by his word and Sacraments; but after this life is ended, all helps & outward meanes shall cease: Christ shall giue vp his kingdome, and as he is Mediatour shall cease to put in execution the office of a Priest, a Prophet, or a King: all authority and power shall be abolished: and therefore at callings in the three maine estates of the Church, the Common-wealth, the familie shall haue an end; there shall be no more magistrate and subiect, Pastor and people, master and seruant, father and sonne, husband and wife: there shall be no more vfe of meate, drinke, cloathing, respiration, physick, sleepe; and yet for all this, the condition of men shall be many thousand fold more blessed then euer it was. For the Godhead in the Trinity immediately without all meanes shall be all things to all the chosen people of God in the kingdome of heauen, world without end. This may seeme strange to mans reason, but it is the very flat truth of Gods word. S. Iohn in the description of the heavenly Hierusalem, saith, that there shall be no temple in it. Why? how then shall God be worshipped? mark what followes, the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. Whereby it is signified, that although now we see the preaching of the word, and the administration of the Sacraments, as meanes of our fellowship with God: yet when this life is ended, they must all cease, God and Christ being in stead of all these meanes vnto vs. And hee addes further, the City hath no need of the Sunne, nor of the Moone to shine in it. What then will some say, must there be nothing but darknes? Not so. For the glory of God doth lighten it, & the Lamb is the light of it. Againe he saith, that in the Paradise of God, there is the river of Water of life, and tree of life bearing fruit every moneth; and that is Christ. And therefore we shall haue no need of meate, drinke, apparell, sleepe, &c. But Christ himselfe our head and Redeemer shall be in stead of them all vnto vs: on whom all the elect shall feed, and by whom both in body and soule they shall be preferred euermore. If a man would haue glory, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost shall be his glory: if a man desire wealch and pleasure, God himselfe shall be wealth and pleasure vnto him, & whatsoever els the heart of man can wish. Hence it appeares, that this communion is admirable: and that no tongue can tell, nor heart conceive the least part of it.

The third point is, touching the benefits or prerogatives that proceede of this communion, and they are in number fixe. The first is an absolute freedome from all wants. In the minde there shall be no ignorance, no vnbeleefe, no distrust in God, no ambition, no enuie, nor anger, nor carnall lusts, nor terror in conscience, or corrupt affection. In the body there shall be no sore, no sicknesse nor paine: for God shall wipe away all teares from their eyes, nay then all defects or wants in body, or soule, or in both, shall be supplied, and the whole man made perfect every way.

The second is, perfect knowledge of God. In this life the Church and all the seruants of God know him but in part. Moses would haue seene Gods face, but he was permitted to see onely his hinder parts; and as Paul saith, now wee know in part, and darkly, as through a glasse. In this life we can no otherwise discern but as an old man through spectacles: and the creatures, but specially the word of God and the Sacraments, are the spectacles of our minde, wherein we behold his iustice, mercy, loue, &c. and without them we can discern little or nothing: yet after this life, when that which is perfect is come, and that which is imperfect is abolished, we shall see God as hee is to be seene, not as through a glasse, but face to face; and we shall know him as we are knowe of his maiestie, so farre forth as possibly a creature may. God indeed is infinite, and therefore the full knowledge of his maiestie can no more be comprehended by the vnderstanding of a creature, which is finite, then the sea by a spoon: yet neuertheless God shall be knowne every way of man, so farre forth as a creature may know the Creator.

Now vpon this that the elect haue such fulnes of knowledge, it may be demanded, whether men shall know one another after this life or no. Ans. This question is often moued by such as are ignorant, then by thē that haue knowledge: and oftentimes it is tossed in the mowthes of them that haue little religion in their hearts: and therefore I answer first, men should rather haue care to seeke how they may come to heauen, than to dispute what they shall do when they are theretoe common prouerbis true, it is no good counting of chickens, before they be hatcht. Secondly I say, that men in heauen shall know each other: yea they shall know them which were neuer known or seene of them before in this life: which may be gathered by proportion, out of Gods word. Adam in his innocency knew Eue, whom he had neuer seene before, and gaue her a fit name so soone as shee was created. And when our Saviour Christ was transfigured in the mount, Peter knew Moses and Elias, whom before he had neuer seene, and therefore it is like that the elect shall know each other in heauen, where their knowledge and their whole estate shall be fully perfected. But whether they shall know one another after an earthly manner, as to say, this man was my father, this mine vnckle, this my teacher, &c. the word of God saith nothing: and therefore I will be silent, and we must be content while to be ignorant in this point.

The third prerogative of euerlasting blessednes, is, that the elect shall loue God with as perfect loue as a creature possibly can. The manner of louing God, is to loue him for himselfe; and the measure, is to loue him without measure: and both shall be found in heauen. For the Saints of God shall haue an actual fruition of God himselfe, and be as it were swallowed vp with a sea of his loue, and wholly rauihed therewith: for which cause, as farre as creatures can, they shall loue him againe. Againe, the loue of a thing is according to the knowledge thereof, but in this life God is knowne of man onely in part, and therefore is loued onely but in part; but after this life, when the Elect shall know God fully, they shall loue him without measure: and in this respect loue hath a prerogative about faith or hope, howsoeuer in some respects againe they goe beyond loue.

The fourth prerogative is, that the Saints of God keepe a perpetual Sabbath in heauen. In this life it is kept but every seauenth day, and when it is best of all sanctified, it is done but in part; but in heauen every day is a Sabbath: as the Lord faith by the Prophet Esey, From mouth to mouth, and from Sabbath to Sabbath, all flesh shall come before me: and therefore the life to come shall be spent in the perpetual seruice of God.

Fifthly, the bodies of the elect after this life in the kingdom of heaven shall be like the glorious body of Christ: so Paul faith, Christ Iesus our Lord shall change our vile bodies, that they may be like his glorious body. Now the resemblance between Christs body and ours, standeth in these things: as Christs body is incorruptible, so shall our bodies bee void of all corruption: as Christs body is immortal, so ours in the kingdom of heaven shall neuer die: as Christs body is spiritual, so shall our be made spiritual, as the Apostle faith, It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body: not because the body that is changed into a spirit, for it shall remaine the same in substance, and that for euer: but because it shall be preferred by a spiritual & diuine manner.

1. Cor. 15. 44.

For in this life it is preferred by meat, drink, cloathing, sleep, physick, rest, & diet, but after without all these meanes the life of the bodie shall bee continued, and body and soule keepe together by the immediate power of Gods spirit for euer and euer. Thus the bodie of Christ is now preferred in heaven, & so shall the bodies of all the elect be after the day of iudgement. Furthermore, as Christs body is now a shining body, as doth appear by his transfiguration in the mount, so in all likelihood after the resurrection the bodies of the elect shall be shining and bright, alwaies remaining the same for substance. Lastly, as Christs bodie after it rose againe from the graue, had this propertie of agility beside swiftnesse, so passe from the earth to the third heauen, being in distance many thousand miles from vs, and that without violence: so shall the bodies of the Saints. For being glorified, they shall be able as well to ascend upward as to goe downward, and to moue without violence: and that very swiftly.

Psal. 116.

1. King. 1. 40.

Math. 2.
10.

The sixth and last prerogative, is an vnspcakable and eternall ioy, as Dauid faith: in thy presence is fulnes of ioy: at thy right hand there are pleasures for euermore. It is fild, that when Salomon was crowned king, the people reioiced exceedingly. If there were such great ioy at his coronation which was but an earthly prince, what ioy then shall there be when the Elect shall see the true Salomon crowned with glory in the kingdom of heaven? It is fild that the wise men which came from the East to worship Christ: when they saw the starre standing ouer the place where the babe was, were exceedingly glad: how much more shall the elect reioyce, when they shall see Christ not lying in a manger, but crowned with immortal glorie in the kingdom of heaven? Wherefore this ioy of the elect after this life is most wonderful, and cannot be vterred.

Math. 26. 14.
17.

The propertie of life eternall, is to be an inheritance which God bestowes on them which are made his Sonnes in Christ, who is the only begotten Sonne of the Father. Hence it followes necessarily, that in the Scripture it is called a reward, not because it is deferred by our workes, as the Church of Rome erroneously teacheth: but for two other causes. First, because life eternall is due to all that beleue, by vertue of Christs merit. For his righteousnes is made ours by imputation, so consequently the merit thereof is also ours: and by it (all personall merits in our felues vterly excluded) we deserve or merit eternall happines as a reward; which neuerthelesse in respect of our felues is the free and mere gift of God. The second is, because there is a resemblance between eternall life and a reward. For as a reward is giuen to a workman after his worke is done; so euerlasting life is giuen vnto men after the trauels and miseries of this life are ended.

The degrees of life are three. The first, is in this life, when men beeing iustified and sanctified haue peace with God. Many imagine, that there is no eternall life till after death: but they are deceived, for it begins in this world: as our Saviour Christ testifieth, saying, Verily, verily I say vnto you, he that heareth my words, & beleeues him that sent mee, hath euerlasting life, & shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. This being so, we are hence to learne a good lesson. Considering we looke for life euerlasting after this life, we must not deeme our felues, lingering and deferring the time till the last gaspe; but we must lay the foundation of life eternall in our felues in this world, and haue the earnest thereof laid vp in our hearts against the day of death. But how is that done? we must repēt vs heartily of all our sins, & keepe to be assured in conscience that God the Father of Christ is our Father, God the Son our redeemer, & God the H. Ghost our comforter. For as Christ faith, that is life eternall to know thee thouonly God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ. And we must goe further yet, endeavouring to say with Paul, that we liue not, but that Christ lieth in vs: which when we can say, we haue in vs the very seede of eternall life. The second degree, is in the end of this life; when the body freed from all diseases, paines, and miseries is laid to rest in the earth, and the soule is received into heauen. The third, is after the day of iudgement, when body and soule reunited shall be both aduanced to eternall glory.

Again, in this third degree of life, there bee in all likelihood sundry degrees of glorie. Daniel speaking of the estate of the elect after this life, faith, They that be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turne many to righteousnesse, shall shine as the starres for euermore. Now we know there is difference between the brightness of the firmament and the brightness of the starres. Again, there be degrees of torment in hell, as appeares by the saying of Christ, It shall bee easier for Tyrrus and Sidon in that day, then for this generation: and therefore there be proportionall degrees of glory. And Paul faith, There is one glory of the Sonne, another glory of the Moone, another glory of the Stars: for one star differeth from another in glory: so is the resurrection of the dead. In which words hee applies the differences of excellencie that bee in the creatures, to set forth the differences of glory that shall be in mens bodies after the resurrection. Furthermore (if we may coniecture) it may bee, that the degrees of glorie shall be vsuable to the di-uers measures of gifts and graces bestowed on men in this life, and according to the importance of them to the glory of God and edification of the Church. And therefore the twelue Apostles, who were exceedingly enriched with the gift of the spirit, & were matter builders of the Church of the new Testament, shall sit on 12. thrones, & iudge the 12. tribes of Israel. But it may be objected, that if there be degrees of glory in heauē, some shall want glory.

Ans. Not so: though some haue more, & some lesse, yet all shall haue sufficiency. Take sundry vessels wherof some are bigger, & some lesse: and cast the all into the sea: some will receiue more water, & some lesse, and yet all shall be full and no want in any: and so likewise among the Saints of God in heauen, some shall haue more glory, some lesse, & yet all without exception full of glory. And whereas it is alledged, that all the labourers in the vine-yard receiue each of them a penny equally for their hire; the answer is, that our Saviour Christ in the Parable intends not to set forth the equality of celestial glory, and what shall be the estate of the godly after this life: but the very drift of the parable is to shew, that they which are called first, haue not cause to brag or insult ouer others, which as yet are vn-called, considering they may be made equal, or be preferred before them.

Thus much of life it selfe: now followes the continuance thereof, which the Scriptures haue noted in calling it eternal or euerlasting. And to this end Paul faith, that Christ hath abolished death, and brought not only life, but also immortality to light by the Gospel. And this very circumstance serues greatly to commend the happines of the godly in that, after they haue made an entrance into it, they shall neuer see tearme of time or end. Suppose the whole world were a sea, & that every 1000. yeres expired, a bird must carry away, or drink vp one only drop of it: in processe of time it will come to passe that this sea, though very hugh, shall be dried vp, but yet many 1000. millions of yeres must be passed before this can be done. Now if a man should enioy happines in heauen only for the space of time in which this sea is drying vp, he would think his case most happy & blessed: but behold the elect shall enioy the kingdom of heauen not only for that time, but wile it is ended, they shall enioy it as long again, and when all is done, they shall be as far fro ending of this their ioy, as they were at the beginning.

Having thus seene what life euerlasting is, let vs now come to the vse of the article. And first of all, if we beleue that there is an eternal happines, & that the same belongs vnto vs, then we must vse this present world & all the things therē in as though we vied them not: & whatsoeuer we do in this world, yet the eyes of our minds must alwaies be cast toward the blessed estate prepared for vs in heauen. As a pilgrime in a strange land hath alwaies his eyes toward his iourneys end, & is then grieved when by any means he is out of the way: so must we alwaies haue our minds & harts set on euerlasting life, and be grieved when we are by any meanes hindered in the straight way, that leadeth therunto: we haue a notable patterne of this dutie set out vnto vs in the Patriarke Abraham, who being called of God, obeyed to goe out into a place, which he should afterward receiue for inheritance, and he went out, not knowing whether he went: & by faith abode in the land of Canaan, as in a strange country, and as one that dwells in tents. Now the cause that moued him was life euerlasting: for the text faith, He looked for a city having a foundation, whose builder & maker is God. And we ought every one of vs to be little affected to the things of this life, neuer setting our hearts vpon the, but vying the as a pilgrime doth vse his staffe in the way: so long as it is an help & stay for him in his iourney, he is content to carry it in his hand; but so soone as it begins to trouble him, he casts it away.

Secodly, al that profess the gospel of Christ, may here learn to beare with patience the crosses & afflictions which God shall lay on the in this world. It is gods viall manner to begin corrections in his own family vpon his own children; & as Peter faith, iudgement begins at Gods house. Look as a mother that weanes her child, laies worm-wood or some other bitter thing vpon her breast, to make the childe loath the milk: so likewise God makes vs oft feeble the miseries & crosses of this life, that our loue & liking might be turned from this world & fixed in heauen. As raw flesh is loathsome to the stomacke; so is euery sinner and vnmortified man loathsome vnto God: till the Lord by afflictions mortifie in him the corruptions of his nature, & specially the loue of this world. But when a man is afflicted how shall he be able to endure the crosse? Surely by refusing him that the Lord hath prepared life euerlasting for him. Thus we read that Moses by faith wile he was come to age, refused to be called the son of Pharaohs daughter, and chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, than to enioy the pleasures of sin for a season, after the rebuke of Christ greater riches, she the treasures of Egypt. But I pray you: what moued Moses to be of this minde? The reason is added: Because he had respect to the recompence of reward; that is, he had alwaies a special regard of life euerlasting, and that was it that made him content & willing to suffer affliction with the people of God. Here then behold a notable presider for vs to follow: In which we are taught that the best way to endure afflictions with patience, is to haue an eye to the recompence of reward: this is it that makes the yoke of Christ easie and lightsome. When it shall please God to bring vnto vs a cup of afflictions & bid vs drinke a draught thereof to the bottom, the meditation of life eternall must be as sugar in our pockets to sweeten the cup withall.

1. Pet. 4. 17.

Heb. 11. 24. 25. 26.

Ibid.

Lastly, if this be true, that God of his goodness & endlesse mercy toward mankind, hath prepared life euerlasting, yet not for all men, but for the Elect, whose names are written in booke of life; we must aboue all things in this world seeke to be partakers of the same. Let vs receiue this as from the Lord, and lay it to our hearts, whatsoeuer we doe euening and morning, day or night, whether we be yong or old, rich or poore, first we must seeke for the kingdom of heauen and his righteounes. If this benefit were common to all and not proper to the Church, lesse care might be had: but seeing it is proper to some alone, for this very cause let all our studies be to obtaine the beginnings of life euerlasting giuen in this life. For if we haue it not, whoeuer we be, it had bin better for vs that we had neuer bin borne, or that we had bene borne dogs and toades then men: for when they die, there is an end of their miserie; but man, if he lose euerlasting happines, hath 10000. millions of yeres to liue in miserie & in the torments of hell; and when that time is ended, he is as far from the end of his misery, as he was at the beginning. Wherefore I pray you, let not the diuell steale this meditation out of your hearts, but be carefull to repent of all your finnes, and to beleue in Christ for the pardon of them all; that by this meanes ye may come to haue the pawne and earnest of the spirit concerning life euerlasting, even in this world. What a miserable thing is it, that men should liue long in this world, and not so much as dreame of another, till at the last gaspe? Let vs not suffer Satan thus to abuse and bewitch vs: for if we haue not eternall life in this world, we shall neuer haue it.

Hitherto by Gods goodnes I haue shewed the meaning of the Creed: now to draw to a conclusion, the generall vses which are to bee made of it, follow. And first of all we learne by it, that the Church of Rome hath no cause to condemne vs for hereticks: for we doe truly hold & beleue the whole Apostollicall Symbole or Creede, which is an epitome of the Scriptures, and the very key of faith. It will be said, that we deny the Popes supremacy, iustification by workes, purgatory, the sacrifice of the Masse for the sins of the quicke and the dead, the inuocation & intercession of Saints, &c. Which are the greatest points of religion. It is true indeed, we deny and renounce them as doctrine of diuels: perfwading our selues that if they indeede had bin Apostollicall, and the very grounds & pillars of religion, as they are anounced to bee, they should in no wise haue bin left forth of the Creede. For it is an ouer-sight in making a confession of faith, to omit the principall points and rules of faith. It will be further said, that in the Creed, we beleue the Church, and so consequently are to beleue all these former points which are taught and anounced by the Church. But this defence is foolish; for it takes this for granted, that the Church of Rome is the Church here meant, which we deny, vnlesse they can proue a particular Church to be vniuersall or Catholike. Nay, I adde further, that the principall grounds of popish faith, for which they contend with vs as for life and death, are not mentioned in any other Creedes which were made by the Churches and Councils for many hundred yeeres after Christ.

Secondly, the Creede serues as a store-house of remedies against all troubles and temptations whatsoeuer. I. If a man be grieved for the losse of earthly riches, let him consider that he beleuees God to be his Creator, who will therefore guide and preferre his owne workmanship, and by his providence minister all things needfull vnto it. And that he hath not lost the principall blessing of all, in that hee hath God to bee his Father, Christ to be his Redeemer, and the holy Ghost to be his Comforter: and that considering he looks for life eternall, he is not to be ouermuch carefull for this life: and that Christ being our Lord, will not forsake vs being the seruants in his owne house, but will provide things needfull for vs. II. If any man be grieved in respect of outward disgrace and contempt, let him remember that he beleuees in Christ crucified, and that therefore he is to reioyce in contempt for righteounesse sake. III. They which are troubled for the decease of friends, are to comfort themselves in the communion of Saints, and that they haue God the Father, and Christ, and the holy Ghost for their friends. IV. Against bodily captiuitie, let men consider that they beleue in Christ their Lord, whose seruice is perfect liberty. V. Against the feare of bodily diseases, we must remember the resurrection of the body, in which all diseases and infirmities shall be abolished. VI. If a man feare death of the body, let him consider that hee beleuees in Christ which died vpon the crosse, who by death hath vanquished death.

VII. The feare of persecution is restrained, if we call to remembrance that God is a Father Almighty, not only able, but also willing to repress the power of the aduersary, so far forth as shall be for the good of his children. VIII. Terrours arising of the consideration of the last iudgment are allayed by remembrance of this, that Christ shall bee our iudge who is our Redeemer. IX. Feare of damnation is remedied by consideration that Christ died to make satisfaction for vs, and now sits at the right hand of his Father to make intercession for vs; and by the resurrection of the body to life euerlasting. X. Terrours of conscience for sinne are repressed, if we consider that God is a Father, and therefore much in sparing, and that it is a prerogative of the Church to haue remission of sinnes.

Tri-ni Deo gloria.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE LORDS PRAYER.

IN THE WAY OF CATECHIZING, SERVING FOR IGNORANT PEOPLE.

Corrected and amended

Hereunto are adioyned the prayers of PAUL, taken out of his Epistles.

By WILLIAM PERKINS.

LONDON,
Printed by IOHN LEGATT.
1626.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE EDWARD, LORD RUSSELL, EARLE OF BEDFORD: GRACE AND PEACE BE MVLTPLIED.

RIGHT Honourable, if you consider what is one of the chiefest ornaments of this Noble state, vnto which God hath aduanced you, it will appeare, that there is none more excellent then (a) the spirit of grace and prayer. For what doth your heart affect? would you speake the languages? Be'old, by prayer you may speake the most heavenly tongue that euer was (b) ieu the language of Canaan. Would you haue the valour of Knighthood? By prayer you may stand in place where Gods hand hath (c) made a breach, and doe as much as (d) all the chariots and horsemen in a kingdome. Would you enioy Gods blessings which you want? By prayer you may (as it were) put your hands into the cofers of Gods treasures (e) and enrich your selfe. Doe you desire the fauour of Monarches and Princes? By prayer you may come in p'sence, and haue speech with Iehonab the King of heauen and earth. Lastly, would you know, whether now liuing you be dead, that being dead you may liue for euer? By prayer a man may know, whether hee be dead to sinne, dead to the world, aliuie to God, liue to Christ, and liue eternally.

Prayer then, being so excellent a point of religion: I am emboldened to commend this small treatise to your Honour: not so much for it selfe, as because it doth set out the matter and true manner of inuocation of Gods holy name. And I hope for your fauour in accepting of it, the rather, because I doubt not but your desire is to be answerable to your most honourable, and for religion most worthy ancestors, in the care of maintaining and countenancing any good thing that may any way serue for the furthering of the Gospel of Christ.

Now Iesus Christ our Lord, and God euen the Father which hath loved vs, and giuen vs euerlasting consolation, and good hope through grace, stablish your Honour in euery good word and worke to the end.

Your H. to command,

WILLIAM PERKINS.

AN

A briefe Exposition vpon the Lords Prayer.

The parts.	The words.	The meaning of the words.	Wants to bee bewailed.	Graces to bee desired.
1. The Preface.	Our father Which art in heauen.	O Father of Christ, and in him our Father. Who though thou be present euery where, yet dost manifest thy selfe to vs in maiestie and glorie from the highest heauens.	1. Want of reuerence. 2. By-thoughts.	1. Love of our brethren 2. The spirit of adoption. 3. Feare, trembling, reuerence, Eccles. 5.
2. Petition 1.	Hallowed bee thy name.	Grant that in all our thoughts, words, and deeds, we may giue glorie and praise to thee.	1. Pride of heart. 2. Hardness of heart. 3. Ingratitude. 4. Evil life.	1. Knowledge of God. 2. Zeale of Gods glory. 3. A desire of sinceritie of life.
2.	Thy kingdome come.	Let not sinne & Satan reigne and rule in our hearts: but reigne thou by thy word and spirit: and so build in vs the kingdome of grace, and hasten the kingdome of glorie.	1. Bondage under sinne and Satan. 2. Want of praying, and Sacraments, &c. 3. Impediments.	1. The kingdome of grace 2. The prosperitie of the Church. 3. The hastning of the last iudgement.
3.	Thy will be done. In earth, as it is in heauen.	Giue grace, that in our liues and calling, we may performe obedience to thy commandments. And that sincerely, of vs men on earth, as thy Angels and Saints in heauen doe it.	1. The rebellion of our natures. 2. The wickednesse of the world. 3. Imperfection of obedience.	1. Denying our selves. 2. Obedience. 3. Patience in affliction. 4. Sinceritie.
4.	Giue vs this day our daily bread.	Bestow on vs all things needfull for this life: yet so as whether they be more or lesse, we may be content therewith, from time to time resting on thy providence in all estates.	1. Contentnesse. 2. Distrust in Gods providence.	1. Contentation. 2. Affiance in Gods providence.
5.	And forgive vs our debts, as we forgive our debtors.	Accept the passion, obedience, and righteousness of Christ, as a full discharge for our sins, and in him accept vs as righteous: for then we that haue not so much as a drop of mercy in vs, in respect of thee, are content by thy grace, to forgive the iniuries done vnto vs, either by friend or foe.	1. The burden of sinne.	1. The spirit of deprecation.
6.	And leade vs not into temptation: but deliuer, &c.	Though the flesh, the diuell, and the world many waies prouoke vs to sinne, yet suffer them not to preuaile, but giue an issue with the temptation.	1. Bondage under sinne and Satan.	1. The free spirit.
A reason of the praise of God.	For thine is the kingdome, &c.	Thou rulest all things in heauen and earth: power of doing all things is from thee: glorie and praise of them both appertaine to thee.		1. A bare estimation of our selves, with an high estimation of God.
3. Testification of faith.	Amen.	As we haue asked these things; so we doe beleene that thou wilt grant them to vs.		Faith in Gods promises.

Place this betwene the Epistle to the Reader, and the beginning of the Lords prayer. pag. 328.

An aduertisement to the Reader.

Good Reader, there was a booke of late published in London vnder this title, PERKINS vpon the Lords prayer. In it I haue double inuie. First, it was printed without my knowledge or consent. And secondly, the booke is faulty both in the matter and manner of writing. In the matter, these things are not well set downe.

First, the commandment of prayer, very easie to be kept. p. 3. b.

2. Prayer is the restoration of the Gospel. 7. b.

3. The three first petitions concerne Gods glory; the three latter, the manner of Gods glory. pag. 1. b.

4. Gods name taken for his deitie, and not for his attributes or titles. 15. b.

5. A man must pray for the day of his death. 26. a.

6. Repentance is sufficient not onely to bring a true faith, but also to renew it. 34. a.

7. A lesson in the Lords prayer taken out of Popery. 45. a.

8. The doctrine of satisfaction for sinne is a most vile doctrine. 52. b.

9. God and the diuell agree in the manner of temptation. 61. b.

10. God offereth men the occasion of sinne. 62. a.

Likewise the manner of writing hath other faults.

First, in the middle of the Lords prayer there is placed a discourse of the Lords Supper.

2. The end of the Lords prayer is not expounded at all but frivolously.

3. There are very many places, which haue no common reason in them, as

First, Gods Angels doe his will in countenance. 39. b.

2. Our daily bread is communicating bread. 45. b.

3. To walke before God in the truth of the satisfaction of Gods iustice. 51. a.

4. To purge a cleare conscience. 51. b.

5. The page 65, 66, 67. are so penned, as the reader cannot know what was my meaning.

Now considering by this vngodly practise, Christian and well disposed people are much abused, to omit the iniurie done to my selfe, I thought it my dutie to make a redresse by publishing this treatise according as the points therein were deliuered: otherwise I was not willing to haue set downe anything in the way of Exposition of the Lords prayer: because it is already sufficiently performed by others.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE LORDS PRAYER IN THE WAY OF CATECHISME:

foruing for ignorant people, by W. Perkins.

Matthew 6. verse 9.

After this manner therefore pray ye:

Our Father, &c.

His occasion, and so also the coherence of these words with the former is this: The Evangelist Matthew setting downe the sermons and sayings of our Saviour Christ, keeps not this course to propound every thing as it was done or spoken; but sometimes he sets downe that first, which was done last, and that last which was done before: according as the spirit of God directed him. Which thing is verified in these words, where the prayer is mentioned; yet the occasion wherefore our Saviour Christ taught his Disciples to pray, is not here specified. But in S. Luk. 11. 1. the occasion of these words is evident. For there it is said, that the disciples of our Saviour knowing that John taught his disciples to pray, made request to their master, that he would doe the same to them likewise.

These few words set before the prayer are a commandement, and it prescribes vnto vs two duties: the first, to pray; the second, to pray after the manner following. Touching the first point, considering very few among the people know how to pray aright, we must learne what it is to pray.

To make prayer, is to put up our request to God according to his word from a contrite heart, in the name of Christ, with assurance to bee heard.

For the better opening of these words, we are to consider fixe questions. The first is, to whom we are to pray. The answer is, to God alone. Rom. 10. 14. How shall they call on him in whom they have not beleueed? &c. Marke how inuocation and faith are linked together. And Paul reason may be framed thus: In whom we put our affiance or beleefe, to him alone must we pray: but we beleefe onely in God: therefore we must onely pray to him. As for Saints or Angels, they are in no wise to be called vpon; because not the least title of Gods word prescribes vs to do: because they cannot heare our prayers, and discern what are the thoughts and desires of our hearts: and because inuocation is a part of diuine worship, and therefore peculiar to God alone.

Obiect. What neede any man to pray vnto God, considering hee knows what we want before wee aske, and is ready and willing to giue that which we craue? Ans. We pray not for this end to manifest our case to God, as though hee knew it not, to win and procure his fauour & good wil, but for other weighty ends. First, that we might shew our submission & obedience to God, because he hath giuen vs a direct commandement to pray, & it must be obeyed. Secondly, that we may by inuocation shew forth that we doe indeed beleefe and repent: because God hath made the promise of remission of finnes & of all good blessings to such as doe indeed repent and humble themselves vnder the hand of God, & by true faith apprehend and apply the promises of God vnto themselves. Thirdly, wee pray to God that we may (as our duty is) acknowledge him to be the fountaine, author and giuer of euery good thing. Lastly, that wee might ease our mindes by powring out our hearts before the Lord: for this end hath he made most sweet & comfortable promises. Prou. 16. 3. Psal. 37. 5.

Obiect. What neede men vse prayer, considering God in his eternall counsell hath certainly determined what shall come to passe? Ans. As God determines what things shall come to passe; so he doth withall determine the meanes whereby the same things are effected. Before all worlds God decreed that men should liue vpon earth, and hee decreed likewise, that meate, drinke, and cloathing should be vsed, that life might be preferred. Now prayer is one of the most excellent meanes whereby sundry things are brought to passe: therefore Gods eternall counsell touching things to come, doth not exclude prayer and like meanes, but rather include & imply the same.

The second question is, what kind of action praiser is? Ans. It is no lip-labor: it is the putting vp of a suit vnto God, & this action is peculiar to the very heart of a man. *Rom. 8. 26. The spirit makes request for vs. But how with grames in the heart. Exo. 14. 15. The Lord faith to Moses, Why criest thou? yet there is no mention made that Moses spake any word at all: the Lord no doubt, accepted the inward mourning and desire of his heart for a crye. *Psal. 28. 10. and 12. 5.

The third question is, what is the forme or rule according to which we are to pray? Ans. It is the reucaled will and word of God. A man in humbling his soule before God, is not to pray as his affections carrie him, & for what hee list: but all is to be done according to the expresse word. So as those things which God hath commaunded vs to aske, we are to aske; and those things which hee hath not commaunded vs to vs, we are in no wise to pray for. 1. Ioh. 5. 14. This is the assurance which we haue of him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth vs. This then is a speciall clause to bee marked, that men must pray in knowledg, not in ignorance: here weigh the case of poore ignorant people: they talke much of praying for themselves & others, they imagine that they pray very deuotely to God: but alas they doe nothing like, because they know not what to aske according to Gods will. They therefore must learne Gods word, and pray according to the same, els it will proue in the end that all their praying was nothing but as mocking and flat dishonour of God.

The fourth question is, with what affection a man must pray? Ans. Prayer must proceed from a broken and contrite heart. This is the sacrifice which God accepteth. Psal. 51. 17. When Abab abased himselfe, though hee did it in hypocrisie, yet God had some respect vnto it. 1. Kin. 21. 29. faith the Lord to Eliah, Seest thou how Abab is humbled before mee? This contrition of heart stands in two things. The first of them is, a liuely feeling of our own sin, miserie, and wretched estate, how that we are compassed about with innumerable enemies, euen with the diuel and his angels, & within abound euen with huge seas of wits & rebellious corruptions, whereby we most grievously displease God, and are vile in our owne eyes. Being therefore thus beset on euery side, we are to be touched with the sense of this our great miserie. And he that will pray aright, must put on the person and the very affection of a poore wretched begger, and certainly not being grieved with the rufull condition in which wee are in our selues, it is not possible for vs to pray effectually. Psal. 130. 1. Out of the deepes I called vpon thee O Lord: that is, when I was in my greatest misery, and as it were not far from the gulphes of hell, then I cried to God. Isa. 26. 16. Lord in trouble haue they visited thee, they powred out a prayer when thy chastening was vpon thee. 1. Sam. 1. 15. I am a woman (saith Anna) of an hard spirit: that is, a troubled soule, and haue powred my soule before the Lord. Hence it appeareth, that the ordinarie prayers of most men grievously displease God, seeing they are made for fashion onely, without any sense and feeling of their miseries: common men come with the Pharisee in ostentation of their integrity, and they take great paines with their lips, but their hearts wander from the Lord. The second thing required in a contrite heart, is a longing desire and hungering after Gods graces and benefits whereof we stand in neede. It is not sufficient for a man to buckle as it were, and to goe crooked vnder his finnes and miseries; but also hee must haue a desire to be eased of them, and to be enriched with graces needefull.

Thus Hezekias the King, and the Prophet Isaiah the sonne of Amos prayed against Sennacherib, and cried vnto heauen, 2. Chron.

32. 20. where wee may see what a marvellous desire they had to obtaine their request. So also, Rom. 8. 26. The spirit maketh request with grames, so great that they cannot be uttered, as they are felt. David faith, Psal. 143. 6. That hee desireth after the Lord, as the thirist land. Now we know that the ground parched with heate opens it selfe in rifts and cranies, & gapes toward heauen as though it would denoure the cloudes for want of moisture, and thus must the heart be disposed to Gods grace, till it obtaine it. The people of Israel being in grievous afflictions, how doe they pray? They powre out their soules like water before the face of the Lord, Lament. 2. 19.

The fifth question, is in whose name prayer must be made. Ans. It must not be made in the name of any creature, but onely in the name & mediation of Christ, Ioh. 14. 14. If ye aske any thing in my name I will doe it. A man is not to present his prayers to God in any worthinesse of his owne merits. For what is he, to make the best of himselfe, what can he make of himselfe? by nature he is no better then the very firebrand of hell, and of all Gods creatures on earth the most outrageous rebell to God, and therefore cannot be heard for his owne sake. As for Saints they can be no mediators, seeing euen they themselves in heauen are accepted of God not for themselves, but onely for the blessed merits of Christ. If any man sinne (saith Saint Iohn 1. epist. chap. 2. 1.) we haue an advocate with the Father Iesus Christ. But how prouoes he this? It followes then, And he is the reconciliation for our finnes. His reason stands thus: He which must be an advocate, must first of all be a reconciliator for vs; no Saints can be a reconciliator for vs; therefore no Saints can be advocates. Therefore in this place is manifest an other fault of ignorant people. They cry often, Lord help me, Lord haue mercy vpon me: But in whose name pray they? poore soules like blind bayards they rush vpon the Lord, they know no mediator in whose name they should present their praier to him. Little doe they consider with themselves, that God is as well a most terrible Iudge, as a mercifull father.

The sixth question is; Whether faith be requisite to prayer or not. Ans. Prayer is to bee made with faith, whereby a man must haue certaine assurance to be heard. For he that praiereth, must steadfastly beleefe, that God in Christ will grant his petition. This affaice being wanting, it maketh prayer to be no praier. For how can he pray for any thing effectually, who doubteth whether he shall obtaine it or no?

Wherefore it is an especiall point of praier, to be perswaded, that God to whom prayer is made, not onely can, but also will grant his request. Mark. 11. 24. Whatsoeuer ye desire when ye pray, beleefe that ye shall haue it, and it shall bee done vnto you. Here we see two things required in praier: the first, a desire of the good things which we want: the second, is faith, whereby we beleefe that God will grant the things desired.

The ground of this faith is recôciliation with God, and the assurance thereof. For vnlesse a man be in côfciëce in some measure perfwaded that all his sins are pardoned, and that he stands reconciled to God in Christ, he cannot beleue any other promises reuealed in the word, nor that any of his prayers shal be heard.

Thus much of the definition of prayer: now let vs see what vife may be made of this commandement, pray ye thus. Seeing our sauour commands his disciples, and so euen vs also to pray to God, it is our duty not only to present our prayers to God, but also to doe it cheerfully and earnestly. Rom. 15. 30. All ye brethren I beseech you that ye would strive with me by prayer to God for me. What is the cause why the Lord doth often defer his blessings after our prayers? no cause, but that he might stirre vs vp to bee more earnest to crie vnto the Lord. Exo. 32. 10. When Moses praised to God in the behalfe of the Israelites, the Lord answers, Let me alone: as though his prayers did bind the Lord, & hinder him from executing his iudgements: wherefore this is good aduise, for all Christian men to continue and to be zealous in prayer. If thou be an ignorant man, for shame learne to pray, seeing it is Gods cômmandement, make côfciëce of it. We see that there is no man, vnles he be desperately wicked, but will make some côfciëce of killing & stealing: and why is this? Because it is Gods commandement, Thou shalt not kill; Thou shalt not steale.

Well then, this also is Gods commandement, to pray. Let this consideration breed in thee a côfciëce of this duty, and although thy corrupt nature shal draw thee away from it, yet strive to the contrary, and know it certainly, that the breach of this commandement makes thee as wel guilty of damnation before God as any other. Furthermore; this must be a motive to prick thee forward to this duty, that as God commands vs to pray, so also hee giues the spirit of prayer, whereby the commandement is made easie vnto vs. If the Lord had commadéd a thing impossible, then there had bin some cause of discouragement, but commanding a thing through the grace of his spirit very easie and profitable: how much more are we bound to obedience of the same? Againe, prayer is the key whereby we open the treasures of God, & pul down his mercies vpon vs. For as the preaching of the word serues to declare & to conuey vnto vs Gods graces: so in prayer we come to haue a liuely feeling of the same in our hearts. And further, this must moue vs to pray, seeing in it we haue familiarity with Gods maiestie. It is an high fauour for a man to be familiar with a Prince; how much more then to be familiar with the King of kings the mighty Iehouah? This then can be no burthen or trouble vnto vs, being one of the maine prerogatives that God bestowes on his Church. For in the preaching of the word, it pleaseth God to talke to vs, and in prayer, God doth vouchsafe vs this honour, to

A speake, and as it were familiarly to talke with him, and not as to a fearefull Iudge, but as to a louing and mercifull God.

Consider also that prayer is a worthy means of defence, not onely to vs, but also to the Church and them that are absent. By it Moses stood in the breach, which Gods wrath had made into the people of Israel, and staid the same. Psal. 106. 13. By this, Christian me fight as valiant châpiôns against their own corruptions & al other spiritual enemies, Eph. 6. 18. Infinite were it to shew how many blessings the Lord hath bestowed on his seruants by prayer. In a word, Luther, whom it pleased God to vfe as a worthy instrument for the restoring of the Gospell, testifieth of himselfe, that having this grace giuen him to call vpon the name of the Lord, hee had more reucaled vnto him of Gods truth by prayer, then by reading and studie.

The second point of the commandement, is to pray after the manner propounded in the Lords prayer. Where it is to be noted, that the Lords praier is a direction, & as it were samplar to teach vs how and in what manner we ought to pray. None is to imagine that we are bound to vfe these words onely, & none other. For the meaning of Christ is not to bind vs to the word, but to the matter & to the manner, & to the like affections in praying. If this were not so, the prayers of Gods seruants ferdown in the bookes of the old & new Testament should all be faulty, because they are not set downe in the very same words with the Lords praier, nay this prayer is not set downe in the same words altogether by Matthew and Luke.

And whereas sundry men in our Church, hold it vnlawfull to vfe this very forme of words, as they are set down by our Sauour Christ, for a prayer: they are far decieued, as will appere by their reasons. First (say they) it is a Scripture, & therefore, not to be vfed as a praier. I answer, that the same thing may bee the Scripture of God, and also the prayer of man, els the prayers of Moses, Dauid, and Paul, being set downe in the Scriptures, cease to be praiers. Againe (say they) that in prayer we are to expresse our wants in particular, and the graces which we desire: now in these words all things to be prayed for, are onely in generall propounded. I answer, that the maine wants that are in any man, and the principall graces of God to be desired, are set downe in the petitions of this praier in particular. Thirdly, they plead that the pattern to make all prayers by, should not be vfed as a praier. I answer, that therefore the rather it may be vfed as a praier: and sure it is that ancient & worthy Diuines haue reuerenced it as a praier; chooseth rather to vfe these words then any other, as Cyprian, Serm. de orat. Dominicæ. And Tertullian, lib. de fuga in persequutione. And Augustine, Serm. 126. de tempore. Wherefore the opinion is full of ignorance & error.

Well, whereas our Sauour first giues a commandement to pray, and then after giues a direction for the keeping of it, this he doth to stirre vp our dulnesse, and to allure vs by all meanes to the heavenly exercise of prayer: wherefore I still say, imploy your selues in prayer feruently and continually, and if you can not doe it, learne to pray. Thus much of the commendement of our Sauour Christ: now follow the words of the prayer.

Our Father, which art, &c.

These words containe three parts: 1. a preface. 2. the prayer it selfe, containing sixe petitions. 3. 1. the reitification of faith in the last word, Amen.

Which although it be short, yet it doth not containe the smallest point of the prayer. It is (1. say) a reitification of our faith, whereas the petitions that go before are only reitifications of our desires. Now of these three parts in order. We must consider how our Sauour Christ doth not set down the petitions abruptly, but he first begins with a solemne preface. Whereby we are taught this lesson; that he which is to pray vnto God, is first to prepare himselfe; and not boldly without consideration as it were to rush into the presence of God.

If a man bee to come before an earthly Prince, he will order himselfe in apparell, gesture, and words, that he may doe all things in seemelies and dutifull reuerence: how much more are men to order themselves, when they are to appeare before the liuing God? Ecclij. 5. 1. Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thy heart bee hasty to utter a thing before the Lord. And Dauid, Psal. 26. 6. washed his hands in innocency, before he came to the altar of the Lord to offer sacrifices.

The meanes whereby men may stirre vp their dull and heauy hearts, and so prepare themselves to prayer, are three. The first, is to read diligently the word of God, concerning those matters about which they are to pray; & what then? this will be a meanes not onely to direct him, but also to quicken the heart more feruently to deliuer his prayer. This is euident by a comparison. The beames of the Sunne descending, heat not before they come to the earth, or some solide body where they may reflect, and then by that means the earth and ayre adioyning is made hot: euen so the Lord sends downe vnto vs his blessed word, euen as beames and the goodly sun-shine, and thereby he speaks to our hearts: now when we make our prayers of that which we haue read, Gods word is as it were reflected, and our hearts are thereby warmed with the comfortable heat of Gods holy spirit, to poure out our prayers to God more feruently. The second meanes is to pray to God that he would strengthen vs with his spirit, that we might be able to pray as it is practised, Psal. 143. 1. The third meanes is, the consideration of Gods most glorious maiestie, wherein we are to remember first, his fatherly goodness and kindnesse, whereby he is willings and secondly, his omnipotency, whereby hee is able to grant our request. One of these emboldened the leper to pray, Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me cleane. Matth. 8. 2. Therefore both together are more effectuall. Now let vs come to the preface it selfe, Our Father which art in heauen. It contains a description of the true Iehouah to whom wee pray; and that by two arguments: the first is drawne from a relation, Our Father: the second is taken from the subiect or place, which art in heauen.

Father.

1. The meaning.

In the opening of this word, or title of God, two questions are to be opened.

1. Quest. Whether by this title Father, is signified the whole Trinitie, or some one person thereof. Answer. Otherwhiles this name is attributed to all the persons in Trinitie, or any of them. Mat. 2. 10. Hæc uero non est pater, &c. Luke 3. 38. Which was the same of Adam, which was the same of God. And in Eph. 9. 6. Christ is called the Father of eternitie, because all that are truly knitt to him, and borne anew by him, they are eternally made the sonnes of God. Againe, oftentimes it is giuen to the first person in Trinitie, as in those places where one person is conferred with another. And so in this place principally for some special respect, this title agrees to the first person. For first, he is the father of Christ as he is the eternal word of the Father, and that by nature, because he is of the same essence with him. Secondly, he is the father of Christ in respect of his manhood, not by nature or adoption, but by personall vnion, because the humane nature doth subsist in the person of the word. Thirdly, he is a father to all the faithfull by adoption in Christ.

2. Quest. Whether are we to pray to the Sonne and the holy Ghost as to the Father? Answer. Inuocation belongs to all the three persons in Trinitie, and not onely to the Father. Act. 7. 59. Steuen prayeth, Lord Iesus receive my spirit. 1. Thess. 3. 11. Now God our Father and our Lord Iesus Christ guide our iourney vnto you. 2. Cor. 13. 13. The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, the loue of God, and the communion of the holy Ghost be with you. And men are baptized in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, that is, by calling on the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost.

Some may say, this prayer is a perfect platforme of all prayers, and yet we are taught to direct our prayers to the Father, not to the Sonne, or holy spirit. I answer, the Father, Son, and holy Ghost, are three distinct persons, yet they are not to be seuered or diuided, because they all subsist in one and the same Godhead or diuine nature. And further in all outward actions, as in the creation and precreation of the world, and the saluation of the elect, they are not seuered or diuided; for they all worke together, onely they are distinguished in the manner of working. Now if they be not divided in nature or operation; then they are not to be feared in worship.

And in this place we principally direct our prayers to the Father because he is the first in order: yet so, as then we imply the Sonne and holy Ghost. For we pray to the Father in the name of the Sonne by the assurance of the holy Ghost. And to what person soever the prayer is directed, we must alwaies remember in minde and heart to include the rest.

2. The vses.

TH E vses of this point are manifold.
1. First, whereas we are taught to come to God as to a father, & therefore in the name of his Sonne our Saviour Christ: we learne to lay the first ground of al our prayers, which is, to hold and maintaine the vnion and the distinction of the three persons in Trinity. This being the lowest and the first foundation of prayer, it is requisite that all which would pray aright, should haue this knowledge, rightly to beleue the Trinitie, and to know how the three persons agree, and how they are distinguished, and the order of them, how the Father is the first, the Sonne the second, and the holy Ghost the third: and therefore how the Father is to be called vpon in the name of the Son by the holy Ghost. By this the prayers of Gods Church, and the prayers of heathen men are distinguished, who inuocate God as a Creator out of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost. And hence it is manifest, that ignorant and silly people which doe not so much as dreame of the vnion, distinction, and order of the persons in Trinitie, make but a cold and slender kinde of praying.

2. Secondly, we may learne hereby that we are not in any wise to inuocate Saints & Angels, but onely the true Iehouah. The reason stands thus: This prayer is either a perfect platforme for all prayers, or not to say it were not, were an iniurie to our Saviour Christ to say it is so, is also to grant that it doth fully set downe to whom all prayers are to be made. Now, in these words there is set downe no inuocation but of God alone: For in prayer to be tearmed, Our Father, is proper to God, Esa. 63. 16. Thou art our father: though Abraham be ignorant of vs, and Israel know vs not: yet thou, O Lord, art our father and redeemer. Papists therefore that are the great patrons of inuocation of Saints, in their reformed breuaries & missals, deale very fondly: for first they pray to Mary, that she would pray to Christ for them, and when they haue so done, like iuglers they cometo Christ and pray vnto him, that hee would accept Maries prayers for them.

3. Thirdly, we learne that there can be no intercession betweene God and vs, but onely Christ. For here wee are taught to come to God not as a iudge, but as to a kinde and louing father. Now he is a father to vs onely by Christ: as for Angels and Saints and all creatures, they are not able to procure by any meanes that God should become a Father, no not so much as to one man.

4. Again, if the God to whom wee pray be a father, wee must learne to acquaint our selues with the promises which he hath made in his word, to quicken our hearts in all our prayers vnto him, and thereby to gather assurance to our selues and perswasion that he will grant our requests. For this word [Father] implies a readinesse and willingness in God to heare and be mercifull to our prayers. And a father cannot but must needs make promise offaouour to those that be his children, & therefore it cannot be that hee should call to God his father truly, which hath not in his heart this assurance, that God will fulfill all his promises made vnto him. Promises made to prayer, as these & such like, are to be marked; as follow. 2. Chr. 7. 14. If my people, among whom my name is called vpon, do humble themselves, and pray, and seek my presence, and turne from their wicked waies, then I will beare in heauen, and be mercifull vnto their sin. 2. Chr. 15. 2. The Lord is with you while ye be with him, & if ye forsake him, he will be found of you. Eia. 65. 24. Before they call I will answer, and while they speake I will heare. Mai. 7. 7. Ake and is: shall be given you seeks and ye shall finde, kyecke and it shall be opened. Luke 11. 13. If ye which are euill can giue good gifts vnto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father giue the holy Ghost to them that desire him? Rom. 10. 12. Hee that is Lord over all, is rich vnto all that call vnto him. Iam. 4. 8. Draw neere vnto God, and he will draw neere vnto you.

5. If God be a Father who is called vpon, then prayer is the note of Gods child. S. Luke and S. Paul set out the faithful seruants of God by this note, Act. 9. 14. He hath authoritie to binde all that call on my name. 1. Cor. 1. 2. To them that are sanctified by Iesus Christ, Saints: by calling with all that call on the name of our Lord Iesus Christ. And contrariwise, Psal. 14. 4 it is made one of the properties of an Atheist, 2. Peter to call on the name of God. And such persons as neither will nor can, or vse not heartily to pray to God, they may say that they are perfwaded there is a God, but in their doings they beare themselves as if they were no God.

6. He which would pray aright, must be like the prodigall child, that is, he must not onely confesse his sin, saying, Father I haue sinned against heauen, and against thee, &c. but also haue a full purpose neuer after to offend his father. For how can a childe call him father whom hee cares not continually to displease through his lewd conditions? He can not do it, neither can any father delight in such a child: therefore in prayer we must call to mind our lewdnesse and rebellions against our heavenly father; and with the Publican in heauynesse of soule say: Lord be mercifull vnto me a sinner. He which can truly doe this, is a kinde childe. If we consider our selues as we are by nature, wee are the children of the diuell: no no childe so like his father as we are like him; and in this estate we continually rebell against God, for the diuell hath all the heart, our whole ioy is to fenne and please him. A man that is to pray must thinke on this, and be grieued thereat. And happy, yea a thousand times happy are they, who haue grace giuen them to see their estate, and bewaile it. And further, it is not sufficient to confesse our finnes against our mercifull Father, but we must set downe with our selues neuer in such sort to offend him againe, and to leade a new life. This point is very profitable for these times. For many there bee when any croffe and sicknesse comes on them, will pray and promise repentance and all obedience to Gods word, if it shall please God to deliuer them: but this vially is but in hypocrisie, they dissemble with God and man. For when their sickness is past, like a dogge that had bene in the water, they shake their eares, and runne straight with all greedinesse to their former finnes. Is this to call God Father? No, he that doth this shall not haue God to be his Father: but the man that is wounded in his soule for his offences past, and carrieth a purpose in his heart neuer witting and willingly to offend God againe.

7. Lastly, here we are to obserue, that he which would pray, must be endued with the spirit of adoption: the actions whereof in the matter of prayer are twofold. The first, to moue the heart to cry & call on God as a Father. It is no easie thing to pray: for to a man of himselfe it is as easie to moue the whole earth with his hand: how then comes it that we pray? It is a blessed work of the spirit. Rom. 8. 15. We haue receiued the spirit of adoption: whereby we cry, Abba, that is, father. And Rom. 8. 26. Likewise the spirit helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray as we ought: but the spirit is himselfe maketh request. And Zach. 12. 10. the holy Ghost is called the spirit of grace, and of adoption, and prayers. Well then, the man that would pray, must haue Gods Spirit to be his schoole-master, to teach him to pray with groanes and sighes of the heart; for the words make not the prayer, but the groanes and desires of his heart: & a man praiseth for no more then he desires with the heart, and hee which desires nothing prates not at all, but spends lip-labour. The second worke of the spirit, is to assure vs in our consciences that we are in the state of grace, reconciled to God. Rom. 8. 16. The spirit of adoption beareth witness with our spirits, that we are the children of God. And this inward certificate of the spirit in all exercises of inuocation is very necessarie: for hee which wants this assurance, if he be secure & benumbed in his sins, will nor, and if he be touched in conscience for them, for his life dares not call God Father. Also this confutes the opinion of the Church of Rome, which teaches, that man is to doubt whether he be adopted or no. For how can a man truly call God Father, when he doubts whether he be the child of God or no?

It is a miserable kinde of praying to call God Father, and withall to doubt whether he is a Father. Indeed it is true that doubts will often arise, but it is our duty to strive against them, and not to yeeld to them. Yea but (say they) to be certaine of Gods mercy is presumption. I answer, if it be presumption, it is an holy presumption, because God hath bidden vs to call him Father.

Our Father.

1. The meaning.

THUS much of the argument of relation: now let vs proceed. It is further said, Our Father. And he is so tearmed, because he is the Father of Christ by nature; and in him the Father of euery beleeuerye: yea of the whole bodie of the Church.

Quest. Whether may it be lawful for vs in prayer to say, not our Father, but my Father? Ans. A christian may in private prayer say, My Father. This is warranted by the example of our Saviour, Mat. 26. 39. O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup passe from me. And Mat. 27. 46 My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? and Thomas prayed, My Lord, and my God. Loh. 20. 18. And Paul. 1. Cor. 1. 4. I giue thanks to my God, &c. And Gods promise is, Ier. 3. 19. Thou shalt calme, my Father. The meaning of Christ is not to bind vs to these words, but to teach vs that in our prayers we must not haue regard to our selues only, but also to our brethren, & therefore when wee pray for them in our private prayers, as for our selues, we put in practise the true meaning of these words.

2. The effect.

When we pray, we must not make request only for our selues and our own good, but for others also, as the Church & people of God, perswading our selues that we also are partakers of their prayers: and for the better clearing of this point, let vs search who they are for whom we are to pray.

Of men there be two sorts, some liuing, some dead. Of these two kinds, the liuing are to be prayed for, & there is no praying for the dead.

A man that is dead, knowes what shall be his estate eternally: if he died a wicked perso, that is an vnpentant sinner, his state shall be according in eternall torment: if he died, hauing repented of his finnes, then he shall rest with God in his kingdom. 1. Apoc. 14. 13. Blessed are they which die in the Lord, for they rest from their labours, & their work followeth. Gal. 6. 10. While we haue time let vs do good to all men. Where we may note that there is a time, namely, after death, when we cannot doe good to others.

Again, of the liuing, some are our enemies, & some our friends: our friends are they which are of the same religion, affection, and disposition. Foes are either priuate or publike. Publike foes, are either enemies to our country, as tyrants, traitours, &c. or enemies to our religion as Jewes, Turkes, Papists, Infidels, Atheists.

Now towards all these, how ought a man to behave himselfe in prayer? Ans. Hee is to pray for them all. Mat. 5. 44. Pray for them which hurt you, and persecute you. 1. Tim. 2. 1. I exhort that prayers, intercessions, &c. be made for all men, for kings, &c. Yet when Paul gave this commandement, we read not that there were any Christian kings, but all infidels. And the Jews are commanded to pray for Babylon, where they were captiue, 1. Jer. 29. 7. And seek the prosperitie of the citie, whither I have caused you to be carried captiue, and pray unto the Lord for it.

Quest. How and in what manner are we to pray for our enemies? Ans. Wee are to pray against their sinnes, counsels, enterprises, but not against their persons. Thus prayed David against Achitophel, 1. Sam. 15. 31. Lord, I pray thee turne the counsell of Achitophel to foolishnes. And thus did the Apostles pray against their persecutors. Act. 4. 29. O Lord behold their threatening, and graunt vnto thy seruants with all boldnesse to speake thy word.

Quest. David vseth imprecations against his enemies, in which he prayeth for their vtter confusion, as Psal. 59. and 109. &c. The like is done by Paul, Gal. 5. 12. 2. Tim. 4. 14. and Peter, Act. 8. 20. though afterwards hee mitigates his execration. But how could they doe it? Ans. 1. They were endued with an extraordinary measure of Gods spirit, and hereby they were enabled to discern their enemies, and certainly to iudge that their wickednesse and malice was incurable, and that they should neuer repent. And the like praier did the primitive church conceiue against Julian the Apostata, because they perceived him to be a malicious and desperate enemy. Secondly, they were endued with a pure zeale, and not carried with desire of reuenge against their enemies, intending nothing else but the glorie of God. Now for vs it is good that wee should suspect our zeale, because sinister affections, as hatred, enuy, emulation, desire of reuenge, will easily mingle themselves therewith.

Q. How farre forth may wee vse those Psalmes in which David vseth imprecations against his enemies? Ans. They are to be read and sung with these cauations: 1. Wee are to vse those imprecations indefinitely against the enemies of God and his Church: for wee may perfwade our selues that alwaies ther be some such obstinate enemies: but we must not apply them particularly. Secondly we must vse them (as Augustine saith) as certaine propheticall sentences of the holy Ghost, pronouncing the last sentence of destruction vpon sinfull impenitent sinners, which oppose themselves against Gods kingdome. 3. They may be vsed against our spiritual enemies, the flesh, the diuell, and his angels, and the world.

2. Furthermore whereas wee are taught to say, Our Father, this serueth to put vs in minde, that in praying to God, wee must bring loue to men with vs. Wee must all bee the children of one father, louingly disposed one to another. For how should hee call God his Father, who will not take the child of God for his brother? Matth. 5. 23. 24. When thou art to offer thy gift vnto God, if thy brother hath ought against thee: first be reconciled, and then come and offer thy gift. So also Esa. 1. 15. the Lord saith, that who they pray vnto him he will not heare. Why? because their hands are full of blood. In these times many men can be content formally to pray, but yet they will not leaue bribing, oppression, deceit, vltury, &c. The common song of the world is, Every man for himselfe, and God for vs. all: this is the common loue and care that men haue, each to other. The prayers of such are abominable, euen as the sacrifice of a dog, as Esa. 66. 3. saith. For how can they call God their Father, that haue no loue to their bretheren?

3. Thirdly, hence we may learne that God is no acceptor of persons. For this prayer is giuen to all men of what state or degree fouer. All then, as well poore as rich, vnlearned as learned, subiects as rulers, may say, Our Father. It is not with the Lord as it is with the world, but all are his children that doe beleue. The poore man hath as good interest in Gods kingdome, and may call God Father as well as the king. Therefore the weaker fort are to comfort themselves hereby, knowing that God is a Father to them as well as to Abraham, David, Peter. And such as are endued with more grace, must not therefore swell in pride, because they haue not God to be their Father more then their inferiours haue.

Which art in heauen.

1. The meaning.

Quest. How may God be said to be in heauen, seeing hee is infinite, and therefore must needs be euery where? 1. Kin. 8. 27. The heauen of heauens are not able to containe him. Ans. God is said to be in heauen: first, because his maiestie, that is, his power, wisdom, iustice, mercy, is made manifest from thence vnto vs. Psal. 115. 3. Our God is in heauen, and doth whatsoeuer hee will. Psal. 2. 4. He that dwelleth in heauen shall laugh them to scorn, and the Lord shall haue them in derision. Esa. 66. 1. Thus saith the Lord, Heauen is my throne, and the earth is my footstool. Secondly, after this life hee will manifest and exhibite the fulnesse of his glory to his Angels and Saints in the highest heuens, and that immediately and visibly.

2. The vses.

1. Hereby we first learne, that Romish pilgrimages, whereby men went from place to place to worship God, are vaine and foolish. The God to whom wee must pray is in heauen. Now let men trauell to what place, or country they will, they shall not come the neerer to heauen, or neerer to God by traueiling, seeing the earth is in euery part alike distant from heauen.

2. Sc-

2. Secondly, this ouerthrowes popish idolatry, as worshipping of croffes, crucifixes, roodes, &c. vnto put men in minde of God and Christ: We are taught to lift vp our eyes to heauen; seeing God is there: and how can we doo this, as long as our minds and eyes are poaring vpon an image made by mans art?

3. Again, we are here admonished to vie the action of prayer with as great reuerence as possible may be, and not to thinke of God in any earthly manner. Well reasons Salomon, Eccles. 5. 1. Be not rash with thy mouth to speake a word before God: why? he is in heauen, thou art in earth: therefore let thy words be few. This reuerence must appeare in holinesse of all our thoughts and affections, and in all comeliesse of gesture. And for this cause all wandering by-thoughts, and all vaine-babbling is to be avoided: but how goes the case with vs, that on the time appointed come to the assemblies to pray? Many, by reason of their blindness pray without vnderstanding. Many, when they are present at prayer, yet haue their hearts occupied about other matters, about their goods and worldly businesse: such men haue no ioy or gladnes in praying: it is a burthen to them. Many come to the assembly for custome only, or for feare of punishment: if they might be left free they could finde in their hearts not to pray at all. But let all such men know that this manner of praying is a very grieuous sin, nay greater then mocking of father or mother, killing or stealing, for it is directly against God, the other against men. This sin because it is against the first Table, and therefore more hard to be discerned, it is lightly esteemed, and it lesse troubles the consciences of ignorant men: yea, as it is indeede, so it is to be esteemed as a disgrace and plaine mockerie of Gods maiestie. Wherefore seeing God is in heauen, away with all drowfie and dead praying, let vs come with reuerence in our hearts before the Lord.

4. Again, we are here to consider that our hearts in prayer must mount vp into heauen, and there be present with the Lord. Psal. 25. 1. Vnto thee O Lord lift I vp my soule. The little child is neuer well but when it is in the fathers lap, or vnder the mothers wing: and the children of God are neuer in better case, then when in affliction and spiritt they can come in to the presence of their heauenly Father, and by prayer, as it were to creepe into his bosome.

5. And here we must further learne, specially to seeke for heauenly things, and to aske earthly things, so farre forth as they serue to bring vs to an euertlasting and immortall inheritance in heauen, to which we are called, 1. Pet. 1. 4.

6. Lastly, whereas our Father is in heauen, we are to learne, that our life on earth is but a pilgrimage, and that our desire must be to attaine to a better country, namely, heauen it selfe, and that we must vse all meanes continually to come vnto it. In a word, to make an end of the preface: in it is contained a double stay or prop of all our prayers. The one, is to beleue that God can grant our requests; because he is almightie, and thus much is signified when hee is said to be in heauen. The second is, to beleue that God is ready and willing to grant the same; and this we are taught in the title Father, which serueth to put vs in minde that God accepts our prayers. Job. 16. 23. and hath a care of vs in all our miseries and necessities. Matth. 6. 32. and pitieth vs as much as any earthly father can pitié his child. Psal. 103. 13.

Yet must we not imagine that God will indeede giue vnto vs whatsoever we doe vpon our own heauie fancies and desires: but we must in our praers haue recourse to the promise of God; and according to the tenour thereof must we frame and square our petitions. Things promised absolutely, as all graces necessary to saluation, may be asked absolutely: and things promised with condition, as graces lesse necessary, and temporall blessings are to be asked with condition, namely, so farre forth as they shall be for Gods glorie in vs, & for our good: except it be so that God promise any temporall blessing absolutely, as he promised issue to Abraham in his old age: The kingdome to David after Saul: A deliuerance from captivity in Babylon after 70. yeeres to the Israelites.

Again, the preface serueth to lift vs vp in loue and feare in the hearts of them that are about to pray: Loue, because they pray to a Father; Feare, because he is full of maiestie in heauen.

Hallowed be thy Name.

1. The Coherence.

Thus much of the preface: now follow the petitions. They be fixe in number; the three first concerne God, the three last our selues. The three former petitions are againe diuided into two parts: the first concernes Gods glory it selfe; the other two, the meanes whereby Gods glory is manifested and enlarged among men. For Gods name is glorified among men when his kingdome doth come, and his will is done.

Quest. Why is this petition, Hallowed be thy name, set in the first place? Ans. Because Gods glory must be preferred before all things, because it is the end of all creatures, and of all the counsels of God. Prov. 16. 4. The Lord hath made all things for his owne sake: yea; euen the wicked for the day of euill. And from the order of the petitions here ariseth a worthy instructio, namely, that euery one in all things they take in hand, are to propound to themselves and to intend the glory of God: The reason is this: The end which God hath appointed to all our doings, we are to propound to our selues: but God hath appointed that the highest end of all our doings should be his glory: therefore our hearts must bee to seeke it first of all. That God will haue his name glorified by vs, appea-

reth in this; that he punisheth those which of obduracy set themselves to dishonour him, or by negligence did not sanctifie him, while they should haue done so. Herod sitting in his royalty, made such an oration, that the people cried, The voice of a God, and not of a man: and immediately the Angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not glory to God. Act. 12. 23. And Moses, because he did not sanctifie the Lord in the presence of the children of Israel, therefore he came not into the land of promise; yet hee did not altogether faile in doing of it. Thus we may see by these punishments, and also by the order of the petitions, that it is our dutie to prefer the glory of God before all things else.

Quest. Whether are wee to preferre the glory of God, before the saluation of our soules? Ans. If the case stand thus, that Gods name must be dishonoured, or our soules condemned, we must account the glorie of God more precious then the saluation of our soules. This is manifest in the order of the petitions. The petitions that concerne Gods glorie are first, and the petitions that concerne directly our saluation are the fift and sixt. Whereby we are taught, that before God should want any part of his glory, we must let body and soule and all goe, that God may haue all his glory. This affection had Moses, Exod. 32. 31. when he said, Either forgive them, or if thou wilt not, blot my name out of thy booke.

In this petition as also in the rest, we must obiect three things: the first, is the meaning of the words: the second, the wants which men must learne to bewaile: the third, the graces of God which are to be desired.

1. The meaning.

Very few among the people can giue the right meaning of the words of this prayer. They pretend, that seeing God knows their good meaning, it is sufficient for them to say the words and to meane well. But faith being one of the grounds of prayer, and there being no faith without knowledge, neither can there be prayer without knowledge, and therefore ignorant men are to learne the right meaning of the words.

Name.

Name in this place signifieth.

1. God himselfe, 1. Kings 5. 5. He shall build an house to my name.
2. His attributes, as his iustice, mercy, &c.
3. His workes, creatures, and iudgements.
4. His word.
5. His honor & praise arising from all these.

For God is knowne to vs by all these, as men are knowne by their names; and as all a mans praise and glory lies in his name, so all the glory of God in these.

Hallowed.

To hallow is to seuer or set apart any thing from the common vse, to some proper & peculiar end: as the Temple was hallowed, that is, set apart to an holy vse; and the Priests were sanctified, that is, set apart to the seruice of God. And all that beleeue in Christ are sanctified, that is, set apart from sinne to serue God. In like manner Gods name is hallowed, when it is put apart from obliuion, contempe, prophanaion, pollution, blasphemie, and all abuses to an holy, reuerent, and honourable vse, whether we thinke, speake of, or vse it any manner of way, Leuit. 19. 3. Exod. 38. 23.

Quest. How can a sinful man hallow Gods name which is pure and holy in it selfe? Ans. Wee doe not here pray that we might make Gods name holy, as though wee could adde something vnto it to make it holy: but that we might be meanes to declare and make manifest to the world by the right vse of it, that it is holy, pure, and honourable. The like phrase is vsed, Matth. 23. 19. Wisdom is iustified by her children, that is, acknowledged and declared to be iust, Exod. 38. 23.

The scope therefore of the first petition, is an earnest desire that we might set forth Gods glory, whatsoeuer become of vs: and it may be expressed thus: O Lord open our eyes that we may aright know thee, and acknowledge the greatnes of thy power, wisdom, iustice, & mercy, which appears in thy titles, words, creatures, and iudgements: and grant that when we vse any of these, we may therein honour thee, & vse them reuerently to thy glory.

2. The wants which are to be bewailed.

1. The wants, which we in this place are taught to bewaile are specially foure. The first, is an inward and spirituall pride of our hearts; a sinne that none or very few can see in themselves, unless the Lord open their eyes. When our first parents were tempted in paradise, the diuell tolde them they should be as Gods: which lesson not only they, but we haue learned: and we conceiue of our selues, as little Gods, though to the world wee shew it not. This hidden pride, when other sinnes die, it begins to get strength, and to shew it selfe; and appears in vaine thoughts, continually on euery occasion ascending in the minde. As may appear in the Pharisee, whose thoughts were these when he prayed thus within himselfe, Luk. 18. 11. O God I thank thee that I am not as other men, extortioners, vnjust, adulterers, or euen as this Publican, &c. And as this was in him, so it is in vs till God giues grace: for so that men may haue praise and glory in the world, they care not for Gods glory though it be defaced. Wee must therefore learne to discern this hidden corruption, and to mourne for it: so that doth poison and hinder all good desires of glorifying God, so long as it doth or shall preuaile in the heart.

2. Secondly, we are taught here to bewaile the hardnesse of our hearts: whereby we are hindered from knowing God aright, and from discerning the glory and maiestie of God in his creatures. Marke 6. ver. 52. The disciples through through the hardnesse of their hearts; could not see Gods power in the miracle of feeding many thousands with a few loaves, though themselves were instruments of it, and the food did increase in their hands. Our redemption, what a wonderfull worke is it, but how few consider of it: or regard it? If wee see a man haue more wit, wealth, or honour, then we haue, wee straight wonder at him: but beholding Gods creatures, we see nothing in them, because we doe not goe higher to acknowledge the loue, power, wisdom, and iustice of the Creator. And this is the cause why Gods name is so slenderly honoured among men.

3. The third corruption is our great ingratitude, for the Lord hath made heauen and earth, and all other creatures to serue man: yet he is the most vnthankfull of all creatures. Bestow many iewels, or a kings ranfome on a dead man, he will neuer retorne any kindness: so men being dead in sin, deale with God. Commonly men are like the swine that runne with their groines and eate vp the mast, but neuer looke vp to the tree from whence it falls. But the godly are with David, to feele this want in themselves, and to beseech God to open, & as it were to vnlooke their lips, that they may in deauour to be thankfull to God, Psal. 91. 15.

4. The fourth is the vngodlines and the innumerable wants that be in our liues, and the sinnes committed in the world. *Psal. 115. 136. Mine eyes (saith David) gush out with riues of water, because men keepe not thy lawes. The sea for is, because he which liues in sin, reproches Gods name: euen as an euill child dishonours his father. Now some will say that this cannot be, because our sinnes cannot hurt God: True indeede: yet are they a cause of scandalizing Gods name among men: for as wee honour him by our good workes, so we dishonour him by our offences. Matth. 5. 16. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in heauen. *1. Tim. 4. 12. Graces to be desired.

5. The graces to be desired, and to be prayed for at Gods hand, are three. The first is the knowledge of God, that is, that wee might know him as he hath reuealed himselfe in his word, workes, and creatures. For how shall any glorifie God before he know him? Our knowledge in this life is imperfect. Exod. 33. Moses may not see Gods face, but his hinder parts. 1. Corin. 13. 12. We may see God as men doe through spectacles, in his word, Sacraments, and creatures: And therefore as Paul prayed for the Colossians, Col. 1. 10. That they might increase in the knowledge of God: so we are taught to pray for our selues in this petition.

2. A desire that the zeale of Gods glorie may be kindled in our hearts, & that we may be kept from prophanaion and abusing of his name. Psal. 69. 9. The zeale of thine house hath eaten me up. Psal. 11. My heart shall utter, or call up a good master, I will speake in my words of the king. Here the spirit of God borrowes a comparison from men; thus: As hee which hath somewhat lying heauy in his stomacke, is neuer quiet till he haue cast it vp vpon the care and desire to glorifie Gods name multie vp vpon a mans heart as an heauy burden: and he is not to be at ease and quiet with himselfe, till he be disburdened, in founding forth Gods praise. Luther saith well, that this is Sancitacrulus: that is, an holy fire: & it is no hurt continually to haue our hearts overcharged thus.

3. A desire to leade a godly and vpright life before God and men. We see then that in some great calling vnder honorable personages, will for order and behaue themselves, as they may please and honour their matters: euen so multie our liues be well ordered, & we are to labour to walke worthy of the Lord (as Paul speaks) that we may honour our heavenly Father.

Thy Kingdome come.

1. The Coherence.

His petition depends on the former most excellently. For in it is laid downe the meanes to procure the first. Gods name must be hallowed among men: but how is it done? by the erecting of Gods Kingdome in the hearts of men. Wee cannot glorifie God while he rule in our hearts by his word and spirit.

2. The meaning.

[Thy] This word doth put vs in minde that there is two kingdomes: one Gods; and that is the kingdome of heauen: the other the diuels, called the kingdome of darknesse. Coloss. 1. 13. For when all had sinned in Adam, God laid this punishment on all, that seeing they could not be content to obey their Creator, they should be in bondage vnder Satan, so that by nature we are all the children of wrath, and the diuell holdes vp the scepter, of his kingdome in the hearts of men. This kingdome is spirituall, and the pillars of it are ignorance, error, impiety, and all disobedience to God, in which the diuell wholly delights; which also are it were the lawes of his kingdome. Blinde ignorant people cannot abide this doctrine, that the diuell should rule in their hearts: they spit at the naming of him; and say, that they defie him with all their hearts: but whereas they lye in sinne, and practise it as occasion is offered, though they cannot discern of themselves, yet they make plaine proofe, that they fit in the kingdome of sinne and darknesse, and are flat vassals of Satan, and shall to continue till Christ the strong man come and binde him and cast him out. And this is the estate of all the children of Adam in themselves. Wherefore our Sauour in this petition teacheth vs to consider our naturall estate; and to pray that he would giue vs his spirit to set vs at libertie in the kingdome of his owne Sonne.

Kingdome Gods kingdome in Scripture is taken two waies. First, generally, & it signifies that administration by which the Lord govermeth all things, yea euen the duels them selves. Of which kingdome mention is made in the end of this prayer. And in the Psal. 97. vers. 11. The Lord reigneth, let the earth reioyce. Against is taken more specially, and then it signifieth the administration of Christ the head of the Church, in which he frames men by his word and spirit to the subiection of the same word. And so it is taken in this petition.

In a kingdome there are foure things to be noted. 1. There must be a King. 2. There must be subiects. 3. There are lawes. 4. Authoritie.

In this kingdome Christ is the King; it is he to whom the Father hath giuen all authoritie, in heauen and earth.

In this kingdome all are not subiects, but such as are willing to giue free and franke obedience to Gods word; for at the least, though their hearts be not so sound, make an outward profession of it.

The lawes of this kingdome, is the word of God in the bookes of the old and new Testament. Therefore it is called the kingdome of heauen, Matth. 13. 24. The Gospell of the kingdome, Marke. 1. 14. The rod of his mouth, Esay. 53. 1. As asking by his lawes brings his people in order, and keeps them in subiection; so Christ by his word, and the preaching of it, as it were by a mightie arme, drawes his elect into his kingdome, and fashions them to all holy obedience.

The power and authoritie is that, whereby Christ conuerts effectually those which are to be conuerted by the inward operation of his spirit, and glorifies himselfe in the confusion of the rell.

Kingdome being taken thus specially, is also two-fold. The first is the kingdom of grace of which mention is made, Rom. 14. 17. The kingdome of God standeth not in meate and drinke, but in righteousness; that is, the assurance of our iustification before God, in the righteousness of Christ; Peace of conscience, which proceeds from this assurance; and joy in the holy Ghost, which comes from them both. In this kingdome all men liue not, but onely those that are subiect to Christ, obedient to the lawes of his kingdome, & ruled by his authoritie, and are continually taught in his word by his spirit. But those that refuse to liue according to the lawes of this king, and chuse to liue at their owne libertie, are in the kingdome of darkness, that is, sinne and Satan.

The second, is the kingdome of glorie in heauen, which is the blessed estate of all Gods people, in which God himselfe shall be all in all vnto them. And the former kingdome of grace is an entrance and preparation to this kingdome of glorie.

Come Gods kingdome comes, when it takes place and is established and confirmed in mens hearts, and made manifest to all the people, the impediments being remoued.

Quest. This coming implies a stopping; but how should Gods kingdome be hindered?

Ans. Kingdome in this place is not taken for that absolute and soueraigne power of God whereby he rules all things, for that cannot be hindered; but for the kingdome of grace, which in the vñg of the outward meane, as ministers, word & Sacraments, may be hindered by the diuell, the world, and mans corruption.

3. The wants which are to be bewailed.

The wants, which we in this petition are to moune for, are of two sorts: some concerne our owne felices, some others. That which concerns our owne persons is a bondage and slavery vnder sinne and Satan. This bondage indeede is weakened in Gods seruants, but none is wholly freed from it in this life. Paul complains that he is sold vnder sinne, and cries pitifully, O miserable man that I am, who shall deliuer me from this body of death?

Quest. What difference is then betwene the godly and the wicked? Ans. The euil & vngodly man in the very midst of his bondage hath a merry heart: sin is no trouble to him, may it is meate & drinke to him. But the godly man is otherwise minded: who considering the power of the diuell, & his craft in manifold fearful temptations, and seeing the pronenes of his rebellious nature euer & anon to start away from God, is grieved and confounded in himselfe; and his heart bleedes within him that he doth offend so mercifull a Father.

Many men liue in this world & that many yeares, & yet neuer feeles this bondage vnder Satan and sin. Such vndoubtedly cannot tell what this prayer means: but he that would haue the right vse of this petition, must be acquainted with his owne estate, and be touched in his conscience, that the flesh and the diuell beare such sway in him. As the poore captiue is alwayes creeping to the prison doore, alwayes labouring to get off his bolts & fetters, and to escape out of prison: so must we alwayes crie to the Lord for his spirit to free vs out of this bondage or prison of sin & corruption; and euery day come neerer the prison doore, looking when our blessed Saviour will vñbind vs of all the fetters of sinne and Satan, and fully erect his kingdome in vs.

2. The wants which concerne others are two-fold. The former is the want of the good meane which serue for the furthering of the kingdom of Christ, as preaching, Sacraments, and discipline. When wee shall see a people without knowledge, & without good guides & teachers, or when we see one stand vp in the congregation notable to teach, here is matter for mourning. This petition puts vs in mind to beuaile these wants. Our Saviour when he saw the Iewes as sheepe without a shepheard he had compassiō on them; & he wept ouer Ierusalem, because they knew not the things which belonged to their peace, Luk. 19. 41, 42. Therefore when preachers want to hold vp Gods scepter before the people, and to hold out the word, which is as it were the arme of God to the pulmen from the bondage of the diuell to the

kingdome of Christ; then it is time to say, Lord let thy kingdome come.

3. The third want which we are to bewaile is, that there be so many impediments & hinderances of the kingdome of grace, as the diuell and all his angels, their instruments, the Pope, the Turke, and all the rest of the professed wicked of the world, which by subtilly incitements and tyranny, keepe backe and repell the meane whereby Christ ruleth as a king in his Church. Whē the diuell sees one that was sometime of his kingdome, but to cast a looke towards the heavenly Ierusalem, he straightway rageth against him, & labours quite to ouerthrow him. Wherefore in regard of al these impediments, we must pray, Thy kingdome come.

4. Graces to be desired.

1. In this petition we are taught first, that we are to haue a feruent desire, and to hunger, that God would giue vs his spirit to raigne and rule in our hearts, and to bow them to all obedience and subiection of his will; and further, whereas our hearts haue bin as it were filthy styes and stables of the diuell, that hee would renew them, and make them fit temples to entertaine his holy spirit. Psal. 51. 10. 12. Create in me a cleane heart, O God, and renew a right spirit in me, &c. Stablish me with thy free spirit. If we shall consider the conuersion of the wicked and the godly, and their corrupt hearts together, wee shall see little difference but in this, that the wicked is delighted and glad to sinne: but the godly do writhe, as for life and death with their temptations, and doe resist the diuell, and doe desire the grace of Gods spirit, and cry to heauen to be freed from this bondage, howeuer their hearts are alwayes ready to rebell against God.

2. Forasmuch as the kingdome of grace is erected in Gods Church here vpon earth, in this petition we are commanded to pray for the Church of God, and the parts thereof. Psal. 122. 6. Pray for the peace of Ierusalem: they shall prosper that loue thee. Esay 62. 7. The which are the Lords remembrancers, giue him no rest, until hee set up Ierusalem the praise of the world.

And that Gods Church may flourish and be in good estate, we are to pray for Christian Kings & Princes, that God would blesse them, and increase the number of them. For they are as nursing fathers: and nursing mothers to the Church. And we especially are bound to pray for the Kings most excellent Maiestie, as also for other Christian Kings, that they may be blessed, & Gods kingdome by them aduanced.

And againe, because ministers are the Lords watchmen in the Church, we are here also put in mind to seeke their good; and to pray that their hearts may be set for the building of Gods kingdome, for the beating downe of the kingdome of sinne and Satan, and for the suauing of the soules of his people. And the rather because the diuell labourerh night & day to overthrow them in this glorious worke, & to ouerturne them in their ministry; as appeareth

A in Zach. 3. 1. When Iehoshua the high priest stood before the Angell of the Lord; Satan stood at his right hand, namely, to resist him. Therefore also we are to pray for them, that the Lord would keepe them, and furnish them with gifts, and withall make them faithfull. For where vision faileth, the people are left naked, faith Salomon. 2. Thess. 3. 1. Brethren, pray for vs, that the word of the Lord may haue a free passage, and be glorified.

Thirdly, wee must pray for all Christian Schooles of learning. Howeuer some thinke but basely of them; yet they are the ordinary meane to maintain the ministry, and so the Church of God. A man that hath diuers orchards, will also haue a seminary full of young plants to maintain it. Schooles, they are as seminaries to Gods Church, without which the Church falls to decay: because they serue to make a supply of ministers.

3. Thirdly, we are to desire, that the Lord would hasten the second coming of Christ, as the Saints in heauen pray, Come Lord Iesus, come quickly; and therefore the godly are said to loue the coming of Christ. 2. Tim. 4. 8. A penitent sinner so abhorres his own corruptions, and the irkefome temptations of Satan, that in this respect hee desires that Christ would hasten his particular coming to him by death, for no other cause, but that hee might make an end of sinning and displeasing God.

Thy will be done.

IN the second petition, we desired that God would let his kingdome come, viz. That he would rule in our hearts. If hee then must raigne, we must be his subiects: and therefore here we craue, that being his subiects we may obey him, and doe his will. Mat. 7. 6. If I be a father, where is my honour? If I be a master, where is my feare?

2. The meaning. Here it signifieth Gods word written in the old & new Testament: For in his word his will is renewed. Of the whole will of God there be three special points, which are in this place meant. 1. To beleeue in Christ, Iohn 6. 40. This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Sonne, and beleeueth in him, should haue euertlasting life. 2. Sanctification of body and soule. 1. Thess. 4. 3. This is the will of God, that you should be sanctified, &c. 3. The bearing of affliction in this life. Rom. 8. v. 28. Those which hee knew before, hee did predestinate to be made like to the image of his owne Sonne. Phil. 2. 10. That I might know him and the vertue of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his afflictions, and be made conformable to his death.

Thy will Not mine: for mans owne will is wicked and corrupt, yea, it is flat enmity to God. Rom. 8. vers. 7.

Done That is, obeyed and accomplished of men. Then the effect of the prayer is this:

Ff 4 O Lord,

O Lord, seeing thou art our King, give vs grace to shew our felues good subiects in obeying thy will.

3. The wants to be prayed againſt.

Here first we are to bewaile this, that our hearts are so prone to rebellion & disobedience of Gods commandements. Put a match to a heape of gun-powder, on a sudden it will be all on a flame; and as long as we add matter to the fire, it burnes: so by nature we are most ready to sinne, so soone as the least occasion is given. David had experience of this when he prayed, Knit my heart to thee O Lord: &c. Psal. 86. 11. and Incline my heart to thy commandements. Psal. 119. 36. Those which find not this want in themselves, & the like affect to bewaile it, are in a miserable and dangerous case: euen as a man that hath a great disease vpon him, and knowes not of it.

2. Again, we must here bewaile the sins of the world, as ignorance, schismes, hypocrisie, pride, ambition, contempt of Gods word, couetousnes, oppression, want of loue of God and his word, &c. 2. Pet. 1. 7. For we were vexed, and his righteous heart was vexed with the unclean commiseration of the Sodomites from day to day: so ought our soules to be vexed and grieved continually at the wickednesse of our time, and wee are to send vp our prayers to God for vnbelieuing and vnrepentant sinners, that they may be brought to the obedience of Gods will. Ezech. 9. 4. In a common iudgement vpon Ierusalem, They are marked in the forehead, that inuout and cry for the abominations that be done in the midst of it.

3. Here also we must humble our felues for our vniueniueſſe of minde, and impatience when God layes any croſſe on vs. It is Gods will that we should suffer affliction, and withall humble our felues vnder his mightie hand. Our Sauiour prayed that the cup might be taken away, but with submission to his fathers will. Luke. 22. 42. And this David had learned when he said, But if thou say, I haue no delight in chace, behold, here I am, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eyes. 2. Sam. 5. 26.

4. Graces to be desired.

Here first thing which wee are here to desire is, that wee may haue grace to deny our felues, wils, and affections: because herein we are vnlike to God, and like the diuell. This is the first Lesson that our Sauiour doth giue his Disciples, that they must deny themselves and follow him.

2. The second thing is the knowledge of Gods will: for other wise how shall we doe it? How can that seruant please his master, which cannot tell what he would haue done of him? Most men will haue bookes of Statutes in their houses, & if they be to deale in any great matter, they will doe nothing before they haue looked on the Statute. In like manner men should haue the Bible, that is, the booke of Gods Statutes in their houses; the lawes of God must be the men of our counsell: before euery action wee are to search what is the will of God, and then to doe it. Here then wee are taught to vse the meanes, and to pray for knowledge.

3. Again, we are taught to haue a desire in our hearts, and an endeavour in our liues, in all things to performe obedience to Gods word in our liues and conuersations, and in our particular callings.

4. Lastly, we desire patience and strength, when it shall please God at any time to exercise vs with the croſſe, as Paul prays for the Colofians, That God would strengthen them by the power of his might, vnto all patience and long-suffering with ioyfulness. Coloss. 1. 12.

5. Error confuted.

The Church of Rome teacheth, that men by nature haue free will to doe good: and that men being stirred vp by the holy Ghost; can of themselves will that which is good. But if this were so, why might we not pray, Let my will be done, so farre forth as the will of man shall agree with Gods will? but this cannot be, as we see in the tenour of this petition.

In earth as it is in heauen.

1. The meaning.

Having shewed the meaning of this petition, Thy will be done: now we are to speak of the condition, which shewes in what manner we should doe it. For the question might be: how wee would doe Gods will: and the answer is, that his will must be done in earth as it is in heauen.

Heaven By heauen here is meant the soules of faithfull men departed, and the elect Angels, Psal. 103. 20. Praise the Lord ye his angels, that excell in strength: that doe his commandments in obeying the voice of his word.

Earth By earth is vnderstood nothing but men on earth, because all other creatures in their kind obey God: onely man he is rebellious and disobedient. Then the meaning is, Let thy will be done by vs on earth, as the Angels and Saints departed doethy will in heauen.

Quest. Doe we here desire to do the will of God in that perfection it is done by Angels? must wee be as perfect as they? Ans. The words here used in earth as it is, &c. do not signifie an equality (as though our obedience could in this life be in the same degree of perfection with Angels) but a similitude, standing in the like manner of obedience. Now it may be asked, in what manner doe the Angels obey God? Ans. They doe the will of God willingly, speedily, and faithfully: and this is signified, in that they are said in the Scriptures to be winged, and to stand continually beholding the face of our heavenly Father. And this is the manner in which we desire to performe Gods will.

2. The wants to be desired.

Wee are here admonished to bee displeased with our felues, for our slacke and imperfect obedience to God, and for our

our hypocrisie, priuie pride, presumption, deadnes of spirit, & many other wants which break out when we are in doing Gods will. There is no feaint of God, but hath wants in his best works: so we must vnderstand Paul, when he saith, To will is present with me, but I finde no meanes to performe that which is good. Rom. 7. 18: where he signifies thus much in effect, that he could begin good things, but not perfect them, and goe through such, as we say. When the godly doe good, as heare, speake Gods word, pray, praise God, &c. they performe things acceptable to God: but in these actions they finde matter of mourning; namely, the imperfection of the worke: therefore David prayeth, Psal. 143. 2. Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant. And here we may see how farre wide the Church of Rome is, that holdeth good workes to be any way meritorious, that be euery way imperfect. If the men of that Church had grace, they might see that the corruptions of the flesh were gyues and fetters about their legges, that when they would faime run the wayes of Gods commandments, they are constrained to halt downe right, and to traile their loynes after them.

3. Graces to be desired.

This grace heretoe desired, is sinceritie of heart, or a ready and constant purpose and endeavour not to sinne in any thing, but to doe Gods will, so as wee may keepe a good conscience before God and men. Act. 24. 16. And for this cause I endeavour alwayes to haue a cleare conscience towards God, and towards men. This must we hunger after, and pray for: if seeing it is not sufficient to abstaine from euill, but also to do good, and in doing good, strue to come to perfection. A conformitie with Angels in this darte is to be fought for, and to be begun in this life, that in the life to come we may be like them in glory.

Giue vs this day our daily bread.

1. The Coherence.

This much of the three first petitions which concerne God: now follow the other three, which concerne our felues. In which order we learne to pray for those things which concerne God absolutely: and for those things which concerne our felues, not absolutely, but so farre forth as they shall make for Gods glory, the building of his kingdome, and the doing of his will.

But how depends this petition on the former? In the first wee are taught to pray that Gods name might be hallowed: which is done when God reignes in our hearts, and his will is done. Now further, his will is obeyed in three things: first, by depending on his providence for the things of this life: secondly, by depending on his mercy for the pardon of sinne: thirdly, by depending on his power and might, in resisting temptations. And thus Gods will is obeyed.

2. The meaning.

Bread] By bread in this place, many of the Ancient Fathers; as also the Papists at this day, vnderstand the element of bread in the Sacrament, and the bodie of Christ which is the bread of life. But that cannot be: for S. Luke call it bread for the day, that is, bread sufficient to preſerue vs for the present day: and by this he makes it manifest, that the words of this petition must be vnderstood not of spirituall, but of bodily food: and the bread of life is more directly asked in the second or fourth Petition. As for the opinion of Erasmus, who thinks that in this so heavenly a prayer, made to God the Father, there should be no mention made of bread, that is, of earthly things, which euen the Gentiles bestow on their children; it is vaine and frivolous: For it is Gods will that we should not cast the care of heavenly things onely, but all our care vpon him: 1. Pet. 5. 7. And hee hath elsewhere commanded that earthly things should be asked at his hand, 1. King. 8. 31. and the same hath beene asked in the prayer of Isaac, Gen. 28. 26. and Salomon, Prov. 30. 7. And whereas the Lords prayer is a perfect platforme of praier, temporall blessings must haue some place there, vlesse we will ascribe the haueing and inioying of them to our owne industry, as though they were no gifts of God, which to thinke were great impietie.

By bread then we must vnderstand properly a kind of food made of the floure of graine that is baked & eaten: and thus it must be taken in those places of Scripture where bread is opposed to water or Wine: and by a figure more generally it signifies all things whereby temporall life is preferred: in this sense goates milke is called bread, Prov. 27. 27. and the fruit of trees, Ier. 11. 19. and all things that passe to and fro in trafficke, Prov. 31. 14. And folliwise in this place by this one meane of sustaining our bodies and temporall liues, all other means whatsoeuer must be vnderstood, as meat, drinke, cloathing, health, liberty, peace, &c.

And whereas our Sauiour Christ vnder the name of bread, and not vnder the name of any other plentiful or dainty food, teacheth vs to aske temporall blessings; he doth it for two causes. The first is, that we might hereby learne frugality and moderation in our diet, apparel, houses; & be content if we haue no more but bread, that is, things necessary to preſerue life, which Paul comprehends vnder food and cloathing. For we are taught in this petition to aske no more. We must not with the Israelites murmur, because they had nothing but Manna.

Quest. Must wee then vse Gods creatures onely for necessitie? Ans. We may vse them not onely for necessitie, but also for honest delight and pleasure. Psal. 104. 15. God giues wine to make glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face iune. And Iob. 12. 3. our Sauiour Christ allowed of the feast of Marie, which tooke a pound of oymnt of Spikenard very costly, and annointed his very feete, so that all the house was filled with the smell, though Iudas did esteeme it wast. Yet if it so fall out that the Lord doe graunt vs but bread, that is, so much as shall hold body and soule together, we must thankfully content our selues therewith. 1. Tim. 6. 8. Therefore when we haue food and rayment, let vs content vs therewith. This contentation was practised of Iacob. Gen. 28. 20.

A second cause is to teach vs that there is a particular providence. All men willingly confesse the general providence of God ouer all things; but beside that, we must acknowledge another more speciall providence, euen in the least things that can be, because euery morsell of bread which we eat, would no more nourish vs then a piece of earth, or a stone vnto lesse God giue his blessing vnto it.

Dist. The word in the original is thus much in effect, Bread is your essence or substance; then the meaning is, giue vs such bread from day to day, as may nourish our substances. Thus prayeth Agur. Prou. 30. 8. Feed me with food convenient for mee. Some there are which put an Angelicall perfection in fasting; but we are taught in Scriptures, that as aboue all things we care to seeke for life eternall; so wee must in this life haue care to sustaine and maintaine our naturall life, that we may haue convenient space and time to repent, and prepare our selues to the kingdom of heauen. Fasting in it selfe as it is an abstinence from meat is no part of Gods worship, but in it owne nature; a thing indifferent; and therefore it is to be used so farre forth as it shall further vs in Gods seruice, and not further. And seeing wee are taught to pray for such food as shall preserve nature, and maintaine the vitall blood, we ought not to vse fasting to the hindrance and destruction of nature.

Our bread. 1. Quest. How is bread ours? Answer. Paul shewes how, 1. Cor. 3. 22. We are Christs, and all things are yours. So then by means of Christ, bread is called ours. For God hauing giuen Christ to vs, doth in him and by him giue all things else to vs. 2. Quest. How may I know that the things I enioy are mine by Christ, & that I doe not vsurpe them?

Ans. 1. Tim. 4. 4. Paul saith that the creatures of God are good, and that the vse of them is sanctified to vs by the word and prayer. Then if we haue the word of God to tell vs that we may enioy and vse them; and also if we pray to God for the right and pure vse of them, we are no vsurpers, but indeede right owners of them, not only before men, but also before God. 3. Quest. If the creatures must be made ours by Christ, how comes it to passe that the vngodly haue such abundance of them? Ans. We lost the title and interest of the creatures in Adam; yet God of his mercie bestowes temporarie blessings vpon the vniust as well as vpon the iust; but for all that, vnto lesse they bee in Christ, and hold the title of them by him, they shall in the end turne to their greater condemnation.

And whereas we call it our bread, we learne that euery man must liue of his owne calling and his owne goods. Here also is condemned all oppression, stealing, lying, cogging, and other such deceitfull meanes, which men vse to get wealth and goods. Many thinke it no sin to prouide for their families in such order, but in laying this petition they pray against themselves. 2. Thess. 3. 10. He that laboureth not, let him not eat. Eph. 4. 28. He which stole, let him steale no more, but rather labour with his hands the thing which is good.

This day We say not here this weeke, this moneth, this age, but this day: what meane this? May not wee prouide for the time to come? Answer. It is lawful, yea a man is bound in good manner to prouide for time to come. Act. 11. 28. The Apostles prouided for the Church in Iudea against the time of dearth foretold by Agabus. And Ioseph in Egypt in the yeares of plentie stored vp against the yeares of famine. Wherefore in these words our Satiour his meaning is onely to condemne all distrustfull care, that distracts the mindes of men, and to teach vs to rest on his fatherly goodnesse from day to day in euery season: this is noted vnto vs, Exod. 16. 19, 20. where the Israelites were commanded to gather no more Manna then would serue for one day, and if they did, it putrified. Whereby God taught them to rest on his providence euery particular day and not on the meanes.

Give vs Not mee. This serueth to teach vs that a man must not onely regard himselfe, but also bee mindfull of others. For a man that hath wealth is made a steward to distribute his goods to the poore and the good of Gods Church. True loue seekes not her owne things; the branches of the vine are laden with clusters of grapes, not for themselves, but for others; the candle spends it selfe to giue others light.

Give If bread be ours, wherefore are we to aske it? it may seeme needlesse. Answer. Not so: for hereby we are taught to waite on God, who is the fountaine and giuer of all blessings. Men vniustly driuen to any distresse, vse euill meanes, as robbing, deceiuing, consulting with wizzards, &c. 2. Against here we learne, that though a man had all the wealth in the world, all is nothing without Gods blessing. Quest. The rich need not say, Giue vs, &c. for they haue abundance already; and what need they aske that which they haue? Answer. Let a man be neuer so rich, & want nothing that can be desired, yet if he want Gods blessing, in effect hee wants all. Wherefore euen Kings, and the greatest personages that be, are as much bound to vse this petition as the poorest. Gods blessing is riches, saith Salomon, Prou. 10. 22. Thou maiest eat and not haue enough, bee clothed and not warme, earne wages and put it in a broken bagge. Hag. 1. 6. if God doe not bless thee. This blessing of God is called the staffe of bread. Esay. 3. 1. In bread there bee two things, things, the substance, & the vertue thereof proceeding fro Gods blessing: the second, that is, the power of nourishing, is the staffe of bread. For take away from an aged man his staffe, & he falls; and to take away Gods blessing from bread, and the strength thereof is gone, it becomes vnprofitable, and ceaseth to nourish. Lastly, here we see that labour & toile taken in any kind of calling is nothing, & auails not, vnto lesse God fill giue his blessing, Psal. 127. 1.

3. The wants which are to be bewailed.

So innes which we are taught in this petition to bewaile are two especially. 1. Couetousnes, a vice which is naturally engrained in euery mans heart; it is when a man is not content with this present estate. This desire is vnstable, & men that haue enough would still haue more. Wherefore he which shall vse this petition must be giued for this sinne, and pray with David, Psal. 119. 36. Incline mine heart to thy commandments, and not to coneyntes. And he must sorrow, not so much for the act of this sinne, as for the corruption of nature in this behalf. Couetous people will plead that they are free from this vice, but marke mens liues, and we shall see it is a common disease, as David noted, Psal. 4. 6. where he brings in the people, saying: Who shall shew vs any good? This then is a common sinne, that wee are taught to mourne for.

2. The second want is diffidence & distrustfulness in Gods providence touching the things of this life. Men also will shift this off and say, they would be sorry to distrust God. But if we do but a little looke into the corruption of our nature, we shall see that we are deceived. For being in prosperitie, we are not troubled; but if once we be pressed with aduersitie, then we houle and weepe, and as Paul saith, 1. Tim. 6. 10. Men pierce themselves through with many sorrows. If a man shall lose a part of his goods, what then doth he? straight he goes out to a wife man: is this to beleue in God? No: it is to distrust God, and beleue the diuell.

4. Graces to be desired.

The grace to be desired, is a readinesse in all estates of life to rest on Gods providence, whatsoeuer fall out. Psal. 37. 5. Commit thy way to the Lord, and trust in him, and he shall bring it to passe. Prou. 16. 3. Commit or roll thy wayes vpon the Lord, and thy thoughtes shall be directed. Whereby we are admonished to take paines in our callings to get meate and drinke, &c. If the Lord bless not our labour, we must be content if he do, we must giue him thanks. Now for this cause wee are further to pray to God, that he would open our eyes, and by his spirit teach vs in all his good creatures to see his providence, and when meanes faile and are contrary, then also to beleue in the same, and to follow Pauls example, Phil. 4. 12.

5. Errors confuted.

Paul teach that men by workes of grace may merit life eternall, and increase of justification in this life. But how can this be? for heere wee see that euery bit of bread which we eat, is the free gift of God without any merit of ours. Now, if wee cannot merit a peece of bread, what madnesse is it to thinke that we can merit life euertlasting?

2. They also are deceived who thinke, that any thing comes by mere chance or fortune, without Gods providence. Indeede in respect of men who know not the causes of things, many chances there are, but so, as that they are ordered, and come to passe by Gods providence. Luk. 10. 31. By chance there came downe a certaine priest that way.

Forgiue vs our debts.

1. The coherence.

This is the fifth petition, and the second of those which concerne our selues: in the former we craved temporall blessings, in this & the next which followeth we craue spirituall blessings. Where we may note that seeing there is two petitions, which concerne spiritual things, and but one of temporall; that the care for our soules must be double, to the care of our bodies. In the world men care for their bodies, their hearts are set for wealth and promotions: they can bee content to heare the word on the Sabbath, yet neither then, nor in the weeke day dos they lay it vp in their hearts, and practise it; which argues, that they haue little or no care for their soules.

Quest. What is the cause that first we craue things for the body, and in the second place those which concerne the soule? Ans. The order of the holy Ghost in these petitions is wonderfull: for the Lord considers the dulnes and backwardnesse of mens natures: and therefore he traines them vp, and draweth them on by little, euen as a schoolemaster doth his young schollers: propounding vnto them some small elements & principles, and so carrying them to higher points. For the former petition is a step or degree to these two following. The Ruler by the healing of the body of his child is brought to beleue in Christ, Ioh. 4. 53. He then that will rest on Gods mercie for the pardon of his sins, must first of all rest on Gods providence for this life: and he that cannot put his affiance in God for the prouision of meate and drinke, how shall hee trust Gods mercie for the saluation of his soule? Here wee may see the faith of worldlings: they say that God is mercifull, and that they beleue in Christ: which cannot be true: seeing in lesser matters, as meate and drinke, they distrust God, as appears by their couetousnesse. Again, by this order wee are taught as earnestly to seeke for the pardon of our sins, as wee seeke for temporall blessings.

2. The meaning.

Debts By debt sins are meant, as it is in Luk. 11. 4. and they are so called, because of the resemblance between them. For euen as a debt doth binde a man, either to make satisfaction faction, or else to goe to prison: so our sins binde vs either to satisfie Gods iustice, or else to suffer eternall damnation.

Forgiue I To forgiue sinne, is to couer it, or not to impute it. Psal. 32. 1. And this is done when God is content of his mercy to accept the death and passion of Christ as a sufficient payment and ranfome for mans finnes: and so to esteeme them as no finnes. And here vnder this one benefit of remission of finnes, all the rest of the same kind are vnderstood, as iustification, sanctification, redemption, glorification, &c.

3. The vses of the words.

Hence we may learne many lessons: the first is, that seeing wee must pray thus, Lord forgiue &c. we are to hold, that there is no satisfaction to Gods iustice for sin by our workes, no not in temporarie punishments: but that the doing away of our finnes is of Gods meere fauour, for to forgiue and to satisfie be contrarie: i wherefore the doctrine of humane satisfactions, taught in the Church of Rome, is vile and diuillish.

2. Secondly, whereas we are taught thus to pray continually from day to day, we note the great patience and long-suffering of God, that suffers and forbears still, and doth not poure out his confusion vpon vs, though wee offend his maiestie day by day. This teacheth vs like patience towards our brethren: we our selues cannot put vp the least injury, and forbear but one day, and yet we desire that God would forgiue vs daily to the end of our liues.

3. Again we may obserue, that there is no perfect sanctification in this life, seeing wee must enuy day to the end craue the pardon of our sins. Therefore wicked is the opinion of the Catharists or Puritans, which hold that men may be without sinne in this life.

4. And when we say, forgiue not me, but vs: we are put in minde to pray, not onely for the pardon of our owne sinne, but likewise for our brethren and enemies, 1. Iam. 5. 16. Confesse one to another, and pray one for another: for the prayer of the righteous availeth much: if it be fervent. And as some thinke, the prayer of Steenen was a meane of the conuersion of Saul.

5. Also we note that before prayers for pardon of sinne, must goe a confession of sinne: for whereas we say, forgiue our debts, we confesse before God that wee are flat bankrupts, and not able to discharge the least of our sins: this appeares, 1. Job. 1. 9. If we confesse our sins, he is faithful to forgiue vs. And it was practised by Dauid, Psal. 51. and 32. 5. The manner of making confession is this: knowne finnes, and those which trouble the conscience, are to be confessed particularly; but vknownne finnes generally, Psal. 19. 12.

6. Lastly, hence it is manifest, that there is no iustification by workes. Our sins are debts, and so also are all workes of the law: and it were a fond thing to imagine that a man might discharge one debt by another.

4. Wants to be bewailed.

The wants to be bewailed are the burthen of our finnes, and the corruptions of our natures, and the wickednesse of our liues, and the finnes of our youth, and of our old age. Psal. 40. 12. My finnes haue taken such hold vpon mee, that I am not able to looke vp: they are more in number then the haire of mine head, therefore mine heart hath failed mee. Thus with Dauid we are to trauell and grone vnder this burthen: but this griefe for sinne, is a rare thing in the world. Men can mourne bitterly for the things of this life, but their finnes neuer trouble them. Again, this sorrow must bee for sinne, because it is sinne, though there were neither hell to torment, nor diuell or conscience to accuse, nor iudge to reuenge.

5. Graces to be desired.

The grace which we must desire, is the spirit of grace and deprecations. Zach. 12. verse 10. which is that gift of the holy Ghost, whereby we are enabled to call to God for the pardon of our finnes. A man hauing offended the lawes of a Prince, and being in danger of death, will neuer be at quiet till he haue gotten a pardon: euen so they which feele and see their finnes hauing this spirit, are so moued, that they can neuer be at rest, till in prayer they be eased of the burthen of their finnes. A man may, I graunt, babble and speake many words, but he shall neuer pray effectually, before he haue this spirit of prayer to make him cry, Abba father. For worldly commodities all can pray: but learne to pray for the want of Christ.

As we forgiue our debts.

1. The Coherence.

These words bee a part of the fifth petition, which is propounded with a condition, Forgiue vs, as we forgiue others: and these words depend on the former as the reason thereof, which seemes to be taken from the comparison of the lesse to the greater, thus: If we who haue but a sparke of mercy, doe forgiue others; then doe thou, who art the fountaine of mercy, forgiue vs: but we forgiue others: therefore doe thou forgiue vs. Thus Luk. 11. 4. hath it, Forgiue vs our finnes, for euen we forgiue. Rhom. Telt. on Luk. 7. 47. the Papists take it otherwise, who say, Forgiue vs, as wee forgiue, making our forgiuing a cause, for which God is moued to forgiue vs in temporall punishments; whereas our forgiuing of men is onely a signe or effect that God doth forgiue vs.

The meaning.
